INTRODUCTION.

THE object of the present work is to present to the public, in a form that may be generally accessible, the history of one of the most interesting periods in the annals of our National Church, by the republication of her Acts and Proceedings, at and subsequent to the era of her second Reformation; and, combined therewith, such historical documents and sketches as are calculated to preserve the memory of an important, and, ultimately, beneficial revolution in Scotland.

The Reformation from Popery—of which the seeds had been sown during the lapse of the half century which preceded the abolition of that system of national religion in 1560—forms the subject-matter of a distinct epoch, which has been amply illustrated in the works of Principal Robertson, Dr Cook, and Dr M'Crie, and which has been further developed more authentically in the pages of the "Booke of the Universall Kirke;" and it is not within the range of the present compilation to take any retrospect of the events which occurred in reference to the Reformed Church of Scotland, prior to the year 1633, when King Charles I. was crowned King of Scotland. It may be deemed sufficient to note merely, that Popery was abolished, by act of Parliament, on the 24th of August 1560, and the reformed doctrines recognised and tolerated by contemporary statute; that, in 1567, the Protestant Church was established and endowed; that the mixed Episcopal and Presbyterian form of Church government which subsisted during the first thirty-two years of its existence, yielded to the Presbyterian polity, which was established by act of Parliament on the 5th of June 1592; and that Episcopacy having been insinuated through the instrumentality of the General Assembly of the Church,* in consequence of the intrigues of King James VI., became, though in a modified shape, the established form of the Protestant Church in Scotland, by virtue of various acts of Parliament.†

Such was the nature of the Established Protestant Church of Scotland when Charles I. ascended the thrones of both the British kingdoms, at the demise of his father, on the 22d of March 1625; and such it continued to be up to the time that we have selected as the commencement of the period, to the illustration of which the following pages are devoted.

Along with his crown, Charles I. inherited from his father, a legacy of political and ecclesiastical bigotry, and a cluster of debateable questions betwixt him and his subjects, which, ere long, involved him in numberless embarrassments and conflicts, that terminated only with his life on the scaffold. In reference to Scotland, that which first brought him into collision with his northern subjects, was a project of resuming grants which had been lavishly bestowed by his father on his nobility and other minions (or which were usurped by them,) of the tithes and benefices that had belonged to the Popish Church prior to the Reformation. James himself had contemplated such a revocation before his death, and also the establishment of a Liturgy in the Scottish Episcopacy, recently introduced, and but imperfectly consolidated; but he wanted the courage to adopt the requisite measures for that purpose, which were calculated to rouse into active hostility the combined opposition of a fierce aristocracy, and of the Presbyterian clergy and people, who had been cheated out of their favoured scheme of church polity by the insidious manœuvres of James. The revocation was the first step taken by Charles in pursuance of his father's policy; and it was justified by precedents in the commencement of every new reign, during the previous history of Scotland. But the first attempt to accomplish this end proved abortive, and had nearly produced the most tragical consequences. It may be proper to advert briefly to these occurrences.

In October 1625, a Convention of Estates was held for the consideration of this interesting topic; but the proposition was rejected by nearly all the nobility and gentry, many of whom had profited from the plunder of the ecclesiastical patrimony; and Bishop Burnet* gives a very characteristic anecdote of the proceedings on the occasion. The Earl of Nithsdale, as Commissioner, had been instructed to exact an uneconditional surrender; but the parties interested had previously conspired, and resolved that, if they could not otherwise deter him from prosecuting the measure, "they would fall upon him and all his party, in the old Scottish manner, and knock them on the head;" and so deadly was their purpose, that one of their number, who was blind, (Belhaven,) and was seated beside the Earl of Dumfries, had eluted hold of him with one hand, and was prepared, had any stir arisen, to plunge a dagger in his heart. Nithsdale, however, seeing the stormy aspect of the conclave, disguised his instructions, and returned to London disappointed in his mission.

A convocation of the clergy, however, whose views were directed to a complete restoration of its ancient patrimony to the Church, and a large body of the landed proprietors, who had suffered from the rapacity of the Lords of Erection, and titulars, who had obtained the Church property and tithes, were favourable to a revocation—animated by the hope that, in any new distribution of the revenues, a larger portion of these would fall to their lot from the royal favour than they could ever expect from the individual overlords and impropriators. These two classes, therefore, co-operated in supporting the views of the King, for a resumption of church property and tithes; and these movements resulted in the well known arbitration, by which his Majesty obtained a general surrender of the impropriated tithes and benefices, under which the law upon this subject was ultimately settled by the enactments in the Statute-book,* leaving unavoidably an extended spirit of discontent among the disappointed parties in the most influential classes of the community.

One of the main objects of Charles' policy being thus partially accomplished, he proceeded to Scotland in the summer of 1633, for the purpose of being crowned in his native kingdom. His Majesty's progress and inauguration were distinguished by unwonted splendour, and he received a cordial welcome from his northern subjects; but some parts of the ceremonial gave deep offence to the Scottish people, as savouring strongly of Popish mummeries; and the morning of his reign was speedily overcast in Scotland, by a most unwise and obstinate assertion of the royal prerogative in some matters of the most ludicrous insignificance. In 1606, an act had passed in the Scottish Parliament, asserting the royal prerogative to an extravagant pitch; and another in 1609, by which King James VI. was empowered to prescribe apparel to the churchmen with the consent of the Church—a concession which had been made to gratify that monarch's predilections for all priest-like intermeddling with ecclesiastical affairs, and all sorts of trifling details. But these concessions had lain dormant during the remainder of his reign, and had never been acted upon; nay, when, in 1617, an act had been prepared by the Lords of Articles, authorizing all things that should thereafter be determined in ecclesiastical affairs by his Majesty, with consent of a competent number of the clergy selected by himself, to be law, he ordered that act to be suppressed in the House, although it had passed the Lords of Articles.

Charles, however, not sufficiently acquainted with the latent spirit of his Scottish subjects, ordered an act to be framed, soon after his coronation, embodying the enactments of both the statutes above alluded to, asserting the unlimited prerogative of the King in all matters, civil and ecclesiastical, and giving him power to regulate the robes and raiment of ecclesiasties. This was strenuously opposed by Rothes, Balmerino, and a majority of the Estates, notwithstanding the personal presence of the King, and his domineering orders to them to vote and not to speak. By a juggle, however, the clerk-register (Primrose) reported the majority the other way—a falsity which could not be impugned without incurring the pains of treason; and so intent was Charles on coercing the Estates into this measure, that he marked on a list the names of all who had voted against his erochet, and threatened them with his resentment.*

These extraordinary and indecorous stretches of authority, excited the greatest alarm. The freedom of speech in Parliament, its independence, and the integrity of its record, were violated in a manner the most outrageous and inconsistent with all liberty or safety. The nobility held various consultations as to what was to be done in this juncture, and a petition to the King was drawn up and shewn to some of them—amongst others to Balmerino; but the King having declared that he would receive no explanation or remonstrance from them, the purpose was dropped. A copy of it however, with some corrections on it in Balmerino's handwriting, having been confided by him to a notary for transcription, it was treacherously conveyed to Charles, by Spottiswood, Archbishop of St Andrew's, some months afterwards. For this innocent and, according to modern notions, this constitutional exercise of the right of petition, or rather this intent to exercise it, Balmerino was put on his trial,† before a packed court and a packed jury, for leasingmaking, or an attempt to sow disunion betwixt the King and his subjects—an offence of the most arbitrary construction, and certainly not overtly committed by Balmerino in this case. Seven of the jury were for acquittal—but eight, being a majority, found him guilty—and he was sentenced to a capital punishment.

This trial excited the deepest interest throughout the country, and its result produced consternation, and prompted to the most desperate counsels. It was proposed to force the prison and rescue Balmerino; or, if that failed, to kill the obnoxious judges and jurors, and burn their houses. But these perilous resolutions were obviated by Lord Traquair, one of the jury and a tool of the Court, representing to the King the consequences which were to be apprehended; and it was found expedient to grant Balmerino a pardon.*

These were the first false steps of Charles in Scotland. They shook irretrievably the confidence of his subjects in his personal integrity, and in his reverence for the law and the purity of its administration; and the whole of these proceedings are eminently instructive, as evincing to what trivial circumstances, in some respects, convulsions and revolutions, of an extended and sweeping character, may often be ascribed as the source. It is exceedingly difficult now to estimate fully the motives of either party in these transactions. The Scottish Estates were not averse to yield the point of royal supremacy exacted by James and Charles; but when the latter claimed as his prerogative the power to regulate the draperies of the priesthood, it was vehemently resisted by parliament and people as an encroachment on their religious liberties. And to this paltry subject, which was more appropriate to a college of tailors than to the cabinet of a monarch or the arena of a senate, we may trace the first beginnings of that succession of revolutions which, for upwards of half a century afterwards, overflowed the land with torrents of blood and of tears.†

The arbitrary principles in which Charles had been trained by his father, were so deeply impressed on his character, that, though in other respects an able and amiable man, they were never eradicated from his mind by all his experience of their consequences. Prompted by the bigoted intolerance of Laud, surrounded by court sycophants, who sought favour by subserviency to his prejudices, and betrayed in Scotland by a set of the most unprincipled knaves, both lay and clerical, that ever were destined to mislead a sovereign into disgrace and destruction, Charles took not warning in his government from the lessons that had been taught him in the transaction to which we have thus briefly alluded; and he must needs enforce by coercion in Scotland that uniformity in religious ceremonials with the Episcopal Church of England, on which his father had bestowed so much of his royal wisdom.‡ His enterprises in this respect led to consequences which he little anticipated, and which terminated most fatally for his own authority and honour. We allude to his attempt to introduce the Liturgy and canons, which were concocted for the Church in Scotland, under the auspices of Archbishop Laud—an attempt which, within a very brief space after Balmerino's trial and sentence had excited universal alarm, rallied the whole population of Scotland under the banner of "THE COVENANT," in open resistance to their throned monarch; presenting to our contemplation one of the most remarkable and sublime moral spectacles that is to be found in the history of ancient or modern times—an entire nation simultaneously banding themselves together, and leagued by solemn religious vows, for the vindication and maintenance of their liberties, civil and religious, yet cherishing and avowing their allegiance to their sovereign, except in so far as he exceeded his legitimate authority.

Before entering on the Proceedings and Acts of the General Assemblies of the Church from 1638 to 1649, which it is one of the objects of this work to preserve, it is necessary, for the elucidation of these, to detail the circumstances, political and ecclesiastical, (these being, in truth, identical,) which preceded that great demonstration of the national will and power, during the years 1636 and 1637; and, in doing so, the facts shall be as concisely stated as is practicable, amidst the great mass of materials which are supplied to the student of our history in the numerous works that treat of the period now referred to.*

Early in the progress of the Scottish Reformation, the Lords of the Congregation had directed the "Book of Common Order," as it was called, which was used in the Protestant Church of Geneva, to be read in the religious service of the Scottish Reformers; and it was sanctioned by the Church in the "First Book of Discipline," among the first of its acts after the abolition of Popery.† Under this sanction, the "Book of Common Prayer" was appointed to be used by the Readers as a part of the public worship in the churches; and, so far as we can discover, it continued to be used, either as an essential part or, at least, as the model for prayer in public worship, during the fluctuations in the frame of the Church in the time of James VI. The Assembly at Aberdeen,‡ indeed, had ordered the Geneva form to be revised; but the vehement opposition made in the subsequent Assembly at Perth to King James' Articles, induced him to suspend his innovation.

Charles, however, a man of higher moral and personal courage than his father, and stimulated by the fanatical and semipopish zeal of Laud, had given instructions, during his recent visit to Scotland, for superseding the early Book of Order, and directed the introduction of Canons and a Liturgy similar to those of England. In order to deceive the Scotch into a belief that it was different, and to soothe the national pride, by eschewing the aspect of servile imitation as a mark of its dependence on the English hierarchy, the Scotch Prelates devised a new Liturgy, which was, in many points, and indeed in its leading features, much more Popish than that of England.

The Canons were first compiled and confirmed by the Royal Supremacy. They comprehended whatever the Kings of Israel or the Emperors of the Primitive Church had arrogated; secured from challenge the consecration of the bishops; and added terror to excommunication, by annexing confiscation and outlawry as the penalties of incurring it. The Liturgy was sanctioned before it was actually framed. By it the clergy were forbidden to deviate from its forms, or to pray extemporaneously; the demeanour of the people in public worship was rigorously prescribed; kirk-sessions and presbyteries, as these were established by the act 1592, were abolished, under the new designation of "conventicles;" the powers of these were transferred to the bishops, and lay elders entirely superseded; and the whole texture and spirit of it was manifestly Popish, embodying, in almost undisguised terms, the form of the missals, and introducing every particular, both of doctrine and ceremonial, that was most obnoxious to the whole population, except the prelates, nine of whom, out of fourteen, had been introduced into the Privy Council, while Archbishop Spottiswood was created Chancellor, and Maxwell, Bishop of Ross, aspired to the office of Lord Treasurer—thus combining the highest spiritual with the highest political functions, and forming a conclave of despotism entirely subservient to the King.

The new order of things, therefore, was not a mere institution of Episcopacy, in which only spiritual jurisdiction was conferred, and different orders of clergy were established, as in England; but it was palpably a political engine, incompatible with the existence of civil liberty or freedom of conscience in matters of religion; and this innovation became universally obnoxious to the whole nation, by reason of its manifest revival of the practices and ritual of the Catholics. A font was appointed to be placed in the entrance of the church, the cross was enjoined in baptism, and the water was changed and consecrated in the font twice a month; an altar was appointed for the chancel; the communion table, decorated, was placed in the east, and the consecration of the elements was a prayer expressive of the Real Presence, and their elevation deemed an actual oblation. The confessions of the penitent were to be concealed by the clergy; and the whole contexture of this novel Liturgy was such, in conjunction with the Canons, as to effect a total subversion of all the principles cherished by the bulk of the nation from the date of the Reformation, and to overthrow the entire system of Presbyterian doctrine and discipline that had previously prevailed in the usages of the Church, and the law of the land.

It is noways surprising, therefore, that these innovations produced a tremendous revulsion throughout the country; and they were rendered still more offensive by the mode of their introduction—without the consent of a General Assembly of the Church or of Parliament, but solely by virtue of the royal prerogative, and the authority of the prelates—the advice even of the Privy Council, and some of the elder prelates being entirely contemned. The alarm was sounded from the pulpits by a great majority of the parochial clergy, and pervaded, not merely the common people, but the gentry also, and, with few exceptions, all the ancient nobility of the realm: every man, whether valuing his religious principles, or his political liberty and safety, was appalled by the immediate prospect of an intolerant spiritual domination and civil tyranny being established in the land of his forefathers. "In short," as Dr Cook emphatically states, "the complete command of the Church was given to the bishops, and the kingdom was thus laid at the foot of the throne."*

In this state matters continued from the time that these changes became known, in 1636, till the summer of 1637. At the same time, besides the Court of High Commission, each of the prelates obtained subordinate Commission-courts, which were, in all respects, so many local inquisitions; so that "Black Prelacy" was armed in Scotland with all the powers and terrors of the Popish Church anterior to its abolition. The prelates, however, were at first deterred, by well-grounded apprehensions, from the exercise of their late-sprung power. A general adoption of the Liturgy at Easter had been required by royal proclamation, but the day had elapsed before the publication of it took place; and it was not till May 1637 that a charge was ordered to be given to the clergy, that each of them should "buy and provide" two copies for his parish, under the penalty of escheat of his effects. The Council, however, had omitted in their edict to require the adoption and practice of these formularies, although, doubtless, the conjoint effect of these innovations was held to imply an imperative rule for the clergy. This looseness of phraseology, however, opened a door for the recusant clergy to evade the use of the new ritual, and paved the way for an eventual defeat of the prelates' schemes.†

On the 16th of July 1637, an order was intimated from the pulpit in Edinburgh, that, on the following Sunday, the Liturgy would be introduced; and this without the concurrence of the Privy Council or any previous arrangement for smoothing its reception. This notice excited great popular agitation, and brought the collision betwixt the court and prelates on the one side, and the country on the other, to a crisis. On Sunday following, (23d July,) the Dean of Edinburgh officiated in St Giles', and the Bishop elect of Argyle in the Greyfriars' church, each of them being attended by some of the Judges, Prelates, Members of Council, and other dignitaries, so as to give an imposing effect to the introduction of the obnoxious services. St Giles' church was crowded, and all went on with the wonted solemnity of public worship until the reading of the service commenced, when Janet Geddes, an humble female, rose up and exclaimed, "Villain! daurst thou say the mass at my lug?" and, suiting the action to the word, she tossed the stool on which she had been sitting at the Dean's head. Forthwith, the assembled multitude broke out into such a tumult as (Baillie says) "was never heard of since the Reformation," exclaiming, "A Pape! a Pape! Antichrist!" and accompanying these expressions with a violent assault on the doors and windows, so as effectually to interrupt the service. In the other church, of Greyfriars, the performance of the service was attended with similar, though less violent demonstrations of popular hostility; and it was with difficulty that the officiating priests were rescued from the violence of the outraged multitude. The greatest excitement pervaded the city throughout the day; and in every quarter of the country where the Liturgy was attempted to be introduced, except at St Andrew's, Brechin, Dunblane, and Ross, it was resisted with similar manifestations of anger and disgust; and this popular effervescence was speedily extended from the lower to the higher ranks, betwixt which the most entire sympathy existed, although the latter adopted a more rational and effective mode of resistance.

It is beyond the range of these introductory remarks, to enter on all the details of procedure which took place from the first outbreak of this opposition till the meeting of the General Assembly of Glasgow, in November 1838. Of these, all the particulars are fully detailed in Lord Rothes' MS. Relation, in the Advocates' Library, Baillie's Letters, and other contemporary chronicles, and more recently in Mr Laing's and Dr Cook's Histories, and Dr Aiton's Life of Henderson—a man who, at that juncture, arose to great eminence, to guide his countrymen in their struggles, and to dignify their cause by the distinguished talents which in him were called forth and displayed on this occasion. It is sufficient for the present purpose to note a few of the more prominent facts and occurrences which hastened the movement and, ere long, prostrated the royal authority in Scotland.

Henderson, then minister of Leuchars, in Fife, and three other clergymen from the Presbyteries of Irvine, Ayr, and Glasgow, having been pressed by the prelatial authorities on the score of the Liturgy, presented, on the 20th of August, bills of suspension to the Privy Council, upon the grounds that the recent innovations were illegal, not being sanctioned by Parliament or the General Assembly, and as being in contravention to the Acts of Parliament and of the Church. The Council eluded these broad grounds, by finding that the edicts of which suspension was sought, did not require the observance, but only the purchase, of the new formalities; and the Council communicated with the King as to the dilemma in which both he and they were now placed. His Majesty, however, unmoved by these events, ordered the immediate observance of the ritual, (September 20,) and rebuked the tardiness of the Council. But whenever this untoward resolution of the King was known, the four ministers, who were thus the foremost men in the contest, were joined and supported by twenty-four peers, a great many of the gentry, sixty-six commissioners from towns and parishes, and nearly one hundred ministers, who immediately poured in numerous petitions, remonstrating against the imposition of the Liturgy and Canons.* These gave open demonstrations of their making common cause with Henderson and his associates, going in a body to the door of the Council House, in the High Street of the metropolis, with their remonstrances or petitions; and thus they sustained the four individuals who had been selected by the prelates for persecution. During the interval which elapsed before an answer was returned, the remonstrants busied themselves in agitating their grievances over the whole kingdom, and speedily organized one of the most formidable and best constructed oppositions to which any government ever was exposed.

It having been intimated that answers from Court to their remonstrances and petitions would reach Edinburgh on the 18th of October, great multitudes, from all parts of the country, flocked to the capital. The Privy Council were panic-struck, and issued proclamations, intimating that, at the first Council-day, nothing should be done relating to the Church; ordering all strangers to leave Edinburgh within twenty-four hours; removing the Council and Session from Edinburgh to Linlithgow, and afterwards to Dundee; and denouncing a book which had been published against the measures of the Court and Prelates. This brought matters to a crisis.

Having delivered the several applications with which they had been intrusted from the provinces to the Clerk of the Council, the noblemen, gentlemen, and clergy met in three different bodies; but they concurred in a general declaration against the obnoxious books, and ordered it to be presented to the Council. It were tedious enumerating all the proclamations by the King and Council, and the protestations against these by the nobles and clergy, and all the negotiations and intrigues which supervened—of these original documents, however, copies will be given in the notes subjoined to the Acts of Assembly in 1638; but it would savour of undue partiality to the proceedings of the malcontents, if we omitted to state that, during the whole of the period alluded to, many disgraceful outrages were perpetrated by the rabble, who, in the language of Baillie, seemed to be "possessed with a bloody devil," the authorities being utterly unprepared and unable to repress these disorders, at the very time that they were exciting the people of all classes by their lawless and inconsiderate edicts and tyrannical acts.

These mutual exasperations had reached the highest pitch, when, in February 1638, the Presbyterians assumed a bold and perilous attitude, amounting almost to a practical dereliction of their allegiance to the King, and an assumption of supreme authority. In order to avoid the large and tumultuary assemblages which had taken place during the preceding year, the Council had required that the supplications and communications should be managed by delegates and commissioners from the greater masses; and, accordingly, those persons acting in this capacity, under the sanction of the King's Council, had, in the preceding November, formed large and influential subdivisions of themselves into distinct bodies called "Tables," representing the different classes who were combined for the vindication of their religious liberties—one for the nobility, another for the gentry, a third for the clergy, and a fourth for the burghs. Committees of the most influential and zealous of each class, sat at four different tables in the Parliament House, having sub-committees, and a central one of the whole, devising and concocting such measures as they deemed necessary for promoting the common cause; thus centralizing the public feeling of the country, and again giving forth mandates from their united Councils, with all the force and authority of law, to the people, and superseding virtually the functions both of the Executive and Legislature of the country.

The most noted act of this anomalous Convention was the formation of a muniment, which was composed by Henderson and Johnston of Warriston, and revised by Balmerino, Rothes, and Loudon, and which was destined to be a powerful instrument in the hands of these national leaders. THE COVENANT was framed and promulgated at the time we refer to, and henceforward became the rallying standard of the nation, or, at least, of a great majority of its inhabitants, during the space of half a century, till a more benignant symbol of freedom was unfurled at the Revolution, under which the people of these realms have hitherto, since that time, enjoyed all the blessings of a limited monarchy, and institutions for the maintenance of the Protestant faith, and perfect freedom of conscience to all classes of the people.

The adoption and character of that remarkable League enter so deeply into the subject of the present undertaking, that, in order to render numerous subsequent proceedings intelligible to many persons, it is necessary to devote particular attention to it, and the circumstances under which it was promulgated.

The Earl of Traquair returned to Scotland, on the 15th of February, with instructions from the King in reference to the affairs of Scotland. He disseminated at first the full tenor of these, in his communications with the leaders of the Tables, and, on the 19th, proceeded, early in the morning, to Stirling, to publish the proclamation of which he was the bearer, before the Presbyterians should be apprized of his intentions, or prepared to offer any show of opposition. Lord Lindsay and Lord Hume, however, being apprized of Traquair's movements, had outstripped him, and were on the spot to protest against its effects. The proclamation expressed the King's approval of the Liturgy; declared all the petitions against it derogatory to his supreme authority, and deserving the severest censure, and prohibited the supplicants to assemble again under the penalties of treason.*

When this proclamation, which was calculated to excite their most gloomy apprehensions, and to extinguish all their hopes of the King ever listening to their remonstrances, was proclaimed by the heralds at Stirling, Lords Hume and Lindsay made formal protestation against it, claiming a right of access to the King by petition; declining the prelates as judges in any court, civil or ecclesiastical; protesting that no act of Council, past or future, (the prelates being members,) should be prejudicial to the supplicants, in their persons or estates; that the Presbyterians should not incur any danger in life or lands, or any political or ecclesiastical pains, for not observing the Book of Liturgy, Canons, Rules, Judicatories, and Proclamations; but that it should be lawful for them to worship God according to His Word and Constitutions of the Church and Kingdom, &c.; and it concluded with professions of loyalty, and a declaration that they only desired the preservation of the true reformed religion, and laws and liberties of the kingdom. A copy of this protestation was affixed to the Cross of Stirling. It was afterwards repeated at Linlithgow and Edinburgh, in the presence of seventeen Peers, and everywhere else where the proclamation was published.

In these critical circumstances, and in order at once to guard themselves from the perils which were sure to overtake them individually if severed, and exposed at once to the obstinate displeasure of the King and the revenge of the prelates, the nobles resolved to consolidate their union by a solemn engagement, such as those which had been entered into by the Lords of the Congregation and first Protestants, in the dawn and during the progress of the Reformation in its earlier stages.† The positions in which they stood were similar; and the example of the fathers and founders of the Protestant Church in Scotland, naturally prompted the Tables to imitation, independently of the ancient usage which existed in Scotland, of entering into "Bands" for mutual protection and support in troubled times. The model, however, which they had chiefly in view was a "Confession" framed under the auspices and instructions of King James VI., in which the errors of Popery were abjured, and to which there was subsequently added a bond, or obligation, to maintain the true religion, and protect the King's person, as well as for the general defence.‡ Taking that document as the basis and model of the Covenant, the leaders of the Presbyterians superadded to it an obligation to defend each other against all persons whatsoever, and a pointed denunciation of the innovations recently attempted to be forced upon the country.

For the course thus adopted, they had precedents in the conduct of the first Reformers—in that of King James himself, who had signed the “Confession,” and sought the signature of all his subjects—and in the terms of the early “bands” for mutual defence and maintenance of the reformed doctrines. Nor is it necessary to resort to any casuistry to justify the adoption of such an engagement. Dr Cook justly remarks, that the vindication of the Covenant is to be rested “upon this great principle, that when the ends for which all government should be instituted are defeated, the oppressed have a clear right to disregard customary forms, and to assert the privileges without which they would be condemned to the degradation and wretchedness of despotism.”* That such was the predicament in which the Church and people of Scotland were placed, by the reiterated proclamations and edicts issued by the King and the Scots Privy Council for several years prior to February 1638, and that these amounted to an unqualified assumption of arbitrary and absolute power, paramount to the authority of Parliament, and the sanctions of the ecclesiastical authorities established by law, are points which do not admit of the slightest doubt; and no alternative remained but that the nobles, clergy, and people of Scotland, should combine, in the most constitutional manner that was practicable, for maintaining the law, and for mutual defence, or tamely submit their necks to the yoke which most assuredly would have been permanently imposed on them by the base misdeeds of a court, and an unprincipled hierarchy. Whatever errors they subsequently committed, and however much we may deplore the infatuation by which Charles was misled in urging his Scottish subjects into such decisive measures, no one who is versed in the elements of the British Constitution, or imbued with the spirit of genuine freedom, can hesitate to admit that, in adopting the Covenant, the people of Scotland were, at the time, not only fully justified, but were imperatively constrained to do so by every motive which can influence Christians, patriots, and brave men. The most eminent lawyers of these times, too, declared their opinions that there was nothing in the Covenant inconsistent with loyalty to a constitutional sovereign; nor has anything ever yet appeared, whether in the contemporary defences of the Court, or in the pages of more recent historians and critics, to shake the soundness of that opinion.

Deviating from the practice of historians, who merely give an abstract and brief statement of the contents of the Covenant, we deem it more suitable and convenient, in a compilation like the present, to embody in this Introductory Sketch the entire document, as it appears in the authenticated records, and, therefore, have subjoined it, as deserving of the reader's attention, before proceeding to consider the events which followed its adoption.

THE
OR,
CONFESSION OF FAITH
KIRK OF SCOTLAND.

“The Confession of Faith, subscribed at first by the King's Majesty and his Household, in the yeere of God 1580; thereafter by Persons of all ranks, in the yeere 1581, by ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Councell, and Acts of the Generall Assembly; subscribed againe by all sorts of persons in the yeere 1590, by a new Ordinance of Councell, at the desire of the Generall Assembly, with a generall Band for maintenance of the true Religion and the King's person; and now subscribed in the yeere 1638 by us, Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burghesses, Ministers, and Commons under subscribing, together with our resolution and promises, for the causes after specified, to maintaine the said true Religion, and the King's Majesty, according to the Confession foresaid, and Acts of Parliament. The tenor whereof here followeth.

“WEE All and every one of us underwritten, Protest, That, after long and due examination of our owne Consciencs in matters of true and false Religion, are now throughly resolved of the Truth, by the Word and Spirit of God, and, therefore, we beleeve with our hearts, confesse with our mouths, subscribe with our hands, and constantly affirm, before God and the whole World, that this only is the true Christian Faith and Religion, pleasing God, and bringing Salvation to man, which now is, by the mercy of God, revealed to the world by the preaching of the blessed Evangel.

“And received, beleaved, and defended by many and sundry notable Kirks and Realmes, but chiefly by the Kirk of Scotland, the King's Majesty, and the Three Estates of this Realme, as God's eternal Truth, and onely ground of our salvation; as more particularly is expressed in the Confession of our Faith, stablished and publicly confirmed by sundry Acts of Parlements, and now, of a long time, hath been openly professed by the King's Majesty, and whole body of this Realme, both in Burgh and Land. To the which Confession and forme of Religion wee willingly agree in our consciences in all points, as unto God's undoubted Truth and Verity, grounded onely upon his written Word. And, therefore, We abhorre and detest all contrarie Religion and Doctrine; but chiefly all kinde of Papistrie, in generall and particular heads, even as they are now damned and confuted by the Word of God and Kirk of Scotland; but, in speciall, we detest and refuse the usurped authoritie of that Roman Antichrist upon the Scriptures of God, upon the Kirk, the civill Magistrate, and Consciences of men; all his tyrannous lawes made upon indifferent things against our Christian libertie; his erroneous Doctrine against the sufficiencie of the written Word, the perfection of the Law, the office of Christ and his blessed Evangel; his corrupted Doctrine concerning originall sinne, our naturall inabilitie and rebellion to God's law, our justification by faith onely, our imperfect sanctification and obedience to the law, the nature, number, and use of the holy Sacraments; his five bastard Sacraments, with all his Rites, Ceremonies, and false Doctrine, added to the ministration of the true Sacraments without the word of God; his cruell judgement against Infants departing without the sacrament; his absolute necessitie of Baptisme; his blasphemous opinion of Transubstantiation, or real presence of Christ's body in the Elements, and receiving of the same by the wicked, or bodies of men; his dispensations with solemn oaths, perjuries, and degrees of Marriage forbidden in the Word; his crueltie against the innocent divorced; his divellish Masse; his blasphemous Priesthood; his profane Sacrifice for the sins of the dead and the quick; his Canonization of men, calling upon Angels or Saints departed, worshipping of Imagerie, Relicks, and Crosses, dedicating of Kirks, Altars, Daies, Vowes to creatures; his Purgatorie, praiers for the dead; praying or speaking in a strange language, with his Processions, and blasphemous Letanie, and multitude of Advocates or Mediators; his manifold Orders, Auricular Confession; his desperate and uncertaine repentence; his generall and doubtsome faith; his satisfactions of men for their sins; his justification by works, opus operatum, works of supererogation, Merits, Pardons, Peregrinations, and Stations; his holy Water, baptizing of Bels, conjuring of spirits, crossing, saning, anointing, conjuring, hallowing of God's good creatures, with the superstitious opinion joined therewith; his worldly Monarchie, and wicked Hierarchie; his three solempne vowes, with all his shavelings of sundry sorts; his erroneus and bloudie decrees made at Trent, with all the subscribers and approvers of that cruell and bloudie Band conjured against the Kirk of God; and, finally, we detest all his vain Allegories, Rites, Signs, and Traditions brought in the Kirk, without or against the Word of God, and Doctrine of this true reformed Kirk; to the which we joyne our selves willingly, in Doctrine, Faith, Religion, Discipline, and use of the Holy Sacraments, as lively members of the same in Christ our Head: promising and swearing, by the GREAT NAME OF THE LORD OUR GOD, that we shall continue in the obedience of the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk, and shall defend the same, according to our vocation and power, all the dayes of our lives, under the paines contained in the Law, and danger both of body and soule in the day of God's fearfull Judgement; and seeing that many are stirred up by Satan and that Romane Antichrist, to promise, sweare, subscribe, and, for a time, use the Holy Sacraments in the Kirk deceitfully, against their owne consciences, minding thereby, first, under the externall cloake of Religion, to corrupt and subvert secretly God's true Religion within the Kirk, and afterward, when time may serve, to become open enemies and persecutors of the same, under vaine hope of the Pope's dispensation, devised against the Word of God, to his greater confusion, and their double condemnation in the day of the LORD JESUS.

"We, therefore, willing to take away all suspition of hypocrisie, and of such double dealing with God and his Kirk, Protest, and call THE SEARCHER OF ALL HEARTS for witness, that our minds and hearts do fully agree with this our Confession, Promise, Oath, and Subscription, so that we are not moved for any worldly respect, but are perswaded onely in our Consciences, through the knowledge and love of God's true Religion, printed in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, as we shall answer to Him in the day when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed; and because we perceive, that the quietnesse and stability of our Religion and Kirk doth depend upon the safety and good behaviour of the King's Majestie, as upon a comfortable instrument of God's mercy granted to this Country, for the maintaining of his Kirk, and ministration of Justice amongst us; we protest and promise with our hearts, under the same Oath, Hand-writ, and paines, that we shall defend his Person and Authority with our goods, bodies, and lives, in the defence of Christ his Evangel, Liberties of our Countrey, ministration of Justice, and punishment of iniquity, against all enemies within this Realme or without, as we desire our God to be a strong and mercifull Defender to us in the day of our death, and comming of our LORD JESUS CHRIST; to whom, with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be all honour and glorie eternally.

"Like as many Acts of Parliament, not onely in generall doe abrogate, annull, and rescind all Lawes, Statutes, Acts, Constitutions, Canons, civill or Municipall, with all other Ordinances, and practicke penalties whatsoever, made in prejudice of the true Religion, and Professours thereof; or of the true Kirk discipline, jurisdiction, and freedome thereof; or in favours of Idolatrie and Superstition, or of the Papisticall Kirk: As Act 3, Act 31, Parl. 1, Act 23, Parl. 11, Act 114, Parl. 12. of King James the Sixt. That Papistrie and Superstition may be utterly suppressed, according to the intention of the Acts of Parliament, reported in Act 5, Parl. 20, K. James 6. And, to that end, they ordaine all Papists and Priests to be punished by manifold Civill and Ecclesiasticall paines, as adversaries to God's true Religion, preached and by law established within this Realme, Act 24, Parl. 11, K. James 6, as common enemies to all Christian government, Act 18, Parl. 16, K. James 6, as rebellers and gainstanders of our Sovereigne

Lord's authoritie, Act 47, Parl. 3, K. James 6, and as Idolaters, Act 104, Parl. 7, K. James 6; but also in particular, (by and attour the Confession of Faith,) do abolish and condemne the Pope's authoritie and jurisdiction out of this laud, and ordaines the maintainers thereof to be punished, Act 2, Parl. 1, Act 51, Parl. 3, Act 106, Parl. 7, Act 114, Parl. 12, K. James 6, doe condemne the Pope's erroneous doctrine, or any other erroneous doctrine repugnant to any of the Articles of the true and Christian Religion, publikely preached, and by Law established in this Realme; and ordaines the spreaders and makers of Books or Libels, or Letters, or writs of that nature, to be punished, Act 46, Parl. 3, Act 106, Parl. 7, Act 24, Parl. 11, K. James 6, doe condemne all Baptisme conform to the Pope's kirk, and the idolatry of the Masse; and ordaines all sayers, wilfull hearers, and concealers of the Masse, the maintainers and reseters of the Priests, Jesuits, traffiquing Papists, to be punished without any exception or restriction, Act 5, Parl. 1, Act 120, Parl. 12, Act 164, Parl. 13, Act 193, Parl. 14, Act 1, Parl. 19, Act 5, Parl. 20, K. James 6, doe condemne all erroneous books and writs containing erroneous doctrine against the Religion presently professed, or containing superstitious Rites and Ceremonies Papisticall, whereby the people are greatly abused, and ordaines the home-bringers of them to be punished, Act 25, Parl. 11, K. James 6, doe condemne the monuments and dregs of bygane Idolatrie, as going to Crosses, observing the Festivall dayes of Saincts, and such other superstitious and Papisticall Rites, to the dishonour of God, contempt of true Religion, and fostering of great error among the people, and ordaines the users of them to be punished for the secoud fault, as Idolaters, Act 104, Parl. 7, K. James 6.

“Like as many Acts of Parliament are conceived for maintenance of God's true and Christian Religion, and the puritie thereof in Doctrine and Sacraments of the true Church of God, the libertie and freedome thereof, in her Nationall Synodall Assemblies, Presbyteries, Sessions, Policie, Discipline, and Jurisdiction thereof, as that puritie of Religion, and libertie of the Church was used, professed, exercised, preached, and confessed, according to the reformation of Religion in this realme: As, for instance, Act 99, Parl. 7, Act 23, Parl. 11, Act 114, Parl. 12, Act 160, Parl. 13, K. James 6, ratified by Act 4, K. Charles. So that Act 6, Parl. 1, and Act 68, Parl. 6 of K. James 6, in the yeare of God 1579, declares the Ministers of the blessed Evangel, whom God, of his mercie, had raised up, or hereafter should raise, agreeing with them that then lived in Doctrine and administration of the Sacraments, and the people that professed Christ, as he was then offered in the Evangel, and doth communicate with the holy Sacraments, (as in the Reformed kirkes of this Realme they were presently administrate,) according to the Confession of Faith, to be the true and holy kirk of Christ Jesus within this Realme, and discernes and declares all and sundrie, who either gainsayes the Word of the Evangel, received and approved as the heads of the Confession of Faith, professed in Parliament in the yeare of God 1560; specified also in the first Parliament of K. James 6, and ratified in this present Parliament, more particularly do specifie; or that refuses the administration of the holy Sacraments, as they were then ministrated, to be no members of the said kirk withiu this Realme, and true Religion presently professed, so long as they keepe themselves so divided from the societie of Christ's bodie: And the subsequent Act 69, Parl. 6, K. James 6, declares, That there is no other face of Kirke, nor other face of Religion, then was presently at that time, by the favour of God, established within this Realme, which, therefore, is ever stiled God's true Religion, Christ's true Religion, the true and Christian Religion, and a perfect Religion. Which, by manifold Acts of Parliament, all within this Realme, are bound to professe to subscribe the articles thereof, the Confession of Faith, to recant all doctrine and errors repugnant to any of the said Articles, Act 4 and 9, Parl. 1, Act 45, 46, 47, Parl. 3, Act 71, Parl. 6, Act. 106, Parl. 7, Act 24, Parl. 11, Act 123, Parl. 12, Act 194 and 197, Parl. 14, of K. James 6. And all Magistrates, Sheriffes, &c., on the one part, are ordained to search, apprehend, and punish all contraveeners; for instance, Act 5, Parl. 1, Act 104, Parl. 7, Act 25, Parl. 11, K. James 6. And that, notwithstanding of the King's Majestie's licences on the contrary, which are discharged and declared to be of no force, in so farre as they tend in any wayes to the prejudice and hinder of the execution of the Acts of Parliament against Papists and adversaries of true Religion, Act 106, Parl. 7, K. James 6; on the other part, in the 47 Act, Parl. 3, K. James 6, it is declared and ordained, seeing the cause of God's true Religion and his Highnesse Authority are so joyned, as the hurt of the one is common to both; and that none shall be reputed as loyall and faithfull subjects to our Sovereigne Lord, or his Authority; but be punishable as rebellers and gainstanders of the same, who shall not give their Confessiou, and make their profession of the said true Religion; and that they who, after defection, shall give the Confession of their faith of new, they shall promise to continue therein in time coming, to maintaine our Sovereigne Lord's Authoritie, and at the uttermost of their power to fortifie, assist, and maintaine the true Preachers and Professours of Christ's Religion, against whatsoever enemies and gainstanders of the same: and, namely, against all such of whatsoever nation, estate, or degree they be of, that have joyned and bound themselves, or have assisted, or assists, to set forward and execute the cruell decrees of Trent, contrary to the Preachers and true Professours of the Word of God, which is repeated word by word in the Articles of Pacification at Pearth, the 23d of February 1572, approved by Parliament the last of Aprill 1573, ratified in Parlament 1578, and related, Act 123, Parl. 12 of K. James 6, with this addition, That they are bound to resist all treasonable uproares and hostilities raised against the true Religion, the King's Majestie, and the true Professours.

“ Like as all lieges are bound to maintain the K. Majestie's Royal Person and authority, the authority of Parlements, without the which neither any laws or lawful judicatories can be established, Act 130, Act 131, Par. 8, K. Ja. 6, and the subjects' liberties, who ought only to live and be governed by the King's lawes, the common lawes of this Realme allanerly, Act 48, Parl. 3, K. James 1, Act 79, Parl. 6, K. James 4, repeated in Act 131, Parl. 8, K. James 6; which, if they be innovated or prejudged, the Commission anent the union of the two Kingdomes of Scotland and England, which is the sole Act of the 17 Parl. of K. James 6, declares such confusion would ensne, as this Realme could be no more a free Monarchie, because by the fundamentall lawes, ancient priviledges, offices, and liberties of this kingdome, not onely the Princely authoritie of his Majestie's royal descent hath bin these manie ages maintained, but also the people's securitie of their lands, livings, rights, offices, liberties and dignities preserved; and, therefore, for the preservation of the said true Religion, Lawes, and Liberties of this kingdome, it is statute by Act 8, Parl. 1, repeated in Act 99, Parl. 7, ratified in Act 23, Parl. 11, and 114 Act of K. James 6, and 4 Act of K. Charles, That all Kings and Princes at their Coronation and reception of their princely authoritie, shall make their faithfull promise by their solemn oath in the presenee of the eternall God, that enduring the whole time of their lives, they shall serve the same eternall God, to the uttermost of their power, according as he hath required in his most holy Word, contained in the Old and New Testaments. And according to the same Word, shall maintain the true Religion of Christ Jesus, the preaching of his holy Word, the due and right ministrations of the Sacraments, now received and preached within this Realme, (according to the Confession of Faith immediately preceding,) and shall abolish and gainstand all false Religion, contrarie to the same, and shall rule the people committed to their charge, according to the will and command of God, revealed in his foresaid Word, and according to the lowable lawes and constitutions received in this Realme, no waies repugnant to the said will of the eternall God, and shall procure, to the uttermost of their power, to the kirk of God, and whole Christian people, true and perfit peace in all time coming; and that they shall be carefull to root out of their Empire all Heretiicks, and enemies to the true worship of God, who shall be convicted by the true kirk of God of the foresaid crimes; which was also observed by his Majesty at his Coronation in Edinburgh 1633, as may be seene in the order of the Coronation.

“ In obedience to the commandement of God, conform to the practice of the godly in former times, and according to the laudable example of our worthy and religious Progenitors, and of many yet living amongst us, which was warranted also by Act of Councell, commanding a generall Band to bee made and subscribed by his Majestie's subjects of all ranks, for two causes: One was, for defending the true Religion, as it was then reformed, and is expressed in the Confession of Faith above written, and a former large Confession established by sundrie Acts of lawfull Generall Assemblies and of Parliament, unto which it hath relation set downe in publicke Cathedismes, and which had benee for many yeeres, with a blessing from heaven, preached and professed in this Kirk and Kingdome, as God's undoubted truth, grounded onely upon his written Word: The other cause was, for maintaining the King's Majestie his Person and Estate; the true worship of God, and the King's authoritie being so straightly joyned, as that they had the same friends and common enemies, and did stand and fall together. And, finally, being convinced in our minds, and confessing with our mouthes, that the present and sneeeding generations in this Land, are bound to keep the foresaid nationall Oath and subscription inviolable, Wee Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons under subscribing, considering divers times before, and especially at this time, the danger of the true reformed Religion, of the King's honour, and of the publicke peace of the Kingdome, by the manifold innovations and evils generally contained and particularly mentioned in our late supplications, complaints, and protestations, doe hereby professe, and, before God, his Angels, and the World, solemnly declare, That, with our whole hearts wee agree and resolve all the daies of our life constantly to adhere unto, and to defend the foresaid true Religion, and forbearing the practice of all novations already introduced in the matters of the worship of God, or approbation of the corruptions of the publick Government of the Kirk, or evill places and power of Kirkmen, till they bee tryed and allowed in free Assemblies, and in Parlements, to labour by all meanes lawfull to recover the purity and libertie of the Gospel, as it was established and professed before the foresaid novations: And because, after due examination, we plainly perceive, and undoubtedly beleve, that the Innovations and evils contained in our Supplications, Complaints, and Protestations have no warrant of the Word of God, are contrary to the Articles of the foresaid Confessions, to the intention and meaning of the blessed Reformers of Religion in this Land, to the above written Acts of Parliament, and doe sensibly tend to the re-establishing of the Popish Religion and tyranny, and to the snbversion and ruine of the true Reformed Religion, and of our Liberties, Lawes, and Estates. We also declare, that the foresaid Confessions are to bee interpreted, and ought to be understood of the foresaid novations and evils, no lesse then if everie one of them had benee expressed in the foresaid Confessions; and that wee are obliged to detest and abhorre them, amongst other particular heads of Papistrie abjured therein. And, therefore, from the knowledge and conscience of our dutie to God, to our King and cuntry, without any worldly respect or inducement, so farre as humane infirmite will suffer, wishing a further measure of the grace of God for this effect, We promise and sweare, by the GREAT NAME OF THE LORD OUR GOD, to continue in the Profession and Obedience of the foresaid Religion: That we shall defend the same, and resist all these contrarie errors and corruptions, according to our vocation, and to the uttermost of that power that God hath put in our hands, all the dayes of our life: And, in like manuer, with the same heart, we declare before God and Men, That wee have no intention nor desire to attempt anything that may turne to the dishonour of God, or to the diminution of the King's Greatnesse and authoritie: But, on the contrarie, wee promise and sweare, that wee shall, to the uttermost of our power, with our meanes and lives, stand to the defence of our dread Sovereign, the King's Majestie, his person and authoritie, in the defence and preservation of the foresaid true Religion, Liberties, and Lawes of the Kingdome: As, also, to the mutuall defence and assistaunce, everie one of us of another in the same cause of maintaining the true Religion, and his Majestie's authoritie, with our best counsell, our bodies, meanes, and whole power, against all sorts of persons whatsoever. So that, whatsoever shall be done to the least of us for that cause, shall be taken as done to us all in generall, and to everie one of us in particular. And that wee shall neither directly nor indirectly suffer ourselves to be divided or withdrawn by whatsoever suggestion, combination, allurement, or terrour, from this blessed and loyall conjunction, nor shall cast in any let or impediment that that may stay or hinder any such resolution, as by common consent shall be found to conduce for so good ends. But, on the contrarie, shall, by all lawfull meanes, labour to further and promote the same; and if any such dangerous and divisive motion be made to us by word or writ, wee, and everie one of us, shall either suppress it, or, if need be, shall incontinent make the same known, that it may bee timeously obviated; neither do we feare the foule aspersions of rebellion, combination, or what else our adversaries, from their craft and malice would put upon us, seeing what we do is so well warranted, and ariseth from an unfained desire to maintaine the true worship of God, the majestie of our King, and the peace of the Kingdome, for the common happinesse of ourselves and posteritie. And because we cannot look for a blessing from God upon our proceedings, except with our profession and subscription we joyne such a life and conversation, as beseemeth Christians, who have renewed their Covenant with God; Wee therefore faithfully promise, for ourselves, our followers, and all others under us, both in publicke, in our particular families and personall carriage, to endeavour to keep ourselves within the bounds of Christian libertie, and to be good examples to others of all Godlinesse, Sobernesse, and Righteousness, and of everie dutie we owe to God and Man. And that this our Union and Conjunction may bee observed without violation, we call the living God, the Searcher of our Hearts, to witnesse, who knoweth this to be our sincere Desire, and unfained Resolution, as wee shall answer to JESUS CHRIST in the great day, and under the paine of God's everlasting wrath, and of infamie, and of losse of all honour and respect in this World. Most humble beseeching the LORD, to strengthen us by his Holy Spirit for this end, and to blesse our desires and proceedings with a happie success, that Religion and Righteousness may flourish in the land, to the glorie of God, the honour of our King, and peace and comfort of us all. In witnesse whereof we have subscribed with our hands all the premisses," &c.

After much deliberation, and the reconciliation of many scruples of conscience and difficulties among the various classes of Presbyterians, this elaborate and solemn compact and vow was publicly promulgated, and, for the first time, sworn in Edinburgh, on the 28th of February 1638.* An immense concourse of spectators assembled in the Greyfriars' church and churchyard, at an early hour, on the morning of that day; and at two o'clock, Rothes and Loudon of the nobility, Henderson and Dickson of the clergy, and Johuston, their legal adviser, arrived with the Covenant ready for signature. Henderson began the solemnities of the day with prayer, and Loudon followed in an oration of great courage and power; after which, about four o'clock, the Earl of Sutherland was the first to step forward and inscribe his name on the Covenant; and he was immediately followed by Sir Andrew Murray, a minister at Abdy in Fife, and all who were within the church; after which it was laid out on a flat gravestone in the churchyard, and signed, till the parchment was full, by persons of all ranks, sexes, and ages, with uplifted hands, and consecrated by solemn invocations to heaven, and with such demonstrations of enthusiasm as it is difficult, in these latter times, to imagine. It was a day, as piously and eloquently described by Henderson, in which the people in multitudes offered themselves to the service of Heaven "like the dew drops in the morning"—"wherein the arm of the Lord was revealed"—and "the Princes of the people assembled to swear allegiance to the King of kings."

These impressive proceedings did not terminate till nine o'clock in the evening; but the next day copies of the Covenant were laid open through the city and signed, with very few exceptions, by all the people. They were transmitted through all the provincial towns and parishes; and, unless, by a few at St Andrew's, Aberdeen, and Glasgow, the Covenant was hailed with mingled emotions of devotion and patriotism, such as, perhaps, never either before or since pervaded any nation with such simultaneous unanimity. Its spirit spread far and wide over the land like fire over its heath-clad hills, penetrating the shadows which brooded in the firmament; and, as the fiery cross was wont to be the signal for array in feudal strife, it summoned the sons of the hill and the dale to prepare their swords, should these be needed, for combat in a holier cause—subduing, with unexampled power, the hereditary feuds of hostile clans, and combining the whole nation into one mighty phalanx of incalculable energy.

* Both Mr Laing and Dr Cook say it was the 1st of March, (on the authority, perhaps, of Guthrie and Stevenson,) but Rothes' Relation, and the minutes of the subsequent Assembly, shew that it was in February. It is much to be regretted that Burnet, Baillie, and other chroniclers, and even later historians, are not sufficiently attentive to dates; and this carelessness in chronology often occasions great perplexity, and leads to much confusion of events in their narratives.

It is unnecessary, in this place, to trace all the turnings and windings of the tortuous policy by which, after this decisive demonstration of physical, as well as of moral strength, King Charles and his abettors endeavoured, for some months, to break down this great combination. Every variety of intrigue, and every artifice for procrastination, was employed to divide the Covenanters, and quell the spirit which had thus been evoked by his arbitrary proceedings; and the duplicity of Charles, in holding forth terms of accommodation, while he was preparing to crush Scotland by force of arms, is a fact fully demonstrated by many documents of unquestionable authenticity, which leaves one of the deepest stains that still rest on the memory of that misguided and unfortunate monarch. On one occasion when the Marquis of Hamilton came from Court, on a pretended amicable mission as the King's Commissioner, he was received at his entrance by 60,000 of his Majesty's Scottish subjects, including nearly all the nobility, gentry, and 600 clergymen, in a body, whose line extended from Musselburgh to the outskirts of the Metropolis; presenting a spectacle which moved the Commissioner even to tears, and drew from him a wish that his monarch had but witnessed such a host of his subjects, seeking only the enjoyment of their civil and religious liberties.

After many ineffectual attempts, by intimidation and artifice, to dissolve this league, and to break asunder the ties by which the Covenanters were bound together—after issuing new proclamations for the enforcement of the Liturgy, and the rotten Episcopacy of Scotland, and again in trepidation recalling these—after attempting, by a revival of the Covenant and Confession of the former reign, with hollow and equivocal terms intermixed with it, to counteract the National Covenant—and, after essaying to beguile the Covenanters by couceding to them a General Assembly of the Church and a Parliament, fettered, however, with such conditions as would have rendered these but a repetition of the corrupt and packed assemblages which, from 1606 to 1618, inclusive, had, under the management of his father, subverted the law of the land and the liberties of the Church—Charles was at length constrained to bow before a spirit which he could neither quell nor conquer. Hamilton, after various journeys betwixt the Court and Scotland, at last arrived at Dalkeith on the 15th of August; and, after anxious consultations with the Privy Council during several days, that body, with the royal sanction, at length abandoned the policy which he had endeavoured to enforce, and two acts were proclaimed—the one indicting a General Assembly at Glasgow on the 21st of November following, and another summoning a Parliament to be held at Edinburgh on the 15th of May 1639; and, at the same time, a declaration by the King was proclaimed, discharging the use of the Service Book, Books of Canons, High Commission, and Articles of the Perth Assembly—ordaining free entry to ministers, and subjecting the bishops to the jurisdiction of the General Assembly. A sort of amnesty also was passed, and a fast appointed to be held, on the fourteenth day before the Assembly, for a peaceable end to the distractions of the country.*

And thus the people of Scotland achieved a vindication of their laws and liberties, without one human life being sacrificed, or one drop of blood being shed; and, after years of deep dissimulation, was Charles constrained, by a great national confederacy, to yield in the end, all that his subjects had required at his hands as their sovereign. The conflict, however, was not yet terminated, and it continued, with many varieties of fortune, through future years. But the purpose for which the preceding narrative has been given being attained, it would be premature to prosecute these historical details further at present. Such a preliminary statement, however, appeared to be necessary, in order to clear the way for the Proceedings of the first General Assembly of the Church which had taken place during the long space of thirty-six years; for, although there had been six nominal assemblies during that interval,† these were so overborne by royal interference, and illegal and unwarrantable intrusions, that they were all essentially illegal, and were afterwards held to be null and void for ever.

In bringing the Proceedings of the Assembly 1638, under the reader's notice, it is deemed expedient to do so by embodying in these pages a very interesting account of the meeting of the Assembly, from the Journals of Principal Baillie, who was a member of it, and whose volumes, referable to those times, are considered of the highest authority by all succeeding historians. His account of the Assembly, up to the time that the Court was constituted by the election of a Moderator and Clerk, is all that is meant to be given in this place.

ting of our passionately-desired Assembly with the Commissioner's consent ; for daily he found himself more and more disappointed in his expectation to obtain these things which it seems he put the King in hopes might be gotten. Episcopacy to be put in place of safety, above the reach of the Assembly's hand, was now seen to be impossible, if his engines for this purpose, by the skill of his party, was turned back upon him. The Council had subscribed the King's Covenant, as it was expounded at the first in the 1581 year. His declaration, that Episcopacy was then in our Church, and will, that the Assembly should be discharged to meddle in the trial of this matter, could not be gotten concluded in a Council act. Sundry of the Lords of the Session being required to subscribe the Covenant in that his sense, refused ; with a protestation, that the exposition of these parts which might make for or against Episcopacy, should be referred to the determination of the ensuing Assembly. Noblemen and ministers did not dissemble their mind in their discourse of the unlawfulness, at least the inexpediency, of this office in our Church, and so their design by any means to have it presently put down. This put his Grace in great perplexity ; for he conceived, as some said, by the words and writs of sundry of our nobles of chief respect, that the Assembly might have been gotten persuaded to establish, at least to permit, or pass by untouched, that office : when the contrary appeared, he was at a nonplus ; for his instructions had made the place of bishops a noli me tangere ; but their persons were permitted to the doom of the severest mouth among us, where their miscarrying had required censure. His next disappointment was in the matter of the Covenant. He thought to have gotten the King's Covenant universally subscribed, and ratified hereafter in the Assembly ; so that the other, which had been subscribed by us before, might be quietly, without any infamous condemning of it, suppressed and buried. But far above and against all his thoughts, that Covenant was universally refused ; and, among these few that put their hands to it, divers avowed their mind, in all things, to be the same with those who had sworn the first. The missing of this intention increased his Grace's malcontentment. In two other designs also he found himself much deceived. He thought, an act for the freedom of the practice of Perth Articles, might have contented us ; and without condemning the matters themselves, before the Parliament by supplication had been brought to the casing of the standing law ; but an universal inclination appeared in all to have the things themselves tried without delay, and acts presently found anent them, as their nature required. Sicklike his instructions carried him to the removal of the high commission, books of canons, ordination, service, but to reason or condemn anything contained in any of them, which might have reflected against any public order, or anything practised or allowed by my Lord of Canterbury and his followers, in England or elsewhere. We in no case could be content, except we were permitted to examine all that were in these books, their matter now being the avowed doctrine of many in our Church ; and since we found the articles of Arminius, with many points of the grossest Popery, in the books, sermons, and discourses of our bishops and ministers, we were resolved to have these doctrines censured as they deserved, without any sparing with respect to any person who maintained them.

“The Commissioner, finding himself mistaken in all these, and many more of his designs, was afraid to labour to discharge the Assembly before it began, or at least to mar it so, if it sat down, that it should do no good. We referred to this intention his diligence to find subscribers to protestations against the assembly. We heard by our opposites of huge numbers of thir ; yet when it came to the proof, there were but few who could be moved to put their hands to such an act ; yea, not one who durst avow it, and reason the lawfulness of their deed. Some twenty hands at most were at the bishops' declinature opposite to our covenant. A few others, especially eight of the Presbytery of Glasgow, (who, to the Commissioner's great discontent, refused to adhere,) made forms of protestations by themselves ; but to no purpose. From this same intention, we alleged, flowed the putting to the horn, some days before our sitting, all these commissioners of the nobles, gentry, ministers, who, for any civil cause or pretence, could be gotten denounced, that so the synod should be deprived of many members. This practice was so new, and so strong reasons given in, why this kind of horning should hinder none from voicing in a synod, that no use was or durst be made of any such exception ; only the Treasurer's good-will, by the invention, was collected to be but small toward our cause. A proclamation also was made, that none should come to the place of the Assembly but such as were members ; and that in a peaceable manner. We protested, all might come who had interest, of party, witnesses, voters, assessors, complainers, or whatever way ; and that every man might come with such retinue and equipage as the Lords of Council should give example.

“These, and many more occurrences, put us in a continual fear of the Assembly's discharge ; yet the King's word was engaged so deeply, proclamations, publick fastings at his command, had already past ; and mainly the King's thought, that the inserting what he had granted, anent the service-book, canons, and Perth articles, in the Assembly's books, would give some contentment to the people, and disengage his promise of an assembly, though nothing more should be granted : these, and such considerations, made the Assembly sit down, contrary to all our fears, and a fair face to be made for a while by the Commissioner, as if he intended nothing else, and confidently expected his sitting till all questions should be peaceably decided for the content of all.

“On Friday, the 16th of November, we in the west, as were desired, came to Glasgow ; our noblemen, especially Eglinton, backed with great numbers of friends and vassals. We were informed, that the Commissioner and counsellors were to take up the town with a great number of their followers. So the nearest noblemen and gentlemen were desired to come in that night well attended. The town expected and provided for huge multitudes of people, and put on their houses and beds excessive prices; but the diligence of the magistrates, and the vacancy of many rooms, quickly moderated that excess. We were glad to see such order, and large provision, above all men's expectation; for which the town got much thanks and credit. It can lodge easily, at once, Council, Session, Parliament, and General Assembly, if need should require.

“ On Saturday most of our castland noblemen, barons, and ministers, came in. In the afternoon, the Lord Commissioner with most of the council came. The Earls of Rothes, Montrose, and many of our folks, went out to meet his Grace. Much good speech was among them; we protesting, that we would crave nothing but what clear scripture, reason, and law, would evince. His Grace assured nothing reasonable should be denied. On Sunday afternoon, some of the wisest of the ministry consulted upon the ordering of affairs. For myself, I resolved not to be a meddler in anything. I was well lodged. I had brought in a trunk full of my best books and papers. I resolved to read and write, and study as hard as I could all incident questions. On Monday the ministry met in three divers places; for no one private place could contain us. Out of every meeting three were chosen, nine in all, to be privy to hear references from the nobility, barons, burrows, to ripen and prepare what was to be proponed in public. We laid it on Mr Alexander Somervail, an old half-blind man, sore against his heart, to preach on Tuesday. He did pretty well. He insisted at length on the extirpation of all bishops, little to the contentment of some, but greatly to the mind of the most. Our privy consultation was about the clerk and the moderator. We were somewhat in suspense about Mr Alexander Henderson. He was incomparably the ablest man of us all for all things. We doubted if the moderator might be a disputer; we expected then much dispute with the bishops and Aberdeen doctors. We thought our loss great, and hazardous to lose our chief champion, by making him to be a judge of the party; yet at last, finding no other man who had parts requisite to the present moderation, (for in Messrs Ramsay, Dick, Adamson, Pollock, Cant, Livingston, Bonner, Cunningham, there were some things evidently wanting,) we resolved that Mr Henderson of necessity behoved to be the man. Mr Johnston to us all was a nonsuch for a clerk.

“ In the afternoon, Rothes, with some commissioners, went to the Commissioner, shewing, that the custom of our Church was, to begin her Assemblies with solemn fasting; also, that in absence of the former moderator, the oldest minister of the bounds or moderator of the place, used to preach, and moderate the action till another be chosen; that old Mr John Bell, for the reverence of his person, let be the other considerations, was meet to begin so great an affair. His Grace agreed presently to the fast. To the other motion he shewed, that it was his place to nominate the preacher to begin the action; that he knew none more worthy of that honour than the man they named; that he should think upon it. After an hour, he sent Dr Balcanqual to Mr Johu, desiring him to preach on the Wednesday, and moderate till another was chosen. On Tuesday after sermon the fast was intimated, and preaching in all the churches to-morrow. In the afternoon, we, in our meeting, appointed preachers for all the churches, as we did so long as we remained in town, for we took it to be our place. However, Mr John Maxwell refused to lend his pulpit to any so long as the Commissioner staid; and craved of his Grace, that none might come there but himself. So for the two first Sundays, before and after noon, Mr John took the High Church, and preached after his fashion, nothing to the matter in hand, so ambiguously that himself knew best to what side he inclined. I moved in our meeting, that in our advertisements, at least, we might follow the course of Dort, the commissioners from one presbytery should have their ordinary meetings to advise together of any matter of importance; for there were five from every presbytery, three ministers, one from the shire and one from the burgh, which might help one another in consideration. This was applauded. But when we came to the action, this and sundry other good overtures could not be got followed. Every man behoved to do for himself. Private association could not be gotten kept. We intended to have had sermon in the afternoon, where we were, in the great church, and so to have delayed the opening of the synod till the morrow; but danger being found in law to delay the synod to another day than the king had appointed, we resolved to let the people continue in their humiliation in the other churches; but presently after sermon in the morning, we, the members of the synod, thought meet to begin our business.

“ 1. On Wednesday, the 21st of November, with much ado could we throng into our places, an evil which troubled us much the first fourteen days of our sitting. The magistrates, with their town-guard, the noblemen, with the assistance of the gentry, whilst the Commissioner in person, could not get us entry to our rooms, use what force, what policy they could, without such delay of time and thrusting through, as grieved and offended us. Whether this evil be common to all nations at all public confluences, or if it be proper to the rudeness of our nation alone, or whether in thir late times, and admiration of this new reformation, have at all public meetings stirred up a greater than ordinary zeal in the multitude to be present for hearing and seeing, or what is the special cause of this irremediable evil, I do not know; only I know my special offence for it, and wish it remedied above any evil that ever I knew in the service of God among us. As yet no appearance of redress. It is here alone, I think, we might learn from Canterbury, yea, from the Pope, yea, from the Turks or Pagans, modesty and manners; at least their deep reverence in the house they call God's, ceases not till it have led them to the adoration of the timber and stones of the place. We are here so far the other way, that our rascals, without shame, in great numbers, makes such din and clamour in the house of the true God, that if they minted to use the like behaviour in my chamber, I would not be content till they were down the stairs.

“When, with great difficulty, we were set down, the Commissioner in his chair of state; at his feet, before, and on both sides, the chief of the Council—the Treasurer, Privy Seal, Argyle, Marr, Murray, Angus, Lauderdale, Wigton, Glencairn, Perth, Tullibardine, Galloway, Haddington, Kinghorn, Register, Treasurer-Depute, Justice-General, Amont, Justice-Clerk, Southesk, Linlithgow, Dalziel, Dumfries, Queensberry, Belhaven, and more; at a long table in the floor, our noblemen and barons, elders of parishes, Commissioners from Presbyteries, Rothies, Montrose, Eglinton, Cassils, Lothian, Wemyss, Loudon, Sinclair, Balmerino, Burleigh, Lindsay, Yester, Hume, Johnston, Keir, Auldbar, Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Durie, younger, Lamington, Sir John Mackenzie, George Gordon, Philorth, Tairie, Newton. Few Barons in Scotland of note but were either voters or assessors, from every burgh, the chief burghs; from Edinburgh, James Cochran and Thomas Paterson; from all the sixty-three Presbyteries, three Commissioners, except a very few; from all the four Universities, also, sitting on good commodious forms, rising up five or six degrees, going round about the low long table. A little table was set in the middle, forment the Commissioner, for the Moderator and Clerk. At the end, an high room, prepared chiefly for young noblemen, Montgomery, Fleming, Boyd, Areskine, Linton, Creichton, Livingston, Ross, Maitland, Drumlanrig, Drummond, Keir, Elcho, and sundry more, with huge numbers of people, ladies, and some gentlewomen, in the vaults above. Mr John Bell had a very good and pertinent sermon, sharp enough against our late novations and Episcopacy. The pity was, the good old man was not heard by a sixth part of the beholders. That service ended, Mr John came down to the little table, began the Synod with hearty prayer; which I seconded with affectionate tears, and many more, I trust, with me. My Lord gave in his commission to Mr Thomas Sandilands, as deputed by his father, Mr J. Sandilands, commissar of Aberdeen, clerk to the last General Assembly. His Grace harangued none at all, as we expected he would. We found him oft, thereafter, as able to have spoken well what he pleased, as any in the house. I take the man to be of a sharp, ready, solid, clear wit; of a brave and masterly expression; loud, distinct, slow, full, yet concise, modest, courtly, yet simple and natural language. If the King have many such men, he is a well-served Prince. My thoughts of the man before that time, were hard and base; but a day or two's audience wrought my mind to a great change towards him, which yet remains, and ever will, till his deeds be notoriously evil. His commission was in Latin, after a common, legal, and demi-barbarous style; ample enough for settling all our disorders, had not a clause containing instructions made it to restrict and serve ill. I have not yet got the copy. After this, our commissions were given in to the Moderator and Clerk, for the time, almost every one in the same tenor and words, containing a power from the Presbytery to the three ministers and one elder, to reason, vote, and conclude, in their name, in all things to be proponed, according to the word of God, and the Confession of Faith of the Church of Scotland, as we shall be answerable to God and the Church. The Presbyteries, Burghs, Universities, were called after the order of some roll of the old Assemblies, not of the latter. This was the labour of the first day.

“2. On Thursday, the second diet, we had no scant of protestations; more than a round dozen were enacted. After long delay, and much thronging, being set in our places, the Moderator, for the time, offered to my Lord Commissioner a leet, whereupon voices might pass for the election of a new Moderator. Here arose the toughest dispute we had in all the Assembly. His Grace, the Treasurer, Sir Lewis Stewart, (for, after the rencounter I wrote of at the Council table, the Advocate's service was no more required, but Sir Lewis used in his room,) reasoning and pressing with great eagerness, that, in the first place, before any Synodical action, the commissions might be discussed, lest any should voice as Commissioners whose commission was null, at least not tried to be valid. This was a ready way to turn the Assembly upside down, and to put us in a labyrinth inextricable: for, before the constitution of the Synod, the Commissioner would have so drawn in the deepest questions—such as the power of elders, the state of ministers censured by Bishops, and many more, which himself alone behoved to determine, no Assembly being constitute for the discussion of any question. Against this motion, as rooting up all possibility ever to settle any Assembly, but at the Commissioner's simple discretion, Rothies, Loudon, (Balmerino, through all the Assembly resolved to be well near mute,) Dickson, Livingston, Henderson, reasoned, that custom, equity, and necessity, did enforce the chusing a moderator and clerk, before the commissions be discussed, or anything else done. After much subtle, accurate, and passionate pleading—for both sides had prepared themselves, it seems, for this plea—the Commissioner craved leave to retire with the council for advisement. After a long stay in the chapter-house, returning, he was content to permit voicing for the moderator; with protestation, That this voicing should not import his approbation of the commissions of any voicer against whom he was to propone any just exception in due time, or his acknowledge of any voicer for a lawful member of the Assembly. His Grace required instruments also of another protestation, That the nomination of a moderator should be no ways prejudicial to the lords of the clergy, their office, dignity, or any privilege which law or custom had given them. Against both thir, Rothes took two instruments, in name of the commissioners from presbyteries and burghs, protesting, That his Grace's protestations should in nothing prejudice the lawfulness of any commission against which no just nullity should be objected in the time of the trial of the commissions; also, that his Grace's second protestation should not hinder the discussing the nature of the office, and the alledged privileges of the pretended bishops, in this present assembly. Lord Montgomery, in name of the pursuers of the complaint against the bishops, protested, That his Grace's protestation should not be prejudicial to the discussing in this present assembly, of their complaints against the persons, titles, dignities, and privileges of the pretended bishops. Mr Jo. Bell urged the voicing for the moderator; but his Grace shewed, that there was presented to him a paper, in name of the bishops, which he required then to be read. Here also was some sharp reasoning. Divers alledged, that no bill, supplication, protestation, or whatsoever, should be read to the Assembly, before it was an Assembly; but immediately after the Assembly's constitution, it should be in his Grace's option to cause read that paper of the Bishops, or any other, to which the Assembly's answer should be returned. After reasoning and requesting, his Grace used his authority to require the reading of the paper. At once there arose a tumultuous clamour of a multitude crying, No reading! No reading! This barbarous crying offended the Commissioner, and the most of all. Silence being gotten, his Grace protested, That the refusal of hearing that paper was unjust. Rothes also required acts of his protestation, in name of the commissioners, That the refusal was just and necessary. All being wearied with the multiplication of protestations, except the Clerk, who with every one received a piece of gold, his Grace, whether in earnest or in scorn, protested of our injury in calling the Lords Bishops pretended, whom yet the acts of Parliament authorized. Rothes, in our name, protested, That they behoved to be taken for pretended, till this Assembly had tried the challenges which were given against all their alledged prerogatives. How needless soever many of his Grace's protestations seemed to be, yet I was glad for his way of proceeding. It gave me some hopes of his continuance among us. I thought that this way of protesting had been resolved wisely in council, whereby the Commissioner might sit still till the end, and yet, by his presence, import no farther approbation to any of our conclusions than he found expedient. By appearance this course had been much better than that abrupt departure, which his posterior instructions, to all our griefs, and the great marring of the King's designs, forced him to. Mr John Bell again presented his leet for moderation. His Grace shewed, that his Majesty had written letters to six of the counsellors, Treasurer, Privy Seal, Argyle, Lauderdale, Carnegie, and Sir Lewis Stewart, as I think, to be his assessors, not only for council, but voicing in the synod. Argyle's letter was publicly read, that this his Majesty's desire should be condescended to before any farther proceeding. It was replied, with all respect to the worthy nobles named, That my Lord Marquis, in the produced commission, was appointed sole Commissioner; that assessors were only for council, and not for multiplication of voices; that the King in person could require but one voice; that the giving of more voices to the assessors might give way, not only to very many, as in some unallowable assemblies it had been, but to so many as by plurality might over-sway all. Against this refusal his Grace protested, with some grief; and we also, desiring that our reasons might be inserted without protestation. At last we were permitted to chuse the Moderator. Mr John Ker, Mr Johu Row, Mr J. Bonner, Mr William Livingston, and Mr Alexander Henderson, were put in the leet by Mr John Bell; for the lecting of the new is in the hands of the old. Messrs Ramsay, Pollock, and Dickson, for withdrawing of votes, were holden off. All, without exception, went upou the last, as in the most of our matters there was no diversity at all, or, where any, it was but of a few. I remember not how his Grace voiced; but it was his custom to voice rather by way of permission than to say anything that might import his direct assent; for it seemed he resolved to keep himself, in all his words and deeds, so free, that he might, when he would, disavow all that was done, or to be done, in that Assembly. Mr Henderson being chosen with so full accord, made a pretty harangue, whether off-hand or premeditated, I know not. There was a conclusion taken that night, after some reasoning to the contrary, to have but one session in the day, to sit from ten or eleven, to four or five. So we were all relieved of the expenses of a dinner. An only breakfast put us all off till supper; for commonly we sat an hour with candle-light. We ended this day with the Moderator's prayers. Among that man's other good parts, ~~that~~ that was one—a faculty of grave, good, and zealous prayer, according to the matter in hand; which he exercised, without fagging, to the last day of our meeting.

“3. In our third session, on Friday November 23, the Moderator presented a leet to be voiced for chusing the Clerk. Here a longer dispute than needed fell out betwixt the Commissioner and the Moderator, whom Rothes, but especially Loudon, did second. The Commissioner, whether of true intent to have a base clerk, of whose submissiveness to their injunctions they might be hopeful, or to shew his piety and equity to see every one kept in their right, where he had place, though he professed small obligation to the young man, who, for no entreaty, would be pleased to shew him any blink of the Assembly's books; yet pressed much that the young man, Mr Thomas Sandilands, might serve here, as his father, Mr James Sandilands, Commissar of Aberdeen, his depute, since his father's decease could not spoil him of an advantageous office, whereto he was provided ad vitam. Yet it was carried, that since his father was not provided to that office but by Mr Thomas Nicolson's demission, and a corrupt Assembly's consent, without any mention of deputation; also, since he was so infirm as he was unable to attend the service, and unwilling to reside at Edinburgh, where the registers of the Church behoved to lie; for thir, and many other reasons, the clerk's place was found to be vacant. Consideration was promised to be had of Mr Thomas Sandiland's interest, which he submitted to the Assembly's discretion. In the leet, Mr Thomas was first, after John Nicol, and Alexander Blair, and Mr Archibald Johnston. The Commissioner would not voice to any of them, because he saw no lawful demission of the former clerk. The Moderator then took his Grace for a non liquet. Yesternight's plea was here renewed. His Grace required that his assessor's voice might be craved in the clerk's election: the Moderator thought it unfit to trouble their Lordships to voice about a clerk, since they did not voice to the choosing of the Moderator, a superior office. Many words were here spent, till at last reasons in writ were produced, why the Commissioner and his assessors should have but one voice. I thought, in the time, these reasons were of an high strain, and some of them struck deeper on authority than I could have wished. Traquair craved a double of them, and promised an answer; but the subsequent affairs, or somewhat else, hindered that answer yet to appear. This high, yea highest question, (for in all the Assembly we had nothing else that concerned authority,) was closed by the renewing of yesternight's protestation, on both sides.

"The leet put to voicing, Mr Archibald Johnston, by all save one, was elected. Being deeply sworn, he was admitted to all the rights, profits, privileges, which any in former time had enjoyed by that place: To him, Mr James Sandilands, in face of the Assembly, delivered two registers, which contained the acts of the kirk since the year 1590, testifying that his father had never any more in his custody. The Moderator required all earnestly to procure the production of any of the church-registers that could be had; for the loss of such a treasure as the Church's evidence, was pitiful. His Grace protested his willingness to do his endeavour for so good a work. Rothes intreated that the Bishops might be caused deliver what they had: for it was known that King James had sent a warrant to Mr Thomas Nicolson, late Clerk, to deliver to the Bishop of St Andrew's, the Registers of the Church. After much regretting the irreparable loss of these writs, the new Clerk declared, that by the good providence of God, these books they spake of were come to his hands, which he there produced to all our great joy. Five books in folio, four written and subscribed, and margined with the known hands of one Gray and Ritchie, clerks to the General Assembly, containing the full register from the Reformation in 1560, to the year 1590, where Mr Thomas Sandilands's books began, except some leaves which Bishop Adamson had torn out. Thir one Winram, depute to Mr Thomas Nicolson, had left to one Alexander Blair, his successor in office, from whom Mr Johnston had got them. The first was an extract, by way of compend, from the 1560 to the 1590, whereby, in a good part, the twenty-three leaves of Adamson's rapine might be restored. The moderator craved that these books might be sighted by Argyle, Lauderdale, and Southesk: but the Commissioner would not permit his assessors to undertake such employment, since they were refused to voice in the Assembly; but he was content that a committee of the members of the synod should be named, to try if these books were authentick and full registers. So Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr John Adamson, Mr James Bonner, Mr John Row, Mr William Livingston, Mr Robert Murray, with young Durie, the clerk of Dundee, and Mr Alexander Pierson, advocate, were appointed to their report and reasons, as soon as they could. The moderator then required, that for the Assembly's full constitution, the commissions might be put to trial. But the commissioner caused D. Hamilton first to be called, and present his paper to be read. His Grace urged much, that, since the former objections were removed, of the want of a moderator and clerk, the paper might now be read. It was replied, over and over, that it could not be, till by the discussion of the commissions the Assembly were constitute. Traquair pressed—That the paper possibly had exceptions against the lawfulness of the election of the commissioners, which were impertinent to alledge, if once they were approved. The Commissioner assured, he knew not what was in these papers; but, presupposing they were formed for the opening of the eyes of those who were to voice anent the members of the Assembly, it was the only time to read them before the voicing. Rothes replied—That exception against particular commissioners might not be proponed, until the trial of their commissions; and exceptions against the whole Assembly could not be heard till it were an Assembly. The moderator added, that if in that paper there were any light to open their eyes, they should shortly profess their repentence of their error in not reading it, when it was required. His Grace protested—That this not reading before the trial of the commissions, should import no prejudice to the lords of the clergy, and their adherents; and of this protestation he required an act from the new clerk's hand. The clerk said, he could write no act without the Assembly's warrant, and it could give no warrant till once it was in being. The Commissioner then required instruments, in my Lord Register's hands, of his protestation, since the clerk refused. The clerk shewed his willingness, at the moderator's directions, to write his Grace's protestation; but might give no extracts till the Assembly were constitute. In the forming of this protestation, the clerk, I thought, was to seek in that; his wit he kythed ever thereafter; the act beloved to be formed and reformed; the commissioner and the clerk shaped it over and over again, ere they could fall on a fashion which his Grace could like. This made me pity Johnston, and think him the better advocate than clerk; but the youth's tried sufficiency in both the acts proves my mistaking, or at least that this inlake in the first entry to his office was but occasional, and merely accidental.

“In the progress of this dispute his Grace shewed the necessity that was laid on him, in this passage, to be punctually circumspect, for howbeit he was a great Commissioner; yet he was but a poor subject and servant, liable to account for all his service. Much reasoning was that the bishops' exceptions against the judges should be heard, before they were acknowledged and constitute for judges. When Traquair and Loudon had harped on this string a while, Argyle lends in his word, that a party gives in their exceptions against the assize before it be sworn; so why might not the bishops give in their exceptions against the Assembly, which now was like an assize, called and convened, but not yet sworn? The moderator cuttedly, (as the man naturally hath a little choler, not yet quite extinguished,) answered—That the Commissioner, his Grace, was of great sufficiency himself; that he only should speak there; that they could not answer to all the exceptions that a number of witty noblemen could propone; that these who were not commissioners would do well to inform his Grace of what they thought meet, in convenient time. This check, I believe, was intended more for others than for Argyle, who would have taken it worse if it had fallen on their fingers. Always Loudon took it off in a quick jest, that my Lord Argyle's instance was good, if the bishops had compeared as pannelled men before an assize. This wearisome plea ended that day's action, for his Grace acquiesced in his protestation.”

Having thus, by the foregoing notes and extracts, in some measure prepared the general reader for entering on an examination of the Acts and Proceedings of the General Assembly of 1638, it only remains that we should explain the arrangement which we have adopted in digesting the subject-matter of these pages; and, in stating the following outline of that arrangement, with respect to one Assembly, it is right to state, that we mean to follow out the same plan with regard to all the years that follow. In reference, then, to this first Assembly, we shall present our materials in the following order, viz. :—

I. The Acts of the Assembly, which were extracted by the Clerk, and printed in the year 1639.

II. An Abstract of the Proceedings, and a List or Index of all the Acts of the Assembly, authenticated by Archibald Johnston the Clerk, copied from an extract thereof under his hand, which is deposited in the Advocates' Library.

III. Historical Documents relative to the events which occurred in Scotland betwixt 1633, and the sitting of the Assembly in Nov. 1638.

IV. A Report of the Discussions in that Assembly, from an unpublished contemporary M.S.

V. Notes and Illustrations of these proceedings, derived from contemporary and collateral sources.

In closing these introductory remarks, we must guard ourselves against the possible imputation of being blind and indiscriminate admirers of the Covenanters. We are fully alive to all the exceptionable points in their character and career; and we should have studied our country's history and human nature very superficially indeed, if we had not, long ere now, discovered the infirmities and obliquities which were mingled with their higher attributes. It cannot be doubted by any man who has studied the history of the period of which we have given a rapid sketch, that they often swerved from what was the straight path of rectitude; and it is impossible to peruse even the most partial narrative of their consultations, without also discerning, in the policy and proceedings of the Covenanters, the alloy of selfish interests and grovelling passions—the fumes of fanaticism, the unrectified workings of a semi-barbarous spirit, and much democratic insolence. There was withal a tone of preternatural sanctity assumed, which savours strongly of hypocrisy in many of the individuals who figured in their counsels. But, after giving full effect to all these deductions from their merits, we can never forget that these deformities were, in a great measure, created and brought prominently into view by circumstances which rendered it almost impossible that such characteristics should not have been called into existenc. We can never forget that they were goaded into the courses which they pursued by an unjustifiable series of aggressions on the dearest interests of human beings—by an open and outrageous assumption of arbitrary power over the lives, property, and liberties, civil and religious, of the country; and that their numerous loyal and dutiful supplications for redress and security, were treated with duplicity and contempt. And above all, we can never forget that it is to the noble stand which was made by the Covenanters of Scotland against arbitrary power and Popish tyranny in disguise, two hundred years ago, that we are, in a great measure, indebted for the enjoyment of the invaluable Protestant Institutions in Church and State which we now possess, and which, in the course of time, and from new combinations of causes, seem, in the present day, to be once more exposed to similar perils. May the present generation, in the maintenance of these precious institutions, avoid those errors—the simulation and the intolerance of former times—and may their patriotism be elevated to purity by imitating only the virtues of the Scottish Covenanters!

 OF THE
 SOLEMNE GENERALL ASSEMBLY
 OF THE
 KIRK OF SCOTLAND,

Indicted by the KINGS MAJESTIE, and convened at Glasgow the XXI. of Nov. 1639; Visied, Collected, and Extracted forth of the Register of the Acts of the Assembly, by the Clerk thereof. Edinburgh, printed by the Heirs of ANDREVV HART. Anno Dom. 1639.

CAROLUS Dei gratia, Magnæ Britanniae, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, fideique Defensor, Omnibus probis hominibus suis ad quos præsentis literæ pervenerint, Salutem. Sciatis nos considerantes magnos in hoc regno nostro Scotiæ non ita pridem exortos tumultus, ad quos quidem componendos multiplices regiæ nostræ voluntatis declarationes promulgavimus, quæ tamen minorem spe nostrâ effectum hactenus sortitæ sunt: Et nunc statuentes ex pio erga dictum antiquum regnum nostrum affectu, ut omnia gratiosè stabiliantur & instaurentur, quod (per absentiam nostram) non aliâ ratione melius effici potest quam fideli aliquo Delegato constituto, cui potestatem credere possimus tumultus hujusmodi consopiendi, aliaque officia præstandi, quæ in bonum & commodum dicti antiqui regni nostri eidem Delegato nostro imperare nobis videbitur. Cumque satis compertum habeamus obsequium, diligentiam, & fidem prædilecti nostri consanguinei & consilarii, JACOBI MARCHIONIS HAMILTONII, Comitis Arraniæ & Cantabrigiæ, Domini Aven & Innerdail, &c. eundemque ad imperata nostra exequenda sufficienter instructum esse, Idecirco fecisse & constituisse, tenoreque præsentium facere & constituere præfatum prædilectum nostrum consanguineum & consiliarium JACOBUM MARCHIONEM de HAMILTOUN nostrum Commissiouarium ad effectum subscriptum. Cum potestate dicto JACOBO MARCHIONI de HAMILTOUN, &c. dictum regnum nostrum ad eundi, ibidemque præfatos tumultus in dicto regno nostro componendi, aliaque officia à nobis eidem committenda in dicti regni nostri bonum & commodum ibi præstandi, eoque Concilium nostrum quibus locis & temporibus ei visum fuerit convocandi, ac rationem & ordinem in præmissis exequendis servandum declarandi & præscribendi; & quæcunque alia ad Commissionis hujus capita pro commissâ sibi fide exequenda, eandemque ad absolutum finem perducendam et prosequendam conferre possunt tam in Concilio quam extra Concilium, nostro nomine efficiendi & præstandi; idque similiter & adeo liberè ac si nos in sacrosancta nostra persona ibidem adessemus. Præterea cum plena potestate dicto JACOBO

MARCHIONI de HAMILTOUN, prout sibi videbitur nostro servitio & bono dicti regni nostri conducere, conventum omnium ordinum ejusdem regni nostri indicendi, ac publica comitia & conventus eorundem ordinum eorumve alterius vel utriusque quibus temporibus & locis sibi visum fuerit statuendi, & ibidem nostram sacratissimam personam cum omnibus honoribus & privilegiis supremo Commissionario nostri Parlamenti & publici conventus incumben. similiter adeoque amplè sicut quivis supremus Commissionarius quocunque tempore retroacto gavisus est gerendi: Neenon cum potestate præfato JACOBO MARCHIONI de HAMILTOUN Synodos nationales ecclesie dicti regni nostri tenendas temporibus & locis quibus sibi visum fuerit indicendi, & ibidem seipsum tanquam nostrum Commissionarium gerendi, omniaque eidem tenendis inservientia secundum leges & praxin prædictæ ecclesie & regni nostri præstandi: Et hac præsentis nostræ Commissionis durante nostro beneplacito duratura, & semper donec eadem per nos expressè iuhibeatur. In cujus rei testimonium, præsentibus magnum sigillum nostrum unâ cum privato nostro sigillo (quia præfatus MARCHIO de HAMILTOUN impræsentiarum est magni sigilli custos) apponi præcepimus, Apud Oatlands vigesimo nono die mensis Julii, Anno Domini millesimo sexcentesimo trigesimo octavo, Et anno regni nostri decimo quarto.

Per signaturam manu S.D.N. Regis superscriptam.

The King's Letter to the Generall Assembly.

ALTHOUGH We be not ignorant that the best of Our actions have beene mistaken by many of Our subjects in that Our antient Kingdome, as if We had intended innovation in Religion or Lawes; yet considering nothing to be more incumbent to the duty of a Christain King, then the advancement of God's glory, and the true religion; forgetting what is past, We have seriously taken to Our Princely consideration such particulars as may settle and establish the truth of Religion in that Our ancient Kingdome, and also to satisfie all Our good people of the reality of Our intentions herein, having indicted a free Generall Assembly to be kept at Glasgow the 21. of this instant; We have likewise appointed Our Commissioner to attend the same, from whom you are to expect Our pleasure in every thing, and to whom We require you to give that true and due respect and obediee, as if We were personally present Ourselves. And in full assurance of Our consent to what he shall in Our name promise, We have signed these, and wills the same for a testimonie to posterity to be registered in the Bookes of the Assembly. At White-Hall the 29. of October 1638.

Act Sess. 6. November 27. 1638.

THE testimonie of the Committy, for tryall of the Registers, subscribed with their hands, being produced, with some reasons thereof in another paper, and publicly read; My Lord Commissioner professed that it had resolved him of sundry doubts, but desired a time to be more fully resolved.

The Moderatour desired that if any of the Assembly had anything to say against the said testimonie for the books, that they would declare it; and finding none to oppon, yet he appointed the day following, to any to object anything they could say, and if then none could object, the Assembly would hold the Registers as sufficiently approved.

Act. Sess. 7. November 28.

Act. Approving the Registers.

ANENT the report of the Assemblies judgment of the authority of the books of Assembly; the Moderatour having desired that if any of the Assembly had anything to say, they would now declare it, otherwise they would hold all approved by the Assembly.

The Commissioner his Grace protested that the Assemblies approving these books, or anything contained in them be no wayes prejudiciall to his Majestic, nor to the Archbishops, and Bishops of this Kingdome, or any of their adherents; because he had some exceptions against these books. My Lord Rothes desired these exceptions to be condemned on, and they should be presently cleared, and protested that these books should be esteemed authentick and obligatorie hereafter.

The whole Assembly all in one voice approved these books, and ordained the same to make faith in judgment, and out-with, in all time coming, as the true and authentick Registers of the Kirk of Scotland, conform to the testimonie subscribed by the Committie, to be insert with the reasons thereof in the books of Assembly: Whereof the tenour followeth.

WE under-subscribers, having power and commission from the generall Assembly now presently convened, and sitting at Glasgow, to peruse, examine, and cognosee upon the validity, faith and strength of the books and registers of the Assembly under-written, to wit: A register beginning at the Assembly holden the twentie day of December 1560, and ending at the fourth session of the Assembly holden the 28 of December 1566.

Item, another register beginning at the generall Assembly, holden the second day of June 1567. and ending at the fourth session of the Assembly holden at Perth the ninth day of August 1572, which register is imperfect, and mutilate in the end, and containeth no leaf nor page after that page which containeth the said inscription of the said fourth session; which two registers bears to be subscribed by Iohn Gray scribe.

Item, a register of the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the seventh day of August 1574, and ending with the twelfth session, being the last session of the Assembly 1579.

Item another register beginning at the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the tenth of May 1586. and ending in the seventeenth session of the Assembly holden in March. 1589.

Item another register being the fifth book, and greatest volume, beginning at the Assembly holden in Anno 1560. and ending in the year 1590.

Having carefully viewed, perused and considered the said registers, and every one of them, and being deeply and maturely advised, as in a matter of greatest weight and consequence, do attest before God, and upon our conscience declare to the world and this present Assembly, that the saids foure registers above expressed, and every one of them, are famous, authentick, and good registers; which ought to be so reputed, and have public faith in judgement and out-with, as valid and true records in all things; and that the said fifth and greatest book, beginning at the Assembly 1560 and ending 1590. being margined by the hand-writs of the Clerk, and reviser of the registers, cognosed, and tryed, and agreeable to the other foure registers, in what is extant in them, ought also to be free of all prejudice and suspieion, and received with credit. And in testimonie of our solemne affirmation, we have subscribed these presents with our hands.

The books now exhibited unto us under-subscribers, which we have revised and perused by commission from the generall Assembly, are true registers of the Kirk: to wit, Five Volumes, whereof the first two contain the acts of the Assembly, from the year of God 1560. to the year 1572. all subscribed by Iohn Gray, Clerk: The third from the year of God 1574. to the year 1579: The fourth from the year of God 1586. to the year 1589: At which time Master Iames Ritche was Clerk, who hath frequently written upon the margine of the saids two last books, and subscribed the said margine with his hand-writing. And the fifth book being the greatest volume, containing the acts of the generall Assembly, from the year of God 1560. to the year 1590. which agreeth with the foresaids other foure books and registers, in so far as is extant in them, and further recordeth, what is wanting by them, passing by what is mutilate in them, and which with the two Volumes produced by Master Thomas Sandilands from the year 1590. to this present, maketh up a perfect register.

I. For the first two Volumes subscribed by Iohn Gray, albeit it be not necessar in such antiquitie to prove that he was Clerk, seeing he signes himself so by his subscription, yet the same is made manifest by an act mentioned in the third book, in the time of Master Iames Riechie, who succeeded him in the said office, and his hand-writ was acknowledged by sundry old men in the ministry.

II. The uniformitie of his subscriptions through both Volumes, evident by ocular inspection above the ordinarie custome of most famous Notars, delivers the same from all suspieion in facto tam antiquo.

III. There be mauny coppies, specially of general acts, yet extant, which do not debord from the saids registers, but are altogether agreeable thereto.

III. It is constant by the universal custome of this Kingdome, that all registers are transmitted from one keeper to his successour, and so comming by progresse and succession from the first incumbent to the last possessour, are never doubted to be the registers of that judicatorie, whereof the last haver was Clerk; and therefore it is evident that these books comming successively from John Gray, Master James Richie, and Master Thomas Nicolson, who were all Clerks to the Assembly, into the hands of Master Robert Winrame, who was constitute Clerk depute by the said Master Thomas Nicolson, (as his deputation here present to show, will testific,) are the undoubted registers of the Assembly: like as Alexander Blair succeeded the said Master Robert in his place of Clerkship to the assignations and modifications of Ministers stipends; and during Master Robert his life-time, was his actuall servant, and so had the said books by progresse from him, which the said Alexander is readie presently to testific.

V. The two registers of Master James Richie, albeit not uuder his own hand, yet are frequently margined with his own hand-writ, and the same marginall additions subscribed by him; which hand-writ is seen and cognosed by famous men, who knoweth the same; and is evident, being compared with his several writings and subscriptions yet extant.

VI. The saids registers are more perfect, lesse vitiated, scored, and interlined, than any other authentic and famous registers of the most prime judicatories within this Kingdome.

VII. Master Thomas Sandilands, in name of his father, who was late Clerk by dimission of Master Thomas Nicolson, hath produced a volume, which proveth the saids two registers of Master James Richie to be sufficient records; because that same Volume is begun by that same hand, whereby the said Master James Richie his registers are written, and is subscribed once in the margine by Master James Richie his hand, and is followed forth, and continued in the same book by Master Thomas Nicolson, who succeeded him in the place, and was known by most men here present to be of such approven worth and credit, that he would never have accomplished a register which had not been famous and true: and whereof the hand-write, had not then been known to him sufficiently.

VIII. That register produced by Master Thomas Sandilands, and prosecuted by Master Thomas Nicolson, proves the first part of that register to be true and famous; and that first part being, by ocular inspection, of the same hand-writ with Master James Richies registers, and subscribed in the margine with the same hand-writ, proveth Richies two books to be good records, and Richies registers doth approve Grays books by the act of Assembly before written; specially considering the same hath come by progresse and succession of Clerks, in the hands of Alexander Blair, now living, and here present.

IX. The compts anent the thirds of benefices between the Regent for the time and the Assembly, in the second volume, pag. 147, are subscribed by the Lord Regents own hand, as appeareth; for it is a royall-like subscription, and there is no hand-writ in all the book like unto it, and beareth not sic subscribitur, which undoubtedly it would do, if it were a coppie.

X. Master James Carmichell was commanded by the generall Assembly 1595, Sess. 9, in the book produced by Master Thomas Sandilands, to extract the generall acts forth of their books; and it is evident that these books are the same which he perused for that effect, because he hath marked therein the generall acts with a crosse, and hath designed the act by some short expression upon the margine, which is cognosed and known to be his hand writ, by famous and worthy persons; which is also manifest by the said Master James his hand and subscription, written with his own hand in the last leafe of the said books; as also acknowledged in the said book produced by Master Thomas Sandilands, wherein the said Master James Carmichell grauteth the receipt of these, with some other books of the Assemblies.

XI. The registers produced, are the registers of the Assembly, because in Anno 1586, the Assembly complaineth that their registers are mutilate: which hath relation to Richies third book, which is lacerat and mutilate in divers places, without any interveening of blank paper, or any mention of hic deest.

XII. If these were not principall registers, the enemies of the puritie of Gods worship, would never have laboured to destroy the same: which notwithstanding they have doue; as appeareth by the affixing and battering of a piece of paper upon the margine, anent a condition of the commission uot to exceed the established discipline of this Kirk, subscribed by the Clerk, book 3. pag. 147. And the blotting out the certification of the excommunication against Bishop Adamson, book 4. pag. 30. who in his Recautation generally acknowledgeth the same: but which, without that recantation, cannot be presupposed to have been done, but by corrupt men, of intension to corrupt the books, which were not necessary, if they were not principall registers.

XIII. In the Assembly 1586, The Church complained upon the Chancelour his retention of their registers, & desired they might be delivered to their Clerk, which accordingly was done; as a memorandum before the beginning of the first book, bearing the redeliverie of these foure books to Master James Richie, Clerk, proporteth; which clearly evinceth that these foure books are the registers of the Assembly.

XIV. The said fifth book and greatest Volume, is also marked on the margine, with the hand writ of the said Master James Carmichell (which is cognosed) who was appointed to peruse the books of the Assembly as said is, and would not have margined the same by vertue of that command, nor extracted the generall acts out of it, if it were not an approbation thereof, as an authentick and famous book.

XV. The said fifth volume doth agree with the other foure books, in all which is extant in them, and marketh the blanks, which are lacerate and riven out of the same; and compleateth all what is lacking in them.

XVI. In the book of Discipline pertaining to Master James Carmichel, subscribed by himself, and Master James Richie, there are sundry acts and passages quotted out of the said fifth great Volume, saying, It is written in such a page of the book of Assembly, which agreeth in subject and quottations with the said fifth book, and cannot agree with any other; so that Master James Carmichel reviser of the Assembly books, by their command, would not alledge that book, nor denominate the same a book of the Assembly, if it were not an authentic famous book.

XVII. Though the corrupt nature of man hath been tempted to falsifie particular evidents, yet it hath never been heard that any whole register hath ever been counterfeited; neither can it bee presupposed that any will attempt that high wickednesse, seeing the inducements answerable to that crime, can hardly be presupposed.

XVIII. It is certain, and notour to all these who are intrusted with the keeping of the publick records of the Kingdome, that the same are never subscribed by the Clerk, but only written and filled up by servants, and most frequently by unkuown hands, yet they and the extracts thereof make publick faith, and the same are uncontrovertedly authentick registers: and when the most publick registers of the Kingdome shall be seen, and compared with these registers of the Assembly, it shall be found that these other registers of the most soveraigne judicatories ever unsubscribed are more incorrect, oftner margined, scored, and interlined, made up by greater diversitie of unknown hand-writs, than these books of the Assembly, which by speciall providence are preserved so intire, that in the judgment of any man acquainted with registers, they will manifestly appear at the very sight to be true, famous, and authentick.

XIX. The fame and credit of ancient registers in this Kingdome, is so much reverenced, that if any extract be different or disconforme from the register, that extract albeit subscribed by the person who for the time had been of greatest eminence in the trust of registers, will be rectified, conforme to the register, and have no force, so far as it debordeth there-from; although the registers be written with an obscure, unknown hand, and unsubscribed.

Act Sess. 12. December fourth.

The six late pretended Assemblies condemned.

ANENT the report of the Committie, for trying the six last pretended Assemblies: They produced in writ sundrie reasons, clearing the unlawfulness and nullitie of these Assemblies: which were confirmed by the registers of the Assembly, the books of Presbyteries, the Kings Majesties own letters, and by the testimonie of divers old reverend Ministers, standing up in the Assembly, and verifying the truth thereof. The Assembly with the universall consent of all, after the serious examination of the reasons against every one of these six pretended Assemblies apart, being often urged by the Moderatour, to informe themselves thoroughly, that without doubting, and with a full perswasion of minde, they might give their voices, declared all these six assemblies, of Linlithgow 1606. and 1608, Glasgow 1610. Aberdeen 1616. St Andrews 1617. Perth 1618, And every one of them to have been from the beginning unfree, unlawfull, and null Assemblies, and never to have had, nor hereafter to have, any Ecclesiasticall authoritic, and their conclusions to have been, and to bee of no force, vigour, nor efficacie: Prohibited all defence and observance of them, and ordained the reasons of their nullitie to be insert in the books of the Assembly: Whereof the tennour followeth:

I. From the indiction of it. It was indicted the third of December, to bee kept the tenth of December. And so there was no time given to the Presbyteries, far distant, neither for election of Commissioners, nor for preparation to those who were to be sent in Commission. The shortnesse of the time of the indiction is proved by the Presbyterie books of Edinburgh, Perth, and Hadingtoun, &c.

II. From the want of a lawfull calling, to these who went to that meeting, seeing they were not at all elected by their Presbyteries, but were enjoined to come by the Kings letters. This also is proved by the foresaids books of the Presbyteries, and by his Majesties letters.

III. From the nature of that meeting, which was only a private meeting, or convention, for consultation to be taken by some persons of sundry estates written for, as the Kings letters and the Presbyterie books do acknowledge.

III. From the power of these ministers who were present Their Presbyteries did limitate them: First, That they should give no suffrages in that meeting as a generall Assembly. Secondly, That they agree to nothing that may any wayes be prejudiciall to the acts of the generall Assemblies, or to the established discipline of the Kirk. Thirdly, That they should not agree to resolve or conclude any questiou, article, or matter whatsoever, the decision whereof is pertinent, and proper to a free generall Assembly. Fourthly, If anything be concluded contrary thereunto, that they protest against it. These limitations are cleare by the Presbyterie books.

V. The acts of this meeting were not insert in the book of Assemblies, as is evident by the register.

VI. The next pretended Assembly at Linlithgow, 1608. doth acknowledge the Assembly, Whereof Master Patriek Galloway was Moderatour, to have been the last immediate Assembly, preceeding itselfe: and that Assembly wherof he was moderatour, was the Assembly holden at Halyroodhouse, 1602. So they did not acknowledge that meeting at Linlithgow, 1606. for any Assembly at all. This is cleare by the registers of the Assembly, 1608. in the entrie thereof.

I. Manie of the voters in that pretended Assembly had no lawfull commission from the Kirk, to wit, 42. Noble men, officers of estate, counsellours, and Barrons, also the Bishops, contrare to the act of Dundie, 1597, and one of their eaveats. The Noble men, were as commissioners from the King; the Bishops had no commission at all from the Presbyteries, for every Presbyterie out of which they came, had their full number of Commissioners beside them, as the register of the Assembly beareth.

II. In a lawfull Assembly there should be none but Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, and but three ministers at most, with one Elder, Commissioners from every Presbyterie, according to the act made at Dundie, 1597. But in that pretended Assembly, there were foure ministers from the severall Presbyteries of Edinburgh, and Cowper, five from the Presbyterie of Arbroth, as the roll of the said pretended Assembly beareth; whereas there were no ruling Elders sent from Presbyteries, according to the book of polieie and act of Dundie.

I. The Commission of the pretended Commissioners to that meeting was null. 1. Because the election of them was not free, seeing they were nominate by the Kings Letters, as the Presbyterie books of Edinburgh, Perth, and Hadingtoun declare. And the Bishop of St Andrews in his letter to some Presbyteries required them to send such commissioners as the King had nominate: assuring them that none other would be aaccepted. This the Bishops letter registrat in the Presbyterie books of Hadingtoun doth cleare. 2. And whereas there were no ruling elders sent from the Presbyteries to that pretended Assembly, as the roll of Commissioners sheweth; yet there were moe ministers from sundrie severall Presbyteries then three, as five from Brechen, five from Arbroth, five from Kirkeubright, seven from the Presbytery of Argyll, foure from the Presbyterie of Cowper, foure from Linlithgow, foure from Pasley, foure from Hainmiltoun, foure from Drumfreis, foure from Dunkell: as the register of that Assembly beareth.

II. There were thirtie voters of Noble men and Barrons, beside the pretended Bishops, who had no commission from any Presbyterie. In the fourth Session of this pretended Assembly it is plainly said, That the Noble men and Barrons came to it by the Kings direction.

III. The voting of the commissioners was not free; for by the Kings Letter to the Assembly they were threatned, and it was declared that their consent was not needfull to any act to be made there: The King might doe it by his own power, yet they were allured to vote by a promise that their good service in so doing should be remembred and rewarded thereafter.

IIII. The principall acts which were made, were set down verbatim in the privie conference, which chiefly consisted of the Kings Commissioners and pretended Bishops, and only read to be ratified in the Assembly.

V. Sundrie ministers then present, doe now declare, that they knew the ministers who voted the wrong way, to have received their present reward, and that money was largely dealt unto them.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly at Aberdene. 1616.

I. There was no election of a Moderatour: but that place usurped by the pretended Bishop of Saint Andrews, as the Register beareth.

II. The indiction of that pretended Assembly was but twentie dayes before the holding of it: so that the Presbyteries and burghes could not be prepared for sending their commissioners: which caused the absence of many Presbyteries and fourtie foure Burghes.

III. There were twentie five noble-men, and gentlemen voters without commission from the Kirk. Mr. William Struthers voted for the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, yet had no commission there-from; The commission being given by that Presbyterie to other three, as the said Commission registrat in the books of the Presbytery beareth. And whereas there should be but one Commissioner from every burgh, except Edinburgh, to the Assembly, at this pretended Assembly, there were two Commissioners from Glasgow, two from Cowper, two from St. Andrews; whereas there were no ruling Elders having commission from their Presbyteries at that Assembly.

IIII. When the acts of that pretended assembly were written, the Bishop of St. Andrews with his own hand did interline, adde, change, vitiare, direct to be extracted or not extracted, as he pleased: as the scrolls themselves seen, doe show; wherefore the Clerk did not registrat the acts of that Assembly, in the books of Assemblies, as may be easily seen by the blank in the register left for them remaining unfilled.

Andrews, 1617.*

I. There is no mention of it in the register of the Assemblies, and so no warrand for their commissions, their Moderatour or Clerk.

II. The indiction of it was so unformall, that as the scroll declareth, a great part of the Commissioners from Synods, Burrows, and gentle-men, would not be present.

III. The Kings Majestie in his letter to Perth Assembly, acknowledgeth it was but a meeting, wherein disgrace was offered to his Majestie.

IIII. The former corruptions of the foure preceding Assemblies had their confluence in this and the subsequent Assembly.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly holden at Perth, 1618.

I. The Assembly was indicted but twentie dayes before the holding of it: and all parties requisit received not advertisement, as appeareth by their absence. The untimous indicting of it, is cleared by Presbyterie books.

II. There was no election of the Moderatour, as was accustomed to be in lawfull Assemblies; the register cleareth this.

III. No formall election of their new Clerk.

IIII. There were five whole Dyocies absent, viz. Orknay, Cathnes, Rosse, Argyll, and Isles; and many Presbyteries had no Commissioners there, as the register of that pretended Assembly beareth.

V. There were nineteen noblemen and Barrons, eleven Bishops, that had no Commission from the Kirk. Whereas the act for constitution of Assemblies, ordaineth every Burgh to have but one Commissioner, except Edinburgh, which may have two, (Act at Dundie 1597) yet in that pretended Assembly, Perth had three Commissioners, Dundie had two, Glasgow had two, and St. Andrews had two: Of the Burghes there were thirtie six absent: and for ruling Elders, there were none at all with commission from their Presbyteries. All these things are cleared by the records of that pretended Assembly.

VI. The Commissioners from some Presbyteries exceeded their number, prescribed in the act at Dundie, 1597: for the Presbyterie of Arbroth were foure Commissioners, and foure for the Presbyterie of Aughterdour: Beside these that were heard to vot, having no commission at all, and some who had commission were rejected, and were not enrolled, but others put in their place without commission.

VII. The pretended Bishops did praetise some of the articles to be concluded there, before the pretended Assembly, in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, and other cathedrall Churches, by keeping festivall dayes, kneeling at ye Communion. Thus their voices were prejudged by their praetise of these articles before condemned by the Kirk, and therefore they should have been secluded from voicing.

VIII. In all lawfull Assemblies, the voicing should be free: But in this pretended Assembly there were no free voicing; for the voicers were threatned to voice affirmativè, under no lesse pain nor the wrath of authoritie, imprisonment, banishment, deprivation of ministers, and utter subversion of the state: Yea, it was plainly professed, that neither reasoning, nor the number of voices should carie the matter away: Which is qualified by the declaration of many honest old reverend Brethren of the ministry now present.

IX. In all lawfull Assemblies, the grounds of proceeding were, and used to be, the word of God, the confession of Faith, and acts of former generall Assemblies. But in this pretended Assembly, the ground of their proceeding in voicing was the Kings commandment only: For so the question was stated:

Whether the five articles, in respect of his Majesties commandement, should passe in act, or not: As the records of that pretended Assembly beareth, where it is declared, that for the reverence and respect which they bear unto his Majesties Royal commandements, they did agree to the foresaids articles.

X. Many other reasons verifying the nullitie of all these Assemblies, were shoven and proven before the Assembly, which needeth not here to be insert.

Act. Sess. 13. December 5. 1638.

Against the unlawfull oathes of intrants.

THE six Assemblies immediately preceding, for most just and weightie reasons above-specified, being found to be unlawfull, and null from the beginning: The Assembly declareth the oathes and subscriptions exacted by the Prelates of intrants in the ministerie all this time by past (as without any pretext of warrand from the Kirk, so for obedience of the acts of these null Assemblies, and contrare to the ancient and laudable constitutions of this Kirk, which never have been nor can be lawfully repealed, but must stand in force) to be unlawfull, and no way obligatorie. And in like manner declareth, that the power of Presbyteries, and of provincially and generall Assemblies, hath been unjustly suppressed, but never lawfully abrogate. And therefore that it hath been most lawfull unto them, notwithstanding any point unjustly objected by the Prelats to the contrare, to admit, suspend, or deprive ministers, respectivè within their bounds, upon relevant complaints sufficiently proven, to choose their own Moderatours, and to execute all the parts of ecclesiasticall jurisdiction according to their own limits appointed them by the Kirk.

Condemning the Service-book, Book of Canons, Book of Ordination, and the high Commission.

I. THE Assembly having diligently considered the Book of common prayer, lately obruded upon the reformed Kirk within this Realme, both in respect of the manner of the introducing thereof, and in respect of the matter which it containeth, findeth that it hath been devised and brought in by the pretended Prelats, without direction from the Kirk, and pressed upon ministers without warrand from the Kirk, to be universally received as the only forme of divine service under all highest paines, both civill and ecclesiasticall, and the book it self, beside the popish frame and forms in divine worship, to containe many popish errors and ceremonies, and the seeds of manifold and grosse superstition and idolatrie. The Assembly therefore all in one voice, hath rejected, and condemned and by these presents doth reject and condemne the said book, not only as illegally introduced, but also as repugnant to the doctrine, discipline and order of this reformed Kirk, to the Confession of Faith, constitutions of generall Assemblies, and acts of Parliament establishing the true Religion: and doth prohibite the use and practise thereof: and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

II. The Assembly also, taking to their consideration the book of Cannons, and the manner how it hath been introduced, findeth that it hath been devised by the pretended Prelats, without warrand or direction from the generall Assembly; and to establish a tyrannicall power in the persons of the pretended Bishops, over the worship of God, mens consciences, liberties and goods, and to overthrow the whole discipline and government of the generall and Synodall Assemblies, Presbyteries, and Sessions formerly established in our Kirk.

Therefore the Assembly all in one voice hath rejected and condemned, and by these presents doth reject and condemne the said book, as contrare to the confession of our Faith, and repugnant to the established government, the book of Discipline, and the acts and constitutions of our Kirk: prohibits the use and practise of the same; and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

III. The Assembly having considered the book of consecration and ordination, findeth it to have been framed by the Prelats, to have been introduced and practised without warrand of authority, either civill or ecclesiasticall: and that it establisheth offices in Gods house, which are not warranded by the word of God, and are repugnant to the Discipline, and constitutions of our Kirk, that it is an impediment to the entrie of fit and worthie men to the ministry, and to the discharge of their dutie after their entrie, conforme to the discipline of our Kirk. Therefore the Assembly all in one voice hath rejected and condemned, and by these presents doth reject and condemne the said book; and prohibits the use and practise of the same; And ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

III. The generall Assembly, after due tryall, having found that the Court of high Commission, hath been erected without the consent or procurement of the Kirk, or consent of the Estates in Parliament, that it subverteth the jurisdiction and ordinarie judicatories and Assemblies of the Kirk Sessions, Presbyteries, provincially and nationall Assemblies, that it is not regulate by lawes civill or ecclesiasticall, but at the discretion and arbitrement of the Commissioners; that it giveth to ecclesiasticall persons, the power of both the swords, and to persons meerly civill, the power of the keys and Kirk censures: Therefore the Assembly all in one voice, hath disallowed and condemned, and by these presents doth disallow and condemne the said court, as unlawfull in it selfe, and prejudiciall to the liberties of Christs Kirk and Kingdome, the Kings honour in maintaining the established lawes and judicatories of the Kirk: and prohibits the use and practise of the same: and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk, against all such as shall transgresse.

After the serious discussing of the severall Processes, in many Sessions, from Sess. 14. (which are in the Clerks hands and needeth not here to be insert) the following sentences were solemnly pronounced after Sermon by the Moderatour, in the Assembly of Glasgow, Sess. 20. December 13. 1638.

Sentence of deposition and excommunication against Mr JOHN SPOTTISWOOD, pretended Archbishop of St Andrews; Mr. PATRICK LINDSAY, pretended Archbishop of Glasgow: Mr. DAVID LINDSAY, pretended Bishop of Edinburgh: Mr. THOMAS SIDSERFE, pretended Bishop of Galloway: Mr. JOHN MAXWELL, pretended Bishop of Rosse: Mr. WALTER WHYTEFOORD, pretended Bishop of Brechen.

THE generall Assembly, having heard the lybels and complaints, given in against the foresaids pretended Bishops to the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, and sundry other Presbyteries within their pretended Dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to the Assembly, to be tryed: The saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, often-times called, and their Proentour Doctour Robert Hammiltoun, and not compearing, but declinuing and protesting against this Assembly, as is evident by their declinatour, and protestation given in by the said Doctour Robert Hammiltoun minister at Glasfoord, which by the acts of Assembly is censurable with summar excommunication: Entered in consideration of the said declinatour, and finding the same not to be relevant, but on the contrare to be a displayed banner against the settled order and government of this Kirk, to be fraughted with insolent and disdainfull speeches, lies and calumnies against the lawfull members of this Assembly, proceeded to the cognition of the saids complaints, and lybels against them; and finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions, agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting of the minister voter in Parliament, from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdiction of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication, speecially for receiving of consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand, nor fundament in the word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high Commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God, and for sundrie other haynous offences, and enormities, at length expressed, and clearly proven in their proesesse, and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundrie other grosse transgressions and crymes laid to their charge: Therefore the Assembly moved with zeal to the glorie of God, and purging of his Kirk, hath ordained the saids pretended Bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of Commissionaire to vote in Parliament, Councell, or Convention in name of the Kirk, but also of all functions whether of pretended Episcopall or ministeriall calling, declareth them infamous. And likewise ordaineth the saids pretended Bishops to be excommunicate, and declared to be of these whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as ethnicks, and publicanes; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced by Mr Alexander Henderson, Moderatour, in faee of the Assembly in the high Kirk of Glasgow, and the execution of the sentence to be intimat in all the Kirks of Seotland by the Pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next generall Assembly, in case of the negligenee of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of deposition and excommunication against Mr. ADAM BALLANTYNE, pretended Bishop of Aberdeen, and Mr. JAMES WEDDERBURN pretended Bishop of Dumblane.

THE generall Assembly, having heard the lybels and complaints given in against the foresaid pretended Bishops, of Aberdeen, and Dumblane, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries within their pretended Dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed: The saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, proceeded to the cognition of the complaints and lybels against them, and finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions, agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting the minister voter in Parliament, from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie and excommunication, speecially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high Commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God, and for sundry other haynous offences and enormities, at length expressed, and clearly proven in their Proesesse, and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundry other grosse transgressions and offences laid to their charge: Therefore the assembly moved with zeal to the glorie of God, and purging of the Kirk, hath ordained the saids pretended Bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of Commissionaire to vot in Parliament, Councell, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopall or ministeriall calling, declareth them infamous: and likewise ordains the saids pretended Bishops to be excommunicate, and declared to be of these whom Christ commanded to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as Ethnieks and Publicans; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced by Mr Alexander Henderson, Moderatour, in face of the Assembly, after Sermon, in the high Kirk of Glasgow; and that the execution of the sentence be intimat in all the Kirks within this Realme, by the Pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Pesbyteries and Synods, or the next generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of deposition against Mr. JOHN GUTHRY, pretended Bishop of Murray: Mr. JOHN GRAHAME pretended Bishop of Orknay, Mr. JAMES FAIRLIE, pretended Bishop of Lismoir: Mr. NEIL CAMBELL, pretended Bishop of Isles.

THE generall Assembly having heard the lybels and complaints given in against the foresaid pretended Bishops, to the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, and sundrie Presbyteries within their Dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed: the saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, often times called, and not compearing, proceeded to the cognition of the complaints and lybels against them; and finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting of the minister voter in Parliament, from ineroaching upon the liberties and Jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie and excommunication; and espeecially for receiving eousecration to the office of Episcopacie condemned by the confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God; and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundrie other grosse transgressions and offences, laid to their charge: Therefore the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glorie of God, and purging of this Kirk, ordaines the saids pretended Bishops, to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of commissionarie, to vote in Parliament, Councell, or conventiou in name of the Kirk : but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopall, or ministeriall calling : And likewise in case they acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions thereof, and obey not the sentence, and make not their repentance, conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordaines them to be excommunicated, and declared to bee of these whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as Ethnieks and Publicanes : and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced upon their refusall, in the Kirks appointed, by any of these who are particularly named, to have the charge of trying their repentance or impenitencie, and that the execution of the sentence bee intimate in all the Kirks within this Realme by the Pastours of every particular Congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next generall Assembly, in case of negligence of the Presbyteries and Synods.

THE generall Assembly having heard the complaint and lybel given in against Mr. Alexander Lindsay pretended Bishop of Dunkell, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundrie Presbyteries of his pretended Dyocie, and by the Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed : The said pretended Bishop being lawfully cited, often-times called, & not compearing, but by a letter of excuse submitting himself to the Assembly, proceeded to the cognition of the complaint and lybell it selfe against him, and finding him guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting the minister voter in parliament, from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie and excommunication, especially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie condemned by the confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrant nor fundament in the word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high Commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God : Therefore the Assembly moved with zeal to the glory of God, and purging of this Kirk, hath ordained the said Mr Alexander to be deposed, and by these presents deposeth him, from the pretended Episcopall function, and from the office of commissionarie to vote in Parliament, Council or Convention in name of the Kirk and doth suspend him from all ministeriall function, and providing he acknowledge this Assembly, reverence the constitutions of it, and obey this sentence, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed, continueth him in the ministerie of St Madoze ; And likewise, if he acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions of it, and obey not the sentence, and make his repentance, conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordains him to be excommunicat, and declared to bee one of those whom Christ commandeth to bee holden by all and every one of the faithfull, as an Ethniek and Publicane, and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced upon his refusall, in the Kirks appointed, by one of these who are particularly named, to have the charge of trying his repentance or impenitencie, and that the execution of this sentence be intimate in all the Kirks within this Realme, by the Pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of deposition against Master IOHN ABERNETHIE pretended Bishop of Cathnes.

THE generall Assembly having heard the lybell and complaint given in against Mr. Iohn Abernethie pretended Bishop of Cathnes to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundrie Presbyteries within his Dyocie : And by the saids Presbyteries, referred to this Assembly to be tryed : The said pretended Bishop being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, but by his letter of excuse upon his sicknesse, proceeded to the cognition of the complaint and lybell it selfe against him, and finding him guiltie of the breach of the cautions, agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting the minister voter in Parliament, from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie and excommunication, specially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk as having no warrant nor fundament in the word of God, and by vertue of his usurped power, and power of the high Commission pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God : Therefore the assembly moved with zeal to the glorie of God, and purgiug of this Kirk, hath ordained the said Mr Iohn to be deposed, and by these presents deposeth him from the pretended Episcopall function, and from the office of Commissionary to vote in Parliament, Council, or convention, in name of the Kirk, and doth suspend him from the ministeriall function. And providing he acknowledge this Assembly, reverence the constitutions of it, and obey the sentence, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, will admit him to the ministerie of a particular flock : and likewise, incase he acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions of it, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordains him to be excommunicate, and declared to be one of these whom Christ commandeth to bee holden by all and every one of the faithfull as an Ethniek and Publicane : and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced up on his refusall in the Kirks appointed, by one of these who are particularly named to have this charge of trying his repentance or impenitencie, and that the execution of this sentence be intimate in all the Kirks within this Realme, by the Pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

December 8. 1638.

Declaring Episcopacie to have been abjured by the Confession of Faith, 1580 ; And to be removed out of this Kirk.

THE Assembly taking to their most grave and serious consideration, first the unspeakable goodnesse, and great merey of God, manifested to this Nation, in that so necessarie, so difficult, and so excellent and divine work of reformation, which was at last brought to such perfection, that this Kirk was reformed, not only in doctrine and worship, but also after many conferences and publick reasonings in divers uationall Assemblies, joyued with solemn humiliations and prayers to God, the discipline and government of the Kirk, as the hedge and guard of the doctrine and worship, was prescribed according to the rule of God's word, in the book of Policie and Discipline, agreed upon in the Assembly 1578. and insert in the register 1581. established by the Acts of Assemblies, by the confession of Faith, sworn and subscribed, at the direction of the Assembly, and by continuall practise of this Kirk: Secondly, that by mens seeking their own things, and not the things of Jesus Christ; divers novations have been introduced to the great disturbance of this Kirk, so firmly once compacted, and to the endangering of Religion, and many grosse evils obruded, to the utter undoing of the work of reformation, and change of the whole forme of worship and face of this Kirk: Thirdly, that all his Majesties Subjects both Ecclesiasticall and civil, being without consent of the Kirk, commanded to receive with reverence a new book of common prayer, as the only forme to be used in God's publick worship, and the contraveeners to be condignely censured, and punished, and after many supplications and complaints, knowing no other way for the preservation of Religiou; were moved by God, and drawne by necessitie, to renew the nationall Covenant of this Kirk, and Kingdome, which the Lord since hath blessed from heaven, and to subscribe the Confession of Faith, with an application thereof abjuring the great evils wherewith they were now pressed, and suspending the practise of all novations formerly introduced, till they should bee tryed in a free generall Assembly; Lastly, that some of his Majesties Subjects of sundrie ranks, have by his Majesties commandement subscribed and renewed the confession of Faith, without the former application, and that both the one and the other subscribers have subscribed the said Confession of Faith in this year, as it was professed and according to the meaning that it had in this Kingdome, when it was first subscribed 1581. and afterward: The Assembly therefore, both by the subscription of his Majesties high Commissioner, and of the Lords of secret Council, Septem. 22. 1638. And by the acts of Council, of the date foresaid, bearing that they subscribed the said Confession, and ordaining all his Majesties Liedges to subscribe the same, according to the foresaid date and tennour, and as it was then professed within this Kingdome, as likewise by the Protestation of some of the Senatours of the Colledge of justice, when they were required to subscribe, and by the many doubtings of his Majesties good Subjects, especially because the subscribers of the Confession in February 1638. are bound to suspend the approbation of the corruptions of the government of the Kirk, till they be tryed in a free generall Assembly; finding it proper for them, and most necessary and incumbent to them, to give out the true meaning thereof as it was at first professed, That all his Majesties Subjects in a matter, so important as is the publick Confession of Faith, so solemnly sworn and subscribed, may be of one minde, and one heart, and have full satisfaction to all their donbts, and that the posteritie afterward may be fully perswaded of the true meaning thereof, after earnest calling upon the name of God, so religiously attested in the said Confession; have entered into a diligent search of the registers of the Kirk, and books of the generall Assembly, which the greatest part of the Assembly had not seen before, and which by the speiall providence of God were preserved, brought to their hands, and publickly acknowledged to bee authentick, and have found that in the latter confession of the Kirk of Scotland: "We professe, that we deteste all traditions brought into the Kirk without, or against the word of God, and doctrine of this reformed Kirk: Next, we abhorre and deteste all contrarie religion and doctrine, but ehiefly, All kinde of papistry in generall, & particuler heads, as they were then damned & confuted by the word of God, and Kirk of Scotland, when the said Confession was sworn and subscribed, An. 1580. and 1581. 1590. and 1591. Thirdly, that we deteste the Romane Antiechrist, his worldly monarchie, and wicked hierarchie: Fourthly, that we joyn our selves to this reformed Kirk in doctrine, Faith, Religion, & discipline, promising and swearing by the great name of GOD, that we shall continue in the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk, and defend the same according to our vocation and power all the dayes of our life."

But so it is that Episcopall government is abhorred and detested, and the government by Ministers and Elders, in Assemblies generall and provinciall, and Presbyteries was sworn to, and subscribed in subscribing that Confession, and ought to be holden by us, if we adhere to the meaning of the Kirk, when that Confession was framed, sworn to, and subscribed; unto which we are obliged by the nationall oath and subscription of this Kirk, as is evident by the acts of generall Assemblies, agreed upon both before, at, and after the swearing and subscribing of the said Confession, in the years above-mentioned, and the book of policie agreed upon in the Assembly which was holden at Edinburgh the twentie foure of April, and twentie foure of October, Anno 1578. Insert in the register of the Kirk, by ordinance of the Assembly holden at Glasgow 1581. and to be subscribed by all Ministers, that then did bear, or thereafter were to bear office in this Kirk, by ordinance of the Assembly holden the fourth of August at Edinburgh 1590. And at Edinburgh the second of July 1591. but specially in the 2. 3. 4. 6. 7. and 11, chapters of the said book.

The Bishops being tollerat from the year 1572, till the Assembly holden in August 1575. And all this time the Assembly being wearied with complaints made against them, did enter in search of the office it selfe, and did agree in this that the name of a Bishop is commen to every one of them that hath a particular flock, over which he hath a particular charge, as well to preach the word, as to minister the Sacraments.

At the next Assembly which was holden in April 1576. Such Bishops were censured as had not taken them to a particular flock. In the generall Assembly convened in April the year of God 1578. Sess. 4. Intimation was made as followeth.

"For so much as the heads of the policie being concluded and agreed upon in the last Assembly, by the most part of the brethren: certain of the brethren had some difficultie in the head de diaconatu, whereupon farther reasoning was reserved to this Assembly: It is therefore required, if any of the brethren have any reasonable doubt or argument to propoue, that he be ready the morrow, and then shall be heard and resolved." In the 6. Sess. April 26. According to the ordinance made the day before; all persons that had any doubt or argument to propone, were required to propone the same: but none offered to propone any argument on the contrare.

In the Assembly holden at Edinburgh, in October 1578, It was shoven by the Moderatour thereof to the noble-men, who were present, viz. My Lord Chancelour, the Earle of Montrose, my Lord Seaton, and my Lord Lindsay, "What care and study the Assembly had taken to entertain and keep the puritie of the sincere word of God, un-mixed with the inventions of their own heads, and to preserve it to the posteritie hereafter, and seeing that the true Religion is not able to continue nor endure long without a good Discipline and policie, in that part also have they imployed their wit and studie, and drawn forth out of the pure fountain of Gods word, such a Discipline as is meet to remain in the Kirk."

In the same Assembly, the speciall corruptions were set down, which they craved such of the Bishops as would submit themselves to the Assembly to remove, with promise, that, if the generall Assembly, hereafter shall finde further corruptions in the said estate then hitherto are expressed, that they be content to be reformed by the said Assembly according to the word of God, when they shall be required thereto. First, "That they be content to be Pastours and Ministers of one flock: That they usurpe no criminall jurisdiction, that they vote not in Parliament in name of the Kirk, without Commission from the Kirk: That they take not up for the maintenance of their ambition and riotousnesse, the emoluments of the Kirk, which may sustain many Pastours, the Schools, and the poore; but be content with reasonable livings according to their office: That they claime not to themselves the titles of Lords temporall, neither usurpe temporall jurisdictions, whereby they are abstracted from their office; That they empyre not above the particular Elderships, but be subject to the same: That they usurp not the power of the Presbyteries."

The question being proponed by the Synod of Louthian in the Assembly holden in July 1579. aent a generall order to be taken for erecting of Presbyteries in places where publick exercise is used, untill the time the policie of the Kirk be established by a law: It is answered, "The exercise may be judged to be a Presbyterie." In the Assembly holden at Dundie in July 1580. Sess. 4. The office of a Bishop was abolished by a particular act, as appeareth by the tennour of the act following.

"For so much as the office of a Bishop, as it is now used and commonly taken within this Realme, hath no sure warrand authoritie, nor good ground in the Scriptures, but is brought in by the foly and corruption of mans inventions, to the great overthrow of the Kirke of God, the whole Assembly of the Kirk in one voice after libertie given to all men to reason in the matter, none opposing himself in defending the said pretended office, findeth and declareth the said pretended office, used and termed, as is above said, unlawful in the selfe, as having neither fundament, ground nor warrand in the word of God, and ordaineth that all such persons, as brook or shall brook hereafter the said office, shall be charged simply to dimit, quite, and leave off the same, as an office whereunto they are not called of God: and suchlike, to desist and cease from all preaching, ministration of the Sacraments, or using any way the office of pastours, while they receive de novo, admission from the generall Assembly, under the pain of excommunication to be used against them, whercin if they be found disobedient, or contradict this act in any point, the sentence of excommunication, after due admouition, to be execute against them."

In the same Assembly holden Anno 1580. Sess. 10. This article was appointed to be proponed to the King and Council, that the book of policie might be established by an act of privie Council, "while a Parliament be holden, at which it might be confirmed by a law."

The extent of the act made at Dundie, was interpreted and explained in the Assembly, holden at Glasgow, in April 1581. Sess. 6. as followeth.

"Anent the Act made in the Assembly holden at Dundie against Bishops, because some difficultie appeared to some brethren to arise out of the word (office) contained in the said act, what should be meant thereby. The Assembly consisting for the most part of such as voted, and were present in the Assembly at Dundie, to take away the said difficultie, resolving upon the true meaning and understanding of the said act, declare that they meant wholly to condemne the whole estate of Bishops, as they are now in Scotland, and that the same was the determination and conclusion of the Assembly at this time, because some brethren doubted, whether the former act was to be understood of the spirituall function only, and others alledged, that the whole office of a Bishop as it was used, was damnable, and that by the said act, the Bishops should be charged to dimit the same: This Assembly declareth that they meant wholly to condemne the whole estate of Bishops, as they were then in Scotland, and that this was the meaning of the Assembly, at that time."

The Kings Commissioner presented to this Assembly the Confession of Faith, subscribed by the King, and his household, not long before, together with a plot of the Presbyteries to be erected, which is registrate in the books of the Assembly, with a letter to be directed from his Majestic to the noble-men and gentle-men of the Countrey, for the erection of Presbyteries, consisting of Pastours and Elders, and dissolution of Prelacies; and with an offer to set forward the Policie untill it were established by Parliament. The Kings letter subscribed by his hand, to the Noble-men, and Gentle-men, was read in open audience of the whole Assembly.

This Assembly ordained the book of Policie to be insert in the register by the act following.

"For as much as travels have been taken in the framing of the Policie of the Kirk, and diverse suits have been made to the Magistrat for approbation thereof, which yet have not taken the happie effect, which good men would wish, yet that the posteritie may judge well of the present age, and of the meaning of the Kirk; The Assembly hath concluded, that the book of Policie agreed to in diverse Assemblies before, should be registrat in the acts of the Kirk, and remaine therein ad perpetuam rei memoriam: and the coppies thereof to be taken to every Presbyterie: of which book the tennour followeth," &c.

Immediatly after the inserting of the book of Policie, called there the book of Discipline, the Assembly ordained that the confession of Faith be subscribed as followeth.

"Anent the confession of Faith lately set forth by the Kings Majestic, and subscribed by his highnesse. The Assembly in one voice, acknowledged the said Confession to be a true, Christian, and faithful confession, to be agreed unto by such as truly professe Christ, and have a care of Religion, and the tennour thereof to be followed out efoldly as the samine is laid out in the said Proclamation," wherein that Discipline is sworn to.

In the generall Assembly holden at Edinburgh in October 1581. Sess. 10. Mr. Robert Montgomery is accused for teaching that Discipline is a thing indifferent. Sess. 23. The Assembly gave commission to the Presbyterie of Stirling, to charge Mr. Robert Montgomerie, to continue in the ministerie of Stirling, and not to medle with any other office or function of the Kirk, namely, in aspyring to the Bishoprick of Glasgow, against the word of God, and acts of the Kirk, under the pain of excommunication.

In the same Assembly it is acknowledged that the estate of Bishops is condemned by the Kirk, commission for erection of moe Presbyteries was renewed: and a new ordinance made for subscribing the confession of Faith, and to proceed against whatsoever persons that would not acknowledge and subscribe the same.

In the Assembly holden in April 1582. there was a new commission for erection of Presbyteries, where none was as yet erected, Mr Robert Montgomerie, pretending to be Bishop of Glasgow, was ordained to be deposed and excommunicat, except hee gave evident tokens of repentance, and promise to superseed, which he did not: and therefore he was excommunicat shortly after, according to the ordinance of this Assembly.

In the generall Assembly holden at Edinburgh, 1582. The generall Assembly gave commission to some Presbyteries, to try and censure such as were called Bishops, for the great slander arising by their impunitie. Commission was given at this Assembly to present some articles to the Councel and Estates, for approving and establishing by their authoritie the Presbyteries, the Synodall, and generall Assemblies. In the 19. Sess. The Assembly declared, that no Bishop may sit upon the Councell in name of the Kirk.

In the Assembly holden Anno 1586. These two articles were agreed upon. First: "It is found that all such as the Scripture appointeth governours of the Kirk, to wit Pastours, Doctours, and Elders, may convene to the generall Assemblies, and vote in Ecclesiasticall matters." Secondly: "There are foure office bearers set down to us by the Scriptures, to wit Pastours, Doctours, Elders, and Deacons, and the name of Bishop ought not to be taken as it hath been in time of Papistrie, but is common to all Pastours, and Ministers."

In the Assembly holden Anno 1587. Sess. 8. It was ordained that the admission of Mr. Robert Montgomerie by the Presbyterie of Glasgow, suppose to the temporalitie of the Bishoprick only, be undone and annulled with all possible diligence, to the effect slander might be removed from the Kirk. In Sess. 15. Mr. Robert Pont shewed the Kings presentation to the Bishoprick of Cathnes, & desired the judgment of the Assembly. The Assembly in their letter to the Kings Majestic, declared that they judged the said Mr. Robert to be a Bishop already according to the Doctrine of St. Paul: But as to that corrupt estate or office, of these who have been termed Bishops heretofore, they found it not agreeable to the word of God, and that it hath been damned in diverse Assemblies before.

In the instructions given to such as were appointed to wait upon the Parliament, it was ordained in the same Assembly Sess. 17. That they be carefull that nothing be admitted prejudiciall to the liberties of this Kirk, as it was concluded according to the word of God in the generall Assemblies, preceeding the year 1584. but precisely to seek the same to be ratified in the Assembly holden in March 1589, where the articles were made for subscribing the confession of Faith with the generall band, it was ordained as followeth.

"For so much as the neighbour Kirk in England, is understood to be heavily troubled, for maintaining of the true Discipline and government: whose grieves ought to move us. Therefore the Presbytery of Edinburgh was ordained to comfort the said Kirk in the said matter."

In the Assembly holden 1590. when the confession of Faith was subscribed universally de novo, a ratification of the liberties of the Kirk, in her jurisdiction, discipline, Presbyteries, Synods, and generall Assemblies, and an abrogation of all things contrarie thereunto; was ordained to be sought both of the Councel and Parliament. In the next Session it was ordained that the book of Discipline, specially the contraverted heads, should be subscribed by all Ministers that bear, or hereafter was to bear office in this Kirk, and that they be charged by the Presbyteries, under the pain of excommunication: Seeing the word of God cannot be kept in sincerity, unlesse the holy Discipline be preserved. The Presbyteries were ordained to get a coppie under the Clerks hand; there were sundrie coppies subscribed by the Ministers in the Presbyteries yet extant, as Hadingtoun, Dumfermling, &c. produced before the Assembly.

In the Assembly 1591. Sess. 4. The former act ament the subscription to the book of Policie is renewed, and a penaltie imposed upon the Moderator, in case it be not put in execution.

In the Assembly 22 May 1592. Sess. 2. These articles were drawn up. "That the acts of Parliament made 1584 against the Discipline libertie and authoritie of the Kirk be annulled, and the samine discipline, whereof the Kirk hath been in practise, precisely ratified. That Abbots Pryors, and other Prelats pretending the title of the Kirk, be not suffered in time comming." In the 11. Session the number of the Presbyteries were given up, and insert in the Parliament immediatly following. The fifth of June 1592, the libertie, discipline, and jurisdiction of the true Kirk, in her Sessions, Presbyteries, Synodal and general Assemblies, is largely ratified, as the samine was used, and exercised within this Realme, and all the acts contrary thereto abrogat: The King's prerogative declared not to be prejudiciall to the same priviledges grounded upon the word of God; the former commissions to Bishops 1584, rescinded, and all Ecclesiasticall matters, subjected to Presbyteries, according to the discipline of this Kirk. Anno 1595, The book of Policie with other acts is ratified and ordained to be printed.

It was also cleared that Episcopacie was condemned in these words of the Confession, HIS VVICKED HIERARCHIE. For the Popish Hierarchie doth consist of Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons, that is baptizing and preaching Deacons: For so it is determined in the councel of Trent, in the 4. chap. De Sacramento ordinis, cant. 6. **Si quis dixerit in ecclesia Catholica non esse hierarchiam divina ordinatione institutam, quæ constat ex Episcopis, Presbyteris & ministris, anathema sit.* Bellarmine likewise in his book De Clericis cap. 11. saith, "That there are three hierarchies in the militant Kirk: The first of Bishops, the second of priests, the third of Deacons, and that the Deacons are also Princes, if they be compared with the people:" This proposition following; Hierarchia ecclesiastica constat ex Pontifice, Cardinalibus, Archiepiscopis, Episcopis & Regularibus, was censured by the Facultie of Theologie in the Universitie at Paris, as followeth, In ista prima propositione enumeratio membrorum hierarchiæ ecclesiasticæ seu sacri principatus, divina ordinatione instituti est manea & redundans atque, inducens in errorem contrarium determinationi sacre Sinodi Tridentinæ: The proposition was defective, because it pretermitted the Presbyters and Deacons; it was censured as redundant, because it made the Hierarchie to consist of the Pope, Cardinals, Archbishops, and Regulars; the Pope is not within the Hierarchie, Primats, Metropolitanes, and Archbishops, but as they are Bishops. Furthermore, this Hierarchie is distinguished in the confession from the Pope's monarchie. And howbeit this Hierarchie be called the Antichrist's Hierarchie, yet it is not to distinguish betwixt the Hierarchie in the Popish Kirk, and any other as lawful: But the Hierarchie, wheresoever it is, is called his, as the rest of the Popish corruptions are called his: To wit, Invocation of Saints, canonization of Saints, dedication of Altars, &c. are called his, not that there is another lawfull canonization, invocation, or dedication of altars: whatsoever corruption was in the Kirk, either in doctrine, worship, or government since the mistery of iniquitie began to work and is retained, and maintained, by the Pope, and obtruded upon the Kirk by his authority, are his. A passage also out of the history of the counceill of Trent was alledged, where it is related, that the Councell would not define the Hierarchie by the seven orders: we have in our confession of Faith the manifold orders set apart and distinguished from the Hierarchie, but as it is set down in the cannon above eited: We have in the book of Policie or second booke of Discipline, in the end of the second chapter, this conclusion agreed upon. Therefore all the ambitious titles invented in the kingdom of Antichrist, and in his usurped HIERARCHIE which are not of one of these foure sorts, To wit, Pastours, Doctours, Elders, and Deacons, together with the offices depending thereupon, in one word ought to be rejected.

All which and many other warrands being publickly read, and particularly at great length examined, and all objections answered in face of the Assembly, all the members of the Assembly being many times desired and required to propone their doubts, and scruples, and every one being heard to the full, and after much agitation as fully satisfied; the Moderator at last exhorting every one to declare his minde, did put the matter to voicing in these terms:—"Whether according to the confession of faith, as it was professed in the year 1580. 1581. and 1590, there be any other Bishop, but a Pastour of a particular flock, having no prehemineee nor power over his brethren, and whether by that Confession, as it was then professed, all other episcopacie is abjured, and ought to be removed out of this Kirk?" The whole Assembly most unanimously, without contradiction of any one (and with the hesitation of one allanerly) professing full perswasion of minde, did voice, that all episcopacie different from that of a Pastour over a particular flock, was abjured in this Kirk, and to be removed out of it. And therefore Prohibites underr ecclesiasticall censure any to usurpe accept, defend, or obey the pretended authoritie thereof in time coming.

The Assembly at Glasgow, declaring the five Articles of Perth to have been abjured and to be removed.

THE Assembly remembering the uniformity of worship which was in this Kirk, before the articles of Perth, the great rent which entered at that time, and hath continued since, with the lamentable effects, that it hath produced, both against Pastours, and professors, the unlawfulness and nullitie of Perth Assembly already declared by this Assembly, and that in the necessarie renewing of the confession of Faith in February 1638. the practise of novations introduced in the worship of God, was suspended, till they should be determined in a free generall Assembly: and that in the same year at his Majestie's command some had subscribed the confession of Faith, as it was professed when it was first subscribed: For these causes the Assembly entered into a diligent tryall of the foresaid articles, whether they be contrarie to the confession of Faith, as it was meant and professed in the year 1580. 1581. 1590. and 1591. And findeth that first in generall: In the confession of Faith we professe, "We willingly agree in our consciences to the forme of Religion, of a long time openly professed by the Kings Majestie, and whole body of this Realme, in all points, as unto God's undoubted truth and verity, grounded only upon his written word, and therefore abhor and deteste all contrary Religion and Doctrine, but chiefly, all kinde of papistrie, in generall and partieular heads, even as they were then damned and confuted by the word of God and Kirk of Scotland, and in speeciall, the Romane Antichrist, his five bastard sacraments, with all rites, ceremonies, and false doctrine, added to the ministration of the true Sacraments, without the word of God, his cruell judgement against Infants departing without the Sacrament, his absolute necessitie of baptisme, and finally, we deteste all his vain allegories, rites, signes, and traditions brought into the Kirk without, or against the word of God, and doctrine of this true reformed Kirk, to the which we joyue our selves willingly in Doctrine, Faith, Religion, Discipline, and use of the holy Sacraments, as lively members of the same in Christ our Head; promising and swearing," &c. And that these five articles are contrarie to the Religion then professed, were confuted by the word of God, and Kirk of Scotland, or are rites, and ceremonies, added to the ministration, of the true Sacraments, without the word [of] God, or nourish the popish judgement against Infants departing without the Sacrament, or absolute necessitie, of Baptisme or rites, signes, and traditions brought into the Kirk, without or against the word of God, and doctrine of this true reformed Kirk.

And next, in particular, concerning festivall dayes, findeth, that in the explication of the first head, of the first book of Discipline, it was thought good that the feasts of Christmas, Circumcision, Epiphanie, with the feasts of the Apostles, Martyres, and Virgine Mary, bee utterly abolished, because they are neither commanded nor warranted by Scripture, and that such as observe them be punished by civill Magistrats. Here utter abolition is craved, and not reformation of abuses only, and that because the observation of such feasts hath no warrant from the word of God. In the generall Assembly holden at Edinburgh, Anno 1566, the large confession of Helvetia was approved, but with speciall exception against the same five dayes, which are now urged upon us. It was not then the Popish observation only, with the Popish opinion of worship and merit, which was disallowed; (for so the reformed Kirk in Helvetia did not observe them) but, simpliciter, all observation. For this end was read a letter in Latine, sent at that time by some of our divines to certaine divines in these parts to this purpose. In the Assembly holden 1575, in August, complaint was made against the Ministers and Readers beside Aberdene; because they assembled the people to preaching and prayers upon certaine festivall dayes. So that preaching and prayers upon festivall dayes was judged rebukable. It was ordained likewise, that complaint bee made to the Regent, upon the town of Drumfreis, for urging and conveying a Reader to the Kirk with Tabret and Whistle, to read Prayers, all the holy dayes of Christmas, upon the refusall of their own Reader. Among the articles directed by this Assembly to the Regent, It was craved that all holy dayes heretofore kept holy, beside the Lord's day, such as Yooleday, and Saint's dayes, and such others may bee abolished, and a certain penaltie appointed for banqueting, playing, feasting upon these dayes. In the Assembly holden in April, Anno 1577, It was ordained that the visitors, with the adviee of the Synodall Assembly, should admonish Ministers, preaching or ministrating the Communion at Easter, or Christmas, or other like superstitious times, or Readers reading, to desist, under the paine of deprivation. In the ninth head of the first book of Discipline, the reason is set down against Easter Communion. "Your honours are not ignorant how superstitiously the people run to that action at Pascheven; as if the time gave vertue to the Sacrament, and how the rest of the whole year, they are carelesse and negligent, as if it appertained not to them, but at that time only. And, for this reason, other times were appointed by that book, for that holy action." In the Assembly holden 1596, begun in March 1595, at which time the Covenant was renewed, superstition and idolatric breaking forth in observing festival dayes; setting out of bone-fires, singing earols, are reakoncd amongst the corruptions which were to be amended. And the Pulpits did sound from time to time, against all shew of observing any festivall day whatsoever, except the Lord's day.

Concerning kneeling at the Communion, findeth that in the confession of Faith prefixed before the Psalmes, and approved by our Kirk in the very beginning of the reformation, we have these words, "Neither in the ministration of the Sacraments, must we follow men; but as Christ himself hath ordained, so must they be ministred." In the large confession of Faith, chap. 23, It is required as necessary, for the right ministration of the Sacraments, that they bee ministred in such clements, and in such sort, as God hath appointed, and that men have adulterate the Sacraments with their own inventions. So that no part of Christ's action abideth in the originall puritie. The judgement of our reformers, who drew up the large Confession, was, by cleare evidents, shewed to be contrarie to this gesture in the act of receiving the Sacrament. In the order of celebrating the Lords Supper, prefixed before the Psalmes in meeter, sitting and distributing by the Communicants, are joined: as likewise by the second head of the first book of Discipline, as nearest to Christ's own action, and to his perfect practise, and most convenient to that holy action, and all inventions devised by man are condemned, as alterations and accusations of Christ's perfect ordinance. Ministers were enjoyned by act of Assembly in December 1562. To observe the order of Geneva, that is, the English Kirk at Geneva, (where Master Knox had been some time Minister,) in the ministration of the Sacraments. This act was renewed in the Assembly, holden in December 1564, where ministers are referred to the order set down before the Psalmes, for ministration of the Sacraments; which is all one with the former; for that was the order of the English Kirk at Geneva.

In the Parliament holden Anno 1567, It was declared that whosoever did not partieipate of the Sacraments, as they were then publickly administrat in this reformed Kirk ought not to be reputed members of this Kirk. The act for the Kings oath at his coronation, to maintain the due administration of the Sacraments, as they were then ministred, Anno 1567, was ratified Anno 1581. At which time the short Confession, adhering to the use of the Sacraments, in the Kirk of Scotland, was subscribed: as also Anno 1592. after the second Subscription to the confession of Faith. In the Parliament 1572, an act was made against such as did not partieipate of the Sacraments as they were then rightly ministred: But the gesture of kneeling in the act of receiving, putteth the ministration of the Sacraments used in this Kirk out of frame; whereby it is clear that whatsoever gesture or rite, cannot stand with the administration of the Sacraments as they were then ministred and were ministred ever since the reformation, till the year 1618. must bee condemned by our Kirk as a rite added to the true ministration of the Sacraments without the word of God, and as a rite or tradition brought in without, or against the word of God, or doctrine of this reformed Kirk.

III. Concerning Confirmation, The Assembly findeth it to be comprehended in the clause of the Confession, where the "five bastard Sacraments" are condemned. And seeing Episcopacie is condemned, imposition of hands by Bishops falleth to the ground. And in all the acts for catechising or examination before admission to the communion, no inking of imposition of hands.

III. Concerning the administration of the Sacraments in private places, or private baptisme, and private communion; findeth that in the book of common order, set down before the Psalmes, it is said, That the Sacraments are not ordained of God to be used in private corners, as charmers and sorcerers use to doe, but left to the Congregation. In the Assembly holden at Edinburgh in October Anno 1581. the same year and Assembly, that the confession of Faith was subscribed: It was ordained, that the Sacraments be not administrated in private houses. but solemnly according to good order hither-to observed. The Minister of Tranent was suspended at that time, for baptizing an infant in a private house: but confessing his offence, he was ordained to make his publick repentance in the Kirk of Tranent, before he be released. Another Minister was to be tried, and censured, for baptizing privately, and celebrating the Communion upon Paschday, at the Assembly holden in October 1580. Which acts and censures make manifest, that our Kirk abhorred whatsoever fostered the opinion of the necessitie of Baptisme, and giving of the Sacrament, as a viaticum.

All which, and many other acts, grounds, and reasons, being at length agitated, and with mature deliberation pondered, and libertie granted to every man to speak his minde; what could be said further, for the full satisfaction of all men.

The matter was put to voicing, in these words: "Whether the five articles of Perth, by the confession of Faith, as it was meant and professed in the year 1580. 1581. 1590. 1591. ought to be removed out of this Kirk?" The whole Assembly all in one consent, one onely excepted, did voice that the five articles above specified were abjured by this Kirk, in that Confession, and so ought to be removed out of it: And therefore prohibiteth and dischargeth all disputing for them, or observing of them, or any of them, in all time coming, and ordains Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against all transgressours.

Act Sess. 21. December 17. 1638.

CONCERNING Kirk Sessions, provincially and national Assemblies, the generall Assembly considering the great defection of this Kirk, and decay of Religion, by the usurpation of the Prelates, and their suppressing of ordinarie judicatories of the Kirk, and clearly perceiving the benefit which will redound to the Religion by the restitution of the said judicatories, remembreing also that they stand obliged by their solemne oath, and covenant with God, to return to the doctrine and discipline of this Kirk; as it was profest 1580, 1581, 1590, 1591. which in the book of Policie, registrat in the books of the Assembly 1581. and ordained to be subscribed, 1590, 1591. is particularly exprest both touching the constitution of the Assemblies, of their members, Ministers, and Elders, and touching the number, power and authority of these members, in all matters ecclesiastical.

The Assembly findeth it necessar to restore, and by these presents restoreth all these Assemblies unto their full integritie in their members, priviledges, liberties, powers, and jurisdictions; as they were constitute by the foresaid book of Policie.

Act Sess. 23. 24. December 17. 18.

ANENT the report of the Committie, appointed for considering what constitutions were to be revived, or made of new, they proponed the overtures following: which were read and allowed by the whole Assembly, or by them referred to the consideration of the severall Presbyteries.

Anent Presbyteries which have been erected since the year 1586. It seemeth needfull, that they bee ratified by an act of this generall Assembly, and that other Presbyteries shall be erected, where they shall be found needfull, and especially now in the Synod of Lismore, according to the partiular note given there-anent.

The Assembly ratifieth these Presbyteries since 1586. and erected those in Lismore, conforme to the note registrat in the books of Assembly.

Anent the keeping of Presbyteriall meetings; It is thought fit that they be weekly, both in Sommer and Winter, except in places farre distant, who during the winter season, (that is between the first of October and the first of April) shall be dispensed with for meeting once in the fourteen dayes, and that all absents be censured, especially those who should exercise and adde, according to the Act of Assembly 1582. at St. Andrews, April 24. Sess. 12. and that some controverted head of doctrine bee handled in the presbyterie publikly, and disputed among the brethren, every first Presbyterie of the Moneth, according to the act of Assembly holden at Dundie 1598. Sess. 12.

Anent the visitation of particular Kirks within Presbyteries; it is thought expedient that it be once every year, wherein a care is to be had, among other things necessary, that it bee tryed, how domestick exercises of Religion be exercised in partiular families, and to see what means there is in every Parish in Landward, for catechising and instructing the youth.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

III. Anent the visitation of Kirks, Schooles, and Colledges: It is thought meet that the act of Assembly holden at Edinburgh the 25. of Iunie 1565.

Sess. 2. be put in execution, that the Minister of the parochin, the Principall, Regents, and professors within Colledges, and Masters, and Doctors of Schooles, be tryed concerning the soundnesse of their judgment in matters of Religion, their abilitie, for discharge of their calling, and the honesty of their conversation: as the act of Assembly at Edinburgh, Iuni 21. 1567. Sess. 3. And the act of the Assembly holden at Montrose 1595. Sess. 9. do import: and this visitation of Colledges to be by way of commission from the generall Assembly.

The generall Assembly alloweth this article.

V. Anent none residents: It is thought necessary, that every Minister be obliged to reside in his own Parochin at his ordinarie Manse, for the better attending of the duties of his calling, conforme to the Acts of Assemblies, viz. act of Assembly at Edinburgh, March 24. 1595. Sess. 7. as also act at Edinburgh, December 25. 1563. Sess. 5. and Assembly at Edinburgh, December 25. 1565. Sess. 4. Assemble at Edinburgh, March 6. 1572. Sess. 3.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

VI. Anent the planting of Schooles in Landward, the want whereof doth greatly prejudice the growth of the Gospel, and procure the decay of Religion: The Assembly giveth direction to severall Presbyteries for the setting of Schooles in every Landward Parochin, and providing of men able for the charge of teaching of the youth, public reading and presenting of the Psalme, and the catechising of the common people, and that means be provided for their intertainment, in the most convenient manner that may be had, according to the abilitie of the Parochin.

The Assembly alloweth; and referreth the partiular course unto the severall Presbyteries.

VII. Anent the late admission of Ministers by Presbyteries, and the choice of Moderatours, according to the ancient power of the said Presbyteries: The Assembly declareth they had power to doe the same, and ratifieth that what hath been done of late of that kinde upon warrantable grounds, that here after it be not called in question.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

VIII. Anent the competencie of Presbyteries and parochians, that some proportion may be kept, both anent the number and distaunce of place: It would seem expedient that this generall Assembly should appoint a Commission for every Shyre, where there is such necessitie, that the particular Parochians and Presbyteries within the bounds be duely considered, and overtures be these of the same commission given into the provincially Synods, and by them to the generall Assembly, that there they may be advised, and ratified.

The Assembly referreth this to the care of the partiular presbyteries.

IX. Anent the entrie and conversation of Ministers: It is expedient that the act of Assembly holden at Edinburgh, March 24. 1595. Sess. 7. be ratified, and put in execution in every Presbyterie, and to that end, that they get a coppie thereof, under the Clerks hand whereof the tennour followeth.

same being at length read out, reasoned, and considered; The brethren concluded the same, agreeing there-with: and in respect that by Gods grace, they intend reformation, and to see the Kirk and ministry purged; to the effect the worke may have better successe, they think it neccessar that this Assembly be humbled, for wanting such care as became in such points, as is set down; and some zealous and godly brethren in doctrine, lay them out for their better humiliation; and that they make solemne promise before the Majestie of God; and make new covenant with him for a more carefull and reverent discharge of their ministerie. To the which effect was chosen Mr Iohn Davidson; and Tuesday next at nine houres in the morning appointed, in the new Kirk, for that effect: whereunto none is to resort, but the ministrie: the forme to be advised the morne in privie conference.

“For as much as by the too sudden admission and light tryall of persons to the ministrie, it cometh to passe that many scandals fall out in the persons of ministers: it would be ordained in time coming, that more diligeat inquisition and triall be used of all such persons as shall enter into the ministrie.

“As specially these points. That the intrant shall be posed upon his conscience, before the great God, (and that in most grave manner,) what moveth him to accept the office and charge of the ministrie upon him.

“That it be inquired, if any by solistation, or moyen, directly or indirectly, prease to enter in the said office: And, if it be found, that the solister be repelled; and that the Presbyterie repell all such of their number from voting in the election or admissioun as shall be found moyeners for the solieiter, and posed upon their conscience to declare the truth to that effect.

“Thirdly, because by presentations, many forcibly are thrust into the ministry, and upon Congregations, that utter thereafter that they were not called by God: It would be provided that none seeke presentations to Benefiees without advice of the Presbyterie within the bounds whereof the benefiee is, and if any doe in the contrary, they to be repelled as rei ambitus.

“That the tryall of persons to be admitted to the ministrie hereafter, consist not only in their learning and abilitie to preach, but also in conscience, and feeling, and spirituall wisdom, and namely in the knowledge of the bounds of their calling in doctrine, discipline, and wisdom, to behave himselfe accordingly with the diverse ranks of persons within his flock, as namely with Atheists, rebellious, weak consciences, and such other, wherein the pastorall charge is most kythed; and that he be meet to stop the mouthes of the adversaries: and such as are not qualified in these points to be delayed to further tryall; and while they be found qualified. And because men may be found meet for some places who are not meet for other, it would be considered, that the principall places of the Realme be provided by men of most worthie gifts, wisdom and experience, and that none take the charge of greater number of people nor they are able to discharge: And the Assembly to take order herewith, and the act of the provinciall of Louthain, made at Linlithgow, to be urged.

“That such as shall be found not given to their book and studie of scriptures, not carefull to have books, not given to sanctification and prayer, that studie not to be powerfull and spirituall, not applying the doctrine to corruptious, which is the pastorall gift, obscure and too scholastick before the people, cold, and wanting of spirituall zeal, negligent in visiting of the sick, and caring for the poore; or indiscreet in choosing of parts of the word not meetest for the flock, flatterers and dissembling at publick sins, and specially of great personages in their congregations, for flattery, or for fear, that all such persons be censured, according to the degree of their faults, and continuing therein, be deprived.

“That such as be slothfull in the ministration of the Saeraments and irreverent, as prophane receiving the cleane and uncleane, ignorants and senselesse prophane, and making no conscience of their profession in their calling and families, omitting due tryall or using none, or light tryall, having respect in their tryall to persons, wherein there is manifest corruption; that all such be sharply rebuked, and if they continue therein, that they be deposed.

“And if any be found a seller of the Saeraments, that hee be deposed simpliciter: and such as eolude with slanderous persons in dispeusing and over-seeing them for money, incurre the like punishment. That every Minister be charged to have a Session established of the meetest men in his Congregation, and that Discipline strike not only upon grosse sins, as whoredome, blood-shed, &c. but upon sins repugnant to the word of God, as blasphemie of God, banning, profaning of the Sabbath, disobedient to parents, idle, unruly ones without calling, drunkards, and such like deboshed men, as make not conscience of their life and ruling of their families, and specially of education of their children, lying, slandering, and backbiting and breaking of promises: and this to be an universall order throughout the Realme, &c. and such like as are negligent herein, and continue therein after admonition, be deposed.

“That none falling in publick slanders, be received in the fellowship of the Kirk, except his Minister have some appearance and warrand in conscience, that hee hath both a feeling of sin, and apprehension of merie, and for this effect, that the Minister travell with him, by doctrine and private instruction, to bring him hereto, and specially in the doctrine of repentance, which, being neglected, the publick place of repentance is turned in a mocking.

“Dilapidation of benefiees, dimitting of them for favour, or money, that they become laick patronages, without advise of the Kirk, and such like interchanging of benefiees, by transaction and transporting of themselves by that occasion, without the knowledge of the Kirk, precisely to be punished. Such like, that setting of taeks without the consent of the Assembly, be punished according to the acts: and that the dimitters in favours for money, or otherwise to the effect above written; be punished as the dilapidators.

“That such as are light and wanton in their behaviour, as in gorgeous and light apparell; in speech, in using light and prophane companie, unlawful gaming, as daneing, earding, dyeing, and such like, not becoming the gravitie of a Pastour, bee sharply and gravely reproved by the Presbyterie, according to the degree thereof: and continuing therein after due admonition, that hee bee deprived, as slanderous to the Gospel.

“That Ministers being found swearers, or banners, prophaners of the Sabbath, drunkards, fighters, guiltie of all these or any of them, be deposed simpliciter; and such like, lyars, detractors, flatterers, breakers of promise, brawlers, and quarrellers, after admonition continuing therein, incurre the same punishment.

“That Ministers given to unlawful and incompetent trades and occupations for filthie gain, as holding of ostleries, taking of ocker beside conscience and good lawes, and bearing worldly offices in noble-men and gentlements houses, merchandise, and such like, buying of victuals, and keeping to the dearth, and all such worldly occupations, as may distract them from their charge, and may be slanderous to the pastorall calling, be admonished and brought to the acknowledging of their sins, and if they continue therein, to be deposed.

“That Ministers not resident at their flocks, be deposed according to the Acts of the generall Assembly, and lawes of the Realme: otherwise the burthen to be laid on the Presbyteries, and they to be censured therefore.

“That the Assembly command all their members, that none of them await on the court and affairs thereof, without the advice and allowance of their Presbyterie. Item, that they intend no action civill without the said advice, except in small matters; and for remedying of the necessitie, that some Ministers hath to enter in plea of law, that remedie bee craved, that short processe bee devised, to be used in Ministers actions.

“That Ministers take special care in using godly exercises in their families, in teaching of their wives, children, and servants, in using ordinarie prayers and reading of Scriptures, in removing of offensive persons out of their families, and such like other points of godly conversation, and good example, & that they, at the visitation of their Kirks, try the Ministers families in these points foresaid, and such as are found negligent in these points after due admonition, shall be adjudged unmeet to govern the house of God, according to the rule of the Apostle.

“That Ministers in all companies strive to bee spirituall and profitable, and to talke of things pertaining to godlinesse, as, namely, of such as may strengthen us in Christ, instruct us in our calling, of the means how to have Christs Kingdome better established in our Congregations, and to know how the Gospel flourisheth in our flocks, and such like others the hinderances, and the remedies that we finde, &c., wherein there is manifold corruptions, both in our companying with our selves, and with others: and that the contraveeners thereof be tried, and sharply be rebuked.

“That no Minister be found to contenance, procure, or assist a publick offender challenged by his own Minister, for his publick offence, or to bear with him, as though his Minister were too severe upon him, under the pain of admonition and rebuking.

“Anent generall Assemblies.

“To urge the keeping of the Acts anent the keeping of the Assembly, that it may have the own reverence and majestie.”

The Assembly having heard the whole act read, most unanimously alloweth and approveth this article.

X. Anent the defraying of the expenses of the Commissioners to the generall Assembly, referreth and recommendeth the same unto the particular Presbyteries, and especially to the ruling Elders therein, that they may take such courses whereby, according to reason and former acts of Assemblies, the Commissioners expenses to this Assembly, and to the subsequent, may be born by the particular parochins of every Presbyterie, who sendeth them in their name, and to their behalf, and for that effect, that all sort of persons able in land or moneys proportionally, may bear a part of the burthen, as they reap the benefit of their paines.

XI. Anent the repressing of poperie and superstition; It seemeth expedient that the number and names of all the Papists in this Kingdome be taken up at this Assembly, if it may be conveniently done, and if not, that it be remitted to the next provincial Assemblies, that it may appear what growth poperie hath had, and now hath through this Kingdome, what popish priests, and Iesuits there born in the land; and that all persons of whatsoever state and condition, be obliged to swear and subscribe the confession of Faith, as it is now condescended upon by this generall Assembly, that they frequent the word and Sacraments in the ordinar dyets and places, otherwise to proceed against them with the censures of the Kirk, and that children be not sent out of the countrey without licence of the Presbyteries or provincial Synods of the bounds where they dwell.

The Assembly referreth this article to the severall Presbyteries.

XII. Anent order to be taken that the Lords Supper be more frequently administrat both in burgh and landward, then it hath been in these years by-gone: It were expedient that the act at Edinburgh December 25. 1562. Sess. 5. bee renewed, and some course bee taken for furnishing of the elements, where the Minister of the Parish hath allowance only for once in the year.

The Assembly referreth this to the consideration of Presbyteries, and declareth that the charges be rather payed out of that dayes collection, then that the Congregation want the more frequent use of the Sacrament.

XIII. Anent the entrie of Ministers to the ministrie: The Assembly thinks expedient that the act holden at St. Andrews April 24. 1532. Sess. 7. Touching the age of twenty five years be renewed, and none to be admitted before that time, except such as for rare and singular qualities, shall be judged by the generall or provincial Assembly to be meet and worthie thereof.

The Assembly approveth this article.

XIV. Anent mercats on Monday and Saturday within Burghs, causing intollerable profanation of the Lords Day, by carying of loads, bearing of Burthens; and other work of that kinde: It were expedient for the redresse thereof, that the care for restraining of this abuse be recommended by the Assembly unto the severall Burghs, and they to bee earnestly entreated to finde out some way for the repressing of this evill, and changing of the day, and to report their diligence thereanent to the next generall Assembly.

The Assembly referreth this article to the consideration of the Burrows.

XV. Anent the profanation of the Sabbath-day in Laudward, especially for want of divine service in the afternoone: The Assembly ordaineth the act of Assembly holden at Dundie, July 12. 1580. Sess. 10. for keeping both dyets, to be put in execution.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVI. Anent frequenting with excommunicat persons: The Assembly ordaineth that the act at Edinburgh, March 5. 1569. Sess. 10. to wit, "That these who will not forbear the companie of excommunicat persons after due admonition, be excommunicat themselves except they forbear," to be put in execution.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVII. Whereas the confession of the Faith of this Kirk, concerning both Doctriue and Discipline, so often called in question by the corrupt judgment and tyrannous authoritie of the pretended Prelats, is now clearly explained, and by this whole Kirk represented by this generall Assembly concluded, ordained also to bee subscribed by all sorts of persons within the said Kirk and Kingdome: The Assembly constitutes, and ordaines, that from henceforth no sort of persou, of whatsoever quality and degree, be permitted to speak, or write against the said Confession, this Assembly, or any act of this Assembly, and that under the paine of incurring the censures of this Kirk.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVIII. Anent voicing in Kirk Sessions: It is thought expedient that no Minister moderating his Session, shall usurpe a negative voice over the members of his Session, and where there is two or moe Ministers in one Congregation, that they have equal power in voicing, that one of them hinder not the reasoning or voicing of any thing, whereunto the other Minister or Ministers, with a great part of the Session inclineth, being agreeable to the acts and practise of the Kirk, and that one of the Ministers without advice of his colleague appoint not dyets of Communion nor examination, neither hinder his colleague from catechising and using other religious exercises as oft as he pleaseth.

The Assembly referreth this article to the care of the Presbyteries.

XIX. Since the office of Diocesane, or lordly Bishop, is all-uterly abjured, and reomoved out of this Kirk: It is thought fit that all titles of dignitie, savouring more of poperie than of Christian libertie, as Chapters with their elections and consecrations, Abbots, Pryors, Deans, Arch-deacons, Preaching-deacous, Chanters, Subchanters, and others having the like title, flowing from the Pope and canon law only, as testifieth the second book of Discipline, bee also banished out of this reformed Kirk, and not to bee usurped or used hereafter under ecclesiasticall censure.

The Assembly alloweth this Article.

XX. Anent the presenting either of Pastours or Readers and School-masters, to particular Congregations, that there be a respect had to the Congregation, and that no person be intruded in any office of the Kirke, contrare to the will of the congregation to which they are appointed.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXI. Anent Marriage without proclamation of bans, which being in use these years by-gone hath produced many dangerous effects: The Assembly would discharge the same, conforme to the former acts, except the Presbyterie in some necessarie exigents dispense therewith.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXII. Anent the buriall in Kirks, the Assembly would be pleased to consider anent the act of Assembly at Edinburgh 1588. Sess. 5. if it shall be put in execution, and to discharge funerall sermons, as savouring of superstition.

The Assembly referreth the former part of this article anent buriall in Kirks to the care of Presbyteries, and dischargeth all funerall sermons.

XXIII. Anent the tryall of Expectants before their entrie to the ministrie, it being notour that they have subscribed the confession of Faith now declared in this Assembly, and that they have exercised often privatly, and publickly, with approbation of the Presbyterie, they shall first adde and make the exercise publiely, and make a discourse of some common head in Latine, and give propositions thereupon for dispute, and thereafter be questioned by the Presbyterie upon questions of controversie, aud chronologie, anent particular texts of Scripture how they may be interpreted according to the analogie of Faith, and reconciled, and that they be examined upon their skill of the Greek and Hebrew, that they bring a testificat of their life and conversation from either Colledge or Presbyterie, where they reside.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXIV. The Assembly having considered the order of the provincial Assemblies, given in by the most ancient of the Ministrie within every Province, as the ancient plateforme thereof, ordained the same to be observed conforme to the roll, registrat in the books of Assembly, whereof the tennour followeth.

The order of the PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLIES in Scotland, according to the Presbyteries therein contained.

That the Minister of the place where the Synodall Assembly meets shall preach the first day of their meeting, and give timouse advertisement to the rest of the Presbyteries.

It is remembered that of old the Synodall Assemblies that were nearest to others, had correspondence among themselves, by sending one or two Commissioners mutually from one to another, which course is thought fit to be kept in time comming: viz. The Provincials of Louthian, and Mers, &c. The Provincials of Drumfries, Galloway, Glasgow, and Argyll, The Provincials of Perth, Fyfe, and Angus. &c. The Provincials of Aberdein and Murray. The Provincials of Rosse, Caithnes, and Orkney. The Commissioners for correspondence amongst the Synodals to be a Minister and a ruling Elder.

The Assembly recommendeth to the severall Presbyteries the execution of the old acts of Assemblies, against the break of the Sabbath-day, by the going of Milles, Salt-pans, Salmond-fishing, or any such-like labour, and to this end revives and renews the act of the Assembly, holden at Halyrudehouse 1602. Sess. 5. whereof the tennour followeth.

“The Assemblie considering that the conventions of the people, specially on the Sabbath-day, are verie rare in manie places, by distraction of labour, not only in Harvest and Seed-time, but also every Sabbath by fishing both of white fish and Salmond fishing, and in going of Milles: Therefore the Assemblie, dischargeth and inhibiteth, all such labour of fishing as-well whyte fish as Salmond-fish, and going of Miles of all sorts upon the Sabbath-day, under the paine of incurring the censures of the Kirk. And ordains the Commissioners of this Assemblie to meane the same to his Majestie, and to desire that a pecuniiall paine may be injoynd upon the contraveeners of this present act.”

THE Assembly considering the great necessity of purging this land from bygone corruptions, and of preserving her from the like in time coming, ordaineth the Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk, to excommunication, against those Ministers who being deposed by this Assembly acquiesces not to their sentences, but exercise some part of their Ministeriall function, refuseth themselves, and with-draw others from the obedience of the acts of the Assembly.

Against the civill places and power of Kirk-men.

THE generall Assembly, remembering that among other clauses of the application of the confession of Faith to the present time, which was subscribed in Februarie 1638. The clause touching the civill places and power of Kirk-men, was referred unto the tryall of this Assembly; entered into a serious search thereof, especially of their sitting on the bench, as Iustices of peace, their sitting in Session and Councell, their ryding and voting in Parlament: and considering how this vote in Parliament, was not at first sought nor required by this Kirke, or worthy men of the Ministerie, but being obtruded upon them, was disallowed for such reasons as could not well be answered (as appeareth by the conference, holden at Halyrude-house 1599. which with the reasons therein contained was read in the face of the Assembly) & by plurality of voices not being able to resist that enforced favour, they foreseeing the dangerous consequences thereof, in the Assembly at Montrose did limitate the same by many necessare cautions: Considering also the protestation made in the Parliament 1606. by Commissioners from Presbyteries, and provinciall Assemblies, against this restitution of Bishops to vote in Parliament, and against all civill offices in the persons of Pastors, separate unto the Gospel, as incompatible with their spirituall function; with the manifold reasons of that Protestation from the word of God, ancient Councils, ancient and moderne Divines, from the Doctrine, discipline, and Confession of Faith of the Kirk of Scotland, which are extant in print, and were read in the audience of the Assembly: Considering also from their own experience the bad fruits and great evils, which have been the inseparable consequents of these offices, and that power in the persons of Pastors separate to the Gospel, to the great prejudice of the freedome and libertie of the Kirk, the jurisdiction of her Assemblies, and the powerfull fruits of their spirituall Ministerie; The Assembly most unanimously in one voice, with the hesitation of two allanerly, declared, that as on the one part the Kirk and the Ministers thereof are oblidged to give their advise and good counsell in matters concerning the Kirk or the Conscience of any whatsomever, to his Majestie, to the Parliament to the Councell, or to any member thereof, for their resolutions from the word of God, So on the other part, that it is both inexpedient, and unlawful in this Kirk, for Pastors separate unto the Gospel to brook civil places, and offices, as to be Iustices of peace; sit and decerne in Councell, Session, or Exchequer; to ryde or vote in Parliament, to be Iudges or Assessors in any Civill Judicatorie: and therefore rescinds and annuls, all contrarie acts of Assembly, namely of the Assembly holden at Montrose 1600. which being prest by authority, did rather for an interim tolerat the same, and that limitate by many cautions, for the breach wherof the Prelats have been justly censured, then in freedome of judgement allow thereof, and ordaineth the Presbyteries to proceed with the Censures of the Kirk, against such as shall transgresse herein in time comming.

Act Sess. 26. December 20. 1638.

THE Assembly considering the great prejudice which God's Kirk in this land, hath sustained these years bypast, by the unwarranted printing of lybels, pamphlets, and polemicks, to the disgrace of Religion, slander of the Gospel, infecting and disquieting the mindes of God's people, and disturbance of the peace of the Kirk, and remembring the former acts, and custome of this Kirk, as of all other Kirks, made for restraining these and the like abuses, and that nothing be printed concerning the Kirk, and Religion, except it be allowed by these whom the Kirk intrusts with that charge: The Assembly unanimously, by vertue of their ecclesiastical authority, dischargeth and inhibiteth all printers within this Kingdome, to print any act of the former Assemblies, any of the acts or proceedings, of this Assembly, any confession of Faith, any Protestations, any reasons pro or contra, anent the present divisions and contraversies of this time, or any other treatise whatsoever which may concerne the Kirk of Scotland, or God's cause in hand, without warrand subscribed by Mr Archibald Johnston, as Clerk to the Assembly, and Advocate for the Kirk; or to reprint without his warrand, any acts or treatises foresaids, which he hath caused any other to print, under the paine of Ecclesiasticall censures to be execute against the transgressours by the several Presbyteries, and in case of their refusal, by the several Commissiones from this Assembly: Whereunto also we are confident, the honourable Iudges of this land will contribute their civill authority: and this to be intimat publickly in pulpit, with the other generall acts of this Assembly.

Act Sess. 26. December 20. 1638.

THE general Assembly ordaineth all Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies to convene before them, such as are scandalous and malicious, and will not acknowledge this Assembly, nor acquiesce unto the acts thereof: And to censure them according to their malice and contempt, and acts of this Kirk; and where Presbyteries are refractarie, granteth power unto the several Commissiones to summond them to compear before the next generall Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh, the third Wedinsday of Iulie, to abide their tryall and censure.

Act. Sess. 26. December 20. 1638.

THE Assembly considering the acts and practise of this Kirk in her purest times, that the Commissioners of every Presbyterie, Burgh, and Universitie, were both ordained to take, and really did take from the Clerk the whole generall acts of the Assembly, subscribed by the Clerk: Whereby they might rule and conforme their judicatorie themselves, and all persons within their jurisdictions, unto the obedience thereof: Considering the great prejudices we have lately felt out of ignorance of the acts of Assembly, Considering also the great necessity in this time of reformation, beyond any other ordinarie time, to have an extract thereof: The Assembly ordaineth be this present act, that all Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, presently get under the Clerks hand an Index of the acts, till the acts themselves be extracted, and thereafter to get the full extract of the whole generall acts, to be insert in their Presbyterie books, whereby all their proceedings may be regulate in time coming. Likeas the Assembly recommendeth unto every Kirk Session, for the preservation of their particular Paroch from the reentrie of the corruptions now discharged, and for their continuance in the Covenant, anent doctrine, worship, and discipline now declared, to obtain an extract of these acts: especially if they be printed: Seeing their pryce will no wayes then be considerable: as the benefite both of the particular Parish, and the interest of the whole Kirk, in the preservation thereof from defection is undeniable: seeing Presbyteries are composed of sundry parochins, and so must be affected, or infected as they are, as Provinciall and generall Assemblies, are composed of Presbyteries, and so must be disposed as they are.

In the Assembly at Glasgow 1638. concerning the confession of Faith renewed in Februar, 1638.

THE Assembly considering that for the purging and preservation of religion, for the Kings Majesties honour, and for the publick peace of the Kirk and Kingdome, the renewing of that nationall Covenant and oath of this Kirk and Kingdome, in Februar 1638. was most necessare, likeas the Lord hath blessed the same from Heaven with a wonderfull successe for the good of religion, that the said Covenant suspendeth the practise of novations already introduced, and the approbation of the corruptions of the present government of the Kirk, with the civill places, and power of Kirkmen, till they be tryed in a free generall Assembly, and that now after long and serious examination, it is found that by the confession of Faith, the five articles of Perth, and Episcopall government are abjured and to be removed out of this Kirk, and the civill places and power of Kirk-men are declared to be unlawfull; The Assembly alloweth and approveth the same in all the heads and articles thereof, And ordaineth that all Ministers, Masters of Universities, Colledges, and Schooles and all others who have not already subscribed the said Confession and Covenant, shall subscribe the same with these words prefixed to the subscription, viz. The article of this Covenant which was at the first subscription referred to the determination of the general Assembly being now determined at Glasgow, in December 1638. and thereby the five articles of Perth, and the government of the Kirk by Bishops, being declared to be abjured and removed, the civill places and power of Kirk-men declared to be unlawfull; We subscribe according to the determination, of the said free and lawfull generall Assembly holden at Glasgow: and ordaineth, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, the said Covenant with this declaration to be insert in the registers of the Assemblies of this Kirk; generall, Provinciaall and Presbyteriall.

Concerning the subscribing the confession of Faith lately subscribed by his Majesties Commissioner, and urged to be subscribed by others.

SEEING the generall Assembly, to whom belongeth properly the publick and judieiall interpretation of the confession of Faith, hath now after accurat tryall, and mature deliberation clearly found, that the five articles of Perth, and the government of the Kirk by Bishops, are abjured by the confession of Faith, as the same was professed in the year 1580. and was renewed in this instant year 1638. And that the Marques of Hamiltoun his Majesties Commissioner hath caused print a Declaration, bearing that his Majesties intention and his own, in causing subscribe the confession of Faith, is no wayes to abjure, but to defend Episcopall government, and that by the oath and explanation set down in the act of Council, it neither was nor possibly could be abjured, requiring that none take the said oath, or any other oath in any sense, which may not consist with Episcopall government: which is directly repugnant to the genuine and true meaning of the foresaid Confession as it was professed in the year 1580. as is clearly now found and declared by the generall Assembly: Therefore the generall Assembly: Doth humbly supplicate, that his Majestie may be graciously pleased, to acknowledge and approve the foresaid true interpretation, and meaning of the generall Assembly, by his Royall warrant to his Majesties Commissioner, Councill, and Subjects, to be put in record for that effect, whereof we are confident, after his Majesty, hath received true information from this Kirk, honoured with his Majesties birth and baptisme, which will be a royall testimonie of his Majesties piety and justice, and a powerfull meane to procure the heartie affection and obedience of all his Majesties loyall Subjects: And in the meane time, least any should fall under the danger of a contradictorie oath, and bring the wrath of God upon themselves and the land, for the abuse of his Name and Covenant; The Assembly by their Ecclesiasticall authority, prohibiteth and dischargeth, that no member of this Kirk swear or subscribe the said Confession, so far wreasted to a contrare meaning, under paine of all Ecclesiasticall censure: but that they subscribe the confession of Faith, renewed in Februar, with the Declaration of the Assembly set down in the former Act.

THE Assembly having considered the reasons lately printed for holding of generall Assemblies, which are taken from the light of nature, the promise of Iesus Christ, the practise of the holy Apostles, the doctrine and eustome of other reformed Kirks, and the liberty of this nationall Kirk, as it is expressed in the book of Policie, and acknowledged in the act of Parliament 1592, and from recent and present experience, comparing the lamentable prejudices done to religion, through the former want of free and lawfull Assemblies, and the great benefite arysing to the Kirk, from this one free and lawfull Assembly; finde it necessary to declare, and hereby declares, that by Divine, Ecclesiasticall, and Civill warrands, this national Kirk hath power and liberty to assemble and convene in her yearly generall Assemblies, and oftner pro re nata, as occasion and necessity shall require. Appointeth the next Generall Assembly to sit at Edinburgh, the third Weddinsday of Iulie 1639. And warneth all Presbyteries, Universities, and Burghes, to send their Commissioners for keeping the same. Giving power also to the Presbiterie of Edinburgh, pro re nata: and upon any urgent and extraordinarie necessity (if any shall happen before the diet appointed in Iulie) to give advertisement to all the Presbyteries, Universities, and Burghes, to send their Commissioners for holding an occasionall Assembly. And if in the meane time it shall please the Kings Majestie to indict a generall Assembly, ordaineth all Presbyteries, Universities, and Burghes, to send their Commissioners for keeping the time and place which shall be appointed by his Majesties Proclamation.

Ordaining an humble supplication to be sent to the King's Majestie.

THE Assembly, from the sense of his Majesties pietie and justice, manifested in the publick indiction of their solemne meeting, for the purging and preservation of Religion, in so great an exigent of the extreame danger of both, from their fears arising out of experience of the craftie and malicious dealing of their adversaries in giving sinister informations against the most religious and loyall designs and doings of his Majesties good Subjects, and from their earnest desire to have his Majestie truly informed of their intentions and proceedings, from themselves, who know them best, (which they are confident, will be better beleaved, and finde more credite with his Majestie, than any secret surmise or private suggestion to the contrarie) that they may gaine his Majesties princely approbation and ratification in the ensuing Parliament to their constitutions: Hath thought meet and ordaineth, that an humble supplication be directed to his Majestie, testifying their most heartie thankfullnesse for so Royall a favour, as at this time hath refreshed the whole Kirk and Kingdome, stopping the way of calumnie, and humbly supplicating for the approbation, and ratification foresaid: That truth and peace may dwell together in this Land, to the increase of his Majesties glorie, and the comfort and quietnesse of his Majesties good People: This the Assembly hath committed, according to the Articles foresaid, to be subscribed by their Moderatour and Clerk, in their name. The tennour whereof followeth.

To the KINGS MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTIE:

The humble Supplication of the generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, couvened at Glasgow, November 21. 1638.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVERAIGNE,

We your Majesties most humble and loyall Subjects, The Commissioners from all the parts of this your Majesties ancient and native Kingdome, and members of the National Assembly, couvened at Glasgow, by your Majesties special indiction, considering the great happinesse which ariseth both to Kirk and Common-wealth, by the mutual embracements of Religion and Justice, of truth and peace, when it pleaseth the Supream Providence so to dispose, that princely power and ecclesiasticall authoritie joyne in one, do with all thankfulness of heart acknowledge, with our mouthes doe confesse, and not only with our pennes, but with all our power are readie to witnesse unto the world, to your Majesties never dying glorie, how much the whole Kingdome is affected and not only refreshed, but revived, with the comfortable sense of your Majesties pietie, justice, and goodness, in hearing our humble supplications, for a full and free generall Assembly: and remembring that for the present, a more true and real testimonie of our unfained acknowledgement, could not proceed from us your Majesties dutyfull Subjects, then to walke worthie of so royall a favour: It hath been our greatest care and most serious endeavour, next unto the will of IESUS CHRIST, the great King of his Kirk redeemed by his own blood, in all our proceedings, joyned with our hearty prayers to GOD, for a blessing from heaven upon your Majesties Person and government, from the first houre of our meeting, to carie our selves in such moderation, order and loyaltie, as beseemed the subjects of so just and gracious a King, lacking nothing so much as your Majesties personall presence; With which had we been honoured and made happie, we were confident to have gained your Majesties Royall approbation to our ecclesiastick constitutions, and conclusions, knowing that a truly Christian minde and royall heart inclined from above, to religion and piety, will at the first discern, and discerning be deeply possessed with the love of the ravishing beautie, and heavenly order of the house of God; they both proceeding from the same Spirit. But as the joy was unspeakable, and the hopes lively, which from the fountains of your Majesties favour did fill our hearts, so were we not a little troubled, when wee did perceive that your Majesties Commissioner, as before our meeting, he did endeavour a prelimitation of the Assembly in the necessarie Members thereof, and the matters to bee treated therein, contrarie to the intention of your Majesties Proclamation indicting a free Assembly according to the order of this Kirk, and laws of the Kingdome: So from the first beginnings of our sitting (as if his Lordship had come rather to crosse, nor to countenance our lawfull proceedings, or as we had intended any prejudice to the good of Religion, or to your Majesties honour (which GOD knoweth was far from our thoughts) did suffer nothing, although most necessarie, most ordinarie, and most undenyable, to passe without some ecusure, contradiction, or protestation: And after some dayes debating of this kinde, farre against our expectation, and to our great griefe, did arise himself, commanded us, who had laboured in everything to approve ourselves to GOD, and to his Lordship, as representing your Majesties Person, to arise also, and prohibited our further meeting by such a proclamation, as will bee found to have proceeded, rather from an unwillingnesse that we should any longer sit, than from any ground or reason, which may endure the tryall either of your Majesties Parliament, or of your own royall Iudgement, unto which if (being couvened by indiction from your Majestie, and sitting now in a constitute Assembly) we should have given place, This Kirk and Kingdome, contrarie to your Majesties most laudable intentions manifested in former proclamations, and contrarie to the desires and expectation of all your Majesties good people had been in an instant precipitate in such a world of confusions, and such depths of miserie, as afterward could not easily have been cured. In this extremitie we made choise rather of that course which was most agreeable to your Majesties will revealed unto us, after so many fervent supplications, and did most conduce for the good of Religion, your Majesties honour, and the well of your Majesties kingdome; then to give way to any sudden motion, tending to the ruine of all: wherein wee are so far from fearing the light, least our deeds should be reproved, that the more accuratly that we are tryed, and the more impartially our using of that power, which God Almighty, and your sacred Majestie, his Vicegerent had put in our hands, for so good and necessary ends, is examined, we have the greater confidence, of your Majesties allowance and ratification: and so much the rather, that being in a manner inhibited to proceed in so good a work, we doubled our diligence, and endeavoured more carefully then before, when your Majesties Commissioner was present, in every point, falling under our consideration, to walke circumspectly, and without offence, as in the sight of God, and as if your Majesties eyes had been looking upon us, labouring to proceed according to the word of God, our confession of Faith, and nationall oath, and the laudable constitutions of the lawfull Assemblies of this Kirk; and studying rather to renew, and revive old acts made for the reformation of Religion, in the time of your Majesties father, of happie memorie, and extant in the records of the Kirk, which divine providence hath preserved, and at this time brought to our hands; then either to allow of such innovations, as the avarice and ambition of men, abusing authoritie for their own ends, had without order introduced; or to appoint any new order, which had not been formerly received, and sworn to bee retained, in this Kirk. In all which the members of the Assembly, found so clear and convincing light, to their full satisfaction, against all their doubts and difficulties, that the harmonie and unanimtie was rare and wonderfull, and that we could not have agreed upon other constitutions, except wee would have been found fighting against GOD. Your Majesties wise and princely minde knowethe, that nothing is more ordinary then for men, when they doe well, to bee evil spoken of, and that the best actions of men are many times misconstrued, and mis-reported. Balaam, although a false Prophet, was wronged: for in place of that which hee said, The Lord refuseth to give me leave to go with you: the princes of Moab reported unto Balack, that Balaam refused to goe with them. But our comfort is, That Truth is the daughter of time, and although calummie often starteth first, and runneth before, yet Veritie followeth her at the heels, and possesseth her self in noble and royall hearts: where base calummie cannot long finde place. And our confidence is, that your Majestic with that worthie King, will keep one care shut against all the obloquies of men; and with that more wise King, who, when he gave a prooffe that the wisdom of GOD was in him to doe judgment, would have both parties to stand before him at once: that hearing them equally, they might speed best, and go out most chearfully from his Majesties face, who had the best cause. When your Majesties wisdom hath searched all the secrets of this Assembly, let us be reputed the worst of all men according to the aspersions which partialitie would put upon us, let us be the most miserable of all men, to the full satisfaction of the vindictive malice of our adversaries, let us by the whole world bee judged of all men the most unworthie to breath any more in this your Majesties Kingdome, if the cause that we maintaine, and have been prosecuting, shall be found any other, but that we desire that the Majestic of GOD, who is our fear and our dread, be served, and his house ruled, according to his owne will; if we have not carried along with us in all the Sessions of our Assemblie, a most humble and loyall respect to your Majesties honour, which next unto the honour of the living GOD, lyeth nearest our hearts; if we have not keped our selves within the limits of our reformation, without debording or reflecting upon the constitution of other reformed Kirks, unto which wee heartily wish all truth and peace, and by whose sound judgement and Christian affection we certainly look to be approven; if we have not failed rather by lenitie then by rigour in censuring of delinquents, never exceeding the rules and lines prescribed, and observed by this Kirk; and if (whatsoever men minding themselves, suggest to the contrary) the government and discipline of this Kirk, subscribed and sworn before, and now acknowledged by the unanimous consent of this Assembly, shall not bee found to serve for the advancement of the Kingdome of CHRIST, for procuring all duetifull obedience to your Majestic, in this your Kingdome, and great riches and glorie to your Crown, for peace to us, your Majesties loyall subjects, and for terrour to all the enemies of your Majesties honour and our happinesse: and if any act hath proceeded from us, so farre as our understanding could reach, and humane infirmitie would suffer, which being duely examined according to the grounds laid by your Majesties Father, of everlasting memory, and our religious Progenitours, and which religion did forbid us to infringe, shall merit the anger and indignation, wherewith wee are so often threatened: But on the contrare, having sincerely sought the glorie of GOD, the good of Religion, your Majesties honour, the censure of impietie, and of men who had sold themselves to wickednesse, and the re-establishment of the right constitution and government of this Kirk, farre from the smallest appearance of wronging any other reformed Kirk, we humbly beg, and certainly expect, that from the bright beames of your Majesties countenance shining on this your Majesties own Kingdome and people, all our stormes shall bee changed in a comfortable calme, and sweet Sunshine, and that your Majesties ratification in the ensuing Parliament, graciously indicted by your Majesties Proclamation to bee kept in May, shall settle us in such a firmnesse, and stabilitie in our Religion, as shall adde a further lustre unto your Majesties glorious Diademe, and make us a blessed people under your Majesties long and prosperous reigne: which we beseech him who hath directed us in our affaires, and by whom Kings reigne, to grant unto your Majestic, to the admiration of all the world, the astonishment of your enemies, and comfort of the godly.

FINIS.

Collected, visied, and extracted forth of the Register of the acts of the Assembly by me Mr. A. IHONSTON, Clerk thereto, under my signe and subscription manuell.—Edinburgh the 12 of Jan. 1639.

A BREIFE COLLECTION of the PASSAGES of the ASSEMBLY holden at GLASGOW, in SCOTLAND, November last, 1638; with the Deposicon of Divers B.p.p.<sup>s</sup>, Their OFFENCES for which they were sentenced; and an INDEX of all the ACTS made at the said Assembly.

Upon Wednesday the vijth day of November, a generall fast was kept throughout all Scotland, for calling upon God for his blessing upon their Assembly, and praying for Gods gracious assistance that their meeting might take good effect to Gods glorie and their owne good.

21.—Upon the 21st day of November, their Assembly begun, where (after calling upon the name of the Lord) their Nobilitie and Commissioners were called and desired to bring in their Commissions.

22.—The 22<sup>d</sup> day, the Commissioners Letters, and Commissions were produced; and the Commissioners for every Presbyterie produced their Commission.

24.—The 24th day the Assembly proceeded to the election of their Clerke out of 4 Clarks, then nomynated:—(viz.)—Mr Thomas Sandilands, Mr Archibald Johnston, Mr John Nicholls, and Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Blair.

The Marquesse (as his Majesties Commissioner) desired that the votes of his Assessors might be admitted for choosing the Clerke, and in all other things, which the whole Assembly refused, for many reasons then given.

25.—The Assembly, proceeding to their election, made choyce of Mr Archibald Johnstone for the Clerke, who, being generallie allowed of, was presently sworne for the dutiful administracon of his office, and to bee answerable for the Register Books to the said Assembly.

This being done, the Registers of all the Assembles since 1560 were produced, consisting of 6 faire volumes.

The Assembly, after some consultacon, made ane Act, that the Earle of Rothes, Earle of Lauderdale, Mr Alex. Wilson, the Earle of Dundie, Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr John Raine, Mr John Adamson, Mr James Bonnar, Mr John Bell, and Mr Robert Murray, should visite and peruse the said Books of the Assemblies, and to report their judgement concerning their authentickness and credit.

26.—The 26 day of November, (after prayers,) the Moderator desired that the Commissions might be tryed and allowed, and, for avoyding of tediousness, declared, that if any would object against any Commission or Commissioner, they should be heard; But, if none objected, their silence should be taken for approbacon.

To this the Kings Commissioner answered, That he might object against anie Commission at any tyme, after the Commissions were produced.

Amongst manie Commissions produced this day, onely two were questioned, and they were both for brethrin. In the one, the Laird of Dunn was nominated a Commissioner; and, in the other, the Lord of Carnaigie was made a Commissioner. Dunns Commission had an approbacon on the backside thereof; but the Lord Carnaigies had noe approbacon; whereupon the Lord Marquesse desired the copie of Dunns Commission and approbacon under the Clerks hand. The Assembly were content hee should have the Commission, but not the approbacon. Upon which the Marquesse took instruments of their refusall.

27. The 27 day of November, (after prayers,) the rest of the Commissions were read, and some were questioned—namely, for the Presbitrie of Peebles; for the Presbitrie of Glasgow; for the Ministrie of Glasgow—because each of them had three Commissions; and Brechin—for having two Ruling Elders, (as aforesaid,) which were all referred to a Committee of 6 Ministers, to consider of and certifie.

The Commission for the Colledge of Aberdeen had noe warrant to give any vote; but only to attend their affaires as procurator for the Colledge.

The Presbitrie of Aberdeen had two Commissioners; (viz. :)—Mr David Lindsay, and Mr Doctor Guild, which were allowed.

28.—The 28 of November, the Visitors of the Registers gave in their testimoniall, subscribed with their hands, testifying the Registers to be good, authentique, and worthy of credit; which, being read, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Gibson further declared, in the presence of the Commissioners and whole Assemblie, that he had seene and considered the registers produced, and found them to be very authentique, and that hee thought if the Registers of the Council or Sessions were compared with them, they would be found to come farr short of those Registers.

Whereupon the Moderator desired the Commissioner, and all others, if they had anything to say against the said Registers, they should speak now, or give it in writing at next sitting.

After this, protestacon was given in by Mr Rob<sup>t</sup> Elliot against the election of the Commissioners for Peebles, wherein the Earle of Traquaire was highly accused for intruding himselfe in that election; and this was referred to a committee.

29.—The 29 day of November, (after prayers,) Doctor Hamilton, in the name of the Archbishopps and Bishops declined, in a protestacon to the Marquesse, (who received it,) whereby they declyned the Assembly, and protested that the same should be holden null in law.

Whereupon Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Gibson protested that the Bishops should be holden as delinquents in the Assembly, and that they ought soe to come and appeare personally.

After this, certaine remonstrances were presented, by the Presbitries of Glasgow and Dundie, to the Commissioner and Assemblie, desiring all Commissioners that have beene chosen to be laike Elders, might be putt away, which was generally denyed.

The Moderator had presented unto him a paper which the Clerk read openly to the Assemblie, containing many sufficient answers unto the objections exhibited by the Bishops, with their declynator against the lawfullnesse of the Assemblie.

After the same was read, the Moderator, in the name of the Assemblie, desired the Marquesse, that it might be voted in the Assembly, whether or not they were competent Judges to the Bishops; but the Marquesse refused, and adhered to the protestacon and declynator of the Bishops, against the lawfulness of the Assemblie; whereupon there was a great conference betwixt the Marquesse, the Earle of Rothes, and the Lord Lowdon, concerning the said declynator.

Their conference being ended, the Moderator againe desired the Marquesse to lett the matter goe to voting, or else to make objections against the lawfulness of the Assemblie, and they would resolve them. But the Marquesse still refused it, alleadging it to bee ane unlawfull Assembly wherein laike Elders were; which was thus retorted—Then the Assembly of Perth was noe lawfull Assembly, for there were Ruling Elders; which answer much moved the Marquesse, and soe checked him as he knew not what to answer; for that Assemblie is the chiefe Assemblie the Prelats had. But the Marquesse put it off with a faire discourse, and, at last, told them he hoped the King's declaracon of his pleasure would fully satisfie them, which hee caused the Clerke to reade.

His Majesties will was, That the Service-Book, Booke of Canons, and High Commission, should be annulled and discharged; The practise of the 5 Articles at Perth, or the urging thereof; and freed all Ministers from all unlawful oaths at their admission; likewise it made all his Majesties subjects lyable unto the censure of the Church; onely hee would not have the office of a Bishop to be altogether destroyed.

After this, the Clerk read the Noblemens Protestacon, which was made to uphold the liberty and freedome of the Assemble, which being read, the Marquesse fell into a large discourse concerning the goodnes and liberalitie of the King's Majestie, which was fully answered by the Moderator, who acknowledged his Majesties goodnes, and affirmed that, if his Majestie were truly informed of the just grievances of his subjects, and of the foulness of the crymes charged upon the Prelats, hee would leave them to their tryall.

And, therefore, hee, in the name of the whole Assemblie, requested the Marquesse that, seeing hee had now gone on in a faire way hitherto, and had not closed his ears unto their just requeste, hee would not now begin to stopp, but would grant that it might be voted in the Assembly, whether they were a lawfull Assembly or not. The Marquesse protested hee would not, onely hee would have them subscribe the Covenant, and rest content with his Majesties will declared unto them; and if they proceeded any further hee would not assent thereto; but that whatsoever was done should bee held null, and as done in ane unlawfull Assembly.

They answered, that they had beene called thither by his Majesties command, which had given liberty to them to proceed in the tryall of such things as were needfull to be performed reformed. And his Majesty, by his proelamaeon, had declared that, if any of his subjects shall or have presumed to assume to themselves any unlawfull power, they should be lyable to triall; and, therefore, they conceived that whatsoever should be coneluded in this Assembly, should be halde as proceeding from a lawfull Assemblie. The Marquesse thereupon commanded the Assemblie to rise, which they refusing, hee himselfe arose and left the Assemblie.

After the Marquesse was departed, the roll was given to the Clerk, who called every man partieularly by his name, and desired them to declare their opinions on these 4 partieulars:—

1.—Whether the Assembly were lawful or not?

2.—Whether the Assemblie were competent judges of the Bishops?

3.—Whether they would allow of the Bishops declynator or not?

4.—Whether they would adhere to their Commission of Faith, and contynue still and hold on in the Assemblie?

Every man partieularly concluded, That the Assembly was lawful: That they were competent judges: That they would not allow of the declynator; and, That they would adhere to the Confession, and contynue the Assemblie, except Sir John Carnegie, Mr Patrick Maekgill, and 3 other Ministers.

1.—The first of December, (after calling on the name of the Lord,) Mr Robert Blaire, Mr James Hamilton, Mr John Maekclagvell, and Mr John Livingston, being demanded, why they came out of Ireland, and whether they were under the censure of the Church or not? They declared the cause of their coming from Ireland, was because they refused to embrace, subscribe, and sweare to the Service-Booke of Ireland, and all the corrup-tions that were in that Church.

2.—The Earle of Argile, this day, left the Councell and came to the Assemblie, and declared, That he had subscribed the Confession of the faith with the Lords of the Councell, and found himselfe as farr obliged by subscribing the Kings Covenant as anie that had subscribed the National Covenant; and that hee subscribed the same as it was sett down in anno 1581, and not otherwise; and, therefore, desired the Assembly to goe on wisely in the matter of reconciling and explaining the Covenant. Whereupon the Assembly desired him to stay and bee an assistance and eye-witnesse of their proceedings, which hee both promised and performed.

3.—The 3d day of December, many complaints was given in against the Archbishops and Bishops, and especially ane libell against the Bishop of Galloway, conteyning 8 or 9 sheets of paper; whereupon a Committee was chosen of noblemen, gentlemen, and ministers, to hear the approbeicon, and to exawmine the truth of the matters which were charged against the Bishops, and to give an accompt of their proceedings unto the Assemblie.

There was likewise appointed another Committee to fynd out the errors of the Service-Booke, Booke of Cannons, Booke of Ordinaicon and High Commission, and to give sufficient reasons why they were rejected; and, lastly, there was a Committee for the explanaeon and reconciliaeon of the Covenants.

4.—The 4th of Decenber, (after calling on the name of the Lord,) the Earle of Argyle produced a letter sent unto him from some of the Lords of the Councell, wherein were these words, (viz.)—Your Lordship knowes that wee subscribed the Covenant upon noe other condition than you did—that is, as it was subscribed in anno 1581. And the Earle of Montrose also declared that the Earle of Wigton (another Privy Councillor) had written the same unto him, and desired him to signifie it unto the Assemblie, and 7 or 8 Councillors and noblemen afterwards sent the like declarations to the Assembly.

Those who had beene appointed upon the Committees appeared, and declared that they had begun upon their employments, but had not ended, because it was a worke that required more then one or two dayes labour, but promised to proceed with all care and diligence.

5.—The 5th of December, (after calling on the name of the Lord,) sundry eomplaints and proecesses were produced against Mr David Michell, Mr Gladstons, and Doctor Panter, for Arminianisme, whose libells being read, every one of them was 3 severall tymes called in the Assembly, and 3 severall tymes ealled at the doore, to come in and appeare, and answer to the things given in against them; but, none of them appearing, Mr David Dixon and Mr Rob<sup>t</sup> Baily, were ordayned to make an oraeon the next day to refute those Arminian points whereof Panter, Michell, and Gladstons were accused, that they might proceed against them. And, in the meane-tyme, a Committee was appointed to heare, and see, and exawmine these things alleadged against the said parties.

6.—The 6 of December, Mr Dixon made a speech, wherein he refuted fully all those Arminian points which had beene preached by Mr Michell and the other two; and Mr Andrew Ramsay made another speech, that hee (being one of the Committees) and the rest of the Committees, had scene, read, heard, and considered the things wherewith Michell and the rest were charged, and found them fully proved. Whereupon, by whole consent of the Assembly, Mr Michell and the other two were quite deposed and deprived of their office in the Church.

After this, Mr John Hamilton declared to the Assembly, That the Laird of Blakhall (a Councellor) had requested him to tell the Assemblie, that his subscribing of the Kings Covenant could be noe hindrance to their proceedings, but rather a furtherance, to cause him to doe what lay in his power for them; and that hee would come himselfe to the Assemblie and make his declaracon thereof unto them.

Lastly, the Commissioners for Edinburgh told the Moderator, that the people of Edinburgh having heard that some of their Ministers having subscribed the Bishops declynator, and, therefore, they would not suffer the said Ministers to preach anie more unto them. Therefore they desired to have it voted in the Assembly, Whether it were lawful to depose the saids Ministers, and to employ others to preaeh in their places? which was taken into deliberaeon against the next meeting.

7.—The 7th day of December, the Bishop of Orkneys sonne delivered a letter from his ffather vnto the Moderator, signifieing that hee was willing to vndergoe what they pleased to impose vpon him, and submitted himselfe wholly vnto the said Assembly to dispose of him and his place and calling as they pleased.

The Committee for the Covenants returned answer, That they had reconciled them both to one effect and meaning, and that the Covenant in anno 1581 is more prejudicall then the other.

[The abbreviate of the Proceedings, which is in the Advocates' Library, of which the prefixed is a copy, terminates on the 7th of December; and an nexed to it are the Acts of Deposition passed against the Prelates, and an "Index of all the Principal Acts of the Assembly holden at Glasgow 1638," at the end of which there is a docket subjoined. The "Index" referred to being more full than any of the copies that are to be found in the printed Acts, it is here adopted as by the docket authenticated by the Clerk of Assembly. The official abbreviate being thus defective to a certain extent, we are induced to fill up the chasm by adopting, as a supplement to it, an abridged account of the actings after the 7th December, from "Balfour's Annales," vol. ii., p. 209, et sequen.]

8 December, Sessio 16.

Mr Androw Ramsay,
Mr Daid Dickson,
Mr Robert Blaire,
Mr Androw Cant.

The Earle of Argyle, also, by occasione of speeiches wich fell from the moderator, spoke to the assembly of his longe delay and byding out, and not ioyning to the couenanters, not (said he) for want of affection to the good cause, bot to doe more good; wich, quhen it failed, he could byde no longer oute from them with the other syde, excepte he had beine a false knaue. He exhorted ministers to doe ther dewtie, and to be respectiue of authority; also the ministers to peace and vnity amongst themselues.

Therafter the moderator closed the assembly with prayer, and singinge of the 133 psalme, wpon the 20 day of December, 1638, being Fryday, about 6 a clocke at night.

Miscellaneous Historical Documents.

RELATIVE TO THE ECCLESIASTICAL AND POLITICAL EVENTS IN SCOTLAND, 1633—1638.

Having now presented to the reader the Acts and Proceedings of the General Assembly 1638, from the most authentic sources, we are now to submit a collection of illustrative historical documents, which will be found to corroborate the narrative given in the Introduction, and to throw much additional light on the period which elapsed from the coronation of King Charles I., in 1633, till the rising of the General Assembly on 20th December 1638.

It appeared to be exceedingly desirable to give a concentrated and connected view of these, in juxtaposition with the Acts of Assembly, of which they were the precursors and accompaniments; and this the more especially as, in so far as we have been able to discover, these are scattered over a variety of rare and expensive books, or unprinted records, which may be regarded as nearly inaccessible to the great bulk of the community. These are of peculiar value as explanatory of the entire chain of events during the period referred to; and they exhibit by much the most authentic record of the proceedings of all the parties concerned in these transactions; thus furnishing a body of information which cannot be found in any single or separate work on the era of which we treat. It may be proper to mention the chief sources whence these documents are derived.

1st, In 1639 a work was compiled by Dr Balcanqual, Dean of Durham, at the desire and under the auspices of King Charles I., as a vindication of the policy which he had pursued with reference to the affairs of Scotland in the previous and preceding years, and being published by Royal authority, may be considered as the King's own statement of his case in these unhappy differences with his subjects. It is titled—“A Large Declaration concerning the late tumults in Scotland, from their first originalls; together with a particular deduction of the seditious practices of the prime leaders of the Covenanters; collected out of their owne foule aets and writings, by which it doth plainly appeare, that Religion was onely pretended by these leaders, but nothing lesse intended by them—By THE KING. London: Printed by Robert Young, his Majesties Printer for Seotland, Anno Domini M.D.C.XXXIX." From this source many of the following documents are gleaned; and although the statements and argument founded on these documents are coloured so as to serve the party whose cause it advocated, a commendable impartiality is shewn in the publication of the main acts and writs of the adversary.

2dly, The next depository whence we have drawn these documents is a work of Bishop Burnet's:—"The Memoires of the Lives and Aetions of James and William Dukes of Hamilton, &c., in which an account is given of the Rise and Progress of the Civil Wars of Scotland, &c., from the year 1625 to 1652, together with many Letters, Instructions, and other papers, written by King Charles I., never before published; all drawn out of or copied from the originals." Printed by the Bookseller to the King. (Charles II.) 1677.

3dly, The only other authority to which it is necessary to refer particularly is:—"The Historiical Works of Sir James Balfour of Denmylue and Kinnaird, Knight and Baronet, Lord Lyon King at Arms to Charles I. and Charles II., published from the original MS., in the Library of the Faculty of Advoeates," (by M. D. Haig, under Librarian,) in 1824. This, like the others referred to, is a work of high authority, and abounds with much curious and minute information.

Petition to the KING from the CLERGY of SCOTLAND.

29 May 1633.

Griuances and Petitions concerning the disordered Estaite of the Reformed Kirke within this Realme of Seotland, presented vpon the 29 of Maij, 1633, by me, Master Thomas Hogge, Minister of the Euangell, in my auen name, and in name of others of the ministrie lykwayes greiued, to Sr John Hay, Clerck of Register, to be presented by him to such as ought, according to the order appoynted, to consider them, that thereafter they may be presented to his Maiesty and Estaites, wieh wer to be assembled at this ensewing parliament.

The opportunity of this solemne meitting of your gracious Maiesty, and the honourable Estaits conveined in this heighe courte of parliament, and the concience of our deutey to God and the reformed kirk within this realme of Scotland, quher wee serue by our ministerey, constrains ws to present, in all humility, to your heighnes and estaites presently assembled, thosse our just griuances and reasonable petitions following:

First, Albeit, vote in parliament was not absolutely granted to ministers, prowydit to praelaies, bot only wpon suche eonditions as his heighnes, of happy memorie, and the general assemblies of the kirke should agree vpon, wieh is euident by the remitt and prouision expressed in the acte of parliament holdin at Edinbrughe, in December, 1597; and albeit the maner of ther election and admission to the offee of commissionarey, and the particular conditions and eautions to be observed by ministers votting in parliament, in name of the kirke, after long disputation wer aggreid vpon by his Maiesty present in persone, and the generall assembly, and wer appoynted by them to be insert in the bodey of the acte of parliament, wieh was to be made concerning that purpois. Some ministers notwithstanding haue beine, and are admitted to vote in parliament in name of the kirke, als absolutely as if the acte of parliament did eonteine no suche reference; and as if his Maiesty, with the gen: assembly, had not aggreid wpon the maner of ther election or admission to the offee, or vpon aney limitations quherby the kirk hath sustained grate hurte and preiudice in her liberties and præulidges, and especially by ther frequent transgressing the first of the conditions, altho grounded wpon the wery law of nature and nations;—that nothings be proponid by them in parliament, counsell or conuention in name of the kirke, without expresse warrant and direetion from the kirke, vnder the paine of deposition from ther offee; nather shall they keepe silence nor consent to the said conuentions to aney thing that may be præiudiciall to the libertie and weell of the kirk, vnder the said paine.

And the second, that they shall be bound at eurey gen: assembly, to giue a compte anent the discharging of their commissione, since the assemblee præceeding, and shall submitt theinselues to the censure, and stand to ther determinatione quhatsoeuer, without appellatione, and shall seike and obtaine ratificatione of ther doinges at the said assembly, vnder the paine of infamie and excommunicatione.

Therfor, our humble supplication is, that the executione of the actes of parliament, off materes belonging to the kirke, to wieh they haue wotted in name of [the] kirke, without aney authority or allowance of the generall assemblies of the kirke, be suspendit till that the kirke be hard; and that in tyme coming ministers haue no otherwayes vote in parliament, bot according to the prouision of the acte of parliament, and the order of ther entrie to the offee of that commissionarey and limitation forsaid, aggreid one, as said is.

2. Seinge ratifications of actes and eonstitutions of the kirke, cannot be construed to be a benefitt or fauor to the kirke, wilesse the ratifications passe according to the meining of the kirke, and the tenor of the saides actes and constitutions, without omission, addition or alteration of clausses, artickells or wordes of importance; and that in the ratificatione of the acte of the assembly holdin at Glasgow in A° 1610, wieh past in parliament haldin at Edinbrughe, 1612, vnder the name of explanacione of sundrie clausses and artickells, wer omitted out of the same.

At the subiection of bishopes in all thinges concerning ther lyffe, conversatione, office and benefice to the censure of the gen: assembly;

The censure of bishopes, in caisse they stay the censure of excommunicatione;

The continuing of the exereisse of doctrine weeiklie;

The necessity of the testificat, and assistance of the ministrie of the boundes, for the admission of ministers, and other clauses and artickells are addit and insert, as the different degrees of archbishops and bishopes;

The pouer of giuing colation of benefices granted to bishopes;

The disposing of benefices fallinge in ther handes jure deuoluto;

The appoynting of moderators in diocesian synodes, in caisse of ther absence, and some wordes of the othe are changed. By all wieh omissions, additions and alterations, the kirk hathe sustained, and doeth susteine, grate hurte in her jurisdictione and discipline. Our humble desyre therfor is, that the kirke may be liberat from the preiudice of those omissions, additions and alterations of the acte forsaide.

3. Notwithstanding the generall assembleyes haue beine holdin from the tyme of reformation, till the zeire 1603, at least once in the zeire or oftner, pro re nata; prouineciall synods tuisse in the zeire; weekly meittings for exereisses and presbetries, eurey weeke, for matters to be treated in them respectiue, and ther liberties wer ratified in parliament in A° 1592, and by that, as a most pouerfull meine, blissed be God, peace and purity of religion wer maintened; and in the assembly holdin at Glasgow, 1610, quhen commissioners, votters in parliament prowidit to praelacies, wer made lyable to the censures of the generall assembley, it was aeknowledged, that the necessity of the kirke craued that ther should be zeirlic generall assemblees, and the ministers wer then assured, that liberty wold be granted vpon ther requyste, quherby they wer induced to condescend so far to the acte then made as they did; wiche acte also beareth in the werrey entrey thereof, a requyste to his Maiestie, that generall assemblees may be holdin, in all tymes coming, once in the zeire, or precisely at a sett and certaine tyme; neuerthelesse the wounted libertie of holding general assemblees is suppressed; the order of the prouineciall synods confoundit; presbetries in a grate pairt disordered and neglected, quherby diuisions haue entred into the kirke; ministers are become negligent of their eallings, and scandalous in ther liues; the godlie are heartily greiued, the weake are scandalized; erroneous doctrine is deliured in kirkes and scooles without controulment; the commissioners votters in parliament lay untrayed and vnecensured; and atheisme and poprie ineresse. Our humble desyre is, therfor, that the actes of parliament made in fauors of the assemblees of the kirke, and espeecially the acte of parliament made at Edinbrughe in Junij, 1592, be rewissed and ratified.

4. Notwithstanding the obseruatione of faestiuall dayes, priuat baptisme, priuat communion, Episcopall confirmatione of echildren, haue beine reiceted by this our reformed kirke, since the begning of the reformation, and it hath beine declared by acte of parliament, in the zeire 1567, that such onlie wer to be aeknowledged members of this reformed kirke, as did partiepat of the sacraments as they wer then rightly ministred, wiche was without kneeling in the acte of receauing the sacramentall eliments of the supper, or immediat dispensing of the same to eurey communicant by the minister; and that it was statute and ordained, iu the same parliament, that all Kings should giue ther othe at ther coronation, to mainteine the religion then professed, and that forme of miustratione of the sacraments wiche then was wssed. Neuerthelesse, pastors and people adhearung to the former professione and practisse, are nicknamed Puritans, and threttued not only without aney good warrant, bot besyde the tenor of the acte of Perth assemblee, wiche contineth no stricke iunietion, and contrarey to the meining of the wotters, and to the proceedings of that assemblee, wher it was professed that non should be pressed with obedience to the acte.

Therfor, wee humble intreat, that by ratification of the actes of parliament made befor that assemblee, and by suche wayes as shall seime good to your gracious Maiesty, and honourable estaites assembled, your Maiesties good people, pastors, and professors, may bothe be purged from suche asspersiones, and may be freed from all dangers and feares wiche may occurre by oecasion of that acte of Perth.

5. Albeit it be determined by the geuerall assemblees of this our reformed kirke quhat othes ministers should take, at the tyme of ther admissiue or ordination, zet ther is a new forme of othe dewised and wrged by the admitters, or ordainers wpon intrants to the ministrie, togider with subscriptione to certaine artickells dewysed by them, without direction or warrant from aney assemblee of the kirke, zea, or acte of parliament; quherby the entrey to the ministrie is shutte vpon the best qualified, and others lesse able are obruded vpon the people, to ther grate greiffe and hazard of ther soules. Our humble petition therfor is, that suche othes and subscriptiones, wrged vpon ministers at ther entrey ore transportation, be discharged.

6. Notwithstanding ther be constitutions of the kirke, and lawes of the countrie for censuring of ministers befor the ordinarey iudicatories ecclesiasticall, zet contrarie to that order, ministers are suspedit, silenced and depriued, and that for matters mearlie ecclesiasticall, befor wther iudicatories wiche are not established by the authoritic or order of the countrie and kirke. Therfor, our humble petition is, that ministers deseruing censure, be no wtherwayes censured then the order of the kirke doeth preserue, and that such as are otherwayes displaced, be suffred to serue in the ministrie as off befor.

The presenter attendit in Edinbrughe, to compeire, if neid wer, befor such as wer to conweene to consider the artickells and petitions wiche wer giuen in to the Clerke Register; but ther no apperance of aney such cenwentione; the ministers therfor directed the said Mr Thomas Hogge to present the supplicatione following to his Maiesty, wiche he did at Dalkeith eastle, wpon the 15 day of Junij; that same day his Maiesty was [to] make his entrey into the eithey of Edinbrughe. The petitione was thus:—

This happy oecasion, with stronge desyres longe waited for by your Maiesties most humble and louing subiects, the pastors and professors of the reformed religion, within this your Maiesties kingdome of Scotland. The grate fame wiche haue oftin filled our eares of your Maiesties most pious and princely inclination to religion and richteousnesse, quhen this kirke and kingdome, from ther singular intresse in your Maiesties birth and baptisme, haue resone at this tyme to looke for a comfortable iufluenee; the bodey of this kingdome ioyuing in hearte with ws, and onlie waiting for the least word from your Maiesties mouthe; the conscience wiche we haue, and wiche wee trust is maifest to all men, that wee ar seeking nather riches nor honor to ourselues, bot that the soume and substance of our desyres is, to procure the advancement of the kingdome of Jesus Christe, and to see your Ma<sup>ties</sup> flourishing estait in your kingdome; all these and cache of them moue ws to intreat, in all humility, your gracious Maiestie to be fauorable to our petitions, wiche we haue deliuered to the Clerke of Register, to be presented to your Maiesty and estaites of the approaching parliament, that they may be considered and receave a gracious anssuer.

His Maiesty read this petition at lenth, zet ther was no more hard of ther griuaneces, atlier among the Lordes of the artickells, or in opin parliament, (quher nothing cometh in votting bot that wiche first must passe the Lordes of the artickells,) and vsually quhat passes throughe ther handes, is concludit by the quole estaites in publik. Not only wer the griuaneces of the miuisters suppressed, bot lykwayes all former actes concerning the complained offe corruptions in the kirke wer ratified. Howbeit, it was notoriously known, that most of these actes had wrought grate disturbance in this kirke. And now the actes of this parliament (as I hane formerly shoven,) layed the fundatione of ane irreconcilable schisime, and proued afterwarde the ruine bothe of King and bishopes.*

2. Letter from the King to Spottiswood, Archbishop of St Andrew's, Lord Chancellor of Scotland, and Chancellor in Council and Session.†

Right Reuerend Father in God, &c. quher as, since our entrie to the crowne, especially since our laite being in that kingdome, wee haue diuersse tymes recommendit to the archbischopes and bishopes ther, the publishing of ane publicke forme of seruice in the worschipe of God, quhilke wee wold haue vniformally obserued theriu, and the same being now coudescendit wpon, that wee doubt not bot all our subiects, both clergie and others, will receaue the samen with suche reuerence as aperteinethe; zet

* Balfour, vol. ii., p. 207.—Although this document be the first ostensible indication of a movement on the part of the Churchmen with respect to the state of the form of Government, subsequently to the time which we have adopted as the commencement of these collections, yet several years sooner, there were various intimations of King Charles's views, and of the opposition they were likely to encounter. Spottiswood had in 1624 sent a memorial to King James, recommending the introduction of the English Church forms, canons, &c. This motion, however, the King had not the courage to adopt. In April 1625, King Charles wrote to Spottiswood that he was resolved to enforce all the laws of the former reign, in reference to Church matters. In August following, he issued a proclamation for the enforcement of the Perth Articles. (Wodrow's Life of Spottiswood, p. 12.) On 12th July 1626, he gave instructions (Balfour, vol. ii., p. 142,) not to enforce these articles against ministers who had been admitted prior to the Assembly 1618, and that such as had been ousted for nonconformity should be reponed on conditions; but conformity was to be enforced on all who had entered after the Perth Assembly. The bishops disliked this, and clamoured for conformity. On 8th February and 3d May 1627, (Balfour, vol. ii., p. 125, 126,) the King agreed to enforce it against Papists, but rebuked the Prelates for want of charity to their brethren; and, indeed, from a paper of Spottiswood on the state of the Church as to conformity, it appears that the Perth Articles were in very rare observance, and some of them not at all. In 1630 the King sent a letter to Spottiswood, intimating that the whole order of the English Church should be adopted in Scotland. In May 1631, the King sent orders for a meeting of bishops and subservient ministers, to advise as to the introduction of organs, surplices, a service book, and King James's own translation of Psalms. An organ, &c. were introduced into the Chapel Royal; (Baillie's M.S., p. 3, Row 272,) and considerable uneasiness created by these innovations. And when the petition from the clergy was presented to the King in 1633 at Dalkeith, the day before he entered Edinburgh, the King answered Rothes sternly—"No more of this, I command you!" From this it is evident that the King was inflexibly bent on enforcing the Episcopalian formularies and rites. This is more fully illustrated in the following documents, which are arranged in chronological order from 1636 down to the end of the year 1638. Vide, also, Aiton's Life of Henderson, p. 125, et sequen, and authorities.

The 3 ministers that wer charged with these letters, wer Mr Alexander Hendersone, minister of Leuchers; Mr James Bruce, minister at Kingesbarnnes; and Mr George Hamilton, minister at Newbirne. They for themselues, and in name of the remanent ministers of the kingdome, did suplicat, in all humility, the Lordes to grant to them a suspesione of the said charge, for these followinge reasons:—

First, Because the said service booke is not warranted by the authority of the genrall assemblies, wich is the representatiue kirke of this kingdome, and hath euer since the reformatione giuen directione in matters of Gods worschipe, nor be aney acte of parliament (wich in thinges of this kynd) hath euer beine thought necessarye by his Majesty and estaites.

Secondlie, Because the liberties of the trew kirke, and the forme of worschipe and religion reaceued at the reformatione, and vniuersally practised sinsyne, is varranted by actes of genrall assemblies, and diuersse actes of parliament, 1567, and of the lait parliament, 1633.

Thridlie, The kirke of Scotland is ane independent kirke, and her auen pastors should be most able to decerne and directe quhat doe best seime our mesour of reformatione, and quhat may serue most for the good of the people.

Fourtli, It is not wknouen to your Lordschipes, quhat disputing, diuisione and trouble, hath beine in this kirke aboute some few of the maney ceremonies contined in this booke, wich being examined, as wee shall be redey at a competent tyme assigned by your Lordschipes to shaw, will be found to depart far from the worschipe and reformatione of this kirke, and in poyntes most materiall for the kirke of Rome, for hir hierarchie and doctrine, superstitione and idolatrie in worschipe, tyranie in gouernment and in wickednesse, eurey way als antechristian now, as quhen it cam out of her.

Fyftlie, The people hath bcine otherwayes taught by ws, and our prædicessors in our places, euer since the reformatione; and so it lickly they will be found, vnwilling to the change quheueuer they be assayed, euen quhen ther pastors are willinge, in respecte quherof the saides letters of horneinge, hail effecte and executione, aught to be simpliciter suspendit in tyme coming.

And this wee fand to be ane matter of so heighe ane consequences, in respecte of the genrall grudge and murmur of all sortes of people, for wring of the practisse of the service booke, as the lyke has not beine hard at aney tyme; zet wee dar not delay it, nor conceile it from your Maiesty, not knowing quherwnto the samen may tend, and quhat effecte it may produce. Nather dare wee diue aney furder in the trayell of the cause of the saides feares and remedies thereof, vntill it shall pleis your Maiestie, in the deipnes of your judgement and royall wnderstanding, to preseryue the way, after heiring of all particulars, ather by calling some of your Ma<sup>ties</sup> counsaile, or Lordes of the clergie, to your Maiesties auen presence; to the effecte that ane course may be takin for pacement the present commotione, and establishing the said service booke, or otherwayes by such meines as your Maiesty, in your auen grate wisdom, shall thinke fitting. MY NOBLE LORD,

At the meeting of the Council here at Edinburgh the 23th of this instant, we found so much appearance of Trouble and Stir like to be amongst people of all qualities and degrees, upon the urging of this new Service-book, that we durst no longer forbear to acquaint his Majesty therewith, and humbly to represent both our Fears, and our opinions how to prevent the Danger; at least our opinions of the way we would wish His Majesty should keep therein, or before he determine what course to take for pacifying of the present Stir, or establishing of the Service-book hereafter; wherein all I will presume to adde to what the Council hath written, is to intreat your Lordship to recommend to his Majesty, that if he be pleased to call to himself any of the Clergie, he would make choice of some of them, of the wisest and most calm Dispositions; for certainly some of the leading men amongst them are so violent and forward, and many times without ground or true judgment, that their want of right understanding how to compass business of this nature and weight, does often breed us many difficulties, and their rash and foolish Expressions, and sometimes Attempts, both in private and publick, have bred such a Fear and Jealousie in the hearts of many, that I am confident, if His Majesty were rightly informed thereof, he would blame them, and justly think, that from this and the like proceedings arises the ground of many Mistakes amongst us. They complain that the former Ages have taken from them many of their Rents, have robb'd them of their Power and Jurisdiction, and even in the Church itself and Form of Gods Worship have brought in some things that require Reformation: but as the deeds of these Times, at least the beginnings thereof, were full of notour and tumultuary disorder, so shall I never think it will prove for the good either of Gods Service or the Kings, by the same ways or manner of dealing to press to rectifie what was then done amiss. We have a wise and judicious Master, who will (nor can) urge nothing in this poor Kingdom, which may not be brought to pass to his contentment: and I am most confident, if he shall be graciously pleased to hear his faithful Servants inform him of the Truth, he shall direct that which is just and right; and with the same assurance I dare promise him Obedience. The interest your Lordship has in this poor Kingdom, but more particularly the duty you owe to His Majesty, and the true respect I know you have ever carried to His Majesties Honour, and the good of his Service, makes me thus bold to acquaint your Lordship with this business, which in good faith is by the folly and misgovernment of Apud Edinburgh 17. Octob. 1637.

Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Kings Majestic, upon divers good respects and considerations, to give warrant and direction to the Lords of his Majesties Privie Councell, for dissolving the meeting of this Councell day, in so farre as concerneth matters of the Church: Aud that everie one that hath come to attend this businesse, repaire to their owne dwellings, except such persons as shall make knowne to the said Lords of Councell just cause of stay for their particular affaires; Therefore the said Lords, according to his Majesties speciall warrant and directioun sent unto them, have dissolved, and by the tenour hereof doe dissolve the meeting of this Councell day, in so farre as concernes the businesse above written; And ordaines a Maissar of Councell to passe to the Mercate Crosse of Edinburgh, and to make publication hereof; And to command everie one that hath come hither to attend this businesse, to repaire home to their owne dwellings within 24. houres after the publication hereof, except such persons as shall make knowne to the said Lords just cause of their further particular affaires in manner aforesaid, under the paine of Rebellion, and putting of them to the Horne; with certification to them, that if they faile they shall be denounced Rebels, and be put to the Horn, and all their moveable goods escheat to his Majesties use.

Apud Edinburgh 17. Octob. 1637.

Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Kings Majestic, upon divers great and good considerations knowne to his Majestic, to remove his Councell and Session from the Citie of Edinburgh to the Burgh of Dundie: And whereas it is inconvenient at this time to remove it so farre, his Majestic is graciously pleased that this next Session shall be holden at the Burgh of Linlithgow, and the next after the ordinarie vacants at the Burgh of Dundie: And there to remaine during his Majesties pleasure: And therefore the said Lords, according to his Majesties speciall direction, ordaines Maissars or Officers of Armes to passe and make publication hereof to all his Majesties good subjects by open Proclamation at all places needfull, whereby they can pretend no ignorance thereof, but may prepare themselves to attend at Linlithgow and Dundie accordingly.

Apud Ediuburgh, Octob. 17. 1637.

Forasmuch as the Kings Majestic is credibly informed, that there is a certaine booke intituled, A Dispute against the English Popish Ceremonies, obruded upon the Kirke of Scotland, and hath bene sent abroad and dispersed in this Kingdome, purposely to stirre the hearts and affections of the subjects from their due obedience and allegence: And therefore it hath pleased his Majestic to give order and direction to his Councell, that diligent inquire and search be made for the said booke; And for this effect the said Lords ordaines letters to be directed to make intimation and publication to all his Majesties subjects, that such of them as have anie of the said bookes, bring in the same to the Lords of his Majesties Privie Councell betwixt the date of this Proclamation and the day of

And the said bookes being brought in, that the same be publicly burnt, certifying all his Majesties subjects if any of those bookes shall be found or knowne to have beene with any of them after the time aforesaid, that they shall incurre the like censure and punishment as the Authour may be found to deserve for any thing contained in that booke.

At Haly-rud-house the 18 of Octob. 1637.

Forasmuch as a number of the Lords of his Majesties Privie Councell, as likewise the Towne Councell of Edinburgh, being this day conveened in their severall Judicatories for his Majesties speciall affaires and service, they were most rudely interrupted in the course of their proceedings, by a tumultuous gathering of the promiscuous and vulgar multitude, by whom his Majesties Councell and servants in an open way was shamefully environed: Which being a matter verie disgracefull to his Majesties Authority and lawfull Government, and which in the consequence thereof may produce dangerous effects, if the like bee not prevented in the time to come ; Therefore the Lords of Secret Councell, according to the dutie of their place and charge incumbent unto them, Ordaines a Maissar of Councell to passe to the Mercate Crosse of Edinburgh, and there by open Proclamation to discharge all publike gatherings and convocations of his Majesties subjects within the Citie of Ediuburgh, and upon the streets thereof ; As likewise all private meetings tending to faction and tumult : And in his Majesties name and authoritie, to command and charge all his Majesties lieges and inhabitants within the said Citie, to containe themselves in peace and quietnesse ; And for that effect to keepe their houses, except when their lawfull businesse doth otherwise call them, Under all highest paine and charge that by rigour of law can be inflicted upon the contraveeners of the premises in manner above expressed.

20. *Petition of the Men, Women, Children, and Servants of Edinburgh to the Lord Chancellor, against the Service Book.**

MY LORD CHANCELLOUR,

Unto your Lordship humbly shewes, we, men, women, and children, and servants, indwellers within the Burgh of Edinburgh : That whereas we being urged with this Book of Service, and having considered the same, We finde many things therein so farre different from that forme of Gods publike worship universally received and professed withiu this Kingdome : And we Burgesses, being at our entrie and admission deeply sworne for the maintenance thereof, that now makes our hearts to tremble, and our weak consciences will not suffer us to imbrace and practise this urged Service : We have this long time past, winked at some former alterations, being put in hope that no further novations should follow. But now we being oppressed, with our just feares to see our selves deprived of that libertie in serving God which ever hath bene approved by Church and Kingdome : In place whereof we are now like to be constrained to imbrace another, which hath neither beene agitated nor received either by generall Assemblie or Parliament : In such extremitie we are most humbly to supplicate your Lordship to consider our present estate, and that this businesse is a matter of so great weight and consequence as should not appeare to bee a needlesse uoyse of simple women, but it is the absolute desire of all our hearts for preservation of true Religion amongst us, which is dearer to us than either estate or life : And therefore we do humbly crave, that as the rest of the Kingdome, so we may have a time to advise, and that your Lordship may find out some way whereby we may be delivered from the feare of this and all other innovations of this kinde, and have the happinesse to enjoy the true Religion, as it hath bene by the great mercie of God reformed in this land, and authorised by his Majestie, who may long and prosperously Reigue over us : And your Lordships answer.

21. Petition of the Noblemen, Gentry, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons to the Council against the Service Book and Book of Canons. †

MY LORDS OF SECRET COUNCELL,

Unto your Lordships humbly shews ; We Noblemen, Barons, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons ;

That whereas we were in humble and quiet manner attending a gracious answer of our former supplications against the Service Book imposed upon us, and readie to shew the great inconveniences which upon the introduction thereof must ensue, we are, without any knowne desert, farre by our expectation, surprised and charged by publike Proclamation to depart out of the town within twentie foure houres thereafter, under paine of Rebellion ; by which peremptorie and unusuall charge, our feares of a more severe and strict course of proceeding are augmented, and course of our supplication interrupted : wherefore we are constrained, out of the deep grieffe of our hearts, humbly to remonstrate, that whereas the Arch-bishops and Bishops of this Realme, being intrusted by his Majestic with the government of the affaires of the Church of Scotland, have drawne up and set forth, and caused to be drawne up and set forth, and injoynd upon the subjects two Books ; In the one whereof, called the Book of Common prayer, not onely are sowne the seeds of divers Superstitions, Idolatrie, and false doctrine, contrarie to the true Religion established within this Realme by divers Acts of Parliament ; But also the Service Booke of England is abused, especially in the matter of Communion, by additions, subtractions, interchanging of words and sentences, falsifying of titles, and misplacing of Collets, to the disadvantage of Reformation, as the Romish Masse is, in the more substantiall points, made up therein, as we offer to instruct in time and place convenient, quite contrarie unto and for reversing the gracious intention of the blessed Reformers of Religion in England. In the other book called Canons and Constitutions for the government of the Church of Scotland, they have ordained, That whosoever shall affirme that the forme of worship inserted in the Booke of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments, whereof heretofore and now we most justly complaine, doth containe any thing repugnant to the Scriptures, or are corrupt, superstitious, or unlawfull in the service and worship of God, shall be excommunicated, and not be restored but by the Bishop of the place, or Arch-bishop of the Province, after his repentance and publike revocation of this his wicked errour ; Besides one hundred Canons moe, many of them tending to the reviving and fostering of abolished superstitions and errours, and to the overthrow of our Church Discipline established by Acts of Parliament, opening a doore for what further invention of Religion they please to make, and stopping the way which Law before did allow unto us for suppressing of errour and superstition ; And ordaining, That where in any of the Canons there is no penalty expressly set down, the punishment shall be arbitrary as the Bishop shall think fittest : All which Canons were never seen nor allowed in any Generall Assembly, but are imposed contrary to order of law, appointed in this Realm for establishing Constitutions Ecclesiasticall ; unto which two books, the foresaid Prelates have under trust procured his Majesties Royall hand and Letters Patents, for pressing the same upon his loyall subjects, and are the Contrivers and Devisers of the same, as doth clearly appeare by the Frontispice of the Book of Common Prayer, and have begun to urge the acceptaunce of the same, not onely by injunctions given in Provinciall Assemblies, but also by open Proclamation and charge of Horning, whereby we are driven in such straites as we must either by Processe of Excommunication and Horning suffer the ruine of our estates and fortunes, or else by breach of our Covenant with God, and forsaking the way of true

Religiou, fall under the wrath of God, which unto us is more grievous then death. Wherefore we being perswaded that these their proceedings are contrary to our gracious Sovereign his pious inteu- tion, who out of his zeale and Princely care of the preservation of true Religion established in this his ancient Kingdome, hath ratified the same in his Highnesse Parliament 1633. And so his Majestie to be highly wronged by the said Prelates, who have so farre abused their credit with so good a King, as thus to insnare his subjects, rend our Church, undermine Religion in Doctrine, Sacraments, and Discipline, move discontent between the King and his subjects, and discord between subject and subject, contrary to severall Acts of Parliament: We out of bound duty to God, our King and native Countrey, complain of the foresaid Prelates, humbly craving, that this matter may be put to tryall, and these our parties taken order with according to the lawes of the Realm; And that they be not suffered to sit any more as Judges, untill the cause be tryed and decided according to Justice. And if this shall seeme to bee to you a matter of higher importance then you will condescend unto, before his Majesty bee acquainted therewith, Then wee humbly supplicate that this our grievance and complaint may be fully represented to his Majestie, That from the influence of his Gracious Sovereignty and Justice these wrongs may be redressed, and we have the happinesse to enjoy the Religiou, as it hath bene reformed in this Land.

23. Proclamation at Linlithgow.†

Apud Linlithgow septimo Decemb. 1637.

For as much as the Kings Majestie, having secne the Petition presented to the Lords of his Majesties priue Council, and by them sent up to his Majestie concerning the Service Book, determined to have taken the same into his Royall consideration, and to have given his gracious answer there- ant with all conveniencie: Like as his Majestie by his letters to his Council of the date of the ninth of October last, did signifie his gracious resolution to the effect aforesaid. But since that time, his Majestie finding (farre contrarie to his expectation) that such disorderly, tumultuous and barbarous insolencies have bene committed within the Citie of Edinburgh upon the eighteenth of October last, to the great contempt of his Majesties Royall authoritie, by abusing his Majesties Councillors and Officers of State, with others bearing charge and authoritie under his Majestie within the said Citie: His Majestie in a just resentment of that foule indignitie, (wherein his Majesties Honour did so much suffer) hath bene moved to delay the signification of his Majesties gracious intention, in giving to his subjects such satisfactorie answers to their Petitions as in equitie might have been expected from so just and religious a Prince; But yet his Majestie being unwilling that his Loyall and faithfull subjects should be possessed with ground- lesse and unnecessary doubts and feares, His Majestie is pleased out of his goodnesse to declare, like as by these presents hee declarereth, That as he abhorreth all Superstition of Poperie, so he will be most carefull that nothing be allowed within his Majesties Dominions, but that which shall tend to the advancement of the true Religion, as it is presently professed within his most ancient Kingdome of Scotland: And that nothing is or was intended to be done therein against the laudable lawes of this his Majesties native Kingdome. And ordaineth publication to bee made hereof in forunc as aforesaid.

24. *Speech of Lord Lowden to the Privy Council.**

After my Lord had, in all humility and submissions, craued the Lordes of his Maiesties priue counsaill, ther audience and patience, in respecte diuerse counsellors of the best sorte wer ther present, quho wer not acquainted with the progresse of the bussines; he declared the trew cause of the compirance of so grate a number of the nobility, gentry, ministrie, and comons of all sortes ther, thus:—

My Lordes, (sayes he,) the subiecte of our complaint aud coutrawersie is religione, and lawes of the kingdome, wpon wiche dependethe bothe the weillfaire of the churche and comonwealthe, our condition of lyffe, our libertey and fortouue in this transitorye worlde, and the æternall happines in the lyffe to come; our deutie to Almighty God, the supreme King of Kinges, with our alledgeance and deutie to our soueraigne lord and master, the King's Maiestie.

The matter of our regrate and griuance is, the alteratione of religione, in publicke forme of Gods worschipe, the most solemne action of ws all cretures in earth, wich by the innouations complained off, is changed in doctrine, sacramentes and discipline, without and contrair to seuerall actes of parliameut, and actes of nationall assemblies.

The innouations introduced, are chifly the seruice booke, the booke of canons and constitutis, and the heighe commission; in wich seruice booke are sowin the seedes of diuersse superstitions and heresies, that the Roman messe, in maney and substantiall poyntes, is made wpe therin; quhilke seruice booke and other nouations haue uather warrant of general assembly, nor of acte of parliament, bot contrarey to bothe, are iutroduced be the bishopes, quho haue caused sett fourthe ane booke of caouns, quherin it is ordained, quhosoeuer shall affirme that the seruice booke containes aney thing erronious, shall be excommunicat; wich booke is the wsher and forrunner of the seruice booke printed thereafter, quhilk by the bischopes conwayence was ratified by acte of parliament, and confirmed longe befor it was seine and printed, the bischopes for the tyme making wpe the counsaile, no nobleman being present ther quho did oppose it; and thereafter by publick proclamacione cam fourth, chargeing all his Ma<sup>ties</sup> subiects to conforme therto, as the onlie forme of Godes publicke worschipe to be used within the kingdome. After this the booke was printed, and as the booke was redcy for the presse, letters of horning wer directed to charge the minister to bay the saides bookes for the wsse of the parochie, in Julij, wich moued them to giue in a bill of suspentione in Aguste following. The subiects finding themselues in the lyke danger, wnder one of tuo extremities, one being feared to be declared rebels and excommunicat one the one hand, ore forsaking the way of trew religione, one the other hand, contrair to the sournie couenant with them, could find out no better meine, be ane legall and submissiue way, theu to supplicat the Lordes of secret counsaile. Albeit thir innouations, by all thosse quho takes Gods worschipe to harte, doe wnderstand they wer contrynctt to tend to the wtter ouerthrow of the trew religione, and lafull liberty of the subiectes. Zet to eschew the imputacione of factious conuocacions and tumultous dealling, and to testifie ther loyalty to the King, they resolved to proccid in the most orderly way of supplicatting, by electinge one or tuo of the most grauest ministers in each presbyterey, and one or tuo descritt gentlemen of each shyre, to prefer ther complaintes, remonstrances and griuances to the counsaile, by quhosse mediation the matter might be represented to the Kinges Maiestie, from quhosse justice, redresse was humble craued and expected; and supplications at diuersse dyctts, giuen in name of the nobility, gentlemen, burrowes, and ministers, to that effecte, as the petitions themselues, that wich was giuen in the 23 of September, and that wpon the 13 of October, doeth cleirly report. At quhilk tyme, by warrant, appeirantly procured by the bischopes from his Maiestie, our supplicaciones wer interrupted, and the counsaile at that tyme discharged to medle with churche bussines, and the supplicants to be discharged off the touue within 24 houres, wnder the paine of rebellione, wich feared them to giue in that supplicacione of the 13 of October, containing ane complaint aganist the bischopes, as coutriuers, mantainers and vrgers of the booke. And the supplicants taking conueniency of tyme, of the doune sitting of the sessione againe in Edinbrughe, the 15 of Nouenber, commissioners wer chosen to attend his Maiesties ansuer, and doe quhat ells might condee for furthering of ther lawfull desyres. The Earle of Roxbrughe being thereafter sent from courte, did conweine the counsaile at Linlithgow, the 7 of September, quher ther was ane declaratione for the King, by oppin proclamacione at the mercat crosse of Edinbrugh, shouing that the Kinges Maiestie doethe abhorre all superstitions of poprie, and violacione of the landable lawes of the kingdome; and the supplicants wer desyred by the Earle of Roxbrughe and Traquair, Thesaurer, not to appeire at Linlithgow, wnder promisse that ther supplicacione should be judicially hard in counsaile the next weeke thereafter, to the wich the counsaile was appointed to sitt at Dalkeithe; wher the commissioners and diuersse wther noblemen of good sorte, did attend the counsell to haue beine hard, bot wer postpouit till the 21 of December.

After this relatione, he subsumed wpon the proclamatiou, that thinges complined one wer superstitious, full of poprie and superstitione, and violacione of the lawes of the kingdome, quherwpon he groundit the supplicants confidence, to assist aganist the ciuells and the mantainers therof, seing his Maiestie, by proclamation, was cleired from authorizing the same.

After the forsaid relatione made by him, he presented a new bill, with a declinatour against the bischopes, and the double of the supplicacione presented the 23 of September, and 13 of October; and because no bischopes wer in the counsaile that day, some one quho remoued himselue befor the complainers cam in, he protested that the bischopes heir-after should not be permitted to sitt as ther iudges, wntill the cause was decydit, because they war parties, and albeit they be absent at this tyme, (said he,) zet they may be present at ane other tyme, and, possible both the most pairt of the counsaile and complainers shall be absent. The Chanceler with 6 or seuin other bischopes and eoram of the counsaile, may determine vpon our eausse and petitions, als weill as they passed ane acte of counsaile, for approuing the seruice booke befor it was ather printed or seine, which acte, wee persuade ourselues had neuer beine passed, if ather ther had beine a frequent counsaile, or if the bischopes had not beine prædominant ingredientes at that tyme.

After this, he said, our desyres tend to no other end bot the præseruation of trew religion, the saluatione of our soules, and the subiectes lawfull liberties; and quher wee craue the matter to be trayed, and the bischopes and prælats delinquent takin order with according to iustice, wee nather craue ther blood, nore harme to thir persones: bot that the abuses and wronges done by them may be trewlie remonstrat to his Maiesty, that after dew trayell of the wronges, such order may be takin as the ciuells may be remedit; and that the power wich they haue takin may be restrained, that the lyke ciuells may be preuented in tyme to come.

Londoun thus hauing endit his speach, Traquair, the Thesaurer, preceeding in counsaile, acknowledged the treuthe of the relatione and equity of the petition, and so remoued the parties complainers. It past to interloquitor, and thereafter in ane acte.

1637.—December 24.

25. *Act of Council.**

The Lordes of secrett counsaile, hauing heard and considered the tuo suplications and petitions giuen in by the noblemen, barrons, ministers and burgeses, and fuding the matter in them contained to be of that waight and importance, that they cannot determine therein wntill his Maiestie be acquainted with the same, and his royall pleasur returned theranent. Therfor, the saides Lordes, for ansuer to the tuo suplications and petitions, declared that they present the same to his Maiesties royall consideration, and that without preiudice of the declinator giuen in by the saides supplicants, quherwpon they shall be hard in tyme and place conuenient; and in the meane tyme shall receaue no præiudice: quherwpon the saides supplicants asked instruments.†

CHARLES by the grace God, King of great Britaine, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To Our Lovits, &c.

Our Sheriffes in that part conjunctly and severally, specially constituted, greeting. For as much as Wee out of Our Princely care of maintenance of the true Religion already professed, and for beating downe of all superstition, having ordained a Book of Common prayer to be compiled for the generall use and edification of Our subjects within Our ancient Kingdome of Scotland, the same was accordingly done: In the performing whereof, We took great care and paines; So as nothing past therein but what was seene and approved by Us, before the same was either divulged or printed, assuring all Our loving subjects, that not onely Our intention is, but even the verie Book will be a readie meanes to maintaine the true Religion already professed, and beat out all Superstition; Of which We in Our owne time do not doubt but in a faire course to satisfie Our good subjects. But having seene and considered some Petitions and Declarations given in to Our Councell against the said Book and late Canons of the Church, We find Our Royall Authority much injured thereby, both in the matter and in the carriage thereof; whereby We conceive these of Our Nobility, Gentrie, Burroughs, Ministers, and others, who kept and assisted these meetings and Convocations for contriving and forming the said Petitions, or who have subscribed the same, to deserve and bee liable to Our high censure, both in their persons and fortunes, as having conveyed themselves without either Our consent or authoritie; Yet because Wee believe that what they have done herein is out of a preposterous zeale, and not out of any disloyaltie or disaffection to Soveraigntie, We are graeciously pleased in so farre as concernes these meetings for consulting or subscribing of these Petitions, or presenting the same to any Judge or Judges in Our said Kingdome, to dispense therewith, and with what may bee their fault or errour therein, to all such as upon signification or declaration of Our pleasure shall retire themselves as becometh good and dutifull subjects: To which purpose Our will is, and We charge you straightly, and commands, that incontinent these Letters seene, you passe, and in Our name and authoritie make intimation hereof, to all Our lieges and subjects, by open Proclamation at all places needfull, wherethrough none pretend ignorance thereof; And therewith also, That you in Our name and authoritie discharge all such convocations and meetings in time comming, (f. 264,) and for the King's Confession, (f. 265,) with the general bond for maintenance of the true religion, (f. 266.) An Act ordaining the lieges to sign it, (f. 269,) 24 Sept. And further, that you command and charge all and sundrie Provosts, Bailiffes, and Magistrates within Burgh, That they and everie one of them have a speciall care and regard to see this Our Royall will and pleasure really and dutifully obeyed in all points; And that no violation thereof be suffered within their bounds, under all highest paine, crime, and offence that they may commit against Us in that behalfe. As also that you command and charge all and sundrie Noblemen, Barons, Ministers and Burrowes, who are not actual indwellers within this Our Burgh, and are not of the number of the Lords of our privie Councell and Session, and members thereof, and are already within this Our Burgh, that they, and everie one of them, remove themselves, and depart and passe forth of Our said Burgh, and returne not againe, without the warrant aforesaid, within six houres after the publication hereof, under the said paine of treason. And as concerning any Petitions that hereafter shall be given unto Us, upon this or any other subject, Wee are likewise pleased to declare, that We will not shut Our ears therefrom; so that neither the matter nor forme be prejudicial to Our Regall Authoritie. The which to do We commit to you, conjunctly and severally, Our full power by these Our Letters, delivering the same by you duely exeente and indorsed againe to the bearer. FOR GOD AND THE KING.

We Noblemen, Barons, Ministers, Burrowes, appointed to attend his Majesties answer to our humble Petition and complaint, and to preferre new grievances, and to do what else may lawfully conduce to our humble desires; That whereupon the 23. of September last, wee presented a Supplication to your Lordships, and another upon the 18. of October last, and also a new Bill relative to the former upon the 19. of December last, and did therein humbly remonstrate our just exceptions against the Service Book, and Book of Canons; and also against the Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdome, as the contrivers, maintainers, and urgers thereof, and against their sitting as our Judges untill the cause be decided; earnestly supplicating withall to bee freed and delivered from these and all other innovations of that kinde, introduced against the laudable Lawes of this Kingdome; as that of the High Commission, and other evils particularly mentioned, and generally contained in our foresaid supplications and complaints, and that this our partie delinquent against our Religion and Lawes may be taken order with, and these pressing grievances may be taken order with and redressed according to the Lawes of this Kingdome, as by our said supplications and complaints more largely doth appeare: With the which on the 19. of December last, we gave in a Declinator against the

Arch-bishops and Bishops as our parties, who by consequence could not be our Judges; whereupon your Lordships declared by your Act at Dalkeith the said 19. of December, that you would present our Petitions to his Majesties Royall consideration, and that without prejudice of the Declinator given in by us the said supplicants; whereupon we should be heard at place and time convenient, And in the mean time should receive no prejudice, as the said Act in it self beareth. And whereas we your Lordships supplicants with a great deale of patience, and hope also, grounded on sundry promises, were expecting an answer to these our humble desires, and having learned that upon some directions of His Majesties anent our supplications and complaint unto your Lordships of the Secret Councell, your Lordships admits to the consulting and judging anent our supplications, and His Majesties answere thereunto, the Archbishops and Bishops our direct parties, contrarie to our Declinator first propounded at Dalkeith, and now renewed at Sterling; and contrarie to your Lordships Act aforesaid at Dalkeith, and contrarie to our Religion and Lawes, and humble supplications. Therefore lest our silence be prejudiciall to this so important a cause, as concerns Gods glorie and worship, our Religion, Salvation, the Lawes and Liberties of this Kingdome, or derogatorie to the former supplications and complaints, or unanswerable to the trust of our Commission; out of our bound dutie to our God, our King and native Countrey, we were forced to take instruments in Notaries hands, of your Lordships refusall to admit our Declinator, or remove these our Parties, and to protest in manner following: First, That we may have our immediate recourse to our sacred Sovereign, to present our grievances, and in a legall way to prosecute the same before the ordinarie competent Judges, Civill or Ecclesiasticall, without any offence offered by us, or taken by your Lordships. Secondly, We protest that the said Archbishops and Bishops, our Parties complained upon, cannot be reputed or esteemed lawfull Judges to sit in any Judicatorie in this Kingdome, Civill or Ecclesiasticall, upon any of the supplicants, untill after lawfull tryall judicially they purge themselves of such crimes as we have already laid to their charge, offering to prove the same whensoever His Sacred Majestie shall please to give us audience. Thirdly, We protest that no Act nor Proclamation to follow thereupon, past, or to be past in Councell or out of Councell, in presence of the Archbishops and Bishops, whom we have already declined to be our Judges, shall any wayes be prejudiciall to us the supplicants, our persons, estates, lawfull meetings, proceedings, or pursuits. Fourthly, We protest that neither we nor any whose heart the Lord moveth to joine with us in these our supplications against the foresaid Innovations, shall incurre any danger, in life, lands, or any Politicall or Ecclesiasticall paines, for not observing such Acts, Bookes, Canons, Rites, Judicatories, Proclamations, introduced without or against the Acts of Generall Assemblies, or Aëts of Parliament, the Statutes of this Kingdome; But that it shall be lawfull for us or them to use our selves in matters of Religion of the externall worship of God and Policie of the Church, according to the word of God, and laudable Constitutions of this Church and Kingdome, conforme to His Majesties Declaration the ninth of December last. Fifthly, Seeing by the legall and submisive way of our former supplications, all who takes these Innovations to heart, have been kept calme and carried themselves in a quiet manuer, in hope of redresse; We protest, that if any inconvenience shall happen to fall out (which we pray the Lord to prevent) upon the pressing of any of the foresaid Innovations or evils, specially or generally contained in our former supplications and complaints, and upon your Lordships refusall to take order thereanent, the same be not imputed to us, who most humbly seeks all things to be reformed by an Order. Sixthly, We protest that these our requests, proceeding from conscience and a due respect to His Majesties honour, doe tend to no other end, but to the preservation of the true reformed Religion, the lawes and liberties of this His Majesties most ancient Kingdome, and satisfaction of our most humble desires contained in our supplication and complaint, according to his Majesties accustomed goodnesse and justice, from which we doe certainly expect that His Sacred Majestie will provide and grant such remedie to our just petitions and complaints, as may be expected from so gracious a King toward most loyall and dutifull subjects, calling for redresse of so pressing grievances, and praying to God that his Majestie may long and prosperously reigne over us.

Item, if his Maiestic (as God forbid) shall dislyke of quhat wee eonceaue to be most conducing to his Maiesties seruice and peace of the kingdome, you are to vrge by all the argumets you can, that his Maiestie doe not determine vpon aney other course, untill some at least of his counsaile from this be hard to giue the reasons of ther opinions; and in this caisse you are lykwayes to represent to his Maiesties consideratione, if it shall not be fitting and necessar to call for his informers, togider with some of his counsaile, that in his auen presence he may haue the reasons of both informations fully delated.

Item, you shall show to his Maiestie, that his counsaile, hauing takin to ther consideratione quhat furder was to be done, for compassing and settling the present combustion within the kingdome, and dissipatinge of the conuocations and gatheringes withiu the samen, seing that proclamations are alredey made and published, discharging all suche conuocations and vnlawful meittings, the (L's) after debaitting, findes they can doe no furder then is alredey done heirin, untill his Maiesties pleasur be returned to thir our humble remonstrances.

MOST SACRED SOVERAIGN,

Although the miserable Estate of this poor Kingdome will be sufficiently understood by Your Majesty from this Gentleman, Sir John Hamilton's Relation, yet we conceive our selves in a special manner bound and obliged to represent what we conceive does so nearly concern Your Majesties Honour and Service; and therefore give us leave truly and faithfully to tell Your Majesty, that since the last Proclamation, the fear of Innovation of Religion is so apprehended by all sorts of Subjects from all eorners of this Kingdome, that there is nothing to be seen here but a general Combustion, and all men strengthening themselves by subscribing of Bonds, and by all other means for resisting of that which they seem so much to fear. This is come to such a height, and daily like to increase more and more, that we see not a probability of Force or Power within this Kingdom to repress this Fury, except Your Maesty may be graciously pleased, by some Act of Your Own, to secure them of that which they seem so much to apprehend, by the inbringing of the Books of Common-Prayer and Canons.

The way which the Subjects have taken and daily go about in the prosecution of their business is inexcusable, and no ways agreeable to the duty of good Subjects, but Your Majesty is wisely to consider what is the best and safest course for Your Own Honour and Peace of Your Government; and since Religion is pretended to be the cause of all, if it shall not be a safe course to free them at this time of Fears, by which means the wiser sort will be satisfied, and so Your Majesty enabled with less pain or trouble to overtake the Insolencies of any, who shall be found to have kicked against Authority.

We are the rather moved at this time to be of this opinion, that having found it the opinion, not only of those to whom Your Majesty wrote in particular, (except of the Marquis of Huntley, who as yet is not come from the north:) but of most of the Noblemen, and men of respect within this Kingdom: we find few or none well-satisfied with this business, or to whom we dare advise Your Majesty to trust in the prosecution thereof; and if any have, or shall inform Your Majesty to the contrary, give us leave humbly to intreat Your Majesty, to be pleased to call them before Your Self, that in our presence You may hear the reasons of both Informations fully debated. So praying God to grant Your Majesty many happy days, and full contentment in all your Royal designs, we humbly take our leave, and rest,

Your Majesties humble Servants, and faithful Subjects, Traquair.
Roxburgh.

OUR VERY HONOURABLE GOOD LORD,

We finding the Subjects Fears and Stirs to increase since the last Proclamation, did appoint by the Lord Chancellour, and other Lords of the Clergy, their Special Advice, a solemn Dyet of Coueile to be kept at Sterlin, on the first of March, where the Lord Chancellour, and other Lords of the Clergie, promised to be present to consult upon the growth of the publick Evils and Remedies thereof, for His Majesties Honour and Peace of this Country; but haviug met at Sterlin, we received a Letter of Excuse from the Lord Chancellour, and were forced to proceed without him, and the other Lords of the Clergy; where, after we had spent four days in advising upon the said Evils and Remedies of them, we resolved in eud to direct Sir John Hamilton of Orbiston, one of our number, with a Letter of Trust from us to His Majesty, to whom we have imparted our Opinions, and Reasons of the said publick Ills, and Remedies of the same, to be represented to His Sacred Majesty; and because the business is so weighty and important, that in our opinion the Peace of the Country was never in so great hazard, we have thought fit to recommend the business to your Lordships consideration, that after your Lordship has heard the Justice-Clerk therein, your Lordship according to your great interest in His Majesties Honour and Peace of the Kingdom, may

31. *Demands by the Covenanters given to Traquaire.**

First, It is certaine that the present not wring or present discharging of the service booke, the booke of canons, and off the last heighe comission, cannot satisfie our supplications, complaints, protestatione and cofession, cannot remeed the present euills, nor prewine the lyke in time coming.

2. Experience showeth the necessity, that this kirke must be assured, by anc acte of free generall assembly, and of ane parliament, that shoe shall neuer be vrgeid heirafter with aney alteratione in poyntes of doctrine, diwyne worschipe, or churche gouernment, bot that wich shall be first aggredid vpon in a lawfull and free generall assembly, wich is order appoyuted be God, obserued and prescrib- ed in thls churche since the reformatione, and the principall meine to giue satisfacione to all mens myndes in matters of religion, as far so as is possible.

3. Pastors and professors can neuer be free of troubles or feares, so long as the terror of the heigh eommission standes ouer ther heades, wich cannot be limited, bot quyte discharged.

First, Becausse it was introduced and exercissed, not only with the lawes of this kirke and kingdome, bot aganist the expresse acte of bothe.

2. It is [a] courte of ciuile and ecclesiasticke persons, hauing pouer to inflicte both spirituall and temporall paines, and therfor, being in the constitutione therof wnlawfull, cannot be qualified with aney limitations.

3. A comission for ecclesiasticke persons to inflicte spirituall censures, cannot proceed from the King, bot from the generall assembly of the kirke: and a comission to ciuile persons to inflicke temporall paines for ecclesiastick causes, cannot proceed bot from the parliament, at the desyre of the assemblies.

4tly. It subuerteth all other iudicatories of this kirke and realme, and indangereth the liberties, estaites and persous of the quholl leidges.

4o. The vringe of the artikeles of Perth, wnder ecclesiasticke and ciuile paines, hath caused grate trouble and dissention in the kirke, made way for all ther subsequent innouations and superstitions, and zet is nather warranted be the acte of assembly, wich doeth nather containe aney penaltie, nor inoyn'd by way of præcept, necessarily to be obeyed, bot by way of counsaile, freeleie to be obserued; and that wpon this resson, seing all memory of by-gaine superstitione is past, wich being anima legis, inferreth via contrariorum, by way of contraries, the necessity of our not obseruing, seing the memory of by-gaine superstitione is now reuiued and pressed, according to the last claus of the 21 artickell of our large Confession of Faith, ratified in parliament, and according to our promisse in our lait confession; nather is it zet warranted by the actes of parliament, wich doeth ratifie the actes of this assembly, without aney desyre from the kirke; zea, contrarey to the suplications and protestations of maney godlie and learnid of the ministrie, bot neuer intendit, nor could change the free voluntarey obseruance in matters ecclesiasticke of anc churche counsaile, wnto the necessarye obedience of a penall statute, and therfor the vringe of the Perth artickells must cease and desist.

5o. Ther is no appirance of staying the present commotions and combustions in the kingdome, of satisfieing the Kinges hour and mynd, misinformed by our aduersaries, nor of cleiring of the subiects pious loyaltie, in ther legall and peacefull proceedinges, from all calunnies and misconstructions, accept in a free generall assemble; the present arch-bischopes and bischopes, the authiors and cause of all the innouations compleined vpon, and of all mis-informations aganist the compleiners, be trayed and censured according to the actes of the generall assembly; for it is aganist all law aud reasone, that they should be, without dew censure, suffred to reuelle at ther pleasure; and ther auen acte of the assembley at Glasgow, quherby they haue ther pouer appoynted them, to be censured in ther lyffe, office and benefice, by the generall assembly, sick-lyke that ministers be trayed in ther office and conuersatione, and censured according to the actes of the assembley.

6. For keiping the purity of religion in this kirk, and establishing a firme peace in this kingdome in tyme coming, generall assemblies must be haldin at the ordinary tyme, for the commissioners appoynted by K. James for the assemble, at Linlithgow, 1606, and wthers aquanted with his Maiesties intentions, declare that his Maiesty was neuer of anc other mynde, bot that the holding generall assemblies at certane competent tymes, was and is a most necessarye meine for preservation of piety and vnion in the kirke, and for exterminatione of heresie and schisime, (quhilk our dolefull experience, and innumerable euells following vpon vant therof, doeth wudenayable confirme); and therfor it was his will, that the acte of parliament should stand in force for conweining the generall assembly once in the zeire, lyke as it was acknowledged in the afforsaid assembley of Glasgow, 1610, that the necessity of the kirke did craue, that for taking order with the common enimney, and for other affaires of the kirke, ther be zeirleie generall assemblies, and therfor that assembley requysted his Maiestie, that generall assemblies might be haldin once in the zeire, ore at least at sett tymes, in all tyme coming.

7o. The least can be sought for the present concerning ministers wotters in parliament, is, that they be limited by the particular caueatts aggredid one in the assemble, 1600, at Moutrose, and by aney other cautious to be made, as the assemble shall thinke meitt and necessarye, (from oure 37 zeires experience of the fruittes and consequences thereof,) as it was appointed at that tyme; for so longe as they wotte in parliament, absolutely without the limitation of ther cautious, they cau neuer be thought to wotte in name of the kirke.

8o. Ther can be no houpe of continuance of religion in the kirke, (althowce are deliuered from all other euells) except some better coursse be takin for the free entrey of ministers, without wnlawfull othes, and with the consent of the presbeteries and of the people; for this end it wold be remembered, that it was declared, acte 114, parl. 1592, that God had giuen to the spirituall office bearers of the kirke, eolatione and depriuatione of ministers, and therfor the commission granted to bischopes, in A° 1584, to receaue the presentatione to benefices, was declared to be null in all tyme coming; and it was ordained, that all presentations to benefices be directed to particular presbeteries in all tyme coming, with full pouer to giue eolatione therwpone, they being the lawfull office bearers of the kirke, to quhom God hath giuen that right, wiell therfor nather was nor can be takin from them absolutly, nor giuen to bischopes exclusiue.

32. *Letter by the Covenanters to each of the Lords of Privy Council.**

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIP,

Wee the Ministers of the Gospel, conueened at this so necessarie a time, doe finde our selves bound to represent, as unto all, so in speeiall unto your Lordship, what comfortable experienee we have of the wonderful favour of God, upon the renewing of the Confession of faith and Covenant, what peace and eomfort hath filled the hearts of all Gods people, what resolutions and beginnings of reformation of manners are sensibly perceived in all parts of the kingdome, above any measure that ever we did finde or could have expected, how great glorie the Lord hath received thereby, and what confidence we have (if this sunshine be not eelipsed by some sinfull division or defection) that God shall make this a blessed kingdome, to the contentment of the Kings Majestie, and joy of all his good subjects, aeording as God hath promised in his good Word, and performed to his people in former times; And therefore we are forced from our hearts both to wish and entreat your Lordship to be partaker and promoter of this joy and happinesse by your subscription, when your Lordship shall thinke it eonvenient: And in the meane while, that your Lordship would not be sparing to give a free testimonie to the truth, as a timely and necessarie expressiōe of your tender affection to the cause of Christ now calling for helpe at your hands: your Lordships professiōe of the true Religion as it was reformed in this land, the nationall oath of this kingdome sundry times sworne and subscribed, ablishting us who live at this time, the dutie of a good Patriot, the office and trust of a Privie Councellour, the present employment to have place amongst these that are first acquainted with his Majesties pleasure, the consideration that there is the time of tryall of your Lordships affection to Religion, the respect which your Lordship hath unto your fame both now and hereafter, when things shall be reeorded to posteritie, and the remembrance, that not onely the eyes of men and Angels are upon your Lordships carriage, but also that the Lord Jesus is a secret witsse now to observe, and shall be an open Judge hereafter to reward and confesse everie man before his Father, that coufesseth him before men: All of these and each of them, besides your Lordships personall and particular obligations to God, doe call for no lesse at your Lordships hands, in the cause of so great and singular necessitie; and we also doe expect so much at this time, aeording as your Lordship at the houre of death would be free of the terrour of God, and be refreshed with the comfortable remembrance of a word spoken in season for Christ Jesus, King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

33. *Articles for the present Peace of the Kirk and Kingdom of Scotland, signed by Rothes, Cassils, and Montrose.**

If the Question were about such matters as did come within the compass of our own power, we would be ashamed to be importunate, and should be very easily satisfied without the smallest trouble to any; but considering that they are the matters of Gods honour, of the Kingdom of Christ, and the peace of our Souls, against the Mystery of Iniquity, which we clearly perceive to have been uncessantly working in this Land since the Reformation, to the ruine of true Religion in the end; it cannot stand with our duty to God, to our King, to our Selves and Posterity, to crave or be content with less, than that which the word of God, and our Confession of Faith doth allow, and which may against our Fears establish Religiou afterwards.

I. The discharging of the Service-Book, the Book of Canons, and of the late High Commission, may be a part of the satisfaction of our humble Supplications, and just Complaints, which therefore we still humbly desire; but that can neither be a perfect Cure of our present Evils, nor can it be a preservative in time to come.

II. When it is considered what have been the Troubles and Fears of his Majesties most loyall Subjects from the High Commission, what is the nature and constitution of that Judicatory, how prejudicial it proves to the lawful Judicatories of the Kirk and Kingdom, how far it endangers the Consciēces, Liberties, Estates and Persons of all the Lieges, and how easily, and far more contentedly all the Subjects may be kept in order, and obedience to His Majesties just Laws, without any terrour of that kind; we look that his Majesties Subjects, who have been used to obey according to the Laws, shall be altogether delivered from the High Commission, as from a yoke and burden, which they feel and fear to be more heavy than they shall be ever able to bear.

III. Remembring by what wayes the Articles of Perth were introduced, how strangely and with what opposition they were carried in the Assembly, upon what Narrative they were concluded, how the Ratification in Parliament was not desired by the Kirk, but earnestly supplicated and protested against, how they have been introductory of the Service-Book, whereof now they are become Members, and in their nature make way for Popery, (whatsoever hath been the intentions of the Urgers;) and withall, what Troubles and Divisions they have caused these twenty years in this Kirk and Kingdom, and what Jealousies between the Kings Majesty and His Subjects, without any Spiritual profit or edification at all; as we can see no reason why they should be urged by Authority, so can we not find, but we shall be more unable to digest them than in the beginning, when we had not as yet tasted, and known how bitter and unwholsome they were.

IV. The Judgements of the best Divines of the Reformed Kirks, and of the most Pious and Learned of this Kirk since the Reformation, coucerning the Civil Places and Offices of Kirkmen, and concerning the Vote of Ministers in Parliament, have been made known in divers generall Assemblies; which moved the Assemblies of this Kirk, when they could not by their modest opposition prevail to limit the Miuisters that were to Vote in Parliament, by any particular Cautions agreed upon at first, and ordained to be inserted in the Act of Parliament, and by other Cautions to be made afterward, as the Assembly should find meet and necessary; and, therefore, if we will declare our minds, after lamentable experiences of the Evils which were then foreseen, feared, and foretold, we cannot see how Ministers voting in Parliament, absolutely without the limitation of these Cautions, can be thought fit to Vote in the name of the Kirk.

V. We have no Grievance more universal, more ordinary, and more pressing, than that worthy men, who have Testimonies of their Learning from Universities, and are tried by the Presbyteries to be qualified for the Work of the Ministry, and for their Life and Gifts earnestly desired by the whole People, are notwithstanding rejected because they cannot be persuaded to Subscribe and Swear such unlawful Articles and Oaths, as have neither warrant of the Acts of the Kirk, nor Laws of the Kingdom, and others of less worth, and ready to swear for base respects, unworthy to be mentioned, are obtruded upon the People, and admitted to the most eminent Places of the Kirk, and Schools of Divinity, which causes continual Complaints, makes the People run from their own Kirks, refuse to receive the Sacrament at the hands of the Ministers set over them against their hearts, or to render them that Honour which is due from the People to their Pastors, and is a mighty hindrance to the Gospel, to the Souls of the People, and to the Peace of the whole Kirk and Kingdom; all which might be easily helped, by giving place to the 114 Act of Parliament, 1592, declaring, That God hath given to the Spiritual Office-bearers of the Kirk Collation and Deprivation of Ministers, and ordaining that all Presentations to Benefices be directed to particular Presbyteries in all time coming, with full power to give Collation thereupon, they being the lawful Office-bearers of the Kirk, to whom God hath given that right; which therefore, never was nor can be taken from them, and so conferred upon others, at that they shall be quite secluded therefrom.

VI. The lawful and free National Assemblies of this Kirk, warranted by Divine Authority, ratified by Acts of Parliament, kept in other Reformed Kirks, and in this Kirk since the Reformation, and acknowledged by King James to be the most necessary means for preservation of Piety and Union, and for extermination of Heresie and Schism, (who willed, therefore, that the Act of Parliament for convening the General Assemblies once in the year should stand in force;) if they were revived, and by His Majesties Authority appointed to be kept at the ordinary times, and if one at His Majesties first opportunity, and so soon as may be conveniently, should be indicted, Kirkmen might be tried in their Life, Office, or Benefice, and kept in order without trouble to His Majesty, and without offence to the People, the present Evils might be speedily helped, to His Majesties great honour and content, and to the preservation of the Peace of the Kirk, and these courses might be stopped afterwards: and on the contrary, while Kirkmen escape their due Censure, and matters of the Worship of God are imposed without the consent of the free Assemblies of the Kirk, they will ever be suspected to be unsound and corrupt, as shunning to be tried by the Light, to the continual entertaining of heart-burnings amongst the People, and to the hindrance of that cheerfulness of obedience which is due, and from our Hearts we wish may be rendred to the Kings Majesty.

VII. If according to the Law of Nature and Nations, to the Custom of all other Kingdoms, and the laudable example of His Majesties worthy Progenitors, in the like cases of National Grievances, or of Commotions and Fears of a whole body of a Kingdom, his Majesty should be graciously pleased to call a Parliament, for the timeous hearing and redressing of the just Grievances of the Subjects, for removing of their common Fears, and for renewing and establishing such Laws, as in time coming may prevent the one and the other, and may serve to the good of the Kirk and the Kingdom, that the Peace of both might be firmly settled, and mens minds now so awakened might be easily pacified; and all our Tongues and Pens are not able to represent, what would be the joyful Acclamations and hearty Wishes of so loyal and loving a People, for His Majesties Happiness, and how heartily bent all sorts would be found to bestow their Fortunes and Lives in His Majesties Service.

VIII. The more particular Notes of all things expedient for the well of the Kirk and Kingdom, for His Majesties honour and satisfaction, and for extinguishing of the present Combustion, may be given in to be considered in the Assembly and Parliament.

34. *Articles of Information to Mr Andrew Learmonth, for my Lord Archbishop of Saint Andrews, the Bishop of Ross, &c. and in their absence, for my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury his Grace.**

I. You shall show their Lordships, How they have changed the Moderator of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and are going on in changing all the Moderators in the Kingdom.

II. How they have abused Doctor Ogston the ninth of May in Edinburgh, Mr George Hannay at Torphichen the sixth of May, Doctor Lamond at Markinch the ninth of May, Mr Robert Edward at Kirk-michael, whom Kilkerrin is forced to entertain at his own House.

III. That the Presbytery of Haddingtown have given Imposition of Hands to Mr John Ker's Son, to be his Colleague, without the knowledge of the Bishop; and likewise the Presbytery of Kircaldy to Mr John Gillespy's Son, to the Church of the Weemes; and the Presbytery of Dumfrie, to one Mr John Wier, to the Church of Morton within two miles of Drumlanerick; and that they of Dumfermline have admitted Mr Samuel Row (a Minister banished from Ireland) to be helper to Mr Henry Maekgill; and they of Air Mr Robert Blair, to be helper to Mr William Annand; and that the Town of Dumfrie have made choice of Mr James Hamilton to be their Minister; and the Town of Kirkdubright one Mr John Macklemman, all of them banished from Ireland; and Mr Samuel Rutherford is returned and settled in his Place; and they intend to depose Mr John Trotter, Minister of Dirleton; and how they intended to use the Regents.

IV. That the Council of Edinburgh have made choice of Mr Alexander Henderson to be helper to Mr Andrew Ramsay, and intend to admit him without advice or consent of the Bishop.

V. That the Ministers of Edinburgh, who have not subscribed the Covenant, are daily reviled and cursed to their Faces, and their Stipends are withheld and not payed; and that all Ministers who have not subscribed are in the same case and condition with them.

VI. That they hound out rascally Commons on men who have not subscribed the Covenant, as Mr Samuel Cockburn did one John Shaw at Leith.

VII. That His Majesty would be pleased by his Letters, to discharge the Bishop of Edinburgh to pay any Prebend-fee, to those who have subscribed the Covenant; as also by His Royal Letters to discharge the Lords of Session, to grant any Process against the Bishop for their Fees.

VIII. That His Majesty would be pleased in the Articles of Agreement with the Nobility, to see honest men, who shall happen in this tumultuous time to be deposed from their Places, restored and settled in them, and others that are violently thrust in, removed; and that the wrongs done to them be repaired.

IX. That if it shall happen his Majesty to take any violent course for repressing these Tumults and Disorders, (which God forbid) that in that case their Lordships would be pleased to supplicate His Majesty, that some speedy course may be taken for securing of the persons of these honest men, who stand for God and His Majesty.

35. *Proclamation by the King.**

CHARLES R.

Charles by the Grace of God King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, to our Lovits, our Sheriffs in that part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting.

Forsamikle as We are not ignorant of the great Disorders which have happened of late within this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, occasioned (as is pretended) upon the introduction of the Service-book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, thereby fearing Innovations of Religion and Laws; for satisfaction of which Fears We well hoped, that the two Proclamations of the eleventh of December, and nineteenth of February, had been abundantly sufficient: nevertheless finding, that Disorders have daily so increased, that a powerful rather than a persuasive way might have been justly expected from Us; yet We, out of Our innate Indulgence to Our People, grieving to see them run themselves so headlong into Ruine, are graciously pleased to try if by a fair way We can reclaim them from their faults, rather than let them perish in the same. And therefore once for all, We have thought fit to declare, and hereby to assure all Our good People, that We neither are, were, nor (by the Grace of God) ever shall be stained with Popish Superstition, but by the contrary are resolved to maintain the true Protestant Christian Religion, already professed within this Our ancient Kingdom. And for further clearing of Seruples, We do hereby assure all men that We will neither now nor hereafter press the practice of the aforesaid Canons and Service-book, or any thing of that nature, but in such a fair and legal way as shall satisfie all Our loving Subjects, that we neither intend Innovation in Religion or Laws; and for the High Commission, We shall so rectifie it, with the help of advice of Our Privy Council that it shall never impugn the Laws, nor be a just Grievance to Our Loyal Subjects. And as hereby it may appear how careful We are to satisfie the foresaid Fears (how needless soever) of our good Subjects [*]. So We do hold

Our Selves obliged both in Conscience and Honour, to hinder the course of that which may prejudice that Royal Authority, which God has endued Us with; wherefore, understanding that many of our Subjects have run themselves into seditious and undutiful courses, and willing to reduce them rather by a benign, than forcible mean (because We hope that most of them are drawn thereto, blindly out of fear of Innovations) are content hereby to declare, and promise upon the Word of a King to pardon what is past, and not to take notice of the by-gone faults, no not so much as of those factious and seditious Bonds, upon condition that they seek to Our Mercy by disclaiming the same, and in testification of the true sense of their Misdemeanours, that they deliver up, or continue with their best endeavours to procure the delivering up, of the said Bonds into the hands of Our Council, or such as Our Council shall appoint: Declaring always, likeas We by these presents do declare, all these to be esteemed and reputed as Traitors in all time coming, that shall not renounee and disclaim the said Bond or Bonds, within after the publication hereof; that is to say, Whosoever will from henceforth be thought a good Subject, and capable of Our Mercy, must either deliver up the same, in case he have it, or concur with his best endeavours to the delivering up thereof, or at least must come to some of Our Privy Council, or chief Officers in Burgh or Land, and testifie to him, that he renounees and disclaims the said Bonds. Our Will is therefore, and We charge you straitly and command, that incontinent this Our Letter seen, &c. C. R.

The other Proclamation penned by the Marquis agrees with the former, to the place that is marked [*]; after which it follows thus.

So We expect that their behaviour will be such, as may give testimony of their Obedience, and how sensible they are of Our Grace and Favour, that thus pass over their Misdemeanours, and by their future carriage make appear, it was only the fear of Innovations that caused those Disorders that have happened of late in this Our Kingdom, which now cannot but by this Our Declaration be removed from the hearts of Our loving Subjects: but on the contrary, if we find not this performed with that cheerfulness and alacrity that becomes good and obedient Subjects, We declare and hold Our Self obliged in Honour and Conscience, to make use of those forcible means which God hath armed Royal Authority with, for the curing of disobedient and stubborn People. Our Will therefore is, and We charge you, &c. C. R.

36. *Declaration approved of by the King.**

Whereas we were in hope by Our late Proclamations to have given satisfaction to Our People, and to have removed their Mistakings of the Book of Common-prayer, which We caused to be published, having thereby declared, that it never entered into Our thoughts to make any Innovation in Religion and Form of Gods Worship, nay, not to press the said Books upon any of Our Subjects, till by a fair way they were induced to approve the same; yet having understood, that to the contrary (by what means We know not) occasions have been taken to confirm them in their former Mistakings, and to bind them by Oaths and Subscriptions against the Laws established by Our dear Father of blessed memory, and ratified by Our Selves since Our coming to the Crown: howsoever there is in that more than just cause offered to take punishment of such an open Contempt and Rebellion, yet considering that this is not the fault of the simple sort and multitude of People, who have been seduced through specious pretexes, as if nothing were contained in the said Bond or Covenant, as they call it, but the promoting of Gods Glory, the maintaining of Our Honour, and Liberty of the Country, with the preserving of Unity among themselves, We no way willing to use Our people with rigour, or to enquire severely into their errors of that kind, have thought meet to renew Our former Declaration, by assuring them, and every one of them, that Our constant Resolution is, and hath been, to maintain the true Religion professed and established by the Laws of that Our Kingdom, without any Change or Innovation, at the hazard of Our Life and Crown, and that We will not force on Our Subjects either the said Book of Common-prayer, or Book of Canons, till the same be duly examined, and they in their Judgments, satisfied with the legality thereof; nor will We permit the exercise of any Commission upon them, for whatsoever cause, which may give unto them any just cause of Grief and Complaint. Willing therefore and requiring all Our People and Subjects to acquiesce to this Our Declaration, and not suffer themselves to be misled by the private or publick Informations of turbulent spirits, as if We did intend any thing contrary to this Our Profession, having always esteemed it a special point of Royal Dignity, to profess what We intend to doe, and to perform what We do promise; certifying all Our good Subjects, who shall hereupon rest quiet in obedience of God and Us, that We will faithfully perform whatsoever We have declared, whether in this or in Our former Proclamations made to that purpose, and be unto them a good and merciful King: as on the other side, if any shall hereafter make business, and disturb the Peace of that Church and Kingdom, by following their private Covenants, and refusing to be ruled by the Laws established, that We will use the Force and Power, which God hath put into Our hands, for compescing and subduing such mutinous and disobedient Rebels. 37. *Queries by Hamilton, and Answers by the King.**

Queries whereunto Your Majesties Direction and Resolution is humbly prayed, that accordingly I may govern my self, and be warranted for my Proceedings.

1. If before the publishing of the Declaration some of the chiefest of the Petitioners may not be prepared, and laboured to conceive aright of the same, and in general acquainted with Your Majesties gracious Intentions?

They may.

2. Where the first meeting of the Council shall be?

Where you shall find most convenient, the City of Edinburgh only excepted.

3. If your Majesty will not permit the Council to sit, where, and in such places as is conceived may tend most for the advancement of your Service?

Yes.

4. If the Declaration shall not be read to the Council, and they required to sign the same?

By all means.

5. If we shall not all swear to give our best assistance for the putting the same in due execution?

Yes.

6. If any Councillour refuse to doe it, what course shall be taken with him?

Dismiss him the Council.

7. If Acts of Council are not to be made, finding that this Declaration ought to free us of the fears of Innovations either of Religion or Laws?

8. If all Councillours are not to be warned to give their attendance till the business be settled?

Yes.

9. If upon the publication of this Declaration there be Protestations made, what course shall be taken?

The Protesters must be proclaimed Rebels.

10. If no Protestations but Petitions of new be presented, either demanding further satisfaction, or adhering to their former, what Answer shall be made, or what course taken?

11. If they remain still in a Body at Edinburgh or elsewhere, after the Declaration, what course shall be taken?

You must raise what Force you may to treat them as Rebels.

12. If they should petition against the High Commission itself, as not to be introduced without an Act of Parliament, what Answer shall be given?

That they must be content with My Declaration in that point.

13. If against the matter contained therein, it is then desired that those particulars may be expressed that will not be yielded to?

The settling thereof according to My Declaration will answer this.

14. If it be pressed that what is now concluded, concerning the High Commission be ratified in the next Parliament, what Answer shall be given?

If I may be sure that a Parliament will doe it, I shall be content.

15. If they Petition for a Convention, what Answer shall be given?

*No Petition must be admitted till the Bond* be broken; if after, you may grant it, leaving the time to Me.*

16. If they petition for a General Assembly, that it may be once in the year, what Answer shall be given?

I will not be tied, but as I shall find cause.

17. If they petition that the Ministers Oath may be no other than that which the Act of Parliament doth order them to take, what Answer shall be given?

I and the Bishops will consider of it.

18. If they petition that the five Articles of Perth may be held as indifferent, what Answer shall be given?

I will hear of no Petition against an Act of Parliament.

19. If the Town of Edinburgh may not be dealt with apart to petition for Your Majesties Favour, and if they desire that the Council, Exchequer, and Session may be returned them, what Answer shall be given?

Upon their full submission, and renouncing of the Bond, they may have their desires.

20. If the like course may not be taken with some other principal Burghs?

As before.

21. If to gain some leading men from the Party, marks of Your Majesties Favour may not be hoped for?

To some, I; to some, No.

* Burnet, p. 46.

* i.e., The Covenant.

22. If particular men desire either Acts of Council, or Pardons under the Great Seal, what shall be done ?

23. What Service shall be used in the Chappel Royal ?

The English.

24. If the Lords of Council and Session, shall at that time be pressed to receive Kneeling ?

This is no time for a Communion, but when there is they must kneel.

25. If thought fit, what shall be done to them that refuse ?

Advise of it.

26. If all Acts of Council, that have enjoined the use of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, are not to be suspended, and declared of no force in time coming ?

Yes.

27. How far Your Majesty will warrant me to declare Your Pleasure to the Lords of the Clergy, concerning their living within their Diocesses ?

I shall do it My Self, but you may tell any of it.

28. How far I may declare Your willingness to give ear to and receive the private Complaints of Your Subjects in general, and in particular against any of the Bishops ?

Refuse none.

29. If those Ministers (who have been by the Multitude displaced) are not again to be established ?

They must.

30. If in the Abbey-Church the use of the Organs shall be presently enjoined ?

Yes.

31. If those Ministers formerly silenced may not for a time be connived at, and permitted to preach ?

If they preach not Sedition.

32. If your Majesty aim at more for the present, than establishing the Peace of the Country ?

No more for the present.

33. If more, it is humbly desired, Your Majesty may be pleased to express it ?

When time shall be fit.

In execution of all which, or what else Your Majesty shall think fit to command, it is most humbly desired, that I may be so warranted, that the labouring to put them in execution may not turn to my Ruine, nor hazard the losing of Your Majesties Favour, dearer to me than life ?

You shall.

38. *Instructions by the King to Hamilton.**

CHARLES R.

I. Before you publish the Declaration which We have signed, you shall require all the Council to sign it, and if you find that it may conduce to Our Service, you shall make all the Council swear to give their best assistance in the execution of the same : but this of putting them to their Oaths, We leave to your discretion, to doe as you shall find occasion ; but if you shall find it fit to put them to their Oaths, those that refuse must be dismissed the Council till Our further Pleasure be known.

II. We give you power to cause the Council to sit in whatsoever place you shall find most convenient for Our Service, Edinburgh onely excepted, and to change the Meeting thereof as often as occasion shall require.

III. You may labour to prepare any of the refractory persons to conceive aright of Our Declaration before it be published, so that it be privately and underhand.

IV. You are to get an Act of Council to pass, to declare, that this Declaration of Ours ought to free all honest Subjects from the fears of Innovations of Religion or Laws : but this you are not to propose publicly except you be sure to carry it.

V. If any Protestation be made against Our Declaration, the Protesters must be reputed Rebels, and you are to labour to apprehend the chiefest of them.

VI. If Petitions be presented to demand further satisfaction than that We have already given by Our Declaration, you are to receive them, and to give them a bold Negative, both in respect of the Matter and the Form, as being presented from a Body which you are no ways to acknowledge.

VII. If it should be objected against the High Commission, that it ought not to be introduced but by Act of Parliament : your Answer must be, that We found it left Vs by Our Father, and therefore We meane to continue it, having first regulated it in such a way that it shall be no just Grievance to Our Subjects, or against Our Laws : and when there is a Parliament, We shall be content that it be ratified as We shall now rectifie it.

VIII. If after the limited time in Our Declaration a Body remain at Edinburgh, or elsewhere, you must raise what Force you can to dissipate, and bring them under Our Obedience.

IX. As soon as the Peace of the Country will permit, you are to call a General Assembly for settling of a constant and decent way for Gods Worship ; We having resolved to call them, or to permit them to be as often as occasion shall require ; We likewise intending to have a Parliament, to ratifie what shall be condescended on at the Assembly.

X. You may say, the Bishops shall impose no other Oath upon Ministers at their Admission, but what is warranted by Act of Parliament.

XI. You are to give direction that the same Service be used in Our Chapel Royal, that was before the enjoying of the Service-book.

XII. You must admit of no Petition against the 5 Articles of Perth, but for the present you are not to press the exact execution of them.

XIII. Whenever the Town of Edinburgh shall depart from the Covenant, and petition for Our Favour, We will that you bring back the Council and Session to it.

XIV. You shall deny no Pardons nor Acts of Council to any particular persons that shall desire the same for their security.

XV. Some marks of Favour We may be moved to give to particular persons that may deserve the same.

XVI. All Acts of Council that enjoyn the use of the new Service-book are to be suspended, and to be of no force hereafter.

XVII. You shall declare Our pleasure to Our two Archbishops, (as soon as the Country is anyway settled) that it is Our Pleasure, that every Bishop shall live within his own Diocess, except upon his own urgent occasions, or that he be commanded from Us, or the Council, to attend there for Our Service, which I intend as seldom as may be.

XVIII. You shall refuse Complaints against no man in particular, whether Officers of State, Councillours, or Bishops, so that it be against their Persons and not their Places.

XIX. All those Ministers who have been displaced by the seditious multitude, are to be (so soon as conveniently may be) repossessed again as they were.

XX. As for silenced Ministers, you may connive at their Preaching, if you find it may tend to the quieting of the Country.

XXI. For the Organs in the Abby-Church, We leave them to your discretion when to be used, and to advertise Me of your opinion.

XXII. You are to cause insert 6 weeks in Our Declaration for the delivery up of the Covenant, and if you find cause, less.

XXIII. You shall declare, that if there be not sufficient Strength within the Kingdom to force the refractory to Obedience, Power shall come from England, and that My Self will come in Person with them, being resolved to hazard My Life rather than to suffer Authority to be contemned.

XXIV. If you shall find cause, you are to raise a Guard of 200 or more, to attend Our Council.

XXV. You may treat with the Earl of Marr for the keeping of our Castles of Edinburgh and Sterlin, and for the present he must be charged with their safe Custody.

XXVI. You shall take seriously into consideration the Copper-coyn, and declare Our willingness to remedy the Evils that have risen thereby; or what else the Subjects may justly complain of.

XXVII. You may declare, that as We never intended to assume the Nominating the Provost of Our Town of Edinburgh, so We mean not by Our too frequent Letters to hinder the free Election of their own Officers.

XXVIII. You may likewise declare, (if you find cause) that as We never did, so by Gods Grace We never will stop the course of Justice by any private directions of Ours; but will leave Our Lords of Session, and other Judges, to administer Justice, as they will be answerable to God and Us.

If you cannot by the means prescribed by Us bring baek the refractory and seditious to due Obedience, We do not onely give you Authority, but command all hostile Acts whatsoever to be used against them, they having deserved to be used no other way by Us, but as a Rebellious People; for the doing whereof We will not onely save you harmless, but account it as acceptable Service done Us.

Such of these Instructions, as you shall find cause, We give you leave to divulge and make use of as you find Our Service shall require.

40. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

Though I answered not yours of the fourth, yet I assure you that I have not been idle, so that I hope by the next week I shall send you some good assurance of the advancing of our Preparations. This say not to make you precipitate any thing, (for I like of all you have hitherto done, and even of that which I find you mind to doe;) but to shew you that I mean to stick to my Grounds, and that I expect not any thing can reduce that People to their Obedience, but onely force. I thank you for the clearness of your Advertisements, of all which none troubles me so much, as (that in a manner) they have possessed themselves of the Castle of Edinburgh; and likewise I hold Sterlin as good as lost. As for the dividing of my Declaration, I find it most fit (in that way you have resolved it;) to which I shall adde, that I am content to forbear the latter part thereof, until you hear my fleet hath set sail for Scotland. In the mean time your care must be how to dissolve the Multitude, and (if it be possible) to possess your self of my Castles of Edinburgh and Sterlin, (which I do not expect.) And to this end I give you leave to flatter them with what hopes you please, so you engage not me against my Grounds, (and in particular that you consent neither to the calling of Parliament nor General Assembly, untill the Covenant be disavowed and given up;) your chief end being now to win time, that they may not commit publick Follies untill I be ready to suppress them: and since it is (as you well observe) my own People, which by this means will be for a time ruined, so that the loss must be inevitably mine; and this if I could eschew, (were it not with a greater) were well. But when I consider, that not onely now my Crown, but my Reputation for ever, lies at stake, I must rather suffer the first, that Time will help, than this last, which is irreparable. This I have written to no other end, than to shew you I will rather die than yield to those impertinent and damnable Demands, (as you rightly call them;) for it is all one as to yield to be no King in a very short time. So wishing you better success than I can expect, I rest

POSTSCRIPT.—As the Affairs are now, I do not expect that you should declare the Adherers to the Covenant Traitors, until (as I have already said) you have heard from me that my Fleet hath set sail for Scotland, though your six weeks should be elapsed. In a word, gain time by all the honest means you can, without forsaking your Grounds.

HAMILTON,

The dealing with Multitudes makes diversity of Advertisement no way strange, and certainly the alteration from worse to less ill cannot be displeasing; wherefore you may be confident, I cannot but approve your Proceedings hitherto, for certainly you have gained a very considerable point, in making the heady Multitude begin to disperse, without having engaged me in any unfitting thing. I shall take your advice in staying the publick Preparations for Force; but in a silent way (by your leave) I will not leave to prepare, that I may be ready upon the least advertisement. Now I hope there may be a possibility of securing my Castles, but I confess it must be done closely and cunningly. One of the chief things you are to labour now, is to get a considerable number of Sessioners and Advocates, to give their opinion that the Covenant is at least against Law, if not treasonable. Thus you have my Approbation in several shapcs, therefore you need not doubt but that I am

42. *Draft of Explanations of Covenant proposed by Spottiswood.**

We the Noblemen, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers, and others, that have joyned in a late Bond or Covenant for the maintaining of true Religion and purity of Gods Worship in this Kingdom, having understood that Our Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesty is with this our doing highly offended, as if we thereby had usurped his Majesties Authority, and shaken off all Obedience to His Majesty and to His Laws; for clearing ourselves of that imputation do hereby declare, and in the presence of God Almighty solemnly protest, that it did never so much as enter into our thoughts, to derogate any thing from his Majesties Power and Authority Royal, or to disobey and rebell against His Majesties Laws, and that all our proceedings hitherto by Petitioning, Protesting, Coveuanting, and whatsoever other way, was and is onely for the maintaining of true Religion by us professed, and with express reservation of our Obedience to His most Sacred Majesty; most humbly beseeching His Majesty so to esteem and accept of us, that he will be graciously pleased to call a National Assembly and Parliament, for removing the Fears we have not without cause (as we think) conceived of introducing in this Church another form of Worship than what we have been accustomed with, as likewise for satisfying our just Grievances, and the settling of a constant and solid Order to be kept in all time coming, as well in the Civil and Ecclesiastical Government; which if we shall by the intercession of Your Grace obtain, we faithfully promise, (according to our bounden duties) to continue in His Majesties Obedience, and at our utmost powers to procure the same during our Lives, and for the same to rest and remain

43. *Letter by the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I do not wonder, though I am very sorry for your last Dispatch, to which I shall answer nothing concerning what you have done, or mean to doe, because I have approved all, and still desire you to believe I do so, until I shall contradict it with my own Hand. What now I write is, first to shew you in what Estate I am, and then to have your Advice in some things. My Train of Artillery consisting of 40 Pecece of Ordnance (with the appurtenances) all Drakes, (half and more of which are to be drawn with oue or two Horses apiece) is in good forwardness, and I hope will be ready within six weeks; for I am sure there wants neither Money, nor Materials to doe it with. I have taken as good order as I can for the present, for securing of Carlisle and Berwick; but of this you shall have more certainty by my next. I have sent for Arms to Holland, for 14000 Foot and 2000 Horse: for my Ships they are ready, and I have given Order to send three for the Coast of Ireland immediately, under pretence to defend our Fishermen. Last of all, which is indeed most of all, I have consulted with the Treasurer and Chancellour of the Exchequer, for Money for this years Expedition, which I estimate at two hundred thousand pounds Sterlin, which they doubt not but to furnish me; more I have done, but these are the chief heads. Now for your Advice, I desire to know whether you think it fit that I should send six thousand Land-men with the Fleet that goes to the Frith, or not; for since you cannot secure me my Castle of Edinburgh, it is a question whether you can secure the landing of those men, and if with them you can make your self Master of Leith, to fortifie and keep it: of this I desire you to send me your Resolution with all speed. I leave it to your consideration, whether you will not think it fit to see if you can make all the Guns of the Castle of Edinburgh unserviceable for any body, since they cannot be useful for me. Thus you may see, that I intend not to yield to the Demands of those Traitors the Covenanters, who I think will declare themselves so by their Actions, before I shall doe it by my Proclamation; which I shall not be sorry for, so that it be without the personal hurt of you, or any other of my honest Servants, or the taking of any English place. This is to shew you, that I care not for their affronting or disobeying my Declaration, so that it go not to open

44. To his Maiesties Commissioner, the supplicatione of the noblemen, barrons, burgesse, ministers and comons, heir attending his Maiesties gracious anssuer to our former petitions, complaintes and desyres, humblie shewing,

That quheras wee, expecting from your Grace, as his Maiesties Commissioner, ane gracious anssuer to our former suplications, complaintes and just desyres, haue presentit to your Grace ane petitione, humblie crauing a free generall assembly and parliament, as the ordinar remedy of our griuances, the onlie meine to put this kirke and kingdome to quyetnesse.

It pleased your Grace to show that his Maiestie, from his princely caire of this kirke and kingdome, walde be most willing to indiete a free generall assembly, and call ane parliament for thesse good endes; bot that your Grace, as his Maiesties, hath conceaued the Confession of Faith and couenant, laity renewed by ws his Maiesties subiects, to be ane vnlawfull combiuation aganist authority, therby to east off our deutifull obedience, and not ane couenant for mantaining of the trew religion, of his Maiesties persone and authority, and of the lawes and liberties of the kingdome; and wee being most willing to remoue that impediment, as the maine hinderance for obtaining our desyres, therfor, and for cleiring of our loyaltie and vindicating ourselues from so grate ane imputatione, wee doe now, in all humility, remonstrat to your Grace, as his Maiesties commissioner, and declairs before God and men, that wee ar heartily griued and sorey, that aney good man, bot most of all that our dreid souerainge should so conceaue of our doing, and that wee wer and still are so far from aney thought of withdrawing ourselues from our deutifull subiection and obedience to his Maiesties gouernment, wich by the discent, and wnder the rainge of 107 kinges, is most cheirfully aeknouledged by ws and our prædecessors. That wee neuer had nor haue aney intentione ore desyre to attempte aney thing wich may turne to the dishonor of God, ore to the diminutione of the Kinges gratnes and authority; bot oue the contrarey wee aeknowledge our quietnesse, stability and happines, to depend wpone the saftie of the Kinges Maiestie, as vpone Gods vicegerent sett ouer ws for mantenance of religion and administratione of justice, haue solemlie suorne, not only our mutuall coneuirence and assistance for the cause of religion, bot also to the wttermost of our power, with our means and our liues, stand to the defence of our dread souerainge, the Kinges Maiesty, his persone and authority, in the preseruatioun and defence of the trew religion, lawes and liberties of the kingdome: and therfor wee, his Maiesties loyall subiects, free from that and all other imputations of that kynd, most humblie beseeches your Grace to esteime our Confessioun of Faith and couenant, to haue beine intendit, and to be the largest testimonie of our fidelity to God, and loyaltie to our Kinge; and that hinderance being remoued, most still supplicat your Grace wald be pleased to indiete a free generall assembly and parliament, quhilk will vndoubtedly redresse all our

HAMILTON,

I must needs thank you that you stand so close and constantly to my Grouds, and you deserve the more since your fellow-Counsellours do rather dishearten than help you in this business, for which I swear I pity you much. There be two things in your Letter that require Answer, to wit, the Answer to their Petition, and concerning the Explanation of their damnable Covenant; for the first, the telling you that I have not changed my mind in this particular, is Answer sufficient, since it was both foreseen by me, and fully debated betwixt us two before your down-going; and for the other, I will onely say, that so long as this Covenant is in force, (whether it be with or without Explanation) I have no more Power in Scotland than as a Duke of Venice; which I will rather die than suffer: yet I commend the giving ear to the Explanation, or any thing else to win Time, which now I see is one of your chiefest cares, wherefore I need not recommend it to you. Another I know is, to shew the World clearly, that my taking of Arms is to suppress Rebellion, and not to impose Novelties, but that they are the seekers of them; wherefore if upon the publishing of my Declaration a Protestation should follow, I should think it would rather doe right than wrong to my Cause; and for their calling a Parliament or Assembly without me, I should not much be sorry, for it would the more loudly declare them Traitors, and the more justifie my Actions; therefore in my mind my Declaration would not be long delayed: but this is a bare Opinion and no Command. Lastly, my resolution is to come my self in person, accompanied like myself, Sea-forces nor Ireland shall not be forgotten; the particulars of which I leave to the Comptrollers relation, as I do two particulars to the Archbishop of Canterbury, which you forgot to mention in my Letter: and so I rest

Messengers, our Sheriffes in that part, conjunctly and severally specially constitute greeting. Forsameikle as we are not ignorant of the great disorders, which have happened of late within this Our ancient Kingdome of Scotland, occasioned, as is pretended, upon the introduction of the Service Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, thereby fearing inuovation of Religion and Laws. For satisfaction of which fears, We well hoped, that the two Proclamations of the cleventh of December, and nineteenth of February, had been abundantly sufficient: Neverthelesse, finding that disorders have daily so increased, that a powerfull rather then perswasive way, might have been justly expected from Us: Yet We out of Our innative indulgence to Our people, grieving to see them run themselves so headlong into ruine, are graciously pleased to try, if by a faire way We can reclaime them from their faults, rather than to let them perish in the same. And therefore once for all We have thought fit to declare, and hereby to assure all Our good people, that We neither were, are, nor by the Grace of God ever shall bee stained with Popish superstition: But by the contrary, are resolved to maintain the true Protestant Christian Religion already profest within this Our ancient Kingdome. And for farther clearing of seruples, We do hereby assure all men, that We will neither now nor hereafter presse the practice of the foresaid Canons and Service Book, nor any thing of that nature, but in such a faire and legall way, as shall satisfie all Our loving subjects, that We neither intend innovation in Religion or Lawes. And to this effect have given order to discharge all Aets of Councel made thereanent. And for the high Commission, We shall so rectifie it with the help of adviee of Our privie Councel, that it shall never impugne the Lawes, nor bee a just grievanec to Our loyall subjects. And what is farther fitting to be agitate in generall Assemblies and Parliament, for the good and peacc of the Kirk, and peaceable government of the same, in establishing of the Religion presently profest, shall likewise be taken into Our Royall consideration, in a free Assembly and Parliament, which shall be indieted and called with Our best conveniencie. And We hereby take God to witnesse, that our true meaning and intention is, not to admit of any innovations either in Religion or Lawes, but earefully to maintain the purity of Religion already profest and established, and no wayes to suffer Our Lawes to be infringed. And although We cannot be ignorant, that there may be some dis-affected persons who will strive to possesse the hearts of Our good subjects, that this Our gracious declaration is not to be regarded; Yet We do expect that the behaviour of all Our good and loyall subjects will be such, as may give testimonie of their obedienec, and how sensible they are of our graee and favour, that thus passeth over their misdemeanours, and by their future carriage make appeare, that it was only feare of innovation, that hath caused the disorders which have happened of late within this Our aeneient Kingdome. And are confident, that they will not suffer themselves to be seduced and mis-led, to miseonstrue Us or Our actions, but rest heartily satisfied with Our pious and real intentions, for maintenanee of the true Religion and Lawes of this Kingdome. Wherefore We require and heartily wish all Our good people earefully to advert to these dangerous suggestions, and not to permit themselves, blindly under pretext of Religion, to be led in disobedience, and draw on infinitely, to Our grief, their own ruine, which We have, and still shall strive to save them from, so long as We see not royall Authoritie shaken off. And most unwillingly shall make use of that power which God hath endued Us with, for reclaiming of disobedient people.

Our will is herefore, and Wee charge you straightly and command, that incontinent these Our Letters scene, you passe to the market crosse of Our Burgh of Edinburgh, and all other places needfull, and there by open Proclamation make publication hercof to all and sundry Our good subjects, where through none pretend ignorance of the same. The which to do, We commit to you conjunetly and severally Our full power, by these Our Letters, delivering the same by you duely execute and indorsed againe to the Bearer. Given at Our Court of Greenwich the twenty eight day of June, and of Our Reigne the thirteenth year. 1638.

47. *The Protestation of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers and Commons, &c.**

WEE Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgesses, Minnisters, and Commons, That whereas wee the Kings Majesties true and loyall Subjects, who have ever esteemed it our greatest happinesse to live under a religious and righteous King, and our greatest glory to testifie our best affections to our graecious Sovereign, have beene in His Majesties absence from this His native Kingdome heavily pressed for a long time past, And especially of late, with diverse innovations, which both in themselves, and in the way wherein they have beene urged, doe manifestly tend to the prejudiee of the Kings honour, and of our Religion, Laws and Liberties, And by which we were brought to such extremitie, that there was no way left betwixt the rock of excommunication, and the high paine of rebellion on the one part, and the desperate danger of forsaking the way of true Religion and the breach of our Covenant with God on the other, but to represent our cause, and present our supplications to the Lords of secret Councell, that being equally pondered by them, they might either be auswered by themselves, or by their recommendation might ascend to his Majesties owne consideration: And therefore in all humble manner we did to this [effect supplicate their Lordsh: we were most willing (for the modest following of our supplications) to obey their direction in choosing Commissioners, for the great number of supplicants, who flocked together from all quarters of the Kingdome; were carefull to order our selves in all Christian and quiet carriage, and, against the tediousnesse of many and long delaiies, did wait for a long time with very great patience, till at last they were pleased to receive our supplications, complaints, and bills: And conceiving them to containe weightier matters then could by themselves bee determined, they did promise and undertake to represent and recommend the same, according to their more then ordinary importance, unto his Majesties Royall consideration, and to report his Majesties answer.

While his Majesties good Subjects of all ranks, throughout the whole Kingdome, had their minds wakened, and their hearts filled with the expectation of a graecious and satisfactorie answer, worthy of his Majesties pious and equitable disposition, in the month of February last incontinent a rumour flyeth through the Countrie, and filleth all eares, That the Lords of his Majesties secret Councell were commanded to make such a Proclamation concerning the Service Booke, Booke of Canons, and the peaceable meetings of his Majesties good Subjects in time coming, as we were perswaded to have beene proeced by the secret working, and malignant mis-information of our adversaries, seeking for their owne private ends, without respect to his Majesties honour, and welfare of this Kirk and Kingdome, to stop the course of our legall proceedings, and to escape their owne due censure: And therefore intending to make knowne to the Lords of seeret Councell what was noised concerning the Proclamation; how far the whole Kingdome had been by some sinistrous mis-information frustrate of their hopes, and their constant desire to have some course taken by their Lordsh: advice; how his Majestic being further informed, might deliver his good subjects from so great grievances and feares, and establish a sure peace in this Countrie for time to come; we found our selves tyed by order of Law to decline those against whom we had made our complaint, unlesse we would admit our parties to be our Judges: And in ease our Declinator should not be accepted, we behoved to protest, that we might have immediate recourse to the King himselfe, &c.

Thereafter in the Moneth of Mareh, finding that by the foresaid Proclamation the innovations supplicated against were approven, our lawfull proceedings condemned, our most necessary meetings prohibited, there being no other way left unto us, wee were necessitate to renew the nationall Covenant of this Kirk and Kingdome, thereby to reconcile us to God, provoked to wrath against us, by the breach of his Covenant within this Land, to cleare our Sovereigns mind from all jealousies and suspicions, arising from our adversaries mis-information of our intentions and carriage; and so to make way for his acceptance of our humble supplications, and grant of their lawfull remedies, to guard this Land in defence of Religion, Authority and liberty against inward divisions, and externall violenees. And that our actions might be answerable to our holy profession, we afterward drew up an humble supplication, containiug our grievances, and desires of the ordinary remedies thereof, to have bene delivered to the King himselfe: In the meane time we were directed by those who were intrusted by his Majesty, to attend his Declaration here in Seotland, which would free us of all feares of innovations of Religion, and prove satisfactorie: And lest for want of true information of our just grievances and desires it should fall out otherwise, wee expressed to them, with the greatest modestie we could, our desires in some few Artieles, and with great patience have attended his Majesties pleasure thereanent: And all this moneth by-gone being frequently convened to heare the same delivered by his Majesties Commissioner, the right Noble and potent Lord James Marquesse of Hamiltoun, &c. we presented a new petition to his Grace as his Majesties Commissioner, craving most humbly the indiction of a free Assembly and Parliament, as the onely remedies thereof: Likeas finding a mis-information or mistake of our Covenant with God, as if it had bene an unlawfull combination to bee the maine hinderance of obtaining our desires, in a new supplication; wee have fully removed that impediment, renewed our desires of those supreme judicatories, to bee indieted with diligenece, for settling of the Kirk and Kingdome: But being answered only with delays after these nine Moneths attendanee, and with this Proclamation that contained his Majesties gracious declaration of his pious intentions, not to admit of any innovations in Religion or Law, nor any staine of Popish superstition, But on the contrary to be resolved to maintaine the true Christian Religion professed in this Kingdome; which we were, ever so far from calling in question, as in our supplications, complaints and bills, we used the same as one cause of our desires, one ground of our confidence of a gracious answer, and argument of our adversaries malignant mis-information of so religious a King: And now most humbly (with bended knees and bowed hearts) thanke our graecious Sovereigne for the same, Wishing and praying the Lord of heaven truly and fully to informe his Majestic how far these bookes, judicatories, and all our other evils and grievanees are full of idolatrous superstitions, and Popish errours, How destructive of the reformation of Religion in this Land, and of the Lawes and Liberties of this Church and Kingdome, and so directely contrary to this his Majesties pious intention and declaration.

Yet seeing that no Proclamation could suffieiently remove the present evils, nor settle our feares, nor seure us from the re-entrie of any evil or Innovation, which it seemed to discharge, or prevent the like in time comming, nor satisfie our humble supplications, craving the present indiction of a free Assembly and Parliament, as the onely remedies of our evils, and meanes to prevent the like: And seeing this Proclamation doth not so much as make mention, or aeknowledge any of our supplications, complaints and grievances, or any just cause thereof, except under the name of great iuercase of disorders, faults, and mis-demeanours, but only our feares of some future Innovation of Religion or Lawes, occasioned onely (as is pretended) by the introduction of the Service Booke, Booke of Canons, and High Commission; which feares his Majestic hoped to have bene abundantly and suffieiently satisfied by his two former proclamations of the ninth of December, and nineteenth of February. And by this his present Declaration, except his subjects bee blindly (under pretext of Religion) led unto disobedience, Doth mis-ken, passe over, and so in effect denie all our supplications, bills, articles, and desires, espeecially our complaints against the Prelates our parties. And, that once for all, in a faire and perswasive way, even after the resaitte of our last supplication, clearing us from the calummie of unlawfull combination; Doth not disallow nor discharge any of the innovations and evils complained upon, but onely assureth that his Majestic will not presse their praetice, but in such a faire and legall way as shall satisfie his subjects of his intention; which (joynd with the other clause, allowiug and confirming the Proclamation the nineteenth of February) evidenceth the liberty left to any Prelate or persons to praetice the same, and by all other faire waies to perswade others thereunto; and his Majesties resolution to presse their praetice in a faire and legall way: And also confirmeth the former Declaration, That the Service Booke is a ready meane to maintaine the true Religion already professed, and to beat out all Superstition, and no waies to be contrary to the Lawes of this Kingdome, but to be compiled and approved for the universall use and edification of all his Majesties subjects; Doth not abolish, but promiseth to rectifie the High Commission, with advice of his Privie Councell, implyiug the Kings power, with consent of the Councell, to establish this or any judicatory within this Kingdome, without consent of the three Estates convened in Parliament, contrary to the fundamentall and expresse Lawes thereof; and by consequent with the like reason, to establish Lawes and Service Bookes, without consent of the Assembly and Parliament; Which is contrary to the maine ground of all our supplications, against the manner of their introduction; Doth only promise to take into his consideration in an Assembly and Parliament, which shall bee called at his best conveniencie, while as the evident and urgent necessity for settling the combustions threatening the totall dissolution and desolation of this Church and State, exeaseth our un-cessant and importune calling for these present remedies ; Doth insinuate the continuance and execution of any pretended lawes for these innovations of worship, and corruptions of Church governmen, and civill places of Church-men, which by our Covenant wee have obliged our selves to forbear ; and the re-establishment of these evils in an Assembly and Parliament, which he will call in his best convenience, to wit, for that and this other end of satisfying his subjects judgements anent the Service Booke and Booke of Canons ; Doth condemne all our former proceedings, even our supplicating, complaining, protesting, subscribing of our Covenant together, and our continuall meetings, as great disorders, increase of disorders, deserving justly a powerfull rather then a perswasive way, a running headlong into ruine, a perishing in our faults, a blind disobedience under pretext of Religion, and doth threaten & denounce, NOW ONCE FOR ALL, If we be not heartily satisfied, and give testimony of our obedience after this Declaration, but continue, as by our former proceedings, to draw on our owne ruine, that, albeit unwillingly, he must make use of that power which God hath indued him with, for reclaiming of so disobedient people.

THEREFORE we, in our own name, and in name of all who will adhere to the Confession of Faith, and reformation of Religion within this Land, are forced and compelled, out of our bound duty to God, our King, native Country, our selves and our posterity, (lest our silence should be prejudicial to so important a cause, as concerns Gods glory and worship, our Religion and salvation, the Lawes and Liberties of this Church and Kingdome, or derogatory to our former supplications, complaints, protestations, Articles and proceedings, or unanswerable to the solemne oath of our nation covenant with God) To declare before God and man, and to protest, Primo, That we doe, and will constantly adhere, according to our vocation and power, to the said Reformation, in doctrine, use of Sacraments, and discipline ; And that notwithstanding of any innovations introduced therein, either of old or of late. Secundo, we protest, That we adhere to the grievances, supplications, and protestations given in at Assemblies and Parliaments, and to our late supplications, complaints, protestations, and other lawfull proceedings against the same, and particularly against the Service booke, and booke of Canons, as maine innovations of Religion and Lawes, and full of Popish superstition, and so directly contrary to the Kings Declaration, And against the High Commission, as a judicatory established contrary to the Lawes and Liberties of this Church and Kingdome, and destructive of other lawfull judicatories, which both in respect of the nature of it, manner of introduction, without consent of the three Estates of Parliament, cannot be any wayes rectified, but absolutely discharged : Tertio, we protest, That we adhere with our hearts to our Oath and subscription of the Confession of Faith, the solemne Covenant betweene God, this Church and Kingdome, and the clauses particularly therein expressed and generally contained, and to our last Articles for the peace of this Kirke and Kingdome, drawne out of it, and to all the matters therein contained, and manner of remedy therein desired. Quarto, We protest, that this Proclamation or act of Councell, or any other act, or Proclamation, or Declaration, or ratification thereof, By subscription, or act, or letter, or any other manner of way whatsoever, or any precondemnation of our cause or carriage, before the same be lawfully heard and tryed in the supreme judicatories of this Kirk and Kingdome, the onely proper judges to nationall causes and proceedings, or any certification or threatning therein denounced, shall no waies be prejudiciall to the Confession of Faith, lawes, and liberties of this Kingdome, nor to our supplications, complaints, protestations, articles, lawfull meetings, proceedings, pursuits, mutual defences, nor to our persons and Estates, and shall no wayes be disgracefull either in reality or opinion, at home or abroad, to us or any of us : But on the contrary, that any act, or letter, or subscription of the Councell, carrying the approbation of the declaration, and condemnation of our proceedings, indicta causa, is and ought to be repute & esteemed unjust, illegall & null, as here before God and man we offer to clear, & to verifie both the justice of our cause and carriage, and the injustice of such acts against us, in the face of the first generall Assembly of the Church & Parliament of the Estates, unto whom with all solemnities requisite, we do publikly appeal. Quinto, We protest, that seeing our former supplications, last Articles, & our last desire and petition to his Majesties Commissioner, which petitioned for the present indiction of a free general Assembly & Parliament, according to the law and custome of all nations, & of this nation in the like case, to hear the desires, ease the grievances, & settle the fears of the body of the Church & Kingdome, are thus delayed, & in effect refused, to wit, ONCE FOR ALL, till his Majesties conveniency for the end contained in this Proclamation, that We continue by thir presents to supplicate his Majesty again and again, for the granting of the same : And whatsoever trouble or inconvenience fall out in this land in the mean time, for want of these ordinary remedies, and by the practice of any of these innovations & evils, contrary to our supplications, articles, & confession, it be not imputed unto us, who most humbly beg these lawfull remedies, but also that it is, & shall be lawfull unto us, to defend and maintain the Religion, lawes and liberties of this Kingdome, the Kings Authority in defence thereof, & every one of us one another in that cause, of maintaining the Religion, and the Kings foresaid Authority, according to our power, vocation and Covenant, with our best counsel, bodies, lives, means, & whole strength, against all persons whatsoever, and against all externall or internall invasions menaced in this proclamation. Like as that in the great exigencie of the Church, necessitating the use of this ordinary and lawfull remedies for settling the commotions thereof, it is and shall be leasome unto us to appoint, hold and use the ordinary means, our lawfull meetings and Assemblies of the Church agreeable to the law of God, and practice of the primitive Church, the Acts of the generall Assemblies, and Parliaments, and the example of our Worthy Reformers in the like case. Sexto, We protest, that our former Supplications, Complaints, Protestations, Confessions, meetings, proceedings and mutual defences of every one another in this cause, as they are, and were in themselves most necessary, and orderly meanes agreeable to the lawes & practice of this Church and Kingdome, to be commended as reall duties of faithfull Christians, loyall Subjects, and sensible members of the body of the Church and Kingdome, and no wise to be stiled nor accounted great disorders, misdemeanours, blind disobedience under pretext of Religion, and running headlong into ruine, &c. So they proceeded only from conscience of our duty to God, Our King, native cuntry, and our posterity, and doth tend to no other end, but to the preservation of the true reformed Religion, the confession of Faith, Lawes, and Liberties of this His Majesties most ancient Kingdome, and of His Majesties authority in defence thereof, and satisfaction of our humble desires, contained in our supplications, complaints and articles, unto the which we adhere againe and again, as we would eschew the curse of the Almighty God, following the breach of his Covenant: And yet we doe certainly expect, according to the Kings Majesty his accustomed goodnesse and justice, that his sacred Majestie after a true information of the justice of our cause and carriage, will presently indict these ordinary remedies of a free Assembly and Parliament, to our just supplications, complaints, and articles, which may be expected, and useth to be granted from so just and gracious a King, towards most loyall and dutifull subjects, calling for redresse of so pressing grievances, and praying heartily that His Majestie may long and prosperously reigne over us.

WHEREUPON a noble Earle John Earle of Cassles, &c. in name of the Noblemen, M. Alexander Gibson younger of Dury in name of the Barons, James Fletcher Provost of Dundy in name of the Burrowes, M. John Ker Minister at Salt-prestoun in name of the Ministers, and Master Archbald Jhonston Reader hereof, in name of all who adheres to the Confession of Faith and Covenant lately renewed within this Kingdome, tooke Instruments in the hands of three Notars present, at the said mercat Crosse of Edinburgh, being invironed with great numbers of the foresaid Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Borrows, Ministers and Commons, before many hundred witnesses, and craved the extract thereof: And in token of their dutifull respect to his Majesty, confidence of the equity of their cause, and innocency of their carriage, and hope of his Majesties gracious acceptance, they offered in all humility, with submisse reverence, a copie thereof to the Herald.

HAMILTON,

Yours of the 24th (though it be long) requires but a short Answer, it being onely to have leave to come up, which is grounded upon so good reason, that I cannot but grant it. Some Considerations in the mean time I think fit to put to you; first, to take heed how you engage your self in the way of Mediation to me; for though I would not have you refuse to bring up to me any Demand of theirs to gain time, yet I would not have you promise to mediate for any thing that is against my Grounds; for if you do, I must either prejudice my self in the granting, or you in denying: then, I would have you take care, that no more Subscriptions be urged upon any, especially of Council or Session: lastly, that you leave such encouragement to these few, that have not yet forsaken my Cause, that they may be assured (as well as I) that your up-coming is neither to desert them nor it. And thus certainly if (as you write) you get the mutinous Multitude once dispersed, you will have done me very good Service; for I am confident that my Declaration published before your coming away, (according to the Alterations that I have given you leave to make) will give some stop to their Madnesse: however your endeavours have been such, that you shall be welcom to

49. *Letter from the Bishop of Ross to Hamilton.**

MY LORD, MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

We are exceeding sorry to hear that the success of your Lordships Travels in this difficult Business, is otherwayes than good Christians and Subjects do wish, and heartily pray for; but on the other part, are glad to hear from our Friends there, that, whereof we were ever confident, that nothing is omitted by your Lordship to effectuate what is necessary for His Majesties Honour, and expedient for the good and quiet of that poor distracted and distempered Kingdom. For my own part give me leave, without either flattery or presumption, to say ingenuously, that the Course your Lordship keeps, seemeth to be such as all good and wise men must approve your Lordships wisdom and Loyalty. Infallibly the fruit will be, besides the Warrant your Lordship hath in your own Conscience by this Noble and Wise carriage, your Lordship must be more (if any accrement can be to former Deserts) beloved of your Master: it will iudear your Lordship more to all good, wise, and well-affected Patriots, and oblige all, especially honest Church-men, to be your Servants. It cannot seem strange to any wise heart, who looks on the Distemper of that Kingdom, wherein is the concourse of so many different and divers Distempers, where so many of all sorts of different Judgements, and no less variety of Affections, are so strongly engaged, and where many have their own private ends; that the best, wisest, and most powerful Agents, are not able on a sudden to rectifie their Judgements, cure their Affections, and by disappointing the private intentions of some to reduce all to Order, Peace, and Quiet. In any great Work of this strain, we must all rely somewhat more on the wise and gracious Providence of God, than in any other ordinary accidents: He is able to work good out of ill, light out of darkness, and order out of confusion, which I pray God heartily, we may see to His Glory, the Kings Honour, and Peace of the Church and State, without any other effect upon any author or abettor of these Disorders, but of Gods Mercy, and His Majesties Royal Clemency. In this I fear I have exceeded more, possibly, than becomes me with your Grace; but as I humbly beg pardon, so I trust your Lordships Goodness will easily pardon the expressions of a poor Heart surcharged with grief, not so much flowing from, or following the fear of any Personal or Private evil can befall it, as fearing the danger the Publick is in, because of our Sins, which are calling for Vengeance. God of his Mercy give us Repentance, and be merciful to that Church and State.

We can return nothing for your Lordships care and kindness to us but humble and hearty thanks, and earnestly pray God Almighty for all Honour, Wealth, and Happiness to your Lordship here and heuce.

As your Lordship hath commanded us we shall go from hence, and where we pitch our abode, with the first opportunity shall acquaint your Lordship. We were advised by our best friends to doe so, before we received your Lordships; but that Obedience we owe, and promised to His Majesty and your Lordship, made us that we would not stir for any Advertisement or Advice, how necessary or affectionate soever, till we had your Lordships Warrant.

All that kind respect which is above our desert

and condition, and tender care your Lordship hath expressed to us, for our safety, and that which your Lordship hath superadded out of your noble Bounty, desiring us to be so bold as to shew your Lordship what Money, or any thing else necessary we stand in need of, that your Lordship may supply our necessity in this, hath so perplexed us for a time, that we knew not what to choose; on the one part being ashamed to doe it, both because it seemeth impertinent, and incongruous to trouble one of your Lordships Honour, Place, and Employment, with matters of this kind, and especially so unreasonably at such a time, when your Lordship is at such charge for the honour of His Majesties Service; as also that we are unprofitable, and cannot be useful to your Lordship in any kind, and so how should we to other troubles we make your Lordship, adde this to be chargeable: yet your Lordships noble and generous offer, and the necessity we are east into at this present, that what is our own or due to us we cannot command, and know as little who will do us the favour at this time to trust us, hath made us (seeing Obedience is better than Sacrifice) to cast our selves upon your Lordships Bounty and Favour; fearing on the one part your Lordship may be offended if we doe it not, and on the other, that otherwise we cannot be provided: Therefore I humbly intreat your Lordship, to let me have with the Bearer a hundred and fifty Pieces, payable at Whitsunday next with the Interest, or Martinmas, as your Lordship pleases; for which your Lordship shall receive from the Bearer my own personal Bond. Here and at this time I cannot give better Security, but by Gods Grace your Lordship shall be in no danger, come the world as it will.

I have more than need to beg humble pardon for my unmannerly and impertinent importunities, in troubling your Lordship at this time, taken up with weighty Affairs, if it were but to read this long Paper; and that I offend no more in this kind, I shut up all with my hearty Prayers to God Almighty for all Honour and Happiness to your Lordship, and an effectual blessing upon your Travels. So wisheth he who shall be, whilst he lives,

Your Graces most humble and bounden Servant,

Most Sacred Sovereign,

The Marquesse of Hamiltoun, your Majesties Commissioner, having imparted unto us your Majesties gracious pleasure and allowance that the Judicatories of the Councell, of Session, and others, should be returned to the Citie of Edinburgh; Thereupon, the Lord Commissioner being present, order was given for publication at the Market Crosse of Edinburgh with all solemnities requisite; and that the like publication should be made throughout the whole Kingdome at all publike places: This hath given so great contentment to all your Majesties subjects, that we cannot expresse with what dutifull respect and heartie prayers for your Majestie they have embraced this great and undeserved favour: In consideration whereof wee conceive our selves bound in dutie to acquaint your Majestie herewith; and withall to render to your Majestie most humble and heartie thanks for this so great grace and goodnesse, which wee hope shall

51. *Speech by Commissioner to Court of Session.**

MY LORDES,

I was varranted from his Maiestie to recall the Session againe to Edinbrughe; the cheiffe thing that moued him therto, was the sense of the maney incommodities wich his subiects in generall, and the Iudges in particular, did susteine by the renoueing of it; that his sacred Maiestie and Master had requyred him to desyre and command the Iudges to grant all reasonable dispatche to Maiesties subiects in the administratiōe of iustiee, that so sometyne wich was lost, might be regained. Lykwayes, my Lordes, I must requyre you to be wery cairfull and circumspeete, that in these troublsome tymes, no order nor decree may passe from you, wich may be præiudiciall to his Maiesties croune or seruice.

52. Act anent the High Commission.†

At Halyrood-house, 5 July 1638.

The Lord Commissioner and Lords of Secret Councell having upon the 4 July instant, published his Majesties Declaration anent the seruice Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission; and being informed that His Majestes Declaration is not so clearly understood as is necessary for removing all scruples which may arise to any of his Majesties good subjects anent his Majesties declaration foresaid, declares that it is his Majesties gracious pleasure, likeas his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Commissioner foresaid, and Lords of Secret Council, abrogat and dischargis the said Service Book and Book of Canons, and inhibits all use and practice thereof, by whatsoever person or persons, of whatsoever quality, ecclesiastical or civil, within this Kingdom, anent the act of Council made in the month of 1636, and another made in the month 1637, with the warrants whereupon the same proceeds, and proclamations following thereupon, anent the premises, or any part thereof, with all other warrants and proclamations made thereanent; and declares the same to be now and, in all time coming, null. And as far the High Commission, the Lord Commissioner and Lords of Secret Council finds themselues warranted to discharge; likeas, by these presents, they do discharge all the practice and exercise whatsomever of the high commission past heretofore: and declares all his Majestie's Lieges of whatsomever quality, free of all comperance before the Judges of the said high commission, and discharges the saids Judges of all proceeding ag<sup>t</sup> His Maties subjects, by virtue thereof in time coming, till his Majesty so rectify the same as nothing therein shall impugu the Laws of this Kingdom, nor be a just grievance to his Majesty's good subjects; and ordains proclamation to be made hereof at the Mercat Cross of Edinburgh, and other places needful, wherethro' none pretend ignorance of the same.

53. *Letter from Lord Rothes to Patrick Leslie, Aberdeen.**

LOVING COUSIN,

Because your town of Aberdeen is now the only Burgh in Scotland that hath not subscribed the Confession of Faith [Covenant,] and all the good they can obtain thereby is, that if we sail fairly, as there are very good conditions offered, they shall be under perpetual ignominy, and the Doctors that are unsound, punished by the Assembly; and if things go to extremity, because they refuse, and, in hopes of the Marquis Huntly's help, the King will, perhaps, send in some ship or ships, and men there, as a sure place, and if that be good for the country, judge ye of it. It is but a fighting against the high God to resist this cause, and it is so far advanced already, that, on my honour, we could obtain with consent, 1. Bishops limited by all the strait caveats. 2. To be yearly censurable by Assemblies. 3. Articles of Perth discharged. 4. Entry of Ministers free. 5. Bishops and Doctors censured for bygone usurpation, either in teaching false doctrine, or oppressing their brethren. But God hath a great work to do here, as will be shortly seen, and men be judged by what is past. Do ye all the good ye can in that town, and in the country about—ye will not repent it—and attend my Lord Moutrose, who is a noble and true-hearted cavalier. I remit to my brother, Arthur, to tell you how reasonable the Marquis Huntly was, being here away: he was but slighted by the Commissioner, and not of his privy Council. No further. I am your friend and cousin,

ROTHES.

54. Additional Instructions by the King to Hamilton.†

CHARLES R.
You shall try by all means to see if the Council will sign the Confession of Faith, established by Act of Parliament, with the new Bond joined thereto; but you are not publickly to put it to Voting, except you be sure to carry it, and thereafter that probably they will stand to it.

If the Council do sign it, though the Covenanters refuse, you shall proceed to the indicting of a free General Assembly; and though you cannot procure the Council to sign it, yet you are to proceed to the indicting thereof, if you find that no other Course can quiet business at this time.

You shall labour by all fair means that the sitting of the Assembly be not before the first of November, or longer if you can obtain it; for the place, We are pleased to leave it to your election; for the manner of indicting, you must be as cautious as you can, and strive to draw it as near as may be to the former Assemblies in my Fathers time.

You must labour that Bishops may have Votes in Assemblies, which if you cannot obtain, then you are to protest in their Favours in the most formal manner you can think of.

As for the Moderator in the Assembly, you are to labour that he may be a Bishop, which though you cannot obtain, yet you must give way to their Election.

You are to labour, that the Five Articles of Perth be held as indifferent; strive that the admissions of Ministers may continue as they are; you may condescend, that the Oaths of their Admission be no other than is warranted by Act of Parliament.

You are, if you find that it may in any wise conduce to Our Service, to enact and publish the Order made at Holyroodhouse by Our Council the fifth of July last, for discharging the use of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and the practice of the High Commission.

You are to protest against the abolishing of Bishops, and to give way to as few restrictions of their power as you can; as for the Bishops not being capable of Civil Places, you must labour what you can to keep them free.

You may give way that they shall be accountable to the General Assembly, which you shall indict at the rising of this against that time twelve month.

As for the Bishops Precedence, you are not to admit them of the Assembly to meddle therewith, it being no point of religion, and totally in the Crowe.

If the Bishop of St Andrews, or any other, be accused of any crime, you are to give way to it, so they may have a free Trial; and likewise the same of whatsoever person or Officer of State.

It is left to your discretion what course Bishops shall take, that are for the present out of the Country.

You are to advise the Bishops to forbear sitting at the Council, till better and more favourable times for them.

Notwithstanding all these Instructions above-mentioned, or any other accident that may happen (still labouring to keep up Our Honour so far as possibly you can) you are by no means to permit a present Rupture to happen, but to yield anything though unreasonable, rather than now to break.

55. *His Majesties Ten Demands.**

1. That all Ministers deposed or suspended by the Presbyteries since the first of February last, without warrant of the Ordinarie, shall be restored to their owne places, till such time as they shall be legally convicted.

2. That all Moderators of Presbyteries, deposed since the foresaid day by the Presbyteries, without warrant of the Ordinarie, be restored, and all Moderatours, appointed by the said Presbyteries without warrant foresaid, to desist from executing the office of Moderator.

3. That all Ministers admitted by the Presbyteries since the foresaid day, without warrant from the Ordinarie, shall desist from exercising the function of their ministerie in that place to which they have beene so presented and admitted.

4. That all Parishioners shall frequent their owne

* Large Declaration, p. 116.

Churches, and heare their owne Minister, and that the Elders assist the Minister in the Session, and other exercises of the discipline of the Church, as formerly they were used to do.

5. That all Bishops and Ministers, have their rents and stipends duly and thankfully paid them.

6. That all Ministers bee appointed presently to repaire to their own Churches, that none of them come to the Assemblie, or to the place where the same shall bee held, but such as shall bee chosen Commissioners from the Presbyteries.

7. That according to the Act of Assemblie 1606. Moderators of Presbyteries being found necessarie members of the Assemblie, every one of the said Moderators be appointed to bee Commissioner from that Presbyterie where he is Moderator.

8. That Bishops and other Ministers who shall attend the Assemblie, may be secured in their persons from all trouble and molestation.

9. That the Commissioners from Presbyteries, be chosen by the Ministers of that Presbyterie onely: And that no lay-person whatsoever, meddle in the choic, nor no Minister without his owne Presbyterie.

10. That all Convocations and meetings bee dissolved, and that everie man repaire to his owne house, and that the Countrey not onely be made peaceable, but also that all such Acts be forborne, as may make it appeare to be otherways.

And since his Majestie is still displeas'd with the Covenant, wisdome and our dutifull obedience to our Sovereigne require, that some such course should be taken, whereby his Majestie may receive satisfaction therein; and in the meane time, that there be no pressing, threatning, or perswading of men to subscribe the Covenant, nor no mention be made thereof any more in Pulpits.

56. *Answers to these Articles.**

Having seriously considered with our selves, that nothing in this world is so precious, and ought to be so deare unto us as our Religion; that the diseases of the Church after long toleration did threaten no lesse then her utter ruine, and the expiring of the truth of Religion at last; and that a free Generall Assemblie was the ordinarie remedie appointed by divine Authority, and blessed by divine providence in other Churches; and after a speciall manner in the Church of Scotland, wee have often and earnestly supplicated for the same, and have laboured to remove what was objected, or what we could conceive to be any hinderance to the obtaining of our desire, like as we have now for the same good end resolved to returne this answer to the particulars propounded, to be performed by us before any Assemblie be indicted.

The particulars propounded, are either concerning matters Ecclesiasticall, or Civill: Ecclesiasticall, or Church matters are, The first, concerning Ministers deposed or suspended by the Presbyteries, since the first of Februarie last, without warrant of the Ordinarie, that they bee restored to their owne places. The second, concerning Moderators of Presbyteries deposed since the foresaid day, to be restored, and all Moderators appointed by the said Presbyteries without warrant aforesaid, to desist from executing the office of Moderator. The third, concerning Ministers admitted since the foresaid day, that they desist from exercising the function of the Ministerie in that place, to which they have beene admitted. These three particulars do concerne the power, dutie, and particular facts, or faults of Presbyteries, wherein we have no power to judge or determine, whether they have proceeded lawfully or not, farre lesse can wee urge or command them to recall what they have determined or done, in the suspending, deposing, or admitting of Ministers, or Moderators; they being properly subject to the superiour Assemblies of the Church; and in this case and condition of the Church, to the Generall Assemblie, where, if they shall not after triall justifie their proceedings, from the good warrants of Scripture, reason, and the acts and practices of the Church, they ought to sustaine their owne deserved censure. And since on the one side, there bee many complaints against the Prelats for their usurpation over Presbyteries in the like particulars; and on the other side, there beesuch complaints of the doings and disorders of the Presbyteries to the offence of the Prelats; wee trust that his Majesties Commissioner will not esteeme this to bee any hinderance of the indiction of a Generall Assemblie, but rather a powerfull and principall motive with speed to convene the same, as the proper Judicatorie wherein to determine such dangerous and universall differences of the Church. Neither do we heare that any Ministers are deposed, but onely suspended during this Interim till a Generall Assemblie, for their erroneous doctrine and flagitious life; So that it were most offensive to God, disgracefull to Religion, and scandalous to the people, to restore them to their places till they bee tried, and censured. And concerning Moderators, none of them (as wee understand) are deposed, but some onely changed, which is verie ordinarie in this Church. The fourth, concerning the repairing of Parishioners to their owne Church, and that Elders assist the Ministers in the discipline of the Church, ought to be cognosed and judged by the particular Presbyteries, to which the Parishioners and Elders are subject, since the cause may be in the Ministers no lesse then in the Parishioners and Elders. And in case they finde no redresse there, to assent till they come to a Generall Assemblie, the want whereof maketh disorders to bee multiplied, both in Presbyteries and particular Parishes.

To the sixth, That Ministers wait upon their owne Churches, and that none of them come to the Assemblie, or place where the same is kept, but such as shall be chosen Commissioners from Presbyteries, we answer, That none are to come to the place of the Assemblie, but such as are either allowed by Commission to have voice, or otherwise have such interesse as they can justifie to his Majesties Commissioner, and the Assemblie convened.

To the seventh, Concerning the appointment of Moderators of Presbyteries to bee Commissioners to the Generall Assemblie, onely constant Moderators, who have ceased long since, were found in the Assemblie 1606. (which yet was never reputed by the Church to be a lawfull nationall Assemblie) to be necessarie members of the Generall Assemblie. And if both the Moderators, who if they be necessarie members need not to bee chosen, and the chosen Commissioners repaire to the Assemblie, the Assemblie it selfe can judge best of the members whereof it ought to consist.

To the ninth, That no lay-person whatsoever meddle with the choosing of Commissioners from the Presbyteries, and no minister without his owne Presbyterie, we say, That according to the order of our Church discipline, none but Ministers, and Elders of Churches ought to have voice in choosing

Commissioners from Presbyteries, and that no Minister, or Elder should have voice in Election, but in his owne Presbyterie.

The rest of the particulars are concerning civill matters: As the fifth concerning the paying of Rents and Stipends to Ministers and Bishops, concerning which we can say no further, but that the lawes are patent for them, as for his Majesties other subjects, and that the General Assemblie ought not to be delaied upon any complaint in that kinde.

The eighth, requiring that Bishops, and Ministers be secured in their persons, we think so reasonable, that wee will promise everie one of us for our own parts, they shall suffer no violence from us, and that we shall hinder others so farre as wee may; And if any trouble them otherwise, or make them any kinde of molestation in that attendance but by order of Law, the parties are justly punishable according to the degree of their fault as other subjects are.

To the tenth, concerning the dissolving of all Convocations and meetings, and the peaceableness of the Countrie; These meetings being kept for no other end, but for consulting about lawfull remedies against such pressing grievances as threaten the desolation of this Church and State, cannot be dissolved till the evils be removed. And we trust, that nothing in these our meetings hath escaped us, which carrieth in it the smallest appearance of undutifulnesse, or which may seeme to tend to the breach of the common peace: But although our adversaries have herein calumniated us, yet we have alwayes so behaved our selves, as beseemed his Majesties most humble and loyall subjects, petitioning his Majestie for a legall redresse of our just grievances.

To the last, concerning the Covenant; the Commissioner his Grace having many times and most instantly pressed us with that point, we did first by invincible arguments make manifest, that we could not, without sinning against God, and our owne consciences, and without doing wrong to this Nationall Church, and all posteritic, reseind or alter the same: And thereafter did at large cleare the same of all unlawfull combination against Authoritie, by our last Supplication and Declaration, which his Majesties Commissioner accepted as the most readie and powerfull of all other meanes, which could come within the compasse of our thought to give his Majestie satisfaction, The subscription of this our confession of Faith, and Covenant being an act so evidently tending to the glorie of God, the Kings honour, and happinesse of the Kingdome: And having already proved so comfortable to us in the inward of our hearts, It is our ardent and constant desire, and readie wish, that both his Majestie and all his good subjects may be partakers of the same comfort, Like as we finde our selves bound by conscience, and by the Covenant it selfe, to perswade all his Majesties good subjects to join with us for the good of Religion, his Majesties honour, and the quietnesse of the Kingdome: which being modestly used by us without pressing, or threatening of the meanest, we hope shall never give his Majestie the least cause of discontent.

Seeing therefore, according to our power and interesse, wee are most willing to remove all hinderances, that things may bee carried in a peaceable manner, worthy our Profession, and Covenant, doe aime at nothing but the good of the Kingdome, and preservation of the Church, which by consumption, or combustion, is like to be desperately diseased, except remedy some way be speedily provided;

And wee delight to use no other meanes, but such as are legall, and have beene ordinarie in this Church, since the Reformation: Wee are confident that without further delay, for preventing of greater evils and miseries then we can expresse, our just desires shall be granted. So shall we be encouraged in the peace of our souls, still to pray for his Majestie, all encrease of our true honour, and happinesse.

1638.—July 28.

57. *Reply by the Commissioner.**

1. If the Lords and the rest will undertake for themselves and the rest, that noe Laicks shall have voyces in choosing the Ministers to bee sent from the severall Presbyteries to the General Assembly, nor none else but the Ministers of the same Presbyterie:

2. If they will undertake that at the Assemblie they shall not goe about to determine of things established by Acts of Parliament, otherwise then by remonstrance or petition to the Parliament, leaving the determining of things Ecclesiasticall to the generall Assembly, and things settled by Act of Parliament, to the Parliament:

Then I will presently indict a Generall Assembly, and promise, upon my Honour, immediately after the Assembly to indict a Parliament, which shall cognosce of all their complaints.

58. Letter from the King to Privy Council.†

CHARLES R.

Right trusty and well-beloved Cousin, Councellour and Commissioner, and Right trusty and well-beloved Cousins and Councellours, and trusty and well-beloved Councellours, We Greet you well.

The great Distractions which have of late arisen both in Kirk and Commonwealth, in that Our Ancient Kingdom of Scotland, have much troubled the minds of many good and loyal Subjects there, and these Distractions have fallen out among them upon Jealousies and Fears of Innovation in Religion, and introducing of Popery; and not without some Fears conceived amongst them, as if We Our Self were that way inclined.

Upon occasion of these Fears they have of late signed a Covenant, or Bond for conserving the Religion established, and the Laws of the Country; but this Bond being not subscribed by Royal leave and Authority (as was that in Our dear Fathers time) must needs be both null in it self, and very prejudicial to the ancient and laudable Government of both Kirk and Commonwealth: which though We must declare unto you, yet out of Our inborn Love to that Our Native Country, and Loyal Subjects there, and for the obviating of these causeless Fears, and to satisfie your selves and all Our loving People, We do hereby under Our hand let you know that We are, and have ever been satisfied fully in Our Judgement and Conscience, both for the Reformed Religion and against the Roman; and that by Gods Grace and Goodness, We purpose both to live and die in the belief and practice of the Religion now established, and to preserve it in full strength, according to the Laws of that Our Kingdom: and to the end that this may appear to Posterity, how firm and settled We are in that Our Religion, We require you Our Commissioner and Council to see these Letters registred according to course.

Given at Our Court at Oatlands, July 30. 1638.

59. *Declaration by the King.**

CHARLES R.

The great Distractions which of late have risen both in Kirk and Commonwealth, in this Our ancient Kingdom, have so troubled the minds of many of Our good and loyal Subjects there, that they have been possessed with Fears as if Popery had been intended to have been introduced, and as if We Our Self were that way inclined: upon occasion of which Fears a Covenant or Bond of late hath been drawn up, intended by the Subscribers (as doth appear by their Supplication, presented to Our Commissioner the 26th of June last) for conserving the Religion and Laws of the Country; but it not being done by Royal leave and Authority, as was that in Our dear Fathers time, must be both null and void of it self, and much prejudicial to the ancient and laudable Government of Kirk and Commonwealth: Therefore We for obviating those Fears, which have been misconceived, both against Our Person and Profession, for matters of Religion, and to satisfie not our loving Subjects only, but all the Christian World, that We do, and (by Gods Grace) ever will maintain the true Christian and Reformed Religion, established in this our Kingdom, and to let the World see, that this shall be done in and with all freedom according to the Laws of Our Country, have signed the Confession of Faith, established by Act of Parliament An. 1557, with this Bond following, in defence of it, and Royal Authority, Laws, and Liberties of the Country; and do also require the present Subscription of this Confession and Bond by all Our loving Subjects, that it may remain in force to Posterity, that they may know how careful We are, and have been to preserve the integrity of Religion, and the freedom of Our Laws.

60. Declaration by Hamilton to the Privy Council.†

MY LORDS,

I thought it fit to acquaint your Lordships before I returned His Majesties Answer to the Noblemen, and others petitioning for the same, which is so full of Grace and Goodness, that we have all cause to bless God, and thank His Majesty for it: such is his tender care of this poor distracted Kingdom, that he will leave nothing undone, that can be expected from a Just Prince, to save us from Ruine; and since he finds such Distraction in the Church and State, that they cannot be well settled without a Parliament and Assembly, the state of the Country and business being prepared for it, he hath given me Warrant for calling of both, that they may be orderly held, as formerly they have been, according to the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom.

And further I am to declare to your Lordships, that this we are to attribute only to His Goodness, for we cannot but acknowledge, that our carriage hath been such, as justly we might have expected that he would have taken another course with us: which he was Royally and really prepared for, (had not His Mercy prevailed above His just Indignation) and by a powerful and forcible way have taught us

Obedience, which he hath forbore to make use of merely out of His Grace and Goodness. It is our duty to let His Subjects know, how great our obligation is to Him, which every one of us in particular, and all of us in general, should strive to make every one sensible of; and labour, so far as lieth in our power, to procure satisfaction to His Majesty, and quiet to this distracted Church and State.

1638.—August 25.

61. *Articles of Advice, by Hamilton and other Peers, to the King.**

Since the cause and occasion of all the Distractions, which of late have happened both in Kirk and Polity, seems to proceed from the conceived Fears of Innovation of Religion and Laws, and that the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and the unbounded power of Bishops in the High Commission (never yet warranted by Law) was that which first gave ground and occasion to the Subjects Fears, and seeing the said Books are offered to be proved, to be full of Tenets and Doctrines contrary to the Reformed Religion, professed and established within this Kingdom, and the same introduced against all form and custom practised in this Church; it were an Act of Justice well beseeming so Gracious and Glorious a King, absolutely and fully to discharge the same.

And seeing likewise this High Commission hath given so great offence to so many of your Majesties good Subjects, and as is constantly affirmed, is of so vast and illimited a power, and contrary to express Laws, by which all such Judicatories, not established by Act of Parliament, are declared to be of no force; it would much conduce to the satisfaction of this People, if this Judicatory were discharged till the same were established by Law.

The practice of the Five Articles of Perth hath been withstood by the most considerable part of the Subjects of all qualities, both Laity and Clergy, whereby great Divisions have been in this Church, and are like to have an increase, if Your Majesty, (in Your accustomed goodness and care of this poor Kirk and Kingdom) shall not be graciously pleased to allow that the pressing of these Articles may be forbore until the same may be considered of in an Assembly and Parliament; and although we conceive Episcopacy to be a Church-Government most agreeable with Monarchy, yet the illimited power which the Lords of the Clergy of this Kingdom have of late assumed to themselves, in admitting and deposing of Ministers, and in divers others of their Acts and Proceedings, gives us just ground humbly to beg, that Your Majesty may be pleased to remit to the Consideration of the Assembly this their unwarranted Power.

The sense and apprehension of these foresaid Evils, hath stirred up the Subjects without warrant of Authority, to join in a Bond and Covenant to withstand the foresaid Innovations, and for maintenance of the true Religion, the Kings Majesties Person, and of one another in the defence thereof.

If your Majesty might be graciously pleased in supplement hereof, to allow or warrant such a Confession of Faith, with such a Covenant or Bond joynd thereto, as that signed by Your Majesties Father, and by His Command, by the Council and most part of the Kingdom, we are very confident the same would be a ready and forcible mean to quiet the present Disorders, at least to satisfie most part; and if Your Majesty shall condescend to the foresaid Propositions, we are hopeful, if not confident, it shall give so great content to so considerable a number of Your Majesties good Subjects, of all qualities, that if any shall stand out, or withstand Your Majesties Royal Pleasure, after the publication thereof, they may be overtaken by Your Majesties Power within this Kingdom, without the help or assistance of any Force elsewhere.

And because it is to be hoped, that all that hath past in this business, and all the Courses that have been taken herein by the Subjects, hath proceeded from the foresaid Fears of Innovations, and not out of any Disloyalty or dissatisfaction to Sovereignty, and that Your good People may still taste the fruits of Your Grace and Goodness, we wish Your Majesty may be graciously pleased, upon the Word of a King, to pardon what is past, and never so much as to take notice of any of the Actions or Proceedings of what person soever, who after this shall carry himself as becomes a dutiful Subject, and in testification thereof shall give his best assistance for settling the present Disorders.

And if Your Majesty may be pleased to condescend hereto, we conceive all Your Majesties Subjects, Petitioners or Covenanters, should acquiesce, and rest heartily satisfied therewith; and if any shall be so foolish or mad, as notwithstanding this Your Majesties grace and goodness, still to disturb the Peace of Your Majesties Government, we in testification of our hearty thankfulness to our Sovereign, by these, humbly and heartily make offer of our Lives and Fortunes, for assisting Your Majesty, or Your Commissioner, in suppressing all such Insolences or insolent persons.

Signed                      Hamilton.      Roxburgh.

62. *New Instructions by the King to Hamilton.**

CHARLES R.

I. You shall in full and ample manner, by Proclamation or otherwise, as you shall see cause, declare, That We do absolutely revoke the Service-Book, the Book of Canons, and the High Commission.

II. You shall likewise discharge the practice of the Five Articles of Perth, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament, which doth command the same, and in the said Proclamation you shall promise, in Our Name, that if in the first Parliament to be held the three Estates shall think fit to repeal the said Act, We shall then give Our Royal Assent to the said Act of Repeal.

III. You shall likewise declare, that We have enjoyed, and authorized the Lords of Our Privy Council to subscribe the Confession of Faith, and Bond thereto annexed, which was subscribed by Our dear Father, and enjoyed by His Authority in the year 1580. and likewise have enjoyed them to take order, that all our Subjects subscribe the same.

IV. You shall likewise declare, that Our meaning and pleasure is, that none of Our Subjects, whether Ecclesiastical or Civil, shall be exempted from censures and trial of the Parliament, or General Assembly, those Courts proceeding against them in due form and order of law.

V. You shall likewise declare, That we are Graciously content, that the Episcopal Government, already established, shall be limited with such Instructions, as may stand with the Laws of this Church and Kingdom already established.

VI. You shall offer a Pardon by Proclamation, and promise in it a Ratification of the same in Parliament, to all Our good Subjects, who shall rest satisfied with this Our gracious Declaration, and hereafter carry themselves as becomes peaceable and dutiful Subjects.

VII. You shall procure an Act of Council, wherein every Councillour shall declare himself fully satisfied with this our Declaration, and (if you can) they shall moreover solemnly swear and protest to adhere to Us, and with their Lives, Fortunes, and whole Means, assist Us in the punishing and repressing all such as shall be found to be disobedient to Us, or persist in turbulent and unpeaceable Courses; and if any of Our Councillours shall refuse so to do, you shall presently remove him from the place of a Councillour.

VIII. You shall likewise require every Lord of the Session to subscribe the Confession of Faith abovementioned, and the Bond thereunto annexed; as likewise to make the same Protestation in all things, as in the last Instruction is required of a Councillour: and if they shall refuse to do it, you shall then certify to Us the names of such Refusers.

IX. You shall likewise declare, that Our Pleasure is, That a most solemn Fast be indicted upon a set day throughout the whole Kingdom, which shall precede the General Assembly in some competent time. The Causes shall be declared, to beg Gods blessing on that Assembly, to beg of God a peaceable end to the Distractions of this Church and Kingdom, with the aversion of Gods heavy judgement from both. The form of Indiction we desire to be according to the most laudable Custom of this Church in most extraordinary cases.

X. You shall labour as much as in you lieth, that both the Electors, and Persons elected to be Commissioners at the General Assembly, shall be the same that were wont to be in My Fathers time, and the same forms to be observed as near as may be: but yet if that cannot be obtained, it shall be no lett to you from indicting a General Assembly; but you shall go on in it, by all such means, as you shall find to be most advantageous to Me in that Service.

XI. The time and place of the Assembly, (Edinburgh only excepted) We leave to your Judgment and Pleasure.

XII. You shall likewise presently indict a Parliament; the time and place We leave likewise to you.

XIII. Whether you shall first publish Our Gracious Offers, or first indict the Assembly, We leave it to your own Judgment as you shall see cause.

XIV. If you shall find the most considerable part of the Council not to acquiesce in this Our Gracious Declaration, and not to promise hearty and chearful Assistance to Us, as is above expressed, or not a considerable part of other Lords and Gentlemen, in case Our Council refuse, then you shall neither indict Parliament nor Assembly, nor publish any of My Gracious Offers, except only the abolishing of the Service-Book, Book of Canons and High Commission; but leave them to themselves, and to such further Order as We shall be forced to take with them; only if you foresee a Breach, you shall give timely warning thereof, to such as have stood well-affected to Our Service, that so they may in due time provide for their safety, and your self is to return to Us with expedition.

XV. You must by all means possible you can think of be infusing into the Ministers, what a wrong it will be unto them, and what an oppression upon the freedom of their Judgements, if there must be such a number of Laicks to overbear them, both in their Elections for the General Assembly and afterwards.

XVI. Likewise you must infuse into the Lay-Lords and Gentlemen with art and industry, how manifestly they will suffer, if they let the Presbyters get head upon them.

XVII. For the Forms of these We leave to you, and such Learned Council as you shall use upon the place, always provided, that you retain the substance of these Our Instructions.

XVIII. You shall enjoyn in Our Name the Lords of Council, and all other Our good Subjects to subscribe the Confession of Faith signed by Our dear Father; and publish Our charge to all Commissioners and Ministers for that end, according to the same, signed with Our Royal Hand; and further proceed in that particular, according as We have directed you, and Our Council by Our Letter to that effect.

63.—*Instructions as to the Bishops.**

CHARLES R.

You shall shew My Lord of St Andrews, that We intend by being content with his demission of the Chancellours Place no injury to him, and most willing We are, that in the manner of doing it he may receive no prejudice in his reputation, though we cannot admit at this time of his nominating a Successor; and to make it more plain, that We are far from having any thought to afirout him, by thinking of his demission, We will in no ways that you urge him to do it; yet you are to intimate that in Our opinion a fair demission will prove more to the advancement of Our Service, and be better for him, than if he should retain the Place.

If you find him willing to demit, you shall then try what consideration he doth expect from Us, and if the same be not altogether unreasonable, you shall promise it in Our Name.

If a demission, then it is presently to be done.

If he resolve to hold that Place, then you must presently command his repair to Scotland, all excuses set apart.

You shall communicate to him and the rest of his Brethren, that far of Our Intentions, that it is probable you may indict a General Assembly.

That We are content absolutely to discharge the Books of Service, and Canons, and the High Commission.

You shall shew that the Five Articles of Perth We are pleased be esteemed as indifferent, and that though We maintain Episcopacy, yet We will be content that their Power be limited according to the Laws.

And it is Our further Pleasure, that if an Assembly be indicted, he and the rest of his Brethren be there, to defend themselves and their Cause: and for that end, that he and they repair to Newcastle, Morpeth, or Berwick, there to attend your further advertisement, that so immediately they may repair to Scotland, not only to answer for themselves at the said Assembly, but likewise to consult with you, what will be fittest to be done, for the advancement of Our Service that evil may be kept

CHARLES, by the grace of God, King of Scotland, England, Frauce, and Ireland, defender of the faith.
To our Lovits

Messengers, Our Sheriffs, in that part conjunctly and severally specially constitute, greeting. Forso-much as the cause and occasion of all the distracting which have happened of late both in Church and Commou-weale of this Our Kingdome, have proceeded from the conceived fears of innovation of Religion and Lawes: To free all our good Subjects of the least suspicion of any intention in Us to innovate any thiug, either in Religiou or Laws; and to satisfie, not only their desires, but even their doubts: We have discharged, and by these presents do discharge the Service book, book of Canons, and high Commission, and the practice of them, or any of them; and by these presents annuls and rescinds all acts of Councill, Proclamations, and other acts and deeds whatsoever that have been made or published, for establishing them, or any of them: and declares the same to be null, and to have no force nor effect in time coming. And being informed, that the urging of the practice of the five Articles of Pearth Assembly, hath bred great distraction and division in the Church and State, We have been graciously pleased to take the same into Our consideration; and for the quiet and peace of Church and State, do not only dispense with the practice of the saids Articles, but also discharge, like as by these presents Wee discharge all and whatsoever persons from urging the practice thereof, upon either laicke or ecclesiasticall person whatsoever. And We doe hereby free all Our Subjects from all censure and pain, whether ecclesiasticall or secular, for not urging, practising, or obeying the same, notwithstanding of any thing contained in the acts of Parliament, or generall Assembly to the contrarie. And because it hath been, to the disgrace of government, disperst and surmized throughout this Our Kingdome, that some of Our Subjects have exercised such illimited and unwarranted power, and have held themselves eximed from censure and punishment, to which others Our Subjects are lyable: We do by these presents declare, that if any of Our Subjects, whether ecclesiasticall or civill, of whatsoever qualitie, title, or degree, have, or shall at any time presume to do any such act, or assume to themselves any such exemption or power, That they shall, like as by these presents We make and ordain them to be lyable to the tryall and censure of Parliament, generall Assembly, or any other judicatories competent, according to the nature and qualitie of the offence. And for the free entrie of Ministers, that no other oath be administrate unto them, than that which is contained in the act of Parliament. And to give Our Subjects full assurance, that we never intend to admit of any change or alteration in the true Religion already established and professed in this Our Kingdome, And that all Our good people may be fully and clearly satisfied of the realitie of Our intentions towards the maintenance of the truth, and integrity of the said Religion: Wee have thought fit and expedient to enjoyn and authorize, like as We by these presents do require and command all the Lords of Our privie Councell, Senatours of the Colledge of Justice, Judges, and Magistrates to burgh and land, and all Our other Subjects whatsoever, to subscribe and renew the Confession of Faith, subscribed at first by Our dear Father and his household, in the yeare of God, 1580. Thereafter by persons of all ranks, in the year 1581. by ordinance of the Lords of secret Councell, and acts of the generall Assembly. Subscribed again by all sorts of persons in the year, 1590. by a new ordinance of Councell at the desire of the generall Assembly, with their generall band of maintenance of the true Religion, and the Kings person. And for that effect we do require the Lords of Councell to take such course, anent the foresaid confession and generall band, that it may be subscribed and renewed throughout the whole kingdome, with all possible diligence. And because we will not leave in Our Subjects mindes the least scruple or doubt of our royall intentions and recall resolutions, Wee have given warrant to Our Commissioner to indict a free generall Assembly to be holden at Glasgow the twentieth one day of November, in this present year, 1638. And thereafter a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the fifteenth day of May, Anno 1639. for settling a perfect peace in the Church, and Common-weale of this Kingdome. And because it is likely that the disorders and distractions which have happened of late, have been occasioned through the conceived fears of innovation of religion and laws, and not ont of any disloyalty or disaffection to Sovereignty: We are graciously pleased absolutely to forget what is past, and freely to forgive all by-gones to all such as shall acquiesce to this Our gracious pleasure, and carry themselves peaceably as loyall and dutifull Subjects, and shall ratific and approve the same in Our next ensuing Parliament. And that this Assembly may have the better successe, and more happy conclusion, Our will is that there be a solemn fast proclaimed and kept by all Our good Subjects of this kingdome, a fourteen daies before the beginning of the said Assembly: the causes thereof to be a begging a blessing from God upon that Assembly, and a peaceable end to the distractions of this church and kingdome, with the aversion of Gods heavie judgement from both. And our pleasure is that this fast be kept in the most solemn manner as hath been in this Church at any time heretofore upon the most extraordinary occasion.

OUR WILL is herefore, and we charge you straitly and command, that incontinent these our letters seen, ye passe, and make publication hereof by open proclamation at the market crosses of the head burrows of this kingdome, where-through none pretend ignorance of the same.

Ginen at our court of Oatlands, the ninth day of September, 1638.

65. *A Direction by Covenanters for Presbyteries.**

1. That every Presbyterie have a copie of the Act made at Dundie the seventh of March 1597. concerning the number of Commissioners; the tenour whereof followeth:—

Because there hath beene no order hitherto anent the number of Commissioners to be directed from everie Presbyterie to the Generall Assemblie, therefore it is statuted and ordained, that in all time coming three of the wisest and gravest of the Brethren shall be directed from everie Presbyterie at the most, as Commissioners to everie Assemblie and that none presume to come without Commission: And likewise, that one bee directed from everie Presbyterie in name of the Barons, and one out of everie Burgh, except Edinburgh, which shall have power to direct two Commissioners to the Generall Assemblie.

2. That everie Presbyterie have a copie of the Commission, to be given to the Commissioners; the tenour thereof followes.

T. T. the day of The which day after calling upon the name of God, We the members of the Presbyterie of having diligently considered the manifold corruptions, innovations, and disorders, disturbing our peace, and tending to the overthrow of our Religion, and Liberties of the reformed Church within this Realme; which hath come to passe, especially through the want of the necessaric remedie of Generall Assemblies, as well ordinarie as pro re nata, enjoyned by this Church for many yeares, and ratified by Act of Parliament, And now expecting shortly by the mercie of God the benefit of a free Generall Assemblie, do by these presents nominate and appoint Minister of as also in name of the Burrowes, conjunctly and severally our lawfull Commissioners, giving and granting unto them our full power, Commission, and expresse charge, to repaire to the said Assemblie at the day and place, when and where it shall happen to sit, in any safe and commodious place within this Kingdome, and there with the rest who shall be authorised with lawfull Commission, in our name to propone, treat, reason, vote, and conclude, according to the word of God, and confessioun of faith approved by sundrie Generall Assemblies, and received throughout the whole Kingdome in all Ecclesiasticall matters, competent to a free Generall Assemblie, and tending to the advancement of the Kingdome of Christ, and the good of Religion, as they will answer to God, and his Church thereupon, and to report to us their diligence therein. In testification of this our Commission and charge, we have subscribed these presents with our hands, and which they have accepted with the lifting up of their hands.

3. That everie Church Session send one of the most qualified Elders unto the Presbyterie the day of choosing Commissioners to the Generall Assemblie: That by common consent of the Ministers and those Elders present in the Presbyterie, there may bee chosen both the Commissioners for the Ministers, and also some well affected and qualified Nobleman, or special Gentleman, being an Elder of some particular Church Session within that Presbyterie, in name of the Barons: For this is the constitution of the Presbyteries, (otherwise called Elderships) appointed by the Church in the books of discipline, Acts of the Generall Assemblie, practised for many yeares after the reformation, and ratified in the Parliament, the twelfth of King James the 6. and never since altered nor rescinded; neither can be with reason altered, seeing that same is the constitution of the supreme and Generall Assemblies, and of the inferiour and Church Sessions, as is at more length cleared by some reasons.

4. That such as are erroneous in doctrine, or scandalons in life, be presently processed, that they be not chosen Commissioners; and if they shall happen to be chosen by the greater part, that all the best affected, both Ministers and Elders, protest and come to the Assemblie to testifie the same.

5. To send to everie Presbyterie a copie of the printed reasons for an Assemblie.

6. That Moderators by vertue of their office bee not Commissioners to the Assemblie, except they be chosen.

7. That the Presbyteries in one of the ordinarie meetings, appoint to conveene solemnely after the twentieth of September, either upon the 21. 22. 23. 24. or 25. for chusing of their Commissioners to the Assemblie, and for to send them hither to Edinburgh before the first of October, or so soonc as they can, that with common consent, they may receive the Kings last answer, and advise upon the next lawfull remedies, in their extreme necessities of Church and State.

That in the Fast to be observed on the sixteenth day of September, the second day preceding their election, they may crave God's direction therein.

Apud Holy-rood-house Septemb. 22. 1638.

The which day James Marquesse of Hamiltoun His Majesties Commissioner, produced and exhibited before the Lords of Privie Councell, the two Missive underwritten, signed by the Kings Maiesitie, and directed to the said Lords, which being read, heard and considered by the said Lords, They have ordained, and ordaines the same to be inserted and registred in the books of secret Councell, therein to remaine ad futuram rei memoriam, whereof the tenour followeth.

CHARLES R.

Right trusty, &c. being certainly informed that the distractions which have happened of late, (both in Church and Commonwealth) in this Our ancient Kingdome of Scotland, have much troubled the minds of many of Our good and loyall subiects; and that these distractions have beene occasioned upon jealousies and feares of innovation of Religion and Lawes, as tending to the introduction of Poperie, and not without some suspition as if Wee Our selfe were inclined that way; Upon occasion whereof, many of Our subjects have of late subscribed a band or Covenant for preserving the true Religion and Lawes already established, and for defending the Kings person, and each others, in defense thereof: But the same not being warranted by Royall authority (as that which was in Our deare Fathers time) must needs of it selfe be ineffectuall, and much prejudiciall to the ancient Forme and Custome of government kept within that Our Kingdome of Scotland: Wherefore Wee, out of Our inborne love to Our said native Countrie, and for obviating these conceived feares, and satisfying of you and all Our loving people, have thought good to ordaine the Confession of Faith, and band subjoynd thereto, of the date at Edinburgh, Januarie 23. 1580. and signed by Our Royall Father to bee renewed: And to that effect have given Order to Our Commissioner, with advice of Our Councill, to set downe and settle some solid course, whereby the same may be subscribed by Our Councill, Judges, Magistrates of Burroughes, and all other Our people of that Kingdome. And for further clearing of Our selfe, Wee declare, That as We are and ever have bene satisfied in Our judgment and conscience for the reformed Religion now established, and against the Roman: so Wee purpose, by Gods grace, both to live and die in the practice thereof, and to preserve and maintaine the same in full strength and integritie, according to the Lawes of that Our ancient Kingdome. What We have thought further fitting to be done at this time, concerning the particulars contayned in Our subjects petitions; you shall receive Our full pleasure therein from Our Commissioner. And that this Our Declaration concerning Our selfe, and Our pious intention, for settling the Reformed Religion within that Our Kingdome may appeare to posteritie. Our pleasure is, that these presents be registred in the Books of Councell.

The Lords of secret Councell having read and maturely considered his Majesties letters, and particular declaration of his pleasure anent the annulling of the Service Book, book of canons, and high Commission, discharging the pressing of the practice of the five Articles, making all persons Ecclesiastick and Civill, of what title or degree soever, lyable to the triall and censure of Parliament, general Assembly, & other judicatories competent, anent the not administrating to ministers at their entry any other oath than that which is contained in the act of Parliament anent the subscribing and renewing the confession of faith, subscribed by his Majesties Father of blessed memory, and his household, in Anno 1580. and hand following thereupon, anent the indiction of a generall Assembly, to be holden at Glasgow the 21. day of November 1638, and Parliament at Edinburgh the 15 of May, 1639. and anent his gracieous goodnesse in forgetting and forgiving all by-gones, and indiction of a fast for craving of God's blessing to this Assembly; finde themselves so fully satisfied therewith, and the same to be so satisfactorie for removing all the fears of the subjects anent innovation of religion or laws, that we hold our selves bound in dutie, not only to acquiesce therewith, as the best mean to secure both religion and laws, but also to use our best endeavours, that all his Majesties good subjects may likewise rest satisfied therewith. And that they with us, and we with them, may testifie our thankfulness for so great a grace and goodnesse with all the hearty expressions of dutifullnesse and loyalty, and that our true sense hereof may the more clearly appear to our Sacred Sovereigne; We do by these humbly and heartily make offer of our lives and fortunes in the defending and assisting of his Majesties sacred person and authority; in the maintenance of the foresaid religion and confession, and repressing of all such as shall hereafter presse to disturbe the peace of this Kirk and Kingdome.

71. The Protestation of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrowes, Ministers, and Commons, the 22. September 1638 [after the reading of the Proclamation dated September 9.]*

Wee Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons, his Majesties true and loyall subjects, That whereas our continuall supplications, complaints, articles, and informations, presented, first, to the Lords of his Majesties Privie Councell; next, to his sacred Majestie, and last, from time to time to his Majesties Commissioner, our long attendance and great patience this twelve-month bygone, in waiting for satisfaction of our most just desires, our zeale to remove all rubs out of the way, which were either mentioned unto us, or could be conceived by us, as hinderances of our pious intentions, aiming at nothing but the good of the Kingdome, and preservation of the Kirk, which by consumption or combustion is likely to expire; delighting to use no other meanes but such as are legall, and have bene ordinarie in this Kirk since the reformation, and labouring according to our power and interesse, that all things might be carried in a peaceable manner, worthy of our Profession and Covenant, our Protestation containing a hearty thanksgiving for what his Majesty in his Proclamation from his justice had granted of our just desires, and our Protests and hopes for so much as was not as yet granted: All these made us confidently to expeet from his Majesties royall and ecompassioned disposition towards this his native Kingdome, that a free Generall Assembly and Parliament should have bene indicted, as the ordinary and most proper remedies of our grievanees, and did constraîne us to renew our petition, earnestly intreating that his Majesties Commissioner would be pleased to represent unto his Majesty the condition of this Kirk and Kingdome, crying in an extreme exigencie for present help, with the lawfulnessse of the remedies prescribed by his Majesties Lawes, required by us, and presented to him in some partieular Artieles, which his Grace promised to recommend to his Majestie, and to doe his best endeavours for obtaining the same; especially the first Artiele, that there might be indicted a full and free Generall Assembly, without prelimitation, either in the constitution and members thereof, in the order and manner of proceeding, or in the matters to be treated: And if there should be any question or doubt about one of these, or such like particulars, that the determination thereof might be remitted to the Assembly it selfe, as the only proper and competent Judge. And now, after so many supplications, complaints, articles, and informations; after our necessary protestation, expressing the humble thankfulnessse and continued desires of our hearts; after so long expectation, and so much dealing, having with open eares and attentive minds, heard his

Majesties Proclamation, It is our desire, purpose, and endeavour so to proceed, that we may upon the one part still be thankfull to God and the King for the least blinke of his Majesties countenance, and the smallest crums of comfort that fall unto us from his Majesties Royall hands; beseeching the Lord yet farther to enlarge his Majesties heart, for our full satisfaction and rejoicing, to the honour of God, the good of this Kirk and Kingdome, and his Majesties never dying fame and glory; that his wise government and zeale to the service of God may be a measure and patterne of desires to all generations hereafter, when they shall be wishing for a religious and righteous King: And on the other part, that Christ our Lord, the King of kings, through our neglect or luke-warmnesse may want no part of his Sovereignty and Dominiou, and that in our Religion, which is more dear unto us then our lives, we deceive not our selves with that which cannot satisfie and make up the breach of this Kirke and Kingdome, or remove our feares, doubts, and suspicions of the innovations of Religion: This hath made us to observe and perceive, that his Majesties Proclamation doth ascribe all the late distractions of this Kirke and Common-wealth to our conceived feares of the innovation of Religion and Law, as the cause and occasion thereof, and not to the innovations themselves, with which we have bene for a long time, and especially of late, heavily pressed and grieved; as if the cause were rather in apprehension and fancie, then in reality and substance. That the Service book and booke of Canons are not so far discharged by this Proclamation, as they have bene urged by preceding Proclamations; for this Proclamation onely dischargeth the practice of them, and rescinds the Acts made for establishing their Practise, but doth not rescind the former Proclamations, namely, that of the 19 of February at Stirling, and that of the fourth of July at Edinburgh, which give an high approbation to these Books, as fit meanes to maintaine Religion, and to beat down all superstition; and withall declares his Majesties purpose, to bring them into this Kirk in a faire and legall way: And thus both our feares that they may be introduced hereafter, must still remaine; and the libertie of the Generall Assembly by such a Declaration of his Majesties judgement, is not a little prejudged in the minds of so many as wisely consider and compare the preceding Proclamations with this which we now heare, although others who looking upon one step and not upon the whole progresse, run on rashly, and neither considering what they are doing, nor with whom they are dealing, may be easily deceived Qui pauca videt, citò judicat, a short sight maketh a sudden judgement.

That it is declared in this Proclamation, That his Majesty neither intendeth to innovate any thing in Religion or Lawes, or to admit of any change or alteration in the true Religion already established and professed in this Kingdome: and withall, this is interposed, That the articles of Pearth are established by the acts of Parliament and generall Assembly, and dispensation of the practice only granted, and discharge given, that no person be urged with the practice thereof; and consequently, his Majesties intention for the standing of the Acts of the Assembly and Parliament, appointing the Articles of Pearth, is manifest; which is no small prejudice to the freedome of the Generall Assembly, That while the Proclamation ordaineth all his Majesties subjects to be liable to the triall and censure of the judicatories competent, and that none of them shall use any unlimited and unwarranted power; likewise that no other oath be administred to Ministers at their entrie, then that which is contained in the Act of Parliament; in both these Articles the Bishops are meaned, who are only thereby for the present curbed, against their exorbitancie and enormities in exercising their office: but the office of Bishops is thereby not only presupposed as unquestionable, but also so strongly established, that his Majestic declareth, for the present, his intention, to admit no innovatiou therein: which is more evident by the indiction of the Parliament, warning all Prelats to be present, as having voice and place in Parliament; and by the indiction of the Assembly, warning all Archbishops and Bishops (for so are their divers degrees and offices Ecclesiasticall here designed and supposed) to be present, as having place and voyce in the Assembly, contrary to the caveats, acts of the Kirk, and our declinator: And thus a third and great limitation is put upon the Generall Assembly. The Proclamation, by reason of these many reall limitations, and prejudices of the liberty of the Assembly in the very points which have wrought so much woe and disturbance in this Kirk and Kingdome, and wherein the liberty of the Assembly is most usefull and necessary at this time, can neither satisfie our grievances and complaints, nor remove our feares and doubts, nor cannot (without protestation) be admitted by us his Majesties subjects, who earnestly desire that Truth and Peace may be established; and that for the reasons following:—

1. To keepe silence in any thing that may serve for the good of the Kirk, whether it be in preaching, prayer, or in proposing and voyceing in a lawfull Assembly of the Kirke, is against the word of God. Esai. 62. 6. "Yee that are the Lords remembrancers, keepe not silence, and give him no rest till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." 1. King. 18. 21. "Like the halting of the people betweene two opinions, and their not answering a word, when the Lord called them to give a testimony." Act. 20. 20. "I have kepted backe nothing that was profitable unto you:" and againe 1 Cor. 12. 7. Mat. 15. 18. Rom. 1. 18. Revel. 2. 14. 20. and 3. 15: and therefore to keepe silence, or not to meddle with corruptions, whether in doctrine, sacraments, worship or discipline, in a generall Assembly of the Kirk, convened for that end, were the ready way to move the Lord to deny his Spirit unto us, and to provoke him to wrath against our proceedings, and might be imputed unto us for prejudice, for collusion, and for betraying our selves and the posterity.

2. This predetermination is against our supplications and protestations, wherein we have showned ourselves so earnest for a free generall Assembly, contrary to every limitation of this kind; so far prejudging the liberty thereof, is against the Confession of Faith registrated in the Parliament 1567, declaring that one cause of the Councils of the Kirk is for good policie and order to be observed in the Kirk, and for to change such things as men have devised when they rather foster superstition then edifie the Kirke, using the same; and is against our late Confession, wherein we have promised to forbear all novations till they be tryed, which obligeth us to forbear now, and to try them in an Assembly, and by all lawfull meanes to labour to recover the former purity and liberty of the Gospel, to which this limitation is directly repugnant, our liberty in a Generall Assembly being the principall of all lawfull meanes serving to that end.

3. This were directly contrary to the nature and ends of a generall assembly, which having authority from God, being convened according to the lawes of the Kingdome, and receiving power from the whole collective body of the Kirke, for the good of Religion, and safety of the Kirke; whatsoever may conduce for these good ends in wisdom and modesty should be proponed, examined, and determined without Prelimitation, either of the matters to be treated, or of the liberty of the members thereof. It being manifest, that as farre as the assembly is limited in the matters to be treated, and in the members to be used, the necessary ends of the Assembly, and the supreme Law, which is the safety of the Kirke, are as far hindered, and pre-judged.

This limitation is against the Discipline of the Kirke, which Booke 2. chap. 7. declareth this to be one of her liberties, That the Assembly hath power to abrogate and abolish all Statutes and ordinances concerning Ecclesiasticall matters that are found noysome and unprofitable, and agree not with the time, or are abused by the people, and against the acts of the generall assembly. Like as the pretended Assembly 1610. declareth for the common affaires of the Kirk (without exception or limitation) it is necessary that there bee yearly generall Assemblies, And what order can be hoped for hereafter, if this assembly indicted after so long intermission, and so many grosse corruptions be limited, and that more than ever any lawfull Assembly of the Kirk was, when it was yearly observed.

5. It is ordained in Parl. 11. act 40. K. James 6. anent the necessary and lawfull forme of all Parliaments that nothing shall be done or commanded to be done, which may directly or indirectly pre-judge the liberty of free voicing or reasoning of the Estates, or any of them in time coming. It is also appointed in Parl. 6. act 92. K. James 6. that the Lords of Counsell and Session proceed in all civil causes intended or depending before them, or to be intended, to cause execute their decrees notwithstanding any private writing, charge, or command in the contrary, and generally by the acts of Parliament appointing every matter for its owne judicatorie, and to all judicatories their owne freedome. And therefore much more doth this liberty belong to the supreme judicatory ecclesiastick in matters so important as concerneth Gods honour and worship immediately, the salvation of the peoples Soules, and right constitution of the Kirk whose liberties and priviledges are confirmed Parl. 12. K. James 6. Parl. 1. K. Charles, for if it be carefully provided by diverse Acts of Parliament, especially Parl. 12. act 148. King James 6. That there be no forstalling or regrating of things pertaining to this naturall life: What shall be thought of this spirituall forstalling and regrating which tendeth to the famishing or poysoning of the soules of the people both now and in the generations afterward.

6. It were contrary to our Protestations, proceedings and complaints against the late innovations. And it might be accounted an innovation and usurpation as grosse & dangerous to us, & the posterity, and as prejudiciall to Religion as any complained upon by us, to admit limitations, and secret or open determinations, which belongeth to no person or judicatory, but to an Assembly, Or to consent to, and approve by our silence the same predeterminations, It were to be guilty of that our selves, which we condemn in others. We may easily judge how the Apostles before the Councell of Jerusalem, the Fathers before the Nicene Councell, and our Predecessors before the assembly holden at the Reformation, and afterwards, would have taken such dealing.

That this Proclamation commandeth all his Majesties Subjects for maintenance of the Religion already established to subscribe and renew the Confession of Faith subscribed before in the year 1580 and afterward. And requireth the Lords of privy Counsell to take such course anent the same, and the generall Baud of Maintenance of the true Religion, and the Kings person, that it may be subscribed, and renewed throughout the whole Kingdome with all possible diligence, which cannot now be performed by us. For although of late we would have been glad that our selves and other his Majesties Subjects had been commanded by authority to sweare, and subscribe the generall Confession of Faith against Popish errors, and superstitions: and now would be glad that all others should ioyn with us in our late Covenant & Confession, descending more especially to the novations and errors of the time, and obliging us to the defence of Religion; and of the Kings Maiesties person, and authority, and for these ends to the mutuall defence every one of us of another, Yet can we not now after so necessary, and so sollemne a specification returne to the generall for the reasons following.

1. No means have been left unassayed against our late Confession of Faith and Covenant so sollemly sworn and subscribed. For first we were prest with the rendering and rescinding of our Covenant. Next an alteration in some substantiall points was urged. 3. A Declaration was motioned, which tended to the enervation thereof, and now we finde in the same strain, that we are pnt to a new triall, and the last mean is used more subtile than the former: That by this new subscription our late Covenant, and Confession may be quite absorbed and buried in oblivion, that where it was intended & sworn to be an everlasting Covenant never to be forgotten, it shall be never more remembered, the one shall be cryed up, and the other drowned in the noise thereof, And thus the new subscription now urged (although in a different way) shall prove equivalent to the rendering of the Covenant, or what of that kinde hath before been assayed. Like as the reasons against the rendring of the Covenant, doe militate directly against this new motion.

2. If we should now enter upon this new Subscription, we would thiuk our selves guilty of mocking God, & taking his Name in vain, for the tears that began to be powred forth at the solemnizing of the Covenant are not yet dried up and wiped away, and the joyfull noise which then began to sound hath not yet ceased, and there can be no new necessity from us, and upon our part pretended for a ground of urging this new subscription, at first intended to be an abjuration of Popery upon us who are knowne to hate Popery with an unfained hatred, and have all this yeare bygone given large testimony of our zeale against it. As we are not to multiply miracles on Gods part, so ought we not to multiply sollemne oathes and Covenants upon our part, and thus to play with oathes, as children doe with their toyes, without necessity.

3. Neither would we in giving way to this new subscription think our selves free of perjury: for as we were driven by an undeclinable necessity to enter into a mutuall Covenant, so are we bound, not only by the law of God and nature, but by our sollemn oath and subscription, against all divisive motions to promove and observe the same without violation: and it is most manifest, that having already refused to render, alter, or destroy our Covenant, nothing can be more contrary and adverse to our pious intentions and sincere resolutions, than to consent to such a subscription and oath, as both in the intention of the urgers, and in the nature and condition of the matter urged, is the ready way to extinguish, and to drowne in oblivion the Band of our union and conjunction that they be no more remembred. In this case we are called to lay seriously to our hearts, 1, That we have sworne that we shall neither directly, nor indirectly suffer our selves to be divided and withdrawne from this blessed and loyall conjunction, which consisteth not only in the generall Confession, but also in our explanation, & application thereof, but on the contrary, shal by all lawfull means, labour to further and promote the same. 2. That our union and conjunction may be observed without violation, (and so without mutilation of our applicatiou) we call the living LORD to wnesse, as we shall answer to Christ in the great Day, &c.

4. This new subscription, instead of performing our vows, would be a reall testimonie and confession before the World, That we have been transgressours, in making rash vows, that we repent our selves of former zeal and forwardnesse against the particulars exprest first in our Supplications, Complaunts, and Protestations, and next abjured in our Covenant, that we in our judgement prefer the generall Confession unto this, which necessarily was now made more speciall; and that we are now under the faire pretext and honest cover of a new oath, recanting & undoing that, which upon so mature deliberation we have been doing before. This beside all other evils, were to make way and open a door to the re-entry of the particulars abjured, and to repent our selves of our chiefest consolations, and to lie both against God and our owne soules.

5. It hath been often objected, that our Confession of Faith, & Covenant was unlawfull, because it wanted the warrants of publick authority, and it hath been answered by us, that we were not destitute of the warraut civill and ecclesiasticall which authorized the former Covenant. And although we could have wished that his Ma<sup>ty</sup> had added both his subscription & authority unto it, yet the lesse constraint from authority and the more liberty, the lesse hypocrisie, and more sincerity hath appeared: But by this new subscription urged by authority we both condemn our former subscription as unlawfull, because allcaded to be done without authority, and precondemn also the like laudable course in the like necessity to be taken by the posterity.

6. What is the use of merch-stones upon borders of Lands, the like use hath Confessions of Faith in the Kirk, to distermine and divide betwixt Truth and error: and the renewing and applying of Confessions of Faith to the present errors and corruptions, are not unlike ryding of merches. And therefore to content our selves with the generall, and to return to it, from the particular application of the Confession necessarily made upon the iuvasion or creeping in of errors within the borders of the Kirk, if it be not a removing of the merch stone from its own place, it is at least the hiding of the merch in the ground that it be not seen, which at this time were very unseasonable for two causes. One is, because Popery is so pregnant, and powerful in this land, as we have learned of late. The other, because the Papists who upon the urging of the Service book & Canons, have presumed of our return to Rome, will upon this our subscription arise from their dispareing of us, unto their wonted presumption. None of us will deny, but the large Confession of Faith registrated in the Acts of Parliament, doth by consequence contain this short confession and abjuration: Yet were it not sufficient against Popery to subscribe the one without the other:

how then shall we think that the more generall Confession & abjuration at this time, when the urging of such Popish books hath extorted from us so necessary an application, and doth still call for a testimony, to be compleat enough without it.

7. The Papists shall hereby be occasioned to renew their old objection against us, Annus & menstruas files de Deo decernunt, That our Faith ehangeth with the Moon, or once in the yeere. Other reformed Kirks might justly wonder at our inconstauey in changing our Confession without any reall necessity, and that in one and the same year it cometh forth larger, & more particular, then shorter, & more generall: & our Adversaries will not fail to traduce us as troublers of the peace of the kirk & kingdom without any necessar cause.

8. It will likewise prove a confirmation of their error, who think they may both subscribe the Confession of Faith, and receive the Service book, and Canons, which is not only a direct scandaling of them, but also a ready way to put a weapon in their hands against our selves, who maintain and professe that these and such other evils are abjured in the Confessiou of Faith.

9. If we should now sweare this Confession, we should be obliged by our oath to maintain Perth articles, which are the innovatious already introduced in the worship of God, and to maintain Episcopacy, with the civill places, and power of Kirkmen. Because we are bound to swear this Confession by vertue of & conform unto the Kings command signed by his sacred Majesty of the date September 9. 1638. (These are the very words subioyned to the Confession and Band, and prefixed to the Subscriptions) and it cannot be denied, but any oath ministred unto us, must either be refused, or else taken according to the kuown mind, professed intention, and expresse command of Authority urging the same: And it is most manifest, that His Maiesties minde, intention, and Commandement, is no other, but that the Confession be sworne, for the maintenance of religion, as it is already or presently professed, (these two being coincident, altogether one and the same, not only in our common form of speaking, but in all His Maiesties Proclamations) and thus as it includeth, and couteineth within the compasse thereof, the foresaid novations and Episcopacy, which under that name were also ratified, in the first Parliament holden by his Majesty. And where it may be objected, that the Counsellors have subscribed the Confession of Faith, as it was professed 1580. and will not urge the Subscription in another sense upon the Subjects. We answer, First, the Act of Counsell containing that declaration, is not as yet published by Proclamation. Secoudly, if it were so published, it behooved of necessity either be repugnant to His Maiesties declared Iudgement and Command, which is more nor to sweare without warrand from Authority (a fault although unjustly, often objected unto us) or else we must affirme the Religion in the year 1580. and at this time to be altogether one and the same; and thus must acknowledge, that there is no novation of Religion, which were a formall contradiction to that we have sworne. 3. By approving the Proclamation anent the Oath to be administred to Ministers, according to the Act of Parliament, which is to sweare simple obedience to the Diocesan Bishop, and by warning all Archbishops and Bishops to be present; as having voice and place in the Assembly: They seem to determine, that in their Iudgement the Confession of Faith, as it was professed 1580. doth consist with Episcopacy, whereas We by our oath have referred the tryall of this or any other question of that kinde to the generall Assembly & Parliament.

10. This subscription and oath in the mind & intention of authority, & consequently in our swearing thereof may consist with the corruptions of the Service book & Canons, which we have abjured as other heads of Popery: For both this present proclamation, and his Majesties former proclamations at Linlithgow, Striveling, Edenburgh; The Lords of privy Counsell in their approbation of the same; and the prelates and doctors who stand for the Service book & Canons, Doe all speak plainly, or import so much, That these bookes are not repugnant to the Confession of Faith; and that the introducing of them is no novation of religion or law: And therefore wee must either refuse to subscribe now, or we must confesse contrary to our late Oath, and to a cleare Truth, That the Service book and Canons are no innovations in Religion. And, though the present bookes be discharged by proclamation, yet if we shall by any deed of our own testifie, that they may consist with our Confession of Faith, within a very short time, either the same bookes, or some other like unto them, with some small change, may be obtruded upon us, who by our abiuration (if we adhere unto it) have freed both our selves, and the posterity of all such corruptions, and have laid a faire foundation for the pure worship of God in all time comming.

11. Although there be indeede no substantiall difference between that which We have subscribed, & the Confession subscribed 1580. more than there is between that which is hid, and that which is revealed; A march stoue hid in the ground, and uncovered, betwixt the hand closed and open, betwixt a sword sheathed and drawne, or betwixt the large Confession, registrat in the Acts of Parliament, and the short Confession, or (if we may with reuerence ascend yet higher) between the Old Testament & the New, yet as to sheath our sword when it should be drawn, were imprudency, or at the commandement of Princes, professedly Popish in their dominions, after the Subiects had subscribed both Confessions, to subscribe the first without the second, or at the will of a Jewish Magistrate, openly denying the New Testament, to subscribe the Old alone, after that they have subscribed both, were horrible impiety against God, and Treachery against the Truth: Right so, for Vs to subscribe the former a-part, as it is now urged and framed, without the explanation and application thereof at this time, when ours is reiected; and the subscribers of the former refvse to subscribe ours, as containing something substantially different, and urge the former upon us, as different from ours, and not expressing the speciall abiuration of the euils, supplicated against by us, were nothing else, but to deny and part from our former subscription, if not formally, yet interpretatively. Old Eleazar, who would not seeme to eat forbidden meate, and the Confessors and Martyrs of old, who would not seeme by delivering some of their papers, to render the Bible, or to deny the Truth, may teach us our duty in this case, although our lives were in hazard for refusing this Subscription: And whoknoweth but the LORD may be calling His peoplenow, who have proceeded so far in professing His Truth at this time, to such Trials and Confessions, as His faithfull witnesses have given of old; that in this point also our doing may be a document both to the succeeding ages, and to other Kirks, to whom for the present we are made a spectacle.

12. If any be so forgetfull of his oath (which God forbid) as to subscribe this Confession, as it is now urged, he doth according to the proclamation acquiesce in this declaration of his Majesties will, and doth accept of such a pardon as hath need to be ratified in Parliament, And thus doth turne our glory unto shame, by confessing our guiltinesse, where God from Heaven hath made us guiltlesse, and by the fire of His Spirit from Heaven hath accepted of our service, And doth depart from the commandement of God, the practise of the Godly in former times, and the worthy and laudable example of our worthy and religious progenitours, in obedience whereof, and conform to which, We made profession to subscribe: for there is no particular Act required of us, to whom the pardon is presented in this proclamation, but this new subscription allanerlie.

13. The generall band now urged to be subscribed, as it containeth many clauses not so fitting the present time as that wherein it was subscribed, so is it deficient in a point, at this time most necessary, Of the reformation of our lives, that we shall answerably to our profession, be examples to others, of all Godliness, sobernesse and righteousnesse and of every duty we owe to God and man, without which we cannot uow subscribe this Confession, least we loose the bands to wickednesse, seem to repent of our former resolutions and promises, and choose to have our portion with hypocrites, professing and swearing that we know God, but in our workes denying him, being abominable, disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

14. Since the narrative of the generall band is now changed, & some lines, expressing at length the Papists, and their adherents to be the partie from whom the danger to Religion, and the Kings Majestie was threatned, are left out, and no designation made of the partie from whom the danger is now threatned, We are made either to think, that our subscription at this time is unnecessarie, or to suspect that we who have supplicated and entred in Covenant, are understood to be the partie, especially since the Lords of Councell have in the Act Septemb. 22. ratifying the Proclamation, found themselves bound to use their best endeavours, that all his Majesties good subjects may rest satisfied with his Majesties Declaration, since also we have bene (although undeservedly) challenged of disorders, distractions, and dangers to Religion, and his Majesties authority; and since in the foresaid Act, and in the missive directed to his Majestie, the Lords of Councell offer their lives and fortunes to his Majestie, in repressing all such as shall hereafter prease to disturbe the peace of this Kirk and Kingdome; which being expressed in a generalitie is by many applied to us, and interpreted of our adhering to our Coveuant; We should therefore, by our subscription of the Covenant, as it is now conceived, both do directly against our owne minds in condemning our selves, wherein we are innocent, and should consent to our owne hurt, to the suppressing of the cause which we maintaine, and to the repressing mutually one of us of another, directly contrarie to our former solemne Oath and subscription.

15. The subscribing of this Confession by the Lords of His Majesties privie Councell, who by their place and high employment are publike Peacemakers, and by others who have not subscribed the late Confession, will make the breach wider, and the lamentable division of this Kirk more desperate then ever before, some having sworne to labour by all lawfull meanes to recover the former Libertie, and puritie of Religion, and others maintaining that for puritie, which is already established; Some beleaving and professing, that the evils supplicated against, are abjured in that Confession of Faith, and others maintaining the Confession of Faith, and these corruptions (although for the present discharged by Authoritie) not to be inconsistent: and beside this, many divisions and subdivisions will ensue, to the dolefull renting of the Kirk and Kingdome, making way for the wrath and many judgements of God often threatned by his faithfull servants, which all the godly ought to labour by all meanes to prevent.

16. Wee represent also to the honourable Lords of privie Councell to be considered, That the Doctrine, Discipline, and Use of Sacraments are sworne, and the contrarie abjured, according to the Word of God, and the meaning of the Kirk of Scotland, in the Books of Discipline and Acts of Assemblies; And that in the Oath there is no place left to the generalitie of any mans conception of the true Faith and Religion, nor to any private interpretation, or mentall reservation.

For these and the like considerations, in our owne name, and in name of all who will adhere to the late Covenant, subscribed by Us, and sealed from Heaven, We (from our dutie to God, our King, our native Countrey, our selves, and the posteritie, lest our silence import a satisfaction of our desires, and a stopping of our mouths, from necessarie supplication, for things yet to be obtained from his Majesties just and gracious disposition), are constrained to declare and protest, First, That the cause and occasion of the distractions of the Kirk and common-wealth are no wayes to be imputed unto us, or our needlesse feares, but to the innovations and corruptions of Religion, which, against the acts and order of this Kirk, and the Lawes of the Kingdome, have beene pressed upon us the people of God, and his Majesties loyall Subjects; who, although under great thralldom, were living in peace and quietnesse, labouring in all godlinesse and honestie, to do our dutie to God and man. Secondly, We protest, that all questions and doubts that arise, concerning the freedome of the Assemblies, whether in the constitution and members thereof, or in the matters to be treated, or in the manner and order of proceeding, be remitted to the determination of the Assembly it selfe, as the onely proper and competent Judge, And that it shall be lawfull for us, being authorized with lawfull commissions, as at other times when the urgent necessitie of the Kirk shall require, so in this exigence to assemble our selves at the Diet appointed, notwithstanding any impediment or prorogation to the contrary. And being assembled, against all qualifications and predeterminations, or presuppositions, to propone, treat, reason, vote, and conclude, according to the Word of God, Confession of Faith, and Acts of lawfull Assemblies, in all Ecclesiasticall matters pertaining to the Assembly, and tending to the advancement of the Kingdome of Christ and good of Religion.

Thirdly, since Archbishops and Bishops have no warrand for their office in this Kirk, since it is contrary both to reason and to the Acts of the Kirk, that any have place and voice in the Assembly, who are not authorized with lawfull Commissions; and seeing both in common equitie, and by the tenour of this Proclamation they are made lyable to the triall and censure of the Assembly, Wee protest, that they be not present, as having place or voice in the Assembly, but as rei to compeere, for underlaying tryall and censure upon the generall complaints already made, and the particular accusations to be given in against them; And that the warning given by His Majesties Proclamation, and this our Pro-testation, bee a sufficient citation to them, to compeere before the Assembly, for their triall and censure in life, office, and benefice.

Fourthly, Wee solemnly protest that Wee do constantly adhere to our Oath and Subscription of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, lately renewed and approven, with rare and undeniable evidences from heaven, of the wonderfull workings of his Spirit, in the hearts both of Pastors and people, through all the parts of the Kingdome; And that we stand to all parts and clauses thereof, and particularly to the explanation and application, containing both our abjuration of, and our union against the particular evils and corruptions of the time; a dutie which the Lord at this time especially craveth at our hands.

Fifthly, We also Protest, that none of us who have Subscribed, and do adhere to our Subscription of the late Covenant, be charged, or urged, either to procure the subscriptions of others or to subscribe ourselves unto any other Confession or Covenant, containing any derogation therunto, especially that mentioned in the Proclamation, without the necessarie explanation and the application thereof already sworn by us for the reasons above expressed: And because, as we did in our former Protestation appeale from the Lords of His Majesties Councell, so do we now by these renew our solemne appeale, with all solemnities requisite, unto the next free Generall Assemblies and Parliameut, as the onely supreme nationall Judicatories competent, to judge of nationall causes and proceedings.

Sixthly, We protest, That no subscription, whether by the Lords of Councell or others, of the Confession mentioned in the Proclamation, and enjoined for the maintenance of Religion, as it is now already, or at this present time established and professed within this Kingdome, without any inovation of Religion or Law, be any manner of way prejudiciall to our Covenant, wherein we have sworn to forbear the practice of Novations already introduced, &c. till they be tryed in a free Assembly, And to labour by all lawfull meanes, to recover the puritie and libertie of the Gospel as it was established and professed before the foresaid Innovations: And in like manner, that no subscription foresaid be any derogation to the true and sound meaning of our worthy predecessours, at the time of their subscription in the yeer 1581. and afterward: Withall, warning and exhorting all men who lay to heart the cause of Religion, against the corruptions of the time & the present estate of things, both to subscribe the Covenant as it hath bin explained, & necessarily applied; and as they love the puritie and libertie of the Gospel, to hold back their hands from all other Covenants, till the Assembly now indicted be convened, & determine the present differences and divisions, & preserve this countrey from contrary oathes.

Seventhly, As his Majesties royall elemencie appeared in forgiving and forgetting what his Majestic conceiveth to be a disorder or done amisse in the proceeding of any; so are we very confident of his Majesties approbation, to the integrity of our hearts and peaceableness of our wayes and actions all this time past: And therefore Wee protest that we still adhere to our former complaints, protestations, lawfull meetings, proceedings, mutuall defences, &c. All which, as they have been in themselves lawfull, so were they to us, pressed with so many grievances in his Majesties absence from this native kingdome, most necessary, and ought to be regarded as good offices, and pertinent duties of faithfull Christians, loyall subjects, and sensible members of this Kirk and Common-wealth, as we trust at all occasions to make manifest to all good men, especially to his sacred Majestie, for whose long and prosperous government, that we may live a peaceable and quiet life in all godlinesse and honesty, We earnestly pray.

WHEREUPON a noble Earle, James Earle of Montrose, &c., in name of the Noblemen; M. Alexander Gibson, younger of Durie, in name of the Barons; George Porterfield Merchant Burgesse of Glasgow, in name of the Burrows; M. Harie Rollock Minister at Edinburgh, in name of the Ministers: and M. Archbald Johnstoun Reader hereof, in name of all who adhere to the Confession of faith and Covenant lately renewed within this Kingdome, tooke instruments in the hands of three Notars present, at the said Mercate Crosse of Edinburgh, being invironed with great numbers of the foresaid Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers, and Commons, before many hundred witnesses, and craved the extract thereof: And in token of their dutifull respect to his Majestie, confidence of the equitie of their cause, and innocencie of their carriage, and hope of his Majesties gracious acceptance they offered in all humilitie with submissee reverence a copie thereof to the Herauld.

At Holy-rood-house the 24. day of September Anno 1638.

The which day a Noble Earle, James Marquesse of Hamiltoun, Earle of Arran and Cambridge, his Majesties Commissioner, having produced and exhibit before the Lords of secret Councell, upon the twenty-second day of this instant, a warrant signed by his Majestie, of the date the ninth of September instant; wherein among others of his Majesties gracious and royall expressious for preservation of the purity of Religion, and due obedience to his Majesties authoritie in the maintenance thereof, his Majestie did will and ordaine that the Lords themselves should sweare the Confession and generall Band mentioned in his Majesties said warrant, and also should take such order as all his Majesties lieges may subscribe the same. And the said Lords of secret Councell, acknowledging his Majesties pious and gracious disposition and affection to the purity of Gods truth, did upon the 22. day of September instant, unanimously and with all humble, hearty, and sincere affection, sweare and subscribe the Confession of Faith, dated the second of March 1580. according as it was then profest within this Kingdome: Together with the foresaid generall Band dated in Anno 1589. And now to the effect that all his Majesties lieges may give the like obedience to his Majesties so pious desire, therefore the said Lords have ordained and ordaines all his Majesties lieges, of whatsoever estate, degree or qualitie, Ecclesiasticall or Civill, to sweare and subscribe the said Confession, dated the second of March 1580. and that according to the said date and teour thereof, as it was then profest within this Kingdome: Together with the said generall Band dated in Anno 1589. as they will answer at the contrarie upon their obedience. And ordaines Officers of Armes to passe to the market crosse of Edinburgh, and make publication hereof, and at all other places needfull, where-through none preteud ignorance of the same.

HAMILTON,

I have no time now to make my observations upon your Proceedings, therefore now I shall onely tell you that I approve them all, (in what concerns your part of them;) and that not onely so, but that I esteem it to be very great Service (as the times are.) This much I thought necessary at this time to encourage you in your Proceedings: my next shall be longer, yet this is enough to assure you that I am

Your assured constant Friend,

74. Letter from the King to the Council.†

Right trusty and right wel-beloved Cousin and Councellour, Right trusty and right well-beloved Cousins and Councellours, We greet you well: As by your Letter We finde how well you are satisfied with Our gracious pleasure, expressed in Our late Proclamation and Declaration; so We do expect the continuance of your care by your best indevours, to bring al Our good people to a true sense of Our Royal intention, and reall care of preferring and advancing the good and peace of that Church and Kingdome, which hath always been and still is one of Our chiefest cares. We give you hearty thanks for your affection and pains in this service, and do approve of your course in subscribing of the Confession and band, and order taken by you for publishing and requiring the like due and thankfull acceptance of Our gracious pleasure by all Our good subjects. And seeing the time of the Assembly doth now approach, We require you to attend diligently upon our Commissioner, untill the time appointed for the down sitting of the said Assembly, and further, to the finall ending thereof; that from time to time you may be assisting to him with your best opinions and advices, for preparing and digesting every thing that may conduce to bring this businesse, to be treated upon in the Assembly, to the wished peaceable and happy end. And although We will not doubt but that all Our good subjects will be carefull of every thing that may concern Us, or Our Sovereign Authority; yet because that at such publick and generall meetings, it is not to be expected that all mens dispositions will bee alike, and of one temper, We require you, and that in a more particular manner, according to the trust and confidence We have in your affections to Our Service, carefully to advert, that if any proposition shall be made, which may seem to derogate from Sovereignty, or that true estate of Monarchicall Government already established within that Kingdome, or which may impede the peaceable conclusion of this Assembly, that as good subjects and faithfull Councellours and servants to Us, you assist Our Commissioner to withstand the same to the uttermost of your power: To whom We will you to give absolute trust in every thing which he in Our name shall deliver or impart to you, or any of you, in publick or in private, And so we bid you farwell. From Our Honour of Hampton Court the first of October, 1638.

PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

Wee wer glade of the indiction of the anc asseubly, as the means to bring our complaints to ane end; and as wee promised for our part to doe our endenore, that all matters might be carried in a peaceable way, and no man troubled in any sorte till that tyme, so did wee certainlie expecte, that no violence or molestatione should haue beine wssed aganist aney of thosse quho had subscriued the last covenant; and zet, far contrarye to our expectation, are brought hither almost eurey houre griuous complaints from many of the people in diuerse pairts of the kingdome; that they are by the threttinges and oppin violenece of some statemen, and counsellers, and barrons, constrained to subseriue a confession of faithe and band; some with blind and doubting myndes, and others aganist ther conecienees, to the grate trouble of ther soules, and grate disturbance of the peace of the countrey, contrarye to suche peaceable preparations as should haue procedit a perfyte pacification at a generall asseu-bley. If wee had hard bot some complaints of this kind, wee wold haue spared both your Graces paines and our auen;
bot complaints being multiplied more and more,
wee could not bot of deutiey inake some representations therof to your Grace, that some coursse may be takin for present suppressing this so irreligious and vniust maner of doing; and for praeuenting the hard consequences that may ensew from people quho are thus pressed to subseriue aganist ther

Johuston:

1638.—October 3.

76, 77, 78. Answer thereto, and Correspondence.†

MY VERY GOOD LORD,

I haue received from your Lordsh: and other Noblemen a Letter, containing a complaint against the violence offered to diuers of his Majesties subjects, by States-men, Councillours, and others; and that complaint aggravated by your promising and undertaking, for your selfe and all your adherents, that no man should be troubled until the Generall Assembly; and your just expectatiou that the same course should haue beene held on the other side by Us.

For the former, I know not what States-men, Noblemen or Barons, your Lordsh: meanes; for naming none, I know not to whom I shall take my selfe; nor doe I know what violence and threatnings you mean. If you meane his Majesties Commissioners appointed by the King, they requiring his subjects to subscribe the old Confession and Covenant, by his authoritie now renewed, and re-monstrating unto them the danger they incurre by law in not obeying his Majesties commaundement,
I hope that cannot be called violence, but duty, the omission whereof must needs be a violation of,

and violence offered to his Majesties sacred autho-ritie: If other violences and threatnings they haue used, as your Lordsh: seemeth to intimate (for their obedience to his Majesties just authority, I am sure your Lordsh: will not call violence) they must answer for it, and shall whensoever your Lordsh:
shall make known the delinquents. But alas, my Lords, Tell me now in good earnest, whether you haue heard they haue used such violence in perswading this Covenant, as hath beene used by your adherents in inforcing of yours? Hath the bloud of Gods seruants, his holy Ministers, beene shed, wich bloud I am afraid keepeth the vengeance of God still hanging over this Land? Have men beene beaten, turned out of their livings and maintenance, reviled and excommunicated in the Pulpits, and a thousand more outrages acted upon them for not subscribing this Covenant? Have none who haue subscribed your Covenant, done it with blind and doubting minds? If they haue, I beseech your Lordsh: not to call his Majesties Councillours legall proceedings irreligious and unjust, untill you haue proved the pietie and justice of the proceedings of your owne adherents.

For the other, of your undertaking and promising for your parts, that no man should bee troubled till the Assembly, and expecting the like from us, truly
I am glad I haue it under your Lordships hands, for I think there are few houres of auy one day, since the indicting of the Asseu-bley, that from all parts of this Kingdome, I am not vexed with complaints of new processing of Ministers, new withholding of Ministers stipends unprocessed, heaue complaints of Miisters of your owne Covenant, that they are threatened, and that sharply and bitterly, for their declaring of their grieffe, in being barred of of their freedome in the election of their owne Commissioners to the Generall Assembly, and being borne downe by the multitude of Lay voices, and menaced because of their protesting against the same, the complaints of Ministers Non-Covenanters and Lay-Elders Non-Covenanters, chosen by their Sessions to assist at the election of the Commissioners from the Presbyteries, but turned baek for not haueing subscribed your Covenant, and reviled with bitter words for being so pert as to come thither; Is this the performance of promising, that no man shall be troubled till the Assembly? These are, indeed, preparatiuous very unfit to precede this Asseu-bley, they being so un-peaceable and like to take up much time, in discussing, at that great Meeting, the illegality of these elections. My Lord, the truth is, I shall be as carefull to see any wrong offered by his Majesties Commissioners (in urging his Majesties authoritie) punished, when I shall know the offencees and the offenders, as I am heartily grieved at the proceedings of your Associats: Here I am sure, his Ma<sup>ties</sup> Commissioners haue bin rather backward then forward, but so haue not your Lordsh: adhereuts bin; for they haue in very many places proclaimed your Protestation, where his Majesties Declaration hath not beene proclaimed. I hope your Lordsh: will pardon my uusuall prolixitie; for I confesse I am much troubled to see his Majesties good subjects led into such misconstructiones of his pious and religious intentions towards them, This my Letter, I pray your Lordsh: to communicate to the other Noble Lords, who subscribed that to me. To your selfe, and them, I pray your Lordsh: commend the true respects of

Your Lordsh:

HAMILTON.

*Letter from the Lords Covenanters to the Commissioner.**

PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

After your parting from us, we had knowledge from John Wilson Skipper, & sundry of his Passengers newly arrived, That, being at sea on his way from Holland hither, one of his Maties small ships of 3. Peeeces, came aboard & searched him for Armes & Ammunition, declaring they did the same by his Majesties Warrant. We doe not so much value the hazzard of any prejudice, as we are heartily grieved to find any such note of his Majesties displeasure, differencing us from his other subjects, when our own hearts and the Lord that searcheth them doth beare witness of our loyaltie and affection to his Majestie, especially to have found it now when we are made so secure, both by the hopes of obteyning from his Majesties favour, by your mediation, these ordinary and publike remedies that can fully settle this Church and State and by assurance from your Grace we should finde no such hard dealing, during the time of your employment amongst the subjects here, who trust in your care to prevent speedily the inconvenience of this, as you did in that other late particular anent the arrest of our horses in England. We thinke this advertisement sufficient to your Grace, who is wounded through our sides if wee suffer any thing in this time, being so farre interested to vindicate us from such prejudice, who doe acknowledge our selves to be servants.

MY LORD,

I have received a Letter this day signed by your Lordsh: and sundry other Noblemen, making mention, that one John Wilson Skipper, being on his way from Holland hither, was searched by one of his Majesties small ships. This is no new nor unaccustomed thing; for commonly the Captains of his Majesties ships during the time of being at sea, doe take notice what the loadings of all such ships are, as they meet with, who trade in the Channell; it being a prerogative that belongs to his Imperiall Crown: I am persuaded that your Lordsh: and the rest of my Lords cannot thinke, but if his Majestie had been desirous to have made stop of importation of Ammunition into this Kingdome this time past, but it would have been an easie matter for him to have effected; but so little hath he regarded this, as he hath not so much as taken notice of it: And yet it were no strange thing, if his Majestie should give direction to cause examine for what end so great store of Ammunition is imported into this Kingdome, and a little more narrowly to looke into our actions; when, by I know not whom, there hath been so much notice taken of such Ammunition, as his Majestie hath thought fit to send hither. For notwithstanding that your Lordsh: sayes we are made secure by the hopes of obtaining from his Majestie these remedies that can fully settle this Church and State, yet I may say courses are taken to put feares in his Majesties good subjects minds, by perswading of them that no such thing is intended: This does too too manifestly appeare by the watching and guarding his Majesties Castle, and many other courses; but of this I will write nothing, my intention being only to returne answer of what is writ to me: And therefore for your Lordsh: satisfaction I shall acquaint his Majestie with the contents of your letters, who will no doubt give such directions therein, as his good subjects will have no just cause of complaint: Whereas you have been pleased to say, that you have been assured by me, that you should receive no such hard dealing, during the time of my imployment; let mee desire you to consider this aright, and you will find it none; for neither was that ship stayed from proceeding on their intended voyage, nor anything taken from them, nor needs your Lordsh: to doubt that his Majestie will doe any thing (except our owne indiscretion provoke him) that may make appear to the world that he makes a difference betwixt us of this nation and his other subjects. Bee confident, my Lord, that my endeavours have, and doe tend to no other end, but to the glory of God, the honour of his sacred Majestie, and the preserving from ruine this poore distracted Kingdome; and that I have and shall labour to prevent all such accidents as may breed the least stop or hinderance of this wished event, which I hope and am confident that your Lordsh: and all those noble Lords who have signed this Letter to me, will take the same to heart; and then certainly you will not be so easily moved with such light and sleight reports: Nor will your Lordsh: thinke that either you or I can bee wounded by the order and command of so pious, mercifull, and so clement a Prince as is our dread Sovereigne, who hath showne himselfe to be so full of goodnesse, as we must of all men living prove the worst, if we be not thankfull to God, and him for it. This my letter your Lordsh: will be pleased to communicate to the rest who haue writ to me, and esteeme of me as

79. Explanation by the Bishop and Doctors of Aberdeen on signing the King's Covenant.†

First, we do heartily abhor and condemn all Errours truly Popish, for repugnant to the Holy Scripture, and consequently to the Uniform Doctrine of the Reformed Kirks, and to Our National Confession registered in Parliament An. 1567.

Secondly, we do no ways hereby abjure or condemn Episcopal Government, as it was in the days, and after the days, of the Apostles in the Christian Kirk for many hundred of years, and is now conform thereto restored in the Kirk of Scotland.

Thirdly, we do not hereby condemn nor abjure the Five Perth Articles, or any thing lawful of that sort, which shall be found by the Church conducible at any time for good Policy and Order, or which is practised by any sound Reformed Kirk.

Fourthly, we still hold to that Clause of our great National Confession, (chap. 20. art. 21.) that the General Councils, and consequently the National Kirk of Scotland, have no power to make any perpetual Law which God before hath not made.

Fifthly, by the adhering to the Discipline of the Reformed Kirk of Scotlaud, we mean not any immutability of that Presbyterial Government which was An. 1581. or of any other Humane Institution: but we do hereby understand that the Eeelesiastical Jurisdiction aud Discipline of the Kirk of Scotland doth not depend on the Pope of Rome, or any other Foreign Power; and hereby we do confess our constant Obedience to the Kirk of Scotland in all her lawful Constitutions.

* Sic in copy.—Ed.

Sixthly, we do not presume by this our personal Oath either to prejudge the liberty of the Kirk of Seotland, to change and reform this foresaid short Confession, in some ambiguities and obscure expressions thereof, whereupon some men have builded inconvenient Interpretations and Doctrines, or to exime our selves from Obediencce to the Kirk in that case.

Seventhly, by this our personal Oath we do not take upon us to lay any further Boud upon our Posterity, than the Word of God doth, recommending onely our Example to them, so far as they shall find it agreeable to Gods Word.

In this sense as is said, and not otherwise, do we subscribe the said Confession, and the general Bond annexed thereto, at Aberdeen Octob. 5. 1638.

80. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I Confess this last Dispatch does more put me to seek how to judge of the Affairs of that Kingdom, than any that I have yet received; for I did not think that you would have met with so much opposition within your bounds, since (as I thought) you past well over a greater difficulty, to wit, the Peevishness of the Council. The cause of this I judge to be, that you did not make so much opposition against the Protestation as it deserved, though (I believe) as much as you could. But one thing I desire you to send me the reason of, which is, why you have mingled the Protesters with my good Subjects, as Commissioners in most of all the Shires, for the proeuring of Subscriptions to my Bond: now it seems to me, that this will make the Covenanters oppose my Service with a shew of more Authority than otherwise they could, (and certainly you cannot but imagiue, that they must oppose that that they have protested against;) for, by this the ignorant Multitude may be brought to believe, that my Council have either admitted, or, at least, do not gainsay, the protestatiou: yet whether I be right in this or not, I will suspend my Judgment, even of my own Opiniou, until I hear from you. But one thing I will confidently affirm, that until most of the Council express themselves vigorously in detestation of this last damnable Protestatiou, never look for any Obediencce there. In the latter end of your letter, you are very eareful not to give them cause of Fears of my Preparations, or hindering theirs; yet in the middle persuade to hasten on Mine: now, besides that this seems to me a Contradiction I think that there is as mueh (if not more) danger now, that they should imagine I fear to displeas them, than to make them scar at my Preparations, or for stopping of theirs; for now that the pretext of Religiou is (I dare say) fully satisfied, fearful Proceeding now may hazard the loss of the little Party we have, by making them probably fear, that I either cannot or dare not maintain my own authority. But I doubt not your Dexterity and Diligence will help me to break through these difficulties; and so I rest

81. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I see by yours of the 27th of September, that the Malignity of the Covenanters is greater than ever, so that if you who are my true Servants do not use extraordinary Care and Industry, my Affairs in that Kingdom are likely rather to grow worse than better: therefore, you that do your endeavours accordingly deserve the more praise, and your opposers the more punishment; and in my mind this last Protestation deserves more than any thing yet they have done, for if raising of Sedition be Treason, this can be judged no less. And methinks, if the Colledge of Justiee have signed my Covenant, (which I hope they have, because I hear nothing in the contrary) it were no impossible thing to get them to doe me Justiee in this particular. And this I will say confidently, that until at least the Adherers to this last Protestation be declared Traitors, nothing will go as it ought in that Kingdom; I say this not to alter your course, but onely to shew you my opinion of the State of Affairs.

As for the danger that Episeopal Government is in, I do not hold it so much as you doe; for I believe that the number of those that are against Episeopaey (who are not in their hearts against Monarchy) is not so considerable as you take it.

And for this General Assembly, though I can expect no good from it, yet I hope you may hinder much of the ill; first, by putting Divisions among them concerning the Legality of their Eleetions, then by Protestations against their Tumultuous Proceedings. And I think it were not amiss if you could get their Freedom defined (before their Meeting,) so that it were not doue too much in their Favours. And I hope you will remember to weigh well the Propositions for the Assembly, and send them up to me with all convenient speed. I have seended your Letter to the Mayor of Newcastle for the freeing of these Horses, and have stopped all Provisions according to your advice at Hull; yet methinks now they may be avowed to go against those that will not rest satisfied with what you have lately done in my Name. But in this I assure you that I take your advice; and so I rest well instructed, but well satisfied with my ways. It is true that his Instructions were not totally according to our Grounds, but I made him alter (I am confident) as well in Judgment as Obedience; for upon discourse he much approved of my Alterations, confessing likewise, that you upon the place may find reason to make more; wherefore all is referred to you, as well what I answered as what not; so leaving and recommending him to your care, I come to answer your last Letters, with the account of which I am much more satisfied than your other Dispatch before: as likewise you have fully satisfied me in all my Queries, and in particular I confess clearly, you had reason to joyn the Covenanters with my honest Servants, for procuring of Subscriptions to my Bond, because I see the Council would have it so. But certainly it had been better otherwise, if you could have done it with their consent. In short, I am truly and fully satisfied with all your proceedings, so that you may be confident that I am Ministers.

Master William Scot Minister at Cowper, Master George Hammiltoun at Nuburne, Master Walter Grog at Balmerino, Master John Machgil Parson of Fliske, Master Andrew Blackhat at Aberlady.

Burgesses and Commons.

George Bruce of Carnoek, George Potterfield a Burgesse of Glasgow, John Smith, John Mill, Lawrence Henryson, Richard Maxwell, Burgesses of Edinburgh.

We, for our selves, and in name and behalfe of the rest of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons within this Realme of Scotland, subscribers of the Covenant, who are not chosen Commissioners to the Generall Assemblie, but who will assist and insist in this complaint with us, as faithfull Christians, as loyall subjects, and sensible members of this Church and Common-weale, having interest to pursue this popular action, in a speciall manner and an eminent degree, by which pursnit God may bee glorified, Christs Kingdome advanced, that the Church may bee restored to her privileges and liberties, and freed from manifold scandalls, from the corrupters of Doctrine with Poperie and Arminianisme, of the Sacraments with Superstition and Wilworship, and of the Discipline with tyrannie, and from the overthrowers of the peace of this Church and Kingdome by their usurpations and lies, their violent humours, and falsehood for their owne worldly ends, may be tried and censured accordingly, and so this Church and State made free from the present divisions and combustions, and restored to peace and unitie, both with God and amongst themselves, and that his Majesties religious disposition and honour may be cleared to all the world, by the triall and censure of those men who have fraudulently abused his Majesties name and authoritie by their trust and credit with his Majestic: Wee most earnestly make request, That whereas, by the Lawes of this Church and Kingdome, and by his Majesties last Proclamation, all his Majesties subjects, whether Ecclesiasticall or Civill, of whatsoever title or degree, if they have exercised an unlimited or unwarrantable power, They are declared and ordained to be liable to the triall and censure of the Generall Assemblie and Parliament, or to any other Judicatorie, according to the nature and qualitie of the offence, And whereas Master David Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Edinburgh, Master Thomas Sydserfe, pretended Bishop of Galloway, Master Walter Whitefoord pretended Bishop of Brien, Master James Wedderburne pretended Bishop of Dumblane, Master James Fairley pretended Bishop of Argyle, Master John Spotswood pretended Archbishop of Saint Andrewes, (having their residences or dwelling places within the bounds of this Presbyterie of Edinburgh,) Master Patrick Lyndsey pretended Archbishop of Glasgow, Master Alexander Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Dunkell, Master Adam Bannatine pretended Bishop of Aberdene, Master John Guthrie pretended Bishop of Murray, Master John Maxwell pretended Bishop of Rosse, Master George Greme pretended Bishop of Orkney, Master John Abernethie pretended Bishop of Caithnesse, Master Neil Campbel pretended Bishop of the Isles, should be tried and censured for their unlimited and unwarranted power.

For whereas it was provided in the Cautions agreed upon in the Generall Assemblie holden at Montrose, Anno 1600. for bounding of the Ministers votes in Parliament, and concluded to bee inserted in the body of the act of Parliament for confirmation of this vote as a most necessarie and substantiall point of the same, which was never yet repealed by a lawfull Assembly, That the Minister should swear, upon his admission to the office of Commissionary, to subscribe and fulfill the Cautions agreed upon under the penalties expressed therein, otherwise hee was not be admitted; yet the said Master David Lyndsey, sometimes Minister of Brichen, now pretended Bishop of this Diocesse of Edinburgh, and pretended Moderator of this Presbyterie, with his foresaid Colleagues, the pretended Bishops and Archbishops of this Church respective, have taken upon them (without craving or obtaining Commission from the Church as it is set downe in that Assembly at Montrose) the office and power to vote in Parliament, without swearing at his or their entrances to subscribe and fulfill those Cautions which are set down under penalties.

In the first Caution it was provided, that he presume not to propound in Parliament, in Councill or convention, any thing in the name of the Church without an expresse warrant or direction from the Church, under the paine of deposition from his office; and that hee should neither give consent unto, nor keep silence from anything (amidst these meetings) that might bee prejudiciall to the libertie of the Church, under the said paine.

But the forenamed Master David Lyndsey, pretended Bishop of Edinburgh, with the rest of his Colleagues respective above named, have presumed (having no warrant nor direction from the Church) to propound in Parliament, and to consent to severall acts which have past in Parliament, to the prejudice of the Church, as namely, To the act concerning the Restitution of the State of Bishops, Anno 1606. the act concerning the chapter of Saint Andrewes, Anno 1607. To the act of Commissariots and jurisdictions given to Archbishops and Bishops, Anno 1609. To the ratification of the act agreed upon in the Assemblie of Glasgow Anno 1610. with an explanation, contrary to the meaning and tenour of the said conclusions, Anno 1612. To the acts concerning the Elections of Archbishops and Bishops, and to the acts concerning the Restitution of chapters, Anno 1617. To the ratification of the Five Articles of Perth, Anno 1621. To the act concerning the apparell of Churchmen, and to the ratification of the Acts concerning Religion, in which all the former Acts are included, Ann. 1633. and to many other severall acts of this kinde. In like manner he propounded and gave consent to severall acts of the Privy Councill, for the establishing of it, and of the power of the High Commission, which are against the lawes and liberties of this kingdome; and for ratification of severall acts and sentences given out by them and their Colleagues in that unwarrantable Judicatory: for in the same manner did he propound and consent unto the acts made in the Privie Councill for pressing and bringing in of the Service Booke, which would have trod under foot the frame of Gods publicke worship in this Kingdome, if the Lord had not prevented it. And further, in the last convention of the States holden in the yeeres 1625. and 1629. he did not onely keep silence, but propound and give consent to some things which were prejudiciall to the liberties of this Church, and hee did oppose himselfe to the just desires and grievances which were presented in name of the Church for some of her liberties and priviledges, whereas it was provided that he shall be bound upon each generall Assembly to give an account of the discharge of his Commission since the Assembly going before, and should submit himselfe to the censure of the Assembly, and stand to the determinations of it without further Appeale, and should sue for, and obtain ratification of his carriage from the Assembly, under the paine of infamie and excommunication; but the said Master David Lyndsey, and his Colleagues respective abovenamed, have never given an account of the discharge of his or their Commissions, nor sought nor have obtained ratification of his or their doings, from the Assembly.

Whereas it was provided in the third caution, that he should content himselfe with that portion of the Benefice which should be assigned to him from his Majestie for his livelihood, not hurting or prejudging the rest of the Ministers, or any Minister whatsoever, planted or to bee planted within his Benefice, and that this clause was to be inserted in his provision: Besides, when Bishops were charged in the Assembly holden in Octob. Ann. 1578. to quit the corruptions of that State, there was numbered amongst the corruptions, That they received for the maintaining of their ambition and riot, the emoluments of the Church, which might sustaine many Pastors, the Schooles, and the Poor; but the said Master David Lyndsey with his Colleagues respective, have tooke provision for their Benefices, and the foresaid clause was not inserted, and he and they have prejudged Ministers, Schooles, and the Poor, by taking and enjoying plurality of Benefices.

Whereas it was provided in the fourth caution that hee should not dilapidate nor make a disposition of his Benefice without the consent of his Majestie and the generall Assembly: and for the greater warrant of this, That he should interdict himselfe to the generall Assembly not to dilapidate, nor to give consent to the dilapidation of his Benefice made by others, and that hee should be contented that an Inhibition should be raised upon him to that purpose; but the said Master David Lyndsey, with his Colleagues respective, have set, and take settled patronages.

Whereas in the fifth caution it is provided that hee should be bound to attend his particular Congregation faithfully in all the points of a Pastour, and that he shall be subject to the triall and censure of his own Presbyteric and Provinciaall Assemblie, as another Minister that bears no Commission: In like manner by divers Acts and Constitutions of the generall Assemblies and Presbyteries, non-residents are punishable by deprivation; Yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have been non-resident from his and their charges for many yeeres; nor have they performed the duties of Pastours by preaching, administration of the Sacraments, visiting the sick, &c. but they have deserted their charges by the space now of many years; neither have they in this subjected themselves to the triall of the Presbyteries and Provinciaall Assemblies.

That whereas in the sixth caution it was provided, That in the administration of Discipline, collation of benefices, visitation, and all other points of Ecclesiastical government, hee shall neither usurp nor acclaim to himselfe a power or jurisdiction further over the rest of his brethren, under the paine of deprivation: and in case hee did usurp upon the Ecclesiasticall government, if the Synodall Presbyteries, or generall Assemblies did oppose, or make impediment unto him; whatsoever hee did in that case should be ipso facto null, without a declaratory; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his Colleagues respective, have usurped a jurisdiction in the administration of Discipline, collation of benefices, visitation, and other points of Ecclesiasticall government, without a lawfull warrant from the Church, in exercising power to suspend, deprive, command, and inhibit excommunication at their pleasure, to fine, confine, imprison, banish Ministers and other professors without the warrant of the laws of the Countrey, appointing their Moderators over Presbyteries and Synods, prorogating their Diets, staying their proceedings against Papists, Sorcerers, Adulterers, and other grosse offenders, by exacting of contributions to such Commissioners as hee pleased to send to Court for his owne and his Colleagues affaires; by depriving, and ordaining of Ministers, not only without the consent of the Presbyteries and Synods, but by ordaining of scandalous and unqualified Ministers and depriving of learned and religious Pastours; by ordaining Ministers after a forme not allowed of in this Church; by silencing Ministers for not reading the Service Book, and Book of Canons; by interdicting after a Popish manner, the exercises of Morning and Evening prayer in their Churehes; by releasing of excommunicated Papists: by contradicting and crossing the votes of the Presbyteries at their pleasure; by their pretended negative vote directly contrary to this caution; by enacting decrees of Synods without demanding their votes; by changing and falsifying their Acts, when most votes had carried the contrary: by many wayes have they failed in this caution, which are so notorious to the whole Church and to your Wisdomes, that wee shall condescend upon the same when wee are required.

Whereas in the seventh caution it was provided, That in Presbyteries, and in Provincieall and generall Assemblies, he shall behave himself in all things, as one of the brethren of the Presbyterie, and be subject to their censure; yet the foresaid Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, hath not behaved himselfe as a brother at these meetings; he disdaines to sit in Presbyteries, or to be subject to their censures; he sitteth and overruleth in Provincieall Assemblies rather as a Lord then a Moderatour; and in stead of behaving himself as a brother in the generall Assemblies, hath, by threatening and silencing, prejudged the liberties of the lawfull Commissioners; when they propounded, reasoned or coneluded matters conducing to the liberty of the Church, hee forced them to conelude things contrarie.

That whereas it was coneluded at Mount Rose, That none of them who should have vote in Parliament should come Commissioners to the generall Assemblies, or have vote in it in time to come, unlesse they had authoritie or Commission from their owne Presbyteries for that purpose; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, though they had no authoritie by Commission from any Presbyteries, have usurped to give votes in the last pretended Assemblies.

Whereas in the seventh chap. of the book of Policie, registered in the Register of the Acts of the Assembly, it was coneluded, That in all Assemblies a Moderatour should be chosen by common consent of the whole brethren assembled together, and it hath been so practised since the beginning of the Reformation, till hee and his fellowes began to break the Cautions; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have usurped the place of moderation in the last pretended Assemblies, and rather domineered then moderated, to bring in novations; yea further, have directed Mandats from themselves as from the representative Church of Scotland, which name and power is only competent to generall Assemblies; he hath brought in the practice of many Innovations in the Royal Chappel, in the Abbey Church, and his pretended Cathedrall; hee hath laboured not only to hinder the ordinarie meetings of generall Assemblies of this Church, by obtaining letters and charge from Authority to that purpose, but also hath laboured, what in him lay, to take away from the Church the priviledge of holding generall Assemblies yeerly, belonging to Her by the Word of God, Acts of this Church, and lawes of this Kingdome.

Whereas it is provided by another caution, That Crimen ambitus shall be a sufficient cause of deprivation of him that shall have vote in Parliament; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, are guilty of the said criue, in seeking of the said offices, and promising and giving good deeds for them.

Whereas it was provided by the book of Discipline, and acts of the Assemblies Feb. An. 1569. and December 1565. & 1567. that marriage should not be solemnized without asking of banes three severall Sabbath daies before; yet the said Master David Lindsey and his aforesaid Colleagues respective, have given licence to sundry Ministers to solemnize marriage without asking three severall Sabbaths before; upon which have followed divers inconveniences; a man hath been married to a woman her husband being alive, and they not divorced; some have been married to persons with whom they have committed adulterie before; and so have been married without the consent or knowledge of their parents.

Whereas by the book of Fasting, authorized by the generall Assembly, and prefixed before the Psalmes, no set or yeerly Fasts are allowed, but disallowed, as contrary to the liberty of the Church, and to the nature of the exercise (a Fast;) yet the said Master David Lindsey and his foresaid Colleagues respective, have appointed yeerly Fasts, and troubled some godly Professors for not observing the same.

Whereas the office of a Deacon is set forth in the book of Discipline, and book of common order before the Psalmes, according to the Word of God, to have no meddling with the preaching of the Word, or the ministration of the Sacraments, and by the first Confession of faith ratified in the Acts of Parliament, chap. 23. Ministers called unto particular flocks have onely power of the ministration of the Sacraments; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have given a power to certain Divines whom they make Deacons (men not admitted to the calling of the Ministry) to administer the Sacrament of Baptisme, under the names and titles of preaching Deacons, and they refuse to admit divers men to the calling of the Ministerie before they be admitted to that Order.

Whereas it is ordained by the book of Policie, and Acts of the Assembly, that no man should receive ordination to the Ministry without a present admission to a particular flock; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have separated the act of Ordination from the act of Admission.

Whereas according to the established order of the Church, & the Acts of the Assembly, the ordination & admission of Ministers should be publick, in the presence and with the consent of the congregation; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have given ordination to some men in other places, not in their own Congregation; and violently have thrust upon them scandalous Ministers.

Whereas Ministers who teach erroneous and corrupt doctrine should be censured by the book of Discipline, and by the Acts of the Assemblie; yet the said Mr David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have taught erroneous and corrupt doctrine themselves, and by their pretended power have preferred to the Ministerie men who have taught erroneous doctrine against the Confession of Faith, and Acts of Parliament quoted in our Covenant; and they cherish and maintaine them who teach Arminianisme and Popery, as conditionall Election; Free-will; resistibilitie of effectuall Grace; The universality of Christs death; The merit of it in heaven & in hell; A finall apostacie of the Saints; The locall descent of Christ into hell; That Christ came into the world clauso Virginis utero; auricular Confession, and Papall absolution; That the Pope is not Antichrist; That the Church of Rome is a true Church; That reconciliation with Rome is a thing easie; That the Church of Rome erres not in fundamentals; and that she differs not in fundamentals from the Reformed Churches; They call in question the imputation of Christs righteousness, and they affirme the formall cause of justifying faith, to consist in our inherent righteousness; They affirme that there is a locall and circumscriptive presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and they change the Sacrament into a Sacrifice, and the Table into an Altar, the Ministers into Priests. There are other damnable and hereticall points of Doctrine which they maintaine; of which we shall give particular information in our particular accusation of each one of them respective, with the proofes thereof, when we shall be required.

Whereas by the Acts of the Church, no oaths or subscriptions should be required from those who enter into the Ministerie, but to the Confession of faith, and to the Book of Policy; yet the said Master David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, without a warrant from the Church or Parliament, doe exact diverse oathes and subscriptions from them who enter into the Ministerie; namely, That they should both in publick and private prayers commend the Prelats to Gods mercifull protection; That they should be subject to the orders which were now in the Church, or, by the consent of the Church, that is, by their consent (as they affirme) should be established; as to the Service Book, and to the Book of Canons. The heaviness of this grievance made the most part of his Majesties subjects to complaine in these Articles, that worthy men which have testimonies of their learning from Universities, and are tryed by Presbyteries to be fit for the worke of the Ministerie, and for their gifts and lives were much desired by the people; yet these men are kept out because they could not be perswaded to subscribe and swear unto such unlawfull oaths, which have no warrant from the Acts of the Church, nor the laws of the Kingdome; and they were Articles and oaths conceived according to their pleasure; and men of little worth, and ready to sweare, were for by-respects thrust upon the people, and admitted to the most eminent places of the Church, and of the Schools in Divinity, which breeds continuall complaints, and moves the people to run from their owne parish Churches, refusing to receive the Sacrament from the hands of Ministers set over them against their hearts, which makes them not to render unto them that honour which is due from the people to their Pastours; and it is a mighty hinderance to the Gospel, to the soules of the people, and to the peace of this Church and Kingdome.

Whereas in the Assembly holden at Edinburgh, in March, ann. 1578. it was declared that it was neither agreeable to the word of God, nor to the practice of the Primitive Church, that the Administration of the Word and Sacraments, and the ministration of civill and criminall justice should be confounded, that one person could supply both the charges, but that a Minister should not be both a Minister and a Senator in the Colledge of justice. And in the Assembly holden in October An. 1578. it was reckoned amongst the corruptions of the State of Bishops, which they were charged to forgoe, that they should usurp a criminall jurisdiction, that they should not claime unto themselves the titles of Lords, that they should onely be called by their owne names, or brethren; yet the said Master David Lyndsey, with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have assumed to themselves the titles and honours of Lords, they did sit as Senators in the Colledge of justice, as Councillours in the Privie Councell, as Auditors in the Exchequer, and have enjoyed prime Offices of State. The pretended Bishops have usurped the place and precedencie before all Temporall Lords, the pretended Archbishops before all the noble Earles of the land, and the pretended Primate before the prime Officers of State in the land.

Whereas by the Word of God and Acts of the Assembly, namely, Anno 1576. 1577. and 1578. no man should be suffered to be a Minister, unlesse hee be tied to a particular flocke and congregation; and not to be tied to a particular flocke it is condemned as a corruption of the state of Bishops which they were charged to forgoe; yet the said Master David Lindsey, with his Colleagues respective foresaid, are Ministers, and will not be tied to particular flockes.

Whereas the office of a Bishop (as it is now used within this Realm) was condemned by the booke of policie, and by the Act of the Assembly holden at Dundee, Anno 1580. whereof these are the words; Forasmuch as the office of a Bishop (as it is now used and commonly taken within this Realme) hath no sure warrant from authoritie, nor good ground out of the Scriptures, but it is brought in by the folly and corruptions of the inventions of men, to the great hurt of the Church, The whole Assembly of this Church, with one voice, after liberty given to all men to reason in the said matter (no man opposing himself to maintain the said pretended office) doe find and declare the said pretended office, used and termed as is above said, unlawfull in it selfe, as having neither ground nor warrant within the Word of God; and we doe ordaine that all such persons which doe, or shall hereafter, enjoy the said office, shall be charged simply to dismisse, quit, and leave the same, as an office unto which they were not called by God; and that they shall leave off all preaching, ministration of the Sacraments, or other offices of Pastors, untill such time as they receive admission de novo from the generall Assembly, under the paine of excommunication to be used against them; and if they be found disobedient to contradict this Act in the least point, after due admonition, the sentence of excommunication shall be executed against them. And for the better execution of the said Act, it is ordained that a Synodall Assemblie shall be holden in everie Province (in which usurping Bishops are) 18. August next to come, in which they shall be cyted and summoned by the Visitors of the said Countries to compeere before their Synodall Assemblies; as namely, The Archbishop of S. Andrewes to compeere at Saint Andrewes, The Bishop of Aberdene in Aberdene, The Archbishop of Glasgow in Glasgow, the Bishop of Murray in Elgin, to give obedience to the said act, which if they refused to do, that the Synodall As-semblies shall appoint certaine brethren of their Presbyteries to give them publike admonitions out of their Pulpits, and to warne them, if they disobey, to compeere before the next generall Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh 20. Octob. to heare the sentence of excommunication pronounced against them for their disobedience: and to this act the Bishop of Dumblane that then was, agreed, submitting himself to be ruled by it; it was also condemned by the act of Glasgow Anno 1581. which doth ratifie the former act of Dundee, and ordaines the book of policie, which was approved by severall Generall Assemblies to be registrated in the books of the Assemblies, and enjoyned the generall confession of faith to be subscribed by all his Majesties Lieges; Yet hath the said Master David Lyndsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, not onely inreached upon the libertics of Presbyteries and Synods, but hath also took Consecration to the office of a Dioeesan Bishop, without the knowledge or consent of the Church, and against the acts of it, claiming the power of ordination and jurisdiction, as due to him by that unwarrantable officio.

Besides, the said Master David Lyndsey, with his foresaid colleagues respective, have, against the Lawes of the Church and Kingdome, brought in the Service book, the book of Canons, and the High Commission Court, and would have changed and overthrowne the whole frame of doctrine of Gods word, the use of the Sacraments, the Discipline, Liberties and Priviledges of this Church and State, if the Lord had not prevented them; The particulars wee shall present to your wisdomes, though it bee knowne to all men, how he and they have abused his Majesties Authoritie against his Royall intentions and Declarations, they having moved discontents betwixt the King and his subjects, by scandalous lies betwixt subject and subject, for which things, complaints have been given in to the Councell, which we hold heare to be repeated as a part of our complaint, and to be tried by your wisdomes, and referred to the Assemblies.

Besides all these faults, the said Master David Lyndsey with his Colleagues respective, in his life and conversation is slandered constantly as guiltie of excessive drinking, whoring, playing at Cards and Dice, swearing, profane speaking, excessive gaming, profaning of the Sabbath, contempt of the publike ordinances and private familie-exercises, mocking of the power of preaching, prayer, and spirituall conference, and sincere professors; besides, with bribery, simonie, selling of Commissariots places, lies, perjuries, dishonest dealing in civill bargaines, abusing of their vassals, and of Adulterie, and Incest, with many other offences, of which we shall give the particulars in our particular accusations.

Whereas the Presbyterie is the ordinarie judicatorie of this Church for trying of these offences, and hath the Ecclesiasticall power for eytation of the parties and offenders, with the reference to their complaints to the Generall Assemblies, Therefore wee most earnestly and humble beseech your godly wisdomes, as you tender the glory of God, the peace and libertie of this Church, the removall of scandals, and punishment of vice, that you will take into your consideration and triall the foresaid many and hainous offences, with the particular reservations and qualifications of them, which we shall present to your wisdomes, or to the Assemblies when it shall be thought convenient; and that you would either take order with it your selves, and censure the offenders, according to the nature of the offences, with the Ecclesiasticall paines contained in the Acts and foresaid Canons of this Church and Kingdome, or else make a reference of them to the Generall Assembly to bee holden at Glasgow 21. Novemb. and, that the knowledge of these should come to the Delinquents, that you will be pleased to ordaine the publishing hereof, to bee made by all the Brethren of the Presbyterie in their Pulpits upon the Sabbath before noone, with a publike admonition to the offenders to be present at the Assembly, to answer to this complaint, and to undergo the censure and triall of it, and to bring with them the books and scroules of subscriptions and oaths required from those who enter into the Ministerie, with the books of the High Commission Court, and the books of the Generall Assembly, which they or their Clerk had or have fraudulently conveyed away, Together with this certification, That if the said Master David Lyndsey, with his foresaid colleagues respective, do not appeare in the said Assembly, and bring with them the said books, to answer to this complaint in general, and to the particular heads of it, and to submit himselfe to the triall and proove of this complaint general, and to the particular heads of it, that there shall be a condigne censure of these offenders for their contempt and contumacie; Here wee humble beseech your wisdomes answer.

Upon the said day, we the Brethren of the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, after we had received this Bill and complaint, presented unto us by the Laird of Buchanan, The Laird of Dury the younger, The Laird of Carlourie, John Smith late Bailife of Edinburgh, John Hammiltoun, and Richard Maxwel, in name of the Noblemen, Barons, Burgesses, and Commons, subscribers of the Covenant (which are not Commissioners to the Generall Assembly) against the pretended Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdome, and after wee had read and seriously considered the same, wee, according to the desire of the complainers, did and do referre the same to the next Generall Assembly to bee holden at Glasgow 21. November. And wee ordaine the publishing of this complaint, and of our reference of it to the Assembly, to be fully read by all the Pastors of the Presbyterie upon the next Sabbath before noone out of their Pulpits, with a publike warning and cytation to the offendants complained upon; By name, Master John Spotswood pretended Archbishop of Saint Andrewes, Master Patrick Lyndsey pretended Archbishop of Glasgow, Master Thomas Sydsferfe pretended Bishop of Galloway, Master David Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Edinburgh, Master Alexander Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Dunkeld, Master Adam Bannatine pretended Bishop of Aberdene, Master John Guthrie pretended Bishop of Murray, Master John Maxwel pretended Bishop of Rosse, Master George Greme pretended Bishop of Orknay, Master John Abernethie pretended Bishop of Caithness, Master Walter Whitefoord pretended Bishop of Brichen, Master James Wedderburne pretended Bishop of Dumblane, Master James Fayrley pretended Bishop of Argyle, Master Nail Campbell pretended Bishop of the Isles, to be present at the said Assembly, to answer to this complaint in general, and to the partiular heads of it, to undergo the triall and censure of it, and to bring with them the books and scroules of the subscriptions and oaths of them who enter into the Ministerie, the books of the High Commission, and the book of the Generall Assembly, which they either had or have fraudulently put away; and if any Pastor within this Presbyterie refuse to publish this cytation, we require the Reader of the Church to do it. In like manner wee require all parties who have interest, either in pursuing, or specifying, or proving this complaint, to be present at the said Assemblie for that purpose; Upon which the complainers took instruments in the hands of the Notarie.

According to this complaint, and the warrand of the Presbyteries reference of it, I A. R. warne and admonish the abovenamed offenders to compeere before the next Generall Assemblie to bee holden at Glasgow 21. November, for the causes contained in the complaint, and for the certification expressed in it.

1638.—October.

34. *Notice from Tables to Members of Assembly.**

1. That all Noblemen subscribers of the Covenant (except the Noblemen of the West, who shall be ready upon advertisement) meet at Edinburgh the 12. of November, and stay there till they goe to Glasgow, where they shall all meet on Saturday the 17. of November at the furthest.

2. That the full number of these who are appointed Commissioners by the severall shires, to attend this common cause, with foure Gentlemen within the bounds of every Presbyterie at the least, out of the number of their Assessors, without excluding any voluntaries, That they come to Glasgow the 17. day of November, to attend constantly the Assembly, and give their advice in the common cause to the ruling Elders, Commissioners to the Assembly out of these Shires and Presbyteries.

3. That the Burrowes appoint (according to their quality and number) two, foure, or six of most judicious men to come to Glasgow the 17. of November, and there constantly to attend the Assembly, and give their advice to their Commissioner in this common cause.

4. That the Fast be observed the fourth day of November universally, with any other dayes they may conveniently: and if any be repairing to the Assembly, that they keepe the Fast where they shall bee for the time.

5. That now especially, seeing rulers Elders from particular Congregations are received in Presbyteries, that particular Congregations take such course that no Minister Commissioner be forced to be absent from the Assembly for want of necessaric charges.

6. That where any hath bene deceived or compelled to subscribe this new Coveuant, that the Ministers take their Declarations in writing, or by act in the bookes of Session, or before one witness, that they were forced, deceived, or mistaken: And that every Minister make known, and intimate publikely to the people the printed protestation, coutayning the reasons against this new subscription; and where the Minister refuseth, that some well affected Gentleman doe it.

1638.—November 16, 17, and 20.

35. The Declinator and Protestation of the Arch-bishops, and Bishops, of the Church of Scotland, and others their Adherents within that Kingdome: Agaynst the pretended Generall Assemblie, holden at Glasgow, Novemb. 21. 1638. Aberdene, Printed by Edward Raban, According to the Copie Printed at London 1639. It is his Majesties pleasure that this be printed: For the which, this shall bee your Warrant: HAMILTON.*

We Arch-bishops, Bishops, and other Under-subscribers, for our selues, and in name & behalfe of the Church of Scotland, (whereas it hath pleased the King's Majestie, to indiet A Generall Assemblie of the Church, to bee kept at Glasgow, Novemb. 21. 1638. for composing and setting of the Distractions of the same) First doe acknowledge, and professe, That A Generall Assemblie, lawfullie called, and orderlie conveyed, is a most necessarie & effectual Meane, for removing those evils where-with the sayd Church is infested, and for setting that Order which becometh the House of GOD: and, That we wish nothing more, than a Meeting of a peaceable and orderlie Assemblie, to that effect. Secondlie, we acknowledge, and professe, as becometh good Christians, and faythfull Subjects, That his Majestie hath authoritie, by his Prerogatiue Royall, to call Assemblies, as is acknowledged by the Assemblie at Glasgow, 1610, and Parliament 1612. and, That it is not lawfull to conveye without his Royall consent, and approbation, except wee will put our selues in danger to be called in question for Sedition.

Yet, never-the-lesse, in sundrie respectes wee can not but esteeme this Meeting at Glasgow, most vnlawfull, and disorderlie: and their Proceedings voyde, and Null in Lawe, for the Causes and Reasons following.

I. First: Before his Majesties Royall Warrant to my Lord Commissioner his Grace, to indiet A Lawfull Free Generall Assemblie, the vsurped Authoritie of the Table, (as they call it) by their Missives, and Instructions, did giue order and direction, for all Presbyteries, to elect and choose their Commissioners for the Assemblie; and for seeking of GOD'S Blessing to it, to keepe a solemne Fast, September 16: vvhich his Majesties Warrant, for indieting of that Assemblie, was not published till the 22 of that Moneth. So that they Preventing, and not proceeding by Warrant of Royall Authoritie, the pretended Commissioners being chosen before the Presbyteries were authorized to make election, can not be reputed Members of a Lawfull Assemblie.

II. A Lawfull Assemblie, must not onelie bee indicted by Lawfull Authoritie, (as wee acknowledge this to bee) but also constituted of such Members, as are requisite to make vp such a Bodie. For, if according to the Indietion, none at all doe conveye; or, where the Clergie is called, there meet none but Laicks; or moe Laicks, than of the Clergie, with equall power, to judge, & determine; or such of the Laicks, and Clergie, as are not lawfullie authorized, or are not capable of that Employment by their Places; or such as are legallie disabled to sit, and decide in an Assemblie of the Church. A Meeting consisting of such Members, can not be thought a Free and Lawfull Assemblie, by that Act of Parliament, Iac. 6. Parl. 3. cap. 46. 1572. Everie Minister, who shall pretend to be a Minister of God's Word and Sacraments, is bound to giue his assent & subscription to the Articles of Religion, contayned in the Acts of our Soveraygne Lord's Parliament; and in presence of the Arch-bishop, Superintendent, or Commissioner of the Province, giue his Oath, for acknowledging and recognizing of our Soveraygn Lord, and his Authoritie, and bringing a Testimoniall in writ therevpon; and openlie, upon some Sunday, in tyme of Sermon, or publicke Prayers, in the Church where hee ought to attend, reade both the Testimoniall and Confession, and of new make the sayd Oath, within a moneth after his admission: vnder the payne, that everie person, that shall not doe as is aboue-apoynted, shall ipso facto be deprived, & all his Ecclesiasticall promotions, and living, shall be then vacant, as if he were then naturallie dead; and that all inferiour persons, vnder Preates, be called before the Arch-bishops, Bishops, Superintendents, and Commissioners of the Dioceses, or Province, within which they dwell, as the Act beareth.

III. All of the Clergie conveaned to this Assemblie, pretend themselues to bee Ministers of GOD'S Word, and Sacramentes, and haue Benefices, or other Ecclesiasticall Livings, yet neverthelesse the most part of them, haue never in presence of the Archbishop, Bishop, Superintendent, or Commissioner of the Diocese, or Province, subscribed the Articles of Religion, contayned in the Actes of Parliament, and given their oath, for acknowledging and recognoscing our Soveraygne Lord, and his Authoritie, and brought a Testimoniall thereof: And, therefore, they are, ipso facto, deprived, and their places voyde, as if they were naturallie dead, and consequentlie having no place nor function in the Church, can not be Commissioners to this Assemblie: hoc maximè attento, that the sayd persons not onlie haue never given their Oath, for acknowledging his Majesties Authoritie, nor can show no Testimoniall therevpon, as they are bound by the sayd Act: But also having as subjectes comprehended in the representatiue bodie of this Kingdome, "Promised to acknowledge, obey, mayntayne, defende, and aduance, the Lyfe, Honour, Safetie, Dignitie, Soverayne Authoritie, and Prerogatiue Royall, of his Soverayne Majestie, his Heys & Successours, and Priviledges of his Highnesse Crowne, with their luyes, lands, and goods, to the vttermost of their power, constantlie, & faythfullie, to withstand all and whatsoever persons, powers, and estates, who shall presume, preasse, or intende, anie wyse to impugne, prejudice, hurt, or impaire the same; and never to come in the contrarie thereof, directlie or indirectlie, in anie tyme coming; as the Acts of Parliament, Jac. 6. Parl. 18. cap. 1. Car. Parl. cap. 1. doe proport."

And more-over, Being obliedged at their Admission, to giue their Oath, for performance of this duetic of their Alledgeance; "And to testific and declare on their conscience, That the KING is the lawfull Supream Governour, as well in matters Spirtuall and Ecclesiasticall, as Temporall; and to assist and defende all Iurisdiction and Authoritie, belonging to his Majestie, by the Act of Parliament 1612. Yet notwithstanding of the sayde Bandes, Actes, and Promises, whereby the sayd persons are so strictlie bound to the performance of the Premises, his Majestie having ordayned, by Act of Councell, at Holie-Rood-House, Sept. 24. 1638. and Proclamations following therevpon, That all his Majesties Liedges, of whatsoever estate, degree, or qualitie, Ecclesiasticall or Temporall, should sweare and subscribe the sayde CONFESSION, together with a generall BAND, for defending his Majesties person and authoritie, agaynst all Enemies within this Realme, or without, haue not onlic refused to subscribe the sayd BAND and CONFESSION; but haue in their Sermons, and other Speeches, disswaded, deterred, impeded, and hindered others of the Liedges to subscribe the same; and publickly protested agaynst the subscription thereof: And therevpon can not conveane, nor concurre lawfullie, to the making vp of the bodie of an Assemblie of the CHVRCH, as being deprived and denuded of all place and function in the same.

IV. A Generall Assemblie was condescended vnto, out of his Majesties gracious Clemencie, and pious Disposition, as a Royall Favour to those that so should acknowledge the same, and acquiesce to his gracious pleasure, and carrie themselues peaceable, as loyall and duetifull Subjects, which the Commissioners directed to this Assemblie, supposed to bee of the number of those that adhere to the last Protestation made at Edinb. Sept. 1638. doe not so account of, and accept, as appeareth by the sayde Protestation: whereby they protest, That it shall bee lawfull for them, as at other times, so at this, to assemble themselues, notwithstanding anie impediment, or prorogation, to the contrarie: as also by continuing their Meetings and Table, discharged by Authoritie, refusing to subscribe the BAND according to his Majesties, and Councells, command, for mayntayning his Majesties Royall person, and authoritie, protesting agaynst the same; still insisting with the Liedges, to subscribe the Band of mutuall defence, agaynst all persons whatsoever, and remitting nothing of their former proceedings, where-by his MAJESTIES wrath was provoked: thereby they are become in the same state and condition wherein they were before his Majesties Proclamation and pardon; and so forfayte the favour of this Assemblie, and libertie to bee Members thereof. And others of his MAJESTIES Subjectes may justlie feare to meeete with them in this Convention, for that by the Act of Parliament, Jac. 6. Parl. 15. Cap. 31. Prelacies beeing declared to bee one of the three Estates of this Kingdome, and by the Act of Parliament, Jac. 6. Parl. 8. Cap. 130. All persons are discharged to impugne the dignitie and authority of the three Estates, or any of them in time coming, vnder the paine of Treason. And whereas the King by his Proclamation, declareth Archbishops and Bishops, to haue voyce in the Generall Assemblie, and calleth them to the same for that effect, as constantlie they haue bene in vse in all Assemblies, where they were present, as appeareth by manie Acts of the Generall Assemblie, ordaying them to keepe and assist at the same, as in the Assemblie at Edinburgh, December 15. 1566. At Edinburgh, March 6. 1572. At Edinburgh, May 10. 1586. And by a Letter, written by the Assemblie, March 6. 1573. to the REGENT, earnestlie desiring his owne, or his Commissioner's, presence, and the Lords of Councell. and the Bishops, at the Assemblie. They notwithstanding by the sayde Protestation, September 22. declared Archbishops and Bishops, to haue no Warrant for their Office in this CHURCH, to be authorized with no lawfull Commission, and to haue no place nor voyce in this Assemblie; and withall doe arrogate to their Meetinges, a Soveraygne Authoritie, to determine of all Questions and Doubtes that can aryse, contrarie to the freedome of the Assemblie, whether in Constitution and Members, or in the matters to bee treated, or in manner and order of proceeding. Which howe it doeth stand with his Majesties supremacie, in all Causes, and over all persons, wee leaue it to that judgement, wherevnto it belongeth; and doe call GOD and Man to Witnessse, if these bee fit Members of an Assemblie, intended for the Order and Peace of the CHURCH.

V. Giving, and not graunting, That the persons foresayde, directed Commissioners in name of the Clergie, to this Meeting, were capable of that Authoritie, and that the sayd Presbyteries had the authoritie, to direct Commissioners to the Generall Assemble; yet haue they nowe lost, and fallen from all such Right, if anie they had; in so farre as they haue deposed the Moderators, who were lawfullie appoynted to governe them, by the Bishops in their Synodes, and elected others in their places, contrarie to the Act of the Assemble at Glasgow, 1610, and Act of Parl. 1612; ordayning Bishops to be Moderators at these Meetinges; and in their absence, the Minister whome the Bishop should appoynt at the Synode. So these Meetinges having disclaymed the Authoritie of Bishops, deposed their lawfull Moderators, & choosing others, without Authoritie, can not bee esteemed lawfull Convocations, that can haue lawfull power of sending out Commissioners, with authoritie, to judge of the Effayres of this CHVRCH.

VI. And yet doeth the Nullitie of the Commissions flowing from such Meetinges, farther appear in this, That they haue associate to themselves, a Laicke-ruling-Elder, (as they call them) out of everie Session, and Parish; who beeing ordinarily the lord of the Parish, or the man of the greatest authoritie in the Boundes, doeth over-rule in the election of the sayd Commissioners, both by his authoritie, and their number being moe than the Ministers, whereof some beeing ordinarily absent, and five or six, or so manie of them, put in list, and removed, there remayne but a few Ministers, to voyce to the Election: and in effect the Commissioners for the Clergie, are chosen by Laymen, contrarie to all order, decencie, and custome observed in the Christian world; no wyse according to the custome of this CHVRCH, which they pretend to follow; the Presbyteries formerly never associating to themselves Lay-Elders in the election of the Commissioners to the Generall Assemble, but onlie for their assistance in Discipline, and correction of Manners; calling for them at such occasions, as they stode in neede of their Godlie Concurrence; declaring otherwyse their meeting not necessarie; and providing expresselie, that they should not be equall, but fewer in number, than the Pastors: as by the Act of Assemble at Saynt-Andrewes, Aprill 24, 1582, (where Master Andrew Melvill was Moderatour) doeth appeare: lyke as these fourtie yeares by-gone, and vpwardes, long before the re-establishing of Bishops, these Lay-Elders haue not bene called at all to Presbyteries. And by the Act at Dundie, 1597; whereby it is pretended, That Presbyteries haue authoritie to sende these Lay-Commissioners, it doeth no wyse appeare, that those Lay-Elders had anie hand in choosing of the Ministers. And this is the onlie Act of the Assemble, authorizing Presbyteries, to choose Commissioners to the Generall Assemble: nor haue Lay-Elders sate ordinarily in Presbyteries, vpon anie occasion, these fourtie yeares, and vpwardes: nor ever had anie place, nor voyce, in the election of Ministers, for the Generall Assemble; and consequentlie, these chosen by them to this Assemble, haue no lawfull power, nor authoritie.

VII. Beside; the persons Ecclesiasticall, pretended to be authorized Commissioners to this Assemble, haue so behaved themselves, that justlie they may be thought vnworthie and vncapable of Commission to a Free and Lawfull Assemble.

1. For that by their seditious and rayling Sermons and Pamphlets, they haue wounded the KING's Honour and Soveraygne Authoritie, and animated his Liedges to Rebellion; averring that all Authoritie Soveraygne, is Originallie in the Collective bodie, derived from thence, to the Prince; and that not onlie in case of negligence, it is Suppletive in the Collectiue bodie, as beeing communicate from the Commontie to the King; Cumulative, not Privative; but also in case of maladministration, to returne to the Collectiue bodie; so that Rea excidit jure suo, and that they may refuse Obedience.

2. Next; they are knowne to bee such as haue eyther bene Schismaticallie refractarie and opposite to good Order settled in the CHVRCH and STATE; or such as having promised, subscribed, and sworne Obedience to their Ordinarie, haue never made conscience of their Oath; or such as haue sworne, and accordinglie practised; yet contrarie to their Promise and Practise, haue resiled, to the contempt of Authoritie, and disturbance of the CHVRCH; or such as are vnder the Censures of the Church of Ireland, for their disobedience to Order; or vnder the Censures of this CHVRCH; or conveaned, at least deserving to bee conveaned before the Ordinaries, or a lawfull Generall Assemble, for diverse Transgressions, deserving deprivation: As, first, For vttering in their Sermons rash and irreverend speeches in Pulpit, agaynst his Majesties Councell, and their Proceedinges, punishable by Deprivation: by the Act of Assemble at Edinburgh, May 22. anno 1590. Next; For reproving his Majesties Lawes, Statutes, and Ordinances, contrarie to the Act of Assemble at Pearth, May 1. Anno 1596. Thirdlie; For expressing of mens names in Pulpit, or descrybing them viuelic to their reproach, where there was no notorious fault; agaynst another Act of the same Assemble. Fourthlie; For vsing Applications in their Sermons, not tending to the edification of their present Auditorie; contrarie to another Act of the same Assemble. Fiftlie; For keeping Conventions, not allowed by his Majestie, without his knowledge, and consent; contrarie to another Act of the same Assemble. Sixtlie; For receaving of people, of other Ministers Flockes, to the Communion; contrarie to Order, Actes of Assemblies, and Counsels. Seaventhlie; For intruding themselves into other mens Pulpits, without Calling or Authoritie. Eyghtlie; For vsurping the Authoritie to convent their Brethren, and proceede agaynst them to the Censures of Suspension, and Deprivation. Nynthlie; For pressing the people to subscribe a Covenant, not allowed by Authoritie; and opposing and withstanding the subscribing of a COVENANT offered by his Majestie, and allowed by the Councell: Beside manie personall faultes and enormities, whereof manie of them are guiltie, which in Charitie, we forbear to expresse. But heereby it doeth appeare, how vnfit these persons are, to bee Members of a Free and Lawfull Assemble.

VIII. Nor doeth it stand with Reason, Scripture, or Practise of the Christian Church, that Laymen should bee authorized to haue decisiue voyce in a Generall Assemble. In that Act of Dundie, 1597, whereby these Elders pretende to haue this place, there is no Warrant expressed for them, to deliberate and determine. Their presence and assistance wee approue, being allowed and authorized by the Prince. The Kings Majesties presence in person, or by his Delegates, wee holde moste necessarie to see all thinges orderlie and peaceable done; and that hee haue the chiefe hand in all Deliberations and Determinations. Nor doe wee refuse, that anie Intelligent or moderate man, may make remonstrance of his opinion, with the reasons of it, in that way that becommeth him in a Nationall Assemble; due reverence beeing kept, and Confusion avoyded. But that anie Lay-man, except hee bee Delegate by Soveraygne Authoritie, shall presume to haue a definitiue and decisiue Voyce, wee esteeme it to bee intrusion vpon the Pastorall Charge, and without Warrant. May wee not, therefore, intreat my Lord Commissioner his Grace, in the words of the Fathers of the Fourth Generall Councell at Chalcedon, Mitte foras superfluos? Nor will a pious Prince bee offended with it, but, with Theodosius the younger, will say, Illegitimum est, eum qui non sit in ordine Sanctissimorum Episcoporum, Ecclesiasticis immisceri tractatibus.—And Pulcheria the Emperesse, commaunded Strategus, Vt Clerici, Monachi, & Laici, vi repellerentur, exceptis paucis lilis, quos Episcopi secum duxerunt. Upon this respect was Martinus in that Councell of Chalcedon, moved to say, Non esse suum, sed Episcoporum tantum subscribere.

IX. If these pretended Commissioners, both Lay and Ecclesiasticall, were lawfullie authorized, (as it is evident they are not,) and for none other cause declinable, yet the Law doeth admit, that justlie a Iudge may bee declined, who is probable suspect. And of all probabilities, this is the most preguant, when the Iudge, before hee come to judgement, doeth giue sentence of these things hee hath to judge. This made our Reformers Protestation agaynst the Councell of Trent valide; and their not compearing, justifiable, because Pope Leo 10 had precondemned Luther, as appeared by his Bull, dated 8 Junii, 1520, renewed by Paul 3, dated in August 1535. This was the cause why Athanasius would not giue his appearance at some Councells, nor Hosius of Corduba, nor Maximus Patriarch of Constantinople. But so it is, the most part, if not all of the sayde Commissioners directed to this Meeting haue precondemned EPISCOPALL GOVERNMENT, and condemned, at least suspended Obedience to the Acts of the Generall Assemblie and Parliament, concerning the five Articles of Pearth, haue approved their COVENANT as most necessarie to be embraced of all in this Kingdome; and not onelie haue given judgement of these things before-hand; but by most solenne Oathes haue bound themselves, to defonde and stand to the same: as doeth appeare by their Covenant, Petitions, Protestations, Pamphlets, Libels, and Sermons. And, therefore, by no Law nor Equitie, can these pretended Commissioners bee admitted to determine in this Meeting, concerning these Persons and Poynts, which before-hand they haue so vnjustlie condemned.

X. Farther: with no Law nor Reason can it subsist, that the same persons shall bee both Iudges and Parties. And wee appeale the Consciencs of all honest men, if all, at least the greatest parte of the pretended Commissioners, haue not declared themselves Partie to the Arch-bishops, and Bishops, of this CHVRCH: for in that they haue declyned the Bishops to be their Iudges as beeing their Partie, (as their Declinators, Petitions, Declarations, and Protestations doe beare,) haue they not simul & semel, & ipso facto declared themselves to bee Partie agaynst Bishops? Whom they haue not onlie declyned, but persecuted by their Calumnies and Reproaches, vented by word and writ, in publicke and in private; by invading their persons, opposing and oppressing them, by strength of an vnlawfull Combination; for the subscriybing and swearing whereof, they haue by their owne Authoritie indicted and kept Fastes, not onelie in their owne Churches, but where worthie men refused to bee accessorie to these disorderlie and impious Courses, they haue, by ayde of the vnruely multitude, entered their Churches, vsurped vpon their Charges; reading, and causing to be read, that vnlawfull Covenant; by threatening and menacing, compelling some (otherwise vnwilling) out of just feare, to set their hands to it; by processing, suspending, and removing obedient and worthie Ministers from their places by the vsurped Authoritie of their Table, and Presbyteries. And whereas by all Law and Iustice, persons finding themselves wronged in Iudgement, haue never bene denied the remedie of Declinatorie and Appellation: Neverthelesse not a few of these Presbyteries haue proceeded against sundrie worthy Ministers, who haue declined and appealed from their Iudgments, without respect to this Defence: by these means craftilie intending to disable them to be Commissioners for the CHVRCH; directlie, or indirectlie, causing their Stipendes to bee kept backe from them: By which meanes, not the least parte of the subscribing Ministers haue bene gained to their Covenant.

But it is without example, vncharitable, and illegall, that vnder the pretext of Summons (the like whereof was never vsed, nor in the like manner, agaynst the most haynous Malefactors in the kingdome) they haue devised, forged, vented, and published a most infamous and scurrile Libell, full of impudent Lies, and malicious Calumnies, against the Arch-bishops, and Bishops, of this CHVRCH: and haue first given out from their Table, the Order prescrybed in these subsequent Articles, which we haue insert, that the World may be Witnesse of the Illegalitie and Maliciousnesse of their Proceedings.

1. To desire the Presbyterie of evorie Bishop, especially where hee keepeeth his residence, as also the Presbyterie where his Cathedrall Seat is, to haue a speciall care of this Bill, and Complaynt agaynst the Prelates, and particularlie agaynst the Bishop of their Diocese.

2. That some Noble-men, if anie be within the Presbyterie, some Gentle-men and Barons, some Ministers, and some Commons, who are not chosen Commissioners to the Assemblie, in their owne Name, and in Name of all other Covenanters, or Complayners, eyther within the Presbyterie, or Diocese, or whole Kingdome, who are not Commissioners to the Assemblie, will adheare and assist in this Complaynt, that they present this Bill to the Presbyterie.

3. That they who are Complayners, haue a particular care to fill up the Blanks left in the Bill, in the Subsumptions of the particular Faults committed by the Bishop of the Diocese, agaynst these generall Rules, Canons, and Actes: or if these Blankes will not contayne the same, that the Complayners draw vp in a particular Clayme, all the particular Faultes, and Transgressions of the Bishop of that Diocese, agaynst these Rules, Canons, and Acts, or anie other Law of the Church, or Kingdome; and present the same to the Presbyterie, with this generall Complaynt. And if they can not get the Particulars presentlie readie, notwithstanding, they present without anie delay, because of the scarcenesse of the tyme, this Complaynt, as it standeth with the Blanks: and in the meane tyme, may gather anie other Particulars, agaynst the Assemblie, to which this Complaynt is to bee referred.

4. That the Presbyterie finding the Complaynt important, & the Generall Assemblie so approaching, referre the same to the Generall Assemblie, by an Act of this Reference, insert in the Bookes of the Presbyterie.

5. That vpon this Referenee of the Complaynt to the Assemblie, the Presbyterie admonish the Complayners, apud acta, to be present at the sayde Assemblie, for assisting and verifying of the sayde Complaynt.

6. That the Presbyterie ordayne all their Pastors, out of Pulpit, on a Sabbath-day, before noone, to cause reade publickly this whole Complaynt, and the Presbyteries Reference to the Assemblie; and so to admonish the Bishop of that Diocese, the Delinquent complayned upon, with the rest of his Collegues, to be present at the Gen. Assembly, to answer to the particular Complaynt, both in the particular and generall heads thereof, given, or to be given in; & to abide the censure & tryall of th' Assemblie therevpon. And lykwyse, out of Pulpit to admonish all others, who haue interest eyther in the persuing, or referring this Complaynt, to be present, at the sayd Assemblie.

7. That the Presbyterie insert, in their Presbyterie-Bookes, the whole tenour of this Complaynt, both in the generall and particular heads thereof; and that they haue a care, to cause deliver, by their ordinary Beadell, to the Bishop of the Diocese, a Copie thereof, and a Copie of an Act, referring the same to the Assemblie; and summon him, to compeare before the Assemblie. And if he be within the Countrey, and cannot be personallie apprehended, to affix a full copie thereof vpon each dwelling place, and vpon the most patent doore of the Cathedrall Church, and Episcopall Seat.

8. That the Complayners, [within the Presbyterie where the Bishop is resident, or hath his Cathedrall, be carefull to keep corresponce with those in other Presbyteries within their Diocese, who best can specifie and verifie their Bishops vsurpation, & transgressions; and who had particular Articles, to gather particular Declarations, and Informations, of the same.

9. That some of these Complayners, in their own name, and with Warrant and Power from the rest, without fayling, attend the Assemblie, with the generall Complaynt, and particular Verifications, and Specifications, of the same.

10. That in case the Presbyterie where the Bishop hath his residence, or where he hath his Cathedrall, and Episcopall Seat, refuse to receaue this Complaynt, or referre the same to the Assemblie, or to admonish, or cite, the Bishop delinquent, before the Assemblie, to aunswere to the Complaynt; That the Gentle-men, and others, who are Complayners to the Presbyteries, vpon their Refusall, take instrument, in the handes of the Clerke of the Presbyterie, or anie Notarie; and protest, That their Refusall of the ordinarie care of Iustice, procured (without doubt) by the Bishop of that Diocese, delinquent, complayned of, the equivalent of Law and Reason, bee a formall Citation of him. Which Protestation, they may affixe vpon the dwelling-house of the sayde Bishop, or vpon his Cathedrall Church, or vpon the pryme Church within the Presbyterie. And, That they may deale with anie other Presbyterie within the Diocese, who is better disposed, and vpon their receipt of the Complaynt, will referre the same to the Assemblie, and cite the Bishop in manner aboue-expressed, to compeare before the sayd Assemblie.

11. Item: Perhaps some Minister within the Presbyterie, may thinke some Heads of this Complaynt, not to be relevant in his Opinion, or know the Bishop not to bee guiltie of all the particular Heads containd therein; Yet hee in Iustice can not refuse to referre the tryall of the Relevancie, and Probation thereof, to the Generall Assemblie, especially, seeing the Relevancie and Probation of moe or fewer Points agaynst the Bishop of the Diocese, is sufficient; and seeing the Subsumption of everie particular Head, is agaynst the Bishop of the Diocese, with his Collegues.

12. Item, to desire the Presbytery, vpon Com-playnts vpon anie persons within the same, against any scandalous Minister, eyther in Doctrine or Lyfe, eyther to judge the Complaynt, or referre the same to the tryall and censure of the Generall Assemblie, and so to admonish and cite the Ministers complayned vpon, to compeare before the Generall Assemblie, for that ende.

According to which Articles, vpon Sunday, October 28, they caused reade the sayd Libell in all the Churches of Edinburgh, notwithstanding my Lord Commissioners command given to the Provost and Baylies to the contrarie, except in Holie-Rood-House, where it was read the next Sunday, as it was in other Churches of the Kingdome: proceeding heerein, 1. Agaynst all Charitie, which doeth not behaue it selfe vnseemly, nor delighteth in the discoverie of mens nakednesse, nor take vp a reproach, nor backbite with the tongue; much lesse to write a Booke agaynst a Brother. 2. Agaynst the order prescrybed by the Apostle; Not to rebuke an Elder, but to intreate him as a Father: and by the Act of Parliament, Iac. 6, Parl. 8, discharging all persons to impugne or to procure the diminution of the authoritie & power of the three Estates, or anie of them. 3. Agaynst all lawfull and formall proceeding, speciallie, that prescrybed by Act of Generall Assemblie at Perth, Martij. 1, 1596; whereby it is ordayned, That all Summons contayne the speciall Cause and Cryme: which the sayde Libell doeth not: nameing ouelie generall Calumnies, Reproaches, and Aspersions, without instruction of anie particular, but leaving these to bee filled vp by malicious delation, after they haue defamed their Brethren by publishing this Libell: as appeareth by the 8 and 11 Articles of the sayde Instructions. And agaynst the order prescrybed by the Assemblie at Saynet-Andrewes, April 24, 1582; whereby it is enacted, That in processe of deprivation of Ministers, there be a libelled Precept vpon fourtie dayes warning, beeing within the Realme; and threescore dayes, being without the Realme, to bee directed by the Church, and such Commissioners thereof, as elect and admit the person complained of, summoning them to compeare, & answer vpon the Complaint. And in case of their absence at the first Summons, the second to be directed vpon the lyke warning, with certification: if hee faile, the Libell shall be admitted to probation, and he shall bee holden pro confesso. Which forme not beeing kept in a Summons inferring the punishment of Deprivation, the same can not bee sustayned by the order of that Assemblie. 4. Agaynst common Equitie, which admitteth Summons onlie by the authoritie of that Iudge before whom the Delinquent is to compeare. Whereby the Summons directed by the authoritie of these pretended Presbyteries, can not sustayne, for compearance before the Generall Assemblie, nor could reference bee made from the Presbyterie, to the Generall Assemblie, the parties never beeing summoned to compeare before the Presbyterie, whereby eyther in presence of the Partie, or in the ease of contumacie, the Complaynt might be referred to the Assemblie. That there was no Citation before the Reference, is cleare, by the sayd Instructions. And what a strange and odious forme it is, to insert such a calumnious Libell in the Presbyterie-Bookes, without citing of the Parties, to aunswere therevnto; and to cite the Bishops before the Generall Assemblie, by the sayde Libell, by publishing the same at Churches, to the which they had no Relation, and were manie miles distant; wee leaue it to the judgement of indifferent men. 5. Agaynst all Decencie, and respect due to men of their Place, the sayde persons, beeing Men of Dignitic, and some of them of his Majesties moste HONOVRABLE PRIVIE COVNCELL, and knowne to bee of blamelesse Conversation, and to haue deserved well, thus to be reviled, and traduced, doeth redound to the reproach of Church, and State, and of the Gospell, whereof they are Preachers. 6. Lastlie, to omit manie other Informalities agaynst their owne Consciences, which wee charge in the sight of GOD, as they must answere before His Great and Fearfull Tribunall, If they suspect, and know not perfectlie, according to the judgement of Charitie, them whom they thus accuse, to bee free of these Crimes, wherewith they charge them; at least of manie of them; as appeareth evidentlie by the xj Article of the said Instructions, having therein libelled the Generall, and haue yet to seeke the Specification thereof, from the malice of their neighbours, if so bee they can furnish it. By which informall and malicious Proceeding, it is most apparent, that our sayd Parties doe seeke our disgrace and overthrowe, most maliciouslie, and illegallie. And therefore, wec call Heaven and earth to witness, if this bee not a barbarous, and violent persecution, that all Circumstances being considered, hath few or none to parallell it, since the beginning of Christianitie: and if wee haue not just cause to decline the sayde preteuded Commissioners, as our Partie.

Moreover, can these men expect, but in a lawfull Assemblie they were to bee called and censured for their enormc transgressions foresayde? And will anie man thinke, that they can be judges in their owne cause? it is alleadged out of the Canon-Law, agaynst the Pope, that if the Pope bee at variance with anie man, he ought not to bee judge himselfe, but to choose Arbitrators. And this may militate agaynst them; except they bee more vnrule than Popes. Ludovicus Bavarus, and all the Estates of Germanie with him, did pleade this Nullitie agaynst the sentence and Proceeding of Pope Iohn 22, and of his Councill. And the Archbishop of Cullen, 1546, did pleade the Nullitie of Paull 3 his Bull of Excommunication, because hee protested, that so soone as a lawfull Councill should bee opened, hee would impleade the Pope as Partie, being guiltie of manie things censurable by the Councill.

But the late Protestation doeth show the Authors thereof, to bee no lesse injurious to our Place, and Authoritie, than they are overweening of their owne. For it is agaynst Reason and Practise of the Christian Church, that no Primate, Archbishop, nor Bishop, haue place nor voyce deliberatiue, nor decisue, in Generall Assemblies, except they bee authorized, and elected, by their Presbyterian Meetings, consisting of Preaching and Ruling Elders, (as they call them) and without Warrant, or Example, in the Primitiue, and purest tymes of the Church.

XII. This also doeth inferre the Nullitie of an Assemblie, if the Moderator and President for matters of Doctrine, and Discipline, shall bee neyther the Primate, Arch-bishop, nor Bishop; but he who by pluralitie of Presbyters, and Lay-mens voyces, shall bee elected: which happilie may bee one of the inferiour Clergie, or a Lay-person, as sometymes it hath fallen out. Whereas Canonicallie, according to the auncient practise of the CHVRCH, the Primate should preside: according to the Constitution of the First Councill of Nice, Can. 6, of Antioch, Can. 9, and of the Imperiall Lawe, Novell. Constitut. 123, Cap. 10, and according to our owne Lawe. For what place in Assemblies, Arch-bishops and Bishops had in other Christian Nations, the same they had (no doubt) in SCOTLAND, and yet still doe retayne, except by some Muniecipall Lawe it hath beene restrayned, which can not bee showne: For the restraynt of their Authoritie by the Act of Parliament 1592, is restored by the Act of Parliament 1606, and 1609, and all Actes prejudiciall to their Iurisdiction abrogated. Neyther doeth that Act 1592, establishing Generall Assemblies, debarre Bishops from presiding therein: Nor the abrogation of their Commission, graunted vnto them by Act of Parliament, in Ecclesiasticall Causes, imply and inferre the abrogation of that Authoritie, which they received not from the Parliament, but from CHRIST, from Whom they received the Spirituall Over-sight of the Clergie, vnder their Charge: wherevnto belongeth the Presidentship in all Assemblies, for matters Spirituall; alwayes with due Submission to the Suprcame Governour: which is so intrinsecallie inherent in them, as they are Bishops, that hoc ipso that they are Bishops, they are Presidents of all Assemblies of the Clergie: as the Chancellour of the Kingdome hath place in Councill, and Session; not by anie Act, or Statute, but hoc ipso that hee is Chancellour. By Act of Parliament, Bishops are declared, to haue their Right in Synodes, and other inferiour Meetings; but by no Lawe restrayned, nor debarred from the exereyse of it in Nationall Assemblies: and the Lawe allowing Bishops to bee Moderatours of the Synodes, doeth present a List, in absence of the Metropolitan, to whome, of right, this Place doeth belong, as sayd is, out of which the Moderator of the Generall Assemblie shall bee chosen. For is it not more agreeable to Reason, Order, and Decencie, that out of Moderators of Synodes, a Moderator of the Generall Assemblie should bee chosen, than of the inferiour Clergie, subject to them?

As concerning that Act of the General Assemblie, Anno 1580, whereby Bishops are declared to haue no warrant out of Scripture, if eorruption of tyme shall bee regarded, the authoritie of that Assemblie might bee neglected no lesse than that at Glasgow, Anno 1610. But it is ordinarie that prior Actes of Assemblies and Parliametes giue place to the posterior; for Posteriora derogant Prioribus. And there past not full six yeares, when a Generall Assemblie at Edinburgh found, that the Name of Bishops hath a speeiall charge and function annexed to it by the Word of God; and that it was lawfull for the Generall Assemblie to admit a Bishop to a Benefec, presented by the Kings Majestie, with power to admit, visite, and depriue Ministers, and to be Moderatours of the Presbyteries where they are resident, and subject onelie to the sentence of the Generall Assemblie.

As for that Act at Montrose, let them answere to it that haue their calling by that Commission. Wee professe that wec haue a lawfull calling by the election of the Clergie, who are of the Chapter of our Cathedralls, and consecration of Bishops by his Majesties consent and approbation, according to the laudable Lawes and auncient Custome of this Kingdome, and of the Church in auncient tymes; and doe homage to our Sovereigne Lord for our Temporalities, and acknowledge him, solo D'o minore, next vnto God in all causes, and over all persons Spirituall or Temporall; in his owne Dominions suprcame Governour. But now wee may take vp Cyprian his complaint, Lib. 3. Ep. 14. Quot non periculum metuere debemus de offensâ Domini, quando aliqui de Presbyteris, nec Evangelii, nec loci sui memores; sed neque futurum Dei iudicium, neque præpositum sibi Episcopum cogitantes, quod nunquam omnino sub antecessoribus factum est, cum con- lumelia & contempta præpositi, totum sibi vendicent? Atque vltimam non prostrata fratrum nostrorum salute sibi omnia vendicarent. Contumelias Episcopatus nostri dissimulare & ferre possem; sicut dissimulavi semper & pertuli; sed dissimulandi nunc locus non est, quando dcepiatur fraternitas nostra à quibusdam vestrum, qui dum sine ratione restituendæ salutis plausibiles esse cupiunt, magis lapsis obsunt.

XIII. Lastlie; it is most manifest by the Premises, how absurd it is, and contrarie to all Reason and Practise of the Christian Church, that Archbishops and Bishops shall bee judged by Presbyters; and more absurd, that they should bee judged by a mixt meeting of Presbyters and Laicks, conveyeing without lawfull authoritie of the Church. Howe, and by whome they are to bee judged, according to the custome of Auncient times, may bee seene by the Councell of Chalcedon, Can. 9. and Concil. Milevit. Can. 22. and Coneil. Carthag. 2. Can. 10. Nor doe wee decline the lawfull tryall of anie competent iudicatorie in the Kingdome, espeeiallie of a Generall Assemblie lawfully constitute, or of his Majesties high Commissioner, for anie thing in life or doctrine can be layde to our charge: onlie we declare and affirme, That it is against Order, Decencie, and Scripture, that wee should be judged by Pesbyters or by Laickes, without Authoritie and Commission from Soveraygne Authoritie.

For the reasons fore-sayd, and manie moe, and for discharge of our duetie to GOD, to his CHVRCH, and to our Sacred Soveraygne, lest by our silence we betray the CHVRCHES right, his Majesties Authoritie, and our owne Consciencies, Wee for our selues, and in Name of the CHVRCH of SCOTLAND, are forced to protest, That this Assemblie be reputed and holden Null in Lawe Divine and Humane; and, That no Church-man bee holden to appeare before, assist or approue it; and therefore, that no Letter, Petition, Subscription, Interlocutor, Certification, Admonition, or other Act what-so-ever proceeding from the said Assemblie, or anie member thereof, bee anie wise prejudiciall to the Religion and Confession of Fayth by Act of Parliament established, or to the Church, or anie member thereof, or to the Iurisdiction, Liberties, Priviledges, Rentcs, Benefices, and Possessions of the same, Actes of Generall Assemblie, of Councell, and Parliament, in Favouresthereof; or to the three Estates of the Kingdome, or anie of them; or to vs, or anie of vs, in our Persons, or Estates, Authoritie, Iurisdiction, Dignitie, Rentcs, Benefices, Reputation, and good Name: But on the contrarie, That all such Actes and Deedes aboue-mentioned, and every one of them, are, and shall bee reputed and esteemed vnjust, illegall, and Null in themselves; with all that hath followed, or may follow there-vpon.

And for as much as the sayde Assemblie doeth intende, (as we are informed) to call in question, disusse, and condemne thinges not onelie in themselves lawfull, and warrandable; but also defined and determined by Actes of Generall Assemblie, and Parliaments, and in practise accordinglie; to the disgrace and prejudice of Reformed Religion, authoritie of the Lawes and Liberties of the Church and Kingdome; weakning his Majesties Authoritie, disgracing the Profession and Practise, which hee holdeth in the Communion of the Church where he liveth; and branding of Reformed Churches, with the foule asperitions of Idolatrie and Superstition: Wee protest before GOD and man, that what shall bee done in this kinde, may not redound to the disgrace or disadvantage of Reformed Religion, nor bee reputed a deede of the Church of SCOTLAND.

Wee protest, that wee imbrace and hold, That the Religion presentlie professed in the Church of Seotland, according to the Confession thereof, receaved by the Estates of this Kingdome, and ratified in Parliament, the yeare 1567, is the true Religion, bringing men to Eternall Salvation, and doe detest all contrarie Error.

Wee protest, That Episcopall Government in the Church, is lawfull, and necessaric: and, That the same is not opposed, and impugned, for anie Defect or Fault, eyther in the Government or Governoures; but by the malice and craft of the Devill, envying the successe of that Government in this CHVRCH these manie yeares by-past, most evident, in planting of Churches with able and learned Ministers, reeovering of the Church Rentcs, helping of the Ministers Stipends, preventing of these jarres betwixt the KING and the CHVRCH, which in former tymes dangerouslie infested the same, keeping the people in Peace and Obedience, and suppressing of Poperie, which in respect eyther of the number of their Professoures, or boldnesse of their Profession, was never at so lowe an ebbe in this Kingdome, as before these stirres.

Wee protest, That seeing these who for scruple of conscience did mislyke the Service-Booke, Canons, and high Commission, which were apprehended, or given foorth, to be the cause of the troubles of this Church, haue now receaved satisfaction, and his Majestic is graeciously pleased to forget and forgiue all offences by-past in these stirres; that all the Subjectes of this Kingdome may lue in Peace and Christian Loue, as becommeth faythfull Subjectes, and good Christians; laying aside all hatred, envye, and bitterness. And if anie shall refuse so to doe, they may beare the blame, and be thought the cause of the troubles that may ensue: and the same bee not imputed to vs, or anie of vs, who desire nothing more, than to lue in peace and concord with all men, vnder his MAJESTIES obedience, and who haue committed nothing agaynst the Lawes of the Kingdome, and Chureh, that may giue anie man just cause of offence; and are so farre from wishine hurt to anie man, in his person, or estate, notwithstanding all the indignities and injuries wee haue suffered, that for quenching this present Combustion, and setling Peace in this Church, and Countrey, wee could bee content, after clearing of our innocencie, of all thinges where-with wee can bee charged, not onelie to lay downe our Bishoprickes at his Majesties feet, to be disposed of at his Royall pleasure; but also, if so bee, it pleased GOD, to lay downe our lyues, and become a Sacrifice, for this Atonement.

Wee protest, in the sight of GOD, to Whom one day wee must giue Account, That wee make vse of this DECLINATOR, and PROTESTATION, out of the conscience of our ductie to GOD, and His CHVRCH; and not out of feare of anie guiltinesse, whereof anie of vs is conscious to himselfe, eyther of wickednesse in our lynes, or miscarriage in our Callings: being content, everie one of vs, for our owne particular, (as wee haue never showne our selues to bee otherwyse) to vnder-goe the lawfull, and moste exact Tryall, of anie competent Iudicatorie within this Kingdome, or of his Majesties high Commissioner.

And wee moste humblie intreat his Grace, to intercede with the King's Majestic, That hee may appoynt a Free and Lawfull Generall Assemblie, such as GOD'S Word, the practise of the Primitive Church, and Lawes of the Kingdome doe prescrybe, and allowe, with all convenient speed, to the effect, the present Distractions of the Church may be settled. And if there be any thing to be layd to the charge of any of the Clergie, of whatsoever degree, cyther in Lyfe and Manners, or Doctrine, or exercise of his Calling, and Jurisdiction, hee may bee heard to aunswere all Accusations, and abyde all tryall, cyther for clearing his innocencie, or suffering condigne punishment, according to his Transgressions: declyning alwayes this Assemblie, for the causes aboue-written. Lyke as by these Presentes, wee, and everie one of vs, declyne the same, the whole Members thereof, and Commissioners fore-sayd, directed therevnto, and everie one of them.

Wee protest, That this our PROTESTATION in respect of our lawfull absenee, may bee receaved, in the Name of vs vnder-subscribing for our selues, and in the Name of the CHURCH of SCOTLAND, that shall adheare to the sayde PROTESTATION, and in the Name of everie one of them, From our well-beloved, Doctor Robert Hamilton, Minister at Glasgow:

To whome, by these Presentes, wee giue our full Power, and expresse Mandate, to present the same in or at the sayde Assemblie, or where else, it shall bee necessarie to bee vsed; with all submission, and obedience, due to our Graecious Soveraygne, and his Majesties High Commissioner. And vpon the presenting and vsing thereof, Acts and Instrumentes to craue, and all other thinges to doe, that necessarilie are requyred in such Cases: firme and stable holding, or for to holde, what hee, or any of them, shall lawfullie doe in the Premisses.

In witness where-of, as wee are readie with our Blood, so with our Hand, wee haue subscribed these Presentes, at the Palace of HOLIEROOD-HOUSE, NEW-CASTLE, and GLASGOW, the 16, 17, and 20 dayes of November, Anno 1638.

I. The second reason to be advised with my Lord Commissioner, whether or not it be safe at this time to except against the Form of the Publication of the Indiction of the Assembly.

II. The third is a very good reason against the Proceeding of the Assembly, but will not infer a Nullity.

III. In all the reasons where the Assembly is called a pretended Assembly, it is His Majesties Pleasure, that the word pretended be deleted out of the Copy shewed to His Majesty.

IV. For the seventh reason, if it offend not the inferiour Clergie, His Majesty is contented with it.

V. In the ninth reason, to omit the precondemning of the Service-book, Book of Canons, and High Commission.

HAMILTON,

Concerning our Preparations here, I have commanded the Comptroller to give you a full account, of which you may take publick notice, and declare, That as their Carriage hath forced me to take care to arm myself against any Insolence that may be committed: so you may give assurance that my care of Peace is such, that all those Preparations shall be useless, except they first break out with insolent Actions. Now for Answer to your Letter, it was never heard that one should be both Judge and Party: besides, the Lawfulness of the Judicatory must be condeseended upon, before any Cause can be therein lawfully determined: therefore I say that the Assembly can in no case be Judge of their own Nullities: yet you have reason, not onely to make good what I have promised, but also to promise them a new Assembly, upon the amendment of all the Faults and Nullities of this. I approve of both your Bargains, and shall take care that you shall not lose by them, and so I rest

Your assured constant Friend,

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

What came from my Lord S. Andrews is herewith enclosed. We humbly and heartily thank your Grace for your excessive favour and kindness towards us: we must take it the more kindly, that we know at such a time it is to let others see what respect your Grace carries to our Coat; for our selves we could more willingly chuse a more sober diet and less ease: considering our own Sins, and the difficulties of the Times, do admonish us rather to fast than feast, to afflict our Souls rather than to relish any worldly pleasure. But above all we two for our selves, and in name of our Brethren, do with most thankful hearts acknowledg your Graeces most pious care of the Liberties of this poor distressed and distracted Church; and especially the solicitude and care your Grace hath, that our Protestainto be orderly done, secretly kept, and seasonably presented, before either the Cause, or we that are Bishops, suffer wrong. It is that which now concerneth us most and is dearest to us, both for Conscience before God, and our credit to the present Age and future; and we cannot express how happy we are to have in this Exigent such a Pious and Noble Patron, careful and sollicitous with the most tender affection both of our Cause and Persons, where otherwise (with the greatest loss, at least hazard, can be, to discharge our Duty to God and his Church) we should be necessitated to doe it our selves, and haply neither with so much safety nor honour. God will reward your Grace we are confident, and bless your Grace and yours; for we dare aver in this Division your Grace hath made choice of the better part. The Difficulties are great, the Hopes none, but too pregnant Fears to the contrary; yet it is the more like to be Gods Cause, that his Work may appear: and it may be called digitus Dei, and marvellous in our eyes. Mans extremity is Gods opportunity.

We have given Dr Hamilton our best directions, which we submit humbly to your Graces better Judgment, to add and command what you think fit: he needs no more Deputation, but the inserting of his name in the Procuratory, which is in the close of the Declinator. Above all we have recommended to him, a care that it may be timeously presented; but in this we trust only to your Grace.

As we pity the Difficulties your Grace is cast into, so shall we be earnest supplicants to God Almighty, to bless and preserve your Grace in this and all other Services, wherewith God and his Majesty hath trusted you.

Your Graces most humble and bounden Servants,

HAMILTON,

This is rather to give the reason of My Answer than the Answer it self, (you being to receive it at large by My Lord of Canterbury.) The truth is, that the same reason which made me blot out the whole Sentence before, hath made me desire to alter a word now; to wit, that I should not be thought to desire the abolishing of that in Scotland, which I approve and maintain in England, namely, the Five Articles of Perth: now the word content expresses enough my consent to have them surcease for the present; but the word pleased, methinks, imports as much as if I desired them to take them away, or, at least, were well pleased that they should doe so. But I leave it to your ordering, so that you make it be clearly understood, that though I permit, yet I would be better pleased if they would let them alone; and so I rest,

HAMILTON,

This is rather to shew you, that I do not forget you nor your pains, than for any Answer that your last Leter needs, it being more of Accounts than Demands. Onely I shall tell you, that you needed not to have made an Excuse for asking the Ten Thousand pounds Sterlin; for I know that there is but too much use for it, and the more I consider it, I find you have the more reason: therefore I assure you that what may be done shall be done in this, and with what speed is possible; and so I rest

HAMILTON,

I have heard this day that the Dean of Durham is dead, for the disposing of which Place, though I may have many Suiters, and (which is more) though heretofore I have had divers Intentions upon the disposing of that Place, for the better accommodating of my Service, the reason of which is now as forcible as ever; yet I have thought fit not to dispose of it till I might (if your stay be not longer than I expect) speak with you: and to shew you that I am not unmindful of the daily pains that at this time Balcanqual takes in my Service, I would let you see the case before I dispose of it, and have your Opinion, if he might not stay a little longer for another nearer my eye, and yet not dishearten him, when it may accommodate my Service another way; and so I rest

92, 93. *Speech of Commissioner to the Assembly, and the King's offers to it.**

MY LORDS and the rest of this REVEREND ASSEMBLY,

The making of long Harangues is not suitable either with my Education or Profession, much less with this Time, which now after so much talking ought to be a time of Action.

I pray God that as a great (and I hope the worst) part of mens Spirits have been evaporated into bitter and invective Speeches, so the best and last part of them may be reserved for Deeds, and these answerable to the Professions which have been made on all sides when this great Assembly should come.

For the Professions which have been made by Our Sacred Sovereign (whom God long preserve to reign over us) I am come hither by His command to make them good to His whole People, whom to His grief He hath found to have been poisoned (by whom I know not well, but God forgive them) with misconceits of His Intentions, concerning the Religion professed in this Church and Kingdom. But to rectifie all such Misconceptions of His Subjects, his Majesties desire is, that before this Assembly proceed to anything else, His Subjects may receive ample and clear satisfaction in these Points, wherein His Majesties gracious Intentions have been misdoubted, or glanced at, by the malevolent Aspects of such as are afraid that His Majesties good Subjects should see His clear mind through any other Glasses or Spectacles, than those they have tempered and fitted for them.

Those sinistrous Aspersion, dispersed by surmizes, have been especially two; first, as if there had been in His Majesty, if not some Intention, yet at least some inclination, to give way, if not to Alterations, yet to some Innovations in the Religion professed in, and established by the Laws of this Church and Kingdom.

I am confident that no man can harbour or retain any such thought in his breast any more, when His Majesty hath commanded that Confession of Faith,

(which you call the Negative) to be subscribed by all His Subjects whatsoever, and hath been Graciously pleased to put the Execution of this His Royal Command in your own hands.

The next false, and indeed foul and devilish Surmize, wherewith His good Subjects have been misled, is, that nothing promised in His Majesties last most Gracious Proclamation, (though most ungraciously received) was ever intended to be performed, nay, not the Assembly it self: but that only Time was to be gained, till His Majesty by Arms might oppress this His Own Native Kingdom; than which Report Hell it self could not have raised a blacker and falsier.

For that part which concerneth the Report of the Intention of not holding the Assembly, this Day and Place, as was first promised and proclaimed, (thanks be to God,) confuteth that Calumny abundantly; for the other of making good what His Majesty did promise in His last Gracious Proclamation, His Majesty hath commanded me thus to express His Heart to all His good Subjects.

He hath seriously considered all the Grievances of His Subjects, which have been presented to Him, by all and several of their Petitions, Remonstrances, and Supplications, exhibited unto Himself, His Commissioner, and Lords of His Secret Council, and hath graciously granted them all; and as He hath already granted as far as could be by Proclamation; so he doth now desire, that His Subjects may be assured of them by Acts of this General Assembly, and afterwards by Acts of Parliament respective.

And therefore he not onely desires, but commands, that all the Particulars he hath promised be first gone in hand with in this Assembly, and enacted, and then afterwards what His Subjects shall desire being found reasonable may be next thought upon, that so it may be known to God and the whole World, and particularly to all His good Subjects, how careful His Majesty is to discharge himself of all his Gracious Promises made to them; hoping that when you shall see how Royally, Graciously, and Faithfully His Majesty hath dealt with you, and all his Subjects, you will likewise correspond in loyal and dutiful Obedience, in chearful but calm and peaceable Proceeding, in all other business to be treated of in this Assembly: and because there shall be no mistake, I shall now repeat the Particulars, that you may see they are the same which were promised by His Majesties first Proclamation.

CHARLES R.

The Kings Majesty being informed, that many of His good Subjects have apprehended, that by the introduction of the Service-book and Book of Canons, the in-bringing of Popery and Superstition hath been intended, is Graciously pleased to discharge the said Books, and to annul all Acts made for establishing thereof; and for His good People their further satisfaction, is Graciously pleased to declare by me, that no other in that kind shall hereafter be introduced, but in a fair and legal way of Assembly, allowed by Act of Parliament, and the Laws of this Kingdom.

The Kings Majesty, as he conceived for the ease and benefit of the Subjects, established the High Commission, that thereby Justice might be administered, and the Faults and Errours of such persons as are made liable thereto taken order with, and punished with the more convenience, and less trouble to the People: but finding His Gracious Intentions to be herein mistaken, hath been pleased, likcas he is Graciously content, that the same be discharged, with all Acts and Deeds made for the establishing thereof, and is pleased to declare by me, that that Court or Judicatory, nor no other of that nature, shall be brought in hereafter, but in that way allowed by the Laws of this Kingdom.

And the Kings Majesty being informed, that the urging of the five Articles of Perth's Assembly hath bred Distraction in the Church and State, hath been Graciously pleased to take the same into His consideration, and for the quiet and peace of Church and State, doth not onely dispense with the practice of the said Articles, but also discharges, and by these hath discharged, all and whatsoever Persons from urging the practice thereof, upon either Laiek or Ecclesiastic person whatsoever: and doth hereby free all His Subjects from all Censure and Pain, whether Ecclesiastical or Secular, for not urging, practising, or obeying them, or any of them, notwithstanding any thing contained in the Acts of Parliament or General Assembly, to the contrary.

And because it is pretended, that Oaths have been administred to Ministers at their entry, contrary and differing from that which is set down in the Acts of Parliament, His Majesty is pleased to declare and ordaine, that no other Oath shall be required of any Minister at his entry than that which is expressly set down in the Acts of Parliament; and this He is content be considered of in the Assembly, to be represented to the Estates of Parliament, and enacted as they shall find expedient.

And that it may appear how careful His Majesty is that no Corruption or Innovation shall creep into this Church, neither any scandal, vice, or fault of any person whatsoever censurable or punishable by the Assembly, go unpunished, it is his Majesties Pleasure, likcas by these His Majesty does assure all His good People, that hereafter General Assemblies shall be kept as oft as the Affairs of this Kirk shall require: and to this purpose, because it is probable that some things necessary for the present Estate and Good of this Church may be left unperfected at this present Assembly, We do by these indict another Assembly to be holden at

And that none of Our Subjects may have cause of Grievance against the Procedure of Prelats, Our Pleasure is, that all and every one of the present Bishops, and their Successours, shall be answerable, and accordingly from time to time censurable according to their Merits by the Assembly, which His Majesty is likewise pleased be enacted in this present Assembly, and thereafter ratified in Parliament.

And to give all His Majesties good People good assurance that he never intended to admit any Alteration or Change in the true Religion professed within this Kingdom, and that they may be truly and fully satisfied of the Reality of His Intentions towards the maintainance of the Truth and Integrity of the same, His Majesty hath been pleased to require and command all His good Subjects to subscribe the Confession of Faith, subscribed by His dear Father in Anno 1580. and for that effect hath ordained the Lords of His Privy Council to take some speedy course whereby the same may be done through the whole Kingdom; which His Majesty requires likewise all those of this present Assembly to sign, and all others His Subjects, who have not done it already: and it is His Majesties Will, that this be inserted and registred in the Books of this Assembly, as a Testimony to Posterity, not onely of the sincerity of His Intentions to the said true Religion, but also of His Resolution to maintain and defend the same and His Subjects in the professing thereof.

NOTE.—Since the first Part of this publication appeared, the second centenary of the Assembly 1638 has been celebrated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, (on 20th December 1838,) as well as in other considerable towns of Scotland; and this commemoration has been conducted with a degree of eclat unexampled perhaps within the memory of man, in reference to any ecclesiastical concerns. We are not called on to make any remarks as to the appropriateness and sound discrimination displayed in all these demonstrations; but we gladly avail ourselves of the present opportunity of enriching these pages with an extract from a speech made by the Rev. Dr Lee, of Edinburgh, at Glasgow, on the occasion alluded to. We place it here in juxtaposition with the authentic list of the members of Assembly of 1638, because it affords the best illustration we could give of the composition of that Assembly, and is a satisfactory refutation of certain ignorant or malignant representations on the subject; and we are proud thus to record our respect for that excellent and accomplished gentleman, whose store of information, with regard to the history and constitution of the Church of Scotland, exceeds, we believe, that of any other individual, both for fulness and exactness:—

“If your time had permitted, I might have endeavoured to shew in what manner and degree the Assembly 1638, and those which followed after, as well as some which had preceded it half a century, contributed to the establishment of the highest and finest University education. Among the other great objects in which that Assembly so happily and successfully engaged, none was nearer their hearts, or better accomplished. It was their aim to establish all the Universities, Colleges, and Schools in a state of high efficiency; and, with this view, they reclaimed for the Church the power of visitation formerly exercised, that the religious character and consistent practice of all Principals, Regents, and Professors might be satisfactorily ascertained, as well as their aptitude for their stations; and that whatever was deficient might be supplied, and whatever was disordered or corrupt might be rectified.

95. Letter from the Bishop of Ross to Hamilton.

MY LORD, MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,
This Worthy Gentleman hath desired my Judgment concerning three things: first, concerning the that Assembly were generally qualified in no ordinary degree. It has, indeed, been alleged that a large proportion of the elders consisted of illiterate men. I have seen it asserted in several books of late, even in some written by Presbyterians, that many of those in that Assembly, who judged of the gravest questions concerning theological learning and soundness in the faith, could neither read nor write. There is no authority for this insinuation, except the random assertion of Bishop Burnet—supposed sometimes to have been a contemporary, though he was not born for five years afterwards—the value of whose testimony on this matter may easily be estimated by any one who observes what he has confidently, though most ignorantly and erroneously, stated, with respect to Ruling Elders—that the mixture of that class with the Ministers in Church Courts was then quite a new thing; for, though such officers had formerly been allowed to interfere in parochial discipline, ‘yet they never came to their Assemblies till the year 1638.’ So far is this from being true, that, from the very first, Elders had convened in great numbers with the Ministers at the General Assemblies—there was even a preponderance of them in the earliest of all the Assemblies, in 1560—insomuch that, long before Burnet wrote, or even was born, several Bishops of Scotland, such as Adamson and Maxwell, had published complaints against decisions of the Assembly, on the ground that they had been carried by the votes of Lay Elders, as they called them. If the Elders were unable to read or write, so much the less credit is due to the system of education which had prevailed nearly forty years before 1638, under auspices not Presbyterian; and so much the greater credit should be given to the Presbyterians for the improvements by means of which, as Burnet frankly confesses, they brought the people generally to a most surprising measure of knowledge, particularly on theological points, and to a corresponding measure of practical piety.

“But I think it of some consequence to vindicate the claims of the Assembly 1638 to the character of a learned Assembly. Well, then, what is the fact? It is ascertained that in that Assembly there were 140 Ministers; 2 Professors, not being ministers; and 98 Ruling Elders from Presbyteries and Burghs. Of these Ruling Elders, 17 were Noblemen of high rank; 9 were Knights; 25 were landed Proprietors, or lesser Barons, of such station as entitled them to sit in Parliament; and 47 were Burgesses, generally holding the principal offices of authority in their respective towns—men who were capable of representing their communities in the Parliament. There was not a peasant, as has been insinuated, or even a farmer or yeoman, in the number. About the least considerable persons present were, Mr Alex. Hume, bailie of Lawder, and Mr Patrick Hume, burges of North Berwick. Both of these, as well as many others of the members from the burghs, were masters of arts, having had a complete university education, and having obtained their degrees after regular examination. From what I know of the personal history of many of these men, and from documents which I have seen and now possess, I could undertake to prove that not one was illiterate. About twenty years ago, I acquired most of the original commissions of the members of the Assembly 1638. These documents are subscribed generally by the whole constituents of the Commissioners—namely, by Ministers, by Elders, by Magistrates, and Councillors. The signatures are, for the most part, in a superior style of penmanship; production of a Letter from His Majesty to the Assembly, directed to the Archbishops, Bishops, and Ministers, whether or not this can be produced, and any Note made upon it, before there be a Moderator condescended upon. My humble Opinion is, (which I humbly submit to your Graces better Judgment) that the Letter be presented, given by your Grace to the Clerk, and read by him. Here it is most like your Grace will be pressed, that the Letter is directed to an Assembly that cannot be without a Moderator, and yet on purpose to get a Moderator by Election, and an Assembly established; to which in my Judgment it may be replied, that it may be that the King's Letter containeth something to that purpose, which, therefore, is to be read, and noted by the Clerk as produced only. The second is concerning the examination of the Commissions and Commissioners: My Lord, it is certain that both are most illegal, and there is more than sufficient ground from this one (if there were no more) to void this Assembly and make it null. But how to begin at this I see not so well, for if the Commissions and Commissioners be rejected, then how shall the King's Real and Royal Intentions be manifest to the subjects, which is most necessary, that the Factious may not have advantage to possess good and loyal Subjects, that His Majesty is onely deluding them for other ends. On the other part, if your Grace approve the Commissions and Commissioners, how far King and Church shall suffer, your Grace is wiser to conceive than I am able to express. The third is concerning the Declinator, when it shall be proposed or presented to your Grace; My Lords of Glasgow and Brechin are fully of that mind, that at the very first it is to be used before the Assembly be estab-

and it is not credible that such men would elect persons to represent them who were less educated than themselves. Moreover, the signatures of the Elders who sate in the Assembly might have been known by Bishop Burnet to be appended to the National Covenant—that great bond by which the people of this land engaged to maintain the true principles of the Reformation, as founded in the Word of God. Many of these documents, studded with innumerable subscriptions, are still extant.

“But how did this Assembly, and those which followed, fulfil their purposes with respect to the Universities? They not only appointed visitations, but they prevailed on the Government greatly to enlarge the provision for the maintenance of the Universities, so that they were enabled to increase the number of Professors, and to augment their incomes; thus making it practicable to admit the youth to the benefit of their instructions on the easiest terms. They did not despise or discourage the most elegant accomplishments. On the contrary, the Assembly of 1645, following out the views of preceding assemblies, deplored the great decay of poesy, and the ignorance of prosody, and ordained that, in the trial of Schoolmasters, for burghs or other considerable parishes, none should be admitted but such as after examination should be found skilful in the Latin tongue, not only for prose, but also for verse; and the same Assembly introduced other regulations for advancing the study, not only of Greek, but of all the branches of Philo-sophy. But the chief recommendation of the system, then prescribed and practised, was, that the nurture and admonition of academical youth was sanctified by the Word of God, and by prayer. The study of the Scriptures was a college exercise. The young were trained to habits of devotion. The catechisms, and other manuals of religious instruction, were translated into Latin, and carefully taught; and, by such provisions as these, the influence of piety was diffused over the paths of solid learning.”

lished: their Reasons seem very pregnant, first, because all Declinators are used so; next, if the Assembly be once established, how can it be declined, or your Grace admit our Declinator or Protestation?

My Lord, seeing two things are mainly to be looked to, the one that His Majesties Pious Intentions be made known to this present Meeting; the other, that the Church suffer no prejudice; my humble Opinion is, that first the King's Letter (as I have said) be read, and marked Produced; next immediately after, our Declinator produced, and presented to your Grace, read in audience of all, Instruments taken in the Clerk-Registers hands, and it marked by the Clerk Produced. Then your Grace may, by your own Wisdom, conceive a brief Speech, excusing your self that you are not so well acquainted with the Formalities and Legalities of Church-meetings; yet that seeing in such Distractions and Combustions all things cannot be done in that orderly way is requisite, and that your Grace does know how that, with a most earnest and Fatherly Care, His Majesty endeavours the binding up of this breach, and the restoring of Church and State to Quiet and Peace, and that your Grace, for that Duty you owe to your Master, and Love you have to your Native Country, will leave nothing undone that is in your power, and incumbent to a Faithful Servant and kind Patriot, and therefore will adventure to chuse rather to erre in formal Errours: than to leave so material and necessary a Work at such an exigent of time; and so seeing there is no Archbishop nor Bishop present, your Grace by connivence will permit them (for how your Grace can allow it I see not) to chuse a Moderator, and will not fall upon that shelve or rock of Examination of Commissions or Commissioners; being confident that if matters go on in a moderate way, what shall be agreed upon shall be liked by all, even those that are taken to be their Party; and what is amiss in Formality and Legality, if no error be in the matter of the Conclusions, may most easily and speedily be helped. After the Moderator is condescended upon, the first thing your Grace would urge is the Registrating the Kings Letter in the Books of the Assembly, then the Registrating of our Declinator. After this your Grace will be careful, that nothing be proposed till what is in His Majesties Declaration be enacted, and if (this being done) they fall upon any extravagancy, your Grace then may by advice of the Council declare, that seeing they will not hold Moderation, your Grace and the Council must examine their Commissions and Commissioners, (to which before you gave connivence) and discuss the relevancy of our Declinator.

This Course kepted, in my poor Judgement, will fully manifest to all His Majesties pious Intentions, evidence your Graces sincere affection to Religion and the Kingdom, preserve our Right, make them unexcusable, let the People see how unreasonable and immoderate they are, and give to your Grace a fair way and ground, to discontinue and discharge the Meeting under pain of Treason. This my weak and poor opinion I have made bo'd to declare to your Grace, not out of any confidence in my self, but necessitated because of that Obedience I owe your Grace, and true affection to the Peace of Church and State, which with myself, and all my endeavours, I humbly prostrate to you, and submit to your Grace's better Judgement.

I humbly beg of your Grace to let me know by this Gentleman, what shall be done with our Declinator, and let him come and speak with my Lords of Glasgow, Brechin, and me, that we may be acquainted by him of your Graces commands. God in his mercy bless you in this difficult Work.

Your Grace's most humble and bounden Servant,
Jo. ROSSEN.*

96. *Letter from Hamilton to the King.**

MOST SACRED SOVEREIGN,

When I consider the many, great, and most extraordinary favours, which your Majesty hath been pleased to confer upon me; if you were not my Sovereign, gratitude would oblige me to labour faithfully, and that to the uttermost of my power, to manifest my thankfulness. Yet so unfortunate have I been in this unlucky country, that though I did prefer your service before all worldly considerations, nay, even strained my conscience in some points, by subscribing the negative confession; yet all hath been to small purpose; for I have missed my end, in not being able to make your Majesty so considerable a party as will be able to curb the insolency of this rebellious nation, without assistance from England, and greater charge to your Majesty, than this miserable country is worth. As I shall answer to God at the last day, I have done my best, though the success has proven so bad, as I think myself of all men living, most miserable, in finding that I have been so useless a servant to him, to whom I owe so much. And seeing this may perhaps be the last letter that ever I shall have the happiness to write to your Majesty, I shall therefore in it discharge my duty so far, as freely to express my thoughts in such things as I do conceive concerneth your service. And because I will be sure that it should not miscarry, I have sent it by this faithful servant of your Majesty's whom I have found to be so trusty, as he may be employed by you, even to go against his nearest friends and dearest kindred.

Upon the whole matter, your Majesty has been grossly abused by my Lords of the clergy, by bringing in those things in this church, not in the ordinary and legal way. For the truth is, this action of theirs is not justifiable by the laws of this kingdom; their pride was great, but their folly greater; for if they had gone right about this work, nothing was more easy, than to have effected what was aimed at. As for the persons of the men, it will prove of small use to have them characterized out by me, their condition being such, as they cannot be too much pitied; yet, lest I should lay upon them a heavier imputation, by saying nothing, than I intend, therefore I shall crave leave to say this much. It will be found that some of them have not been of the best lives, as St Andrews, Brechin, Argyle, Aberdeen; too many of them inclined to simony; yet, for my Lord of Ross, † the most hated of all, and generally by all, there are few personal faults laid to his charge, more than ambition, which I cannot account a fault, so it be in lawful things. But, Sir, to leave them, and come to those whom I conceive it is more necessary you should know, your officers and counsellors, of whom I shall write without spleen or favour, as I shall answer to him at the last day, to whom I must give an account (I know not how soon) of all my actions.

Your Treasurer,* his ambition has been great, and his labouring popularity has certainly prejudiced your service. Nothing could gain him that name sooner, than by opposing the clergy; and the differences betwixt them hath marred all; to which those of the Council did not only hold hand to, but encouraged him to it, as much as in them lay; and here again, I say, they gave too just reason to meet with opposition. He is a most active man, and hath many excellent parts. What his bypast carriage hath been, is as well, if not better known to your Majesty than me; but he doth now labour certainly what lieth in him, to advance your Majesty's ends; and hath oft solemnly sworn to me, that in defence of episcopal government he will spend his life and fortune. For those particulars wherewith he hath been taxed, as being guilty of abusing your Majesty, in the execution of his place, as Treasurer, he will, in my opinion, justify himself. Howsoever (considering these present times) you must make use of him, and your Majesty should be wary of giving him discontent.

As for my Lord Privy Seal, † I shall not need to say much of him, he being so well known to your father (of blessed memory) whose judicious character of him to yourself, is so true, as I shall neither add nor pare. He hath likewise declared himself to me for episcopal government; but I like not his limitations; yet you must make use of him, for he is a powerful man in this country.

The Marquis of Huntley is unknown to me, more than in general; but much disliked is he here (yet not the worse for that) traduced not only to be popishly inclined, but even a direct Roman Catholic; nay, they spare not to tax him with personal faults. But howsoever, this I am sure of, since my coming here, he hath proved a faithful servant to you; and I am confident will be of greater use, when your Majesty shall take arms in your hand.

The Earl of Argyle is the only man now called up as a true patriot, a loyal subject, a faithful counsellor, and above all, rightly set for the preservation of the purity of religion. And truly, Sir, he takes it upon him. He must be well looked to; for it fears me, he will prove the dangerousest man in this State. He is so far from favouring episcopal government, that with all his soul he wishes it totally abolished. What course to advise you to take with him, for the present, I cannot say; but remit it to your Majesty's serious consideration. The information which you have had from Antrim, the most part of it I take to be true.

Perth hath been taxed to be a Roman Catholic; but I find him none. A loyal heart he hath, but no great politician, nor of much power out of the Highlands, and should be encouraged, because he may contribute to the curbing of Argyle.

Tullibardin, I take him to be honest; your Majesty knoweth his abilities. He is a true hater of Argyle.

Wigton, thanks be to God, hath no great power, for if he had it, it would be employed the wrong way. Sorry I am for it, his ancestors have been so dear friends to mine.

Kinghorn, I am grieved for his weakness. A good man he is, but totally misled by his brother Albar, who will succeed in his place, he having no children. Too near of kindred he is to me.

Haddington has too much the humour of these times ; but he hath oft sworn to me, he will never ask what your quarrel is ; yet few of his friends I fear will go along with him in it, in defence of episcopacy.

As for Lauderdale, he is a man of no great power ; but he is truly honest, and most rightly set in all that concerneth your service.

Southesk hath, beyond all expectation, shewn himself forwardly stout in all that hath concerned your service, ever since my coming first to this country. He is a man of great power, rich, and was extremely beloved ; but now as much hated. He doth deserve your Majesty's favour, on my word ; and, if not for one consideration, none were fitter to be Chancellor, which I shall advise your Majesty not to dispose of till these troubles be past.

Kinnoul, for his part, hath shewn himself both true and forward in all your service ; in whom your Majesty may have confidence, according to his power.

Finlater, according to his power, hath done his part, as I hear by the Marquis of Huntley.

Linlithgow, if his power were according to his affection, he would be useful to you.

I must not forget Dalzell, who both is of power to serve you, and has most faithfully done it.

As for the rest of the Council, they are either of no power to serve you in this time, or totally set the covenanters way. For brevity I pass them by, and have sent a list of the whole Counsellors names.

If the Justice Clerk* were not so near me as he is, I would say more of him than now I will ; yet pardon me for saying, an honest soul lives not.

The Advocate† should be removed, for he is ill disposed. I know none so fit for his place as Sir Lewis Stewart. My Lord Treasurer's friend he is ; Sir Thomas Nicolson being no ways to be trusted in what may concern the affairs of the church.

Now, for the Covenanters, I shall only say this in general, they may all be placed in one roll as they now stand. But certainly, Sir, those that have both broached the business, and still hold it aloft, are Rothes, Balmerino, Lindsay, Lothian, Loudoun, Yester, Cranstoun. There are many others as forward in show ; amongst whom none more vainly foolish than Montrose. But the above mentioned are the main contrivers.

The gentry, boroughs, and ministers have their ringleaders too. It will be too long to set down all their names. Those who I conceive to be most inclined, the Clerk Register (who is a faithful servant to the Crown) if I miscarry, will give you information of them ; yet, I fear him, poor man, more than myself. But they are obvious and known to all.

This is all that I will say concerning the persons of the men in this kingdom ; wishing, Sir, with my heart, those whom I misdoubt, I may be deceived by their future carriage, and that their loyalty may appear, which will blot out of your Majesty's memory what my duty and fidelity to you has caused me to write thus of them.

It is more than probable, that these people have somewhat else in their thoughts than religion. But that must serve for a cloak to rebellion, wherein for a time they may prevail ; but, to make them miserable, and bring them again to a dutiful obedience, I am confident your Majesty will not find it a work of long time, nor of great difficulty, as they have foolishly fancied to themselves. The way to effect which, in my opinion, is briefly thus.

Their greatest strength consists in the boroughs ; and their being is by trade ; whereof, a few ships of your Majesty's, well disposed, will easily bar them. Their chiefest trade is in the eastern Seas and to Holland, with coal and salt, and importing of victual, and other commodities from thence ; whereof if they be but one year stopped, an age cannot recover them ; yet so blinded they are, that this they will not see. This alone, without farther charge to your Majesty, your frontiers being well guarded, will work your end. This care should be taken, that when particular boroughs can be made sensible of their past errors, and willing to return to their allegiance, they be not only then not barred from trade, but received into your Majesty's favour and protection.

In my opinion, your ships would be best ordered thus, eight or ten to lie in the Firth. There should be some three or four plying to and again betwixt the Firth and Aberdeen, so long as the season of the year will permit them to keep the seas ; and when they are not longer able, they may retire into the Firth ; in which there are several places in which they may ride in all weathers.

Those ships that lie in the Irish seas, will be sufficient to bar all trade from the west of Scotland. The fittest places are between Arran and the coast of Galloway. When the weather is foul, there is an excellent road in Galloway called Lochyen ; and another in Arran called Lamash, or the Holy Island ; where they may ride in safety. This is all I shall say concerning the barring them of trade.

This will certainly so irritate them, as all those who within this country stand for your Majesty, will be in great and imminent danger. The best way, that for the present I can think on to secure them, and to make some head for your Majesty, is, to appoint the Marquis of Huntley in the north, your Majesty's Lieutenant ; with full power to him to raise such and so many men, as he shall think convenient for the defence of the country. By this means, there being a head, those that are in the north will know to whom to repair ; and there is no doubt but in those parts they will do well enough.

For those that are besouth the river Forth, I apprehend their danger most ; and I would advise that there were lieutenants likewise appointed, to whom they might repair. Necessity will force your Majesty upon one of two, either Traquair or Roxburgh ; or, indeed, both, for they may both have commissions. They may be well furnished with arms, and other things necessary, from England, by land, both their fortunes being near adjacent to Northumberland ; and though I fear they will not be able to make a body of an army, yet necessary it is that lieutenants should be, and I know none so fit as these in those parts ; for I will never think they have traiterous hearts.

Certainly necessary it is for the government of this kingdom, that a commissioner or deputy should be in it. For experience hath taught me, that your Majesty will never be well served by your council, unless there be some one or other amongst them on whom the chief care must lie. If your Majesty do not first settle the country, and reclaim it, whosoever you shall employ, will never be able to do any thing. Therefore that should be done, before any new commission be given ; and even then, where you will find a man, I cannot possibly say, unless your Majesty send the Duke of Lenox. As for the Marquis of Huntley, certainly he may be trusted by you ; but whether fitly or no, I cannot say. If

† Sir Thomas Hope.

I keep my life (though next Hell I hate this place), if you think me worthy of employment, I shall not weary till the government be again set right; and then I will forswear this country.

As for your Majesty's castle of Edinburgh, it was a most shameful thing it should have been so neglected. I cannot promise that it shall be defended, yet I hope they shall not take it, but by an hostile aet. Some few men I have stolen in, but as yet cannot get one musket put there, nor one yard of match. I have trusted, for a time, the same man that was in it, and perhaps your Majesty will think this strange that I have done so; yet necessity forced me to it. For thither Ruthven would not go, without arms and ammunition; and indeed he is not to be blamed therefore; but, Sir, I have that in working, that, if I can accomplish, may for a time secure that place. And for my trusting that man, I can only say this, that if he deceive me, we were in no worse condition than when it was in Lord Marr's hands; safe only, for the giving him 2000*l.* which, if lost by the default of him whom I have trusted, your Majesty shall not be burthened by the payment of this money, for I deserve to lose it for my confidence. He is no Covenanter, and hath solemnly sworn to me, to lose his life before he quit it.

As for Dunbritton, the way is easy to put as many men there as you please, with victual and ammunition; from Ireland they must come, and at the castle they must land; 100 men will be sufficient, provided with ammunition and victual for three months; and the sooner this be done the better.

Thus, Sir, your Majesty hath the humble opinion of what I conceive of the affairs of the kingdom. What I have said, I humbly submit to your Majesty.

I have now only this one suit to your Majesty, that if my sons live, they may be bred in England, and made happy by service in the court; and if they prove not loyal to the crown, my curse be on them.

I wish my daughters be never married in Scotland. I humbly recommend my brother to your favour.

Thus, with my hearty prayers to God, that he will bless you with a long and happy life, and crown all your intentions with a wished success; which I hope to live and see effected, notwithstanding of all the threats that is used to

Your Majesty's, &c.

HAMILTON.

1638.—November.

97. *The Supplication and humble Remonstrance of the Ministers of the Church of Scotland, presented to his Majesties High Commissioner and Generall Assemblie held at Glasgow in November, 1638.**

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

And you right Noble, Right Worshipfull, and you most Reverend brethren, convened by his Majesties Proclamation in this venerable nationall Assembly, to consult upon the most convenient wayes, and to enact such Ecclesiasticall Lawes, as to your wisdomes seemes most expedient, for preserving of peace and truth in this Church, for which ends wee from the bottome of our hearts (as feeling members of the same) earnestly intreat him, who hath promised to be with his owne to the end of the world, by his spirit and grace, so to direct and assist your wisdomes, that by this long expected meeting, glory may redound to his ever glorious Name, and peace to this rent Church, which all the members thereof, with most earnest wishes, expect at your hands. For the present, we thought it our duty, as those whom it doth most clearly concerne (our great Shepheard having committed to our charge a part of that Floek which he hath redeemed with his precious blood) to present unto you our just feares which arise from the sudden ineroaching of the Laick (now called Ruling) Elders, in divers Presbyteries of this Kingdome, having chiefe hand in ehusing of Commissioners there, lest they, with Commissioners thus elected, may bring upon the neck of the Ministry and Church here, the heavie yoke of overruling Elders in all times coming, to the no small hurt of us and our successors in the Gospel, except timely remedy be provided.

Our humble supplication therefore to your Grace, and Members of this present Assembly, is, that all these Commissioners thus chosen by the voyee of Laick Elders, and in whose Commissions they have had hand, may be removed, as men to whose voyees and judgements we cannot submit our selves in matter of Church government, for the just feares above exprest, they being justly suspect Judges not to be admitted, and their elections and Commissions void for reasons following: First, there is no Law in this Kingdome whereby Laick Elders have any voyce in ehusing Commissioners to Generall Assemblies; the ehusers therefore having no legall power to elect, those that are ehosen by such, can have no place nor voyce in this Assembly. Secondly, albeit there have beene heretofore, and before Churches were fully planted, a custome that Laick-Elders did sit in Presbyteries, yet that custome hath beene these 35. yeeres by-past, universally (and above forty yeeres in most Presbyteries) interrupted; which prescription is sufficient to make voyd any such custome: so that it can be no sufficient warrant for them to sit and voyce in Presbyteries now, much lesse to intrude themselves (as they have done in many Presbyteries) contrarie to the minds and publicke protestation of the Ministerie. Thirdly, when Laick-Elders had place in Presbyteries, yet it was ordained that the voyees should not be equal in number, with the voyces of the Ministerie, as is to be seene in the booke of discipline Chapter. But in this election, their number were not onely equal, but in most parts more, because out of every Parish there was a Laick-Elder, and so at least equal in number; and in election of these Commissioners, against whose election we except, there was put upon the list six in some places, and in others foure of the Ministers, who being removed, in their absenee the ehoyee was made when the Laick-Elders by six or foure at the least exceeded the Ministers in number of voyees, yea in some Presbyteries the Laick-Elders were twice so many in number; so that these Commissioners are mainly chosen by the Laitie, and not by the Ministers, neither can wee acknowledge them for ours. Fourthly, these Laick-Elders did of old onely assist in Discipline, not meddling with points of Doctrin (suffering the spirit of the Prophets to be subject to the Prophets, according to the Apostolicall rule;) but now they intrude themselves to sit and voice in the Presbyteries in matters of Doctrin, and have given Commission to those whom we except against, to voyce in this venerable Assembly, in Doctrin as well as in matters of Discipline; which Commissions are null, as proceeding à non habente potes- tatem. For these and other most weighty causes, the election of such Commissioners, and their place in this Assembly being so dangerous to the Church, threaten the same with the most intolerable yoke of bondage to be laid upon the neck of the Presbyteries by Laick over-ruling-Elders, to the prejudice of the liberties of the said Presbyteries, and whole Discipline of this Church. We could not, out of conscience to God, our callings, and flocks, but make humble remonstrance of the same to your Grace and members of this grave Assembly: withall protesting, both in our own names, and in name of all the Ministerie and body of this Church that will adhere to this present supplication, that all sentences, conclusions, Canons, Statutes, and Ordinances, which shall be made in that Assembly wherein the foresaid Commissioners shall have determinative voyce, to be voyd, null, and of no effect to oblige us or any of us to the obedience of the same: But if this our just supplication be not admitted (which we hope and earnestly pray may be graciously accepted) then this our protestation may be of force against such Lawes and proceedings that may follow thereupon. Thus hoping for your charitable construction of this our necessarie duty in so eminent a danger of the Church, and humbly intreating these presents may be put upon Record, We rest.

98, 99. *Speech of Hamilton at dissolving the Assembly, and his Reply to Moderator.**

I find this day great contrarieties of Humours in my self, first, cause of Joy; next, cause of Sorrow: cause of Joy, in making good what hath been promised by His Majesty; cause of Sorrow, in that I cannot make further known his Majesties Pious Intentions.

You have called for a Free General Assembly: His Majesty hath granted you one, most Free on his part, and in his intentions; but as you have handled and marred the matter, let God and the World judge, whether the least shadow or footstep of Freedom can be discerned in this Assembly, by any man who hath not given a Bill of Divorce both to his Understanding and Conscience. With what wrestling and wringing your last Protestation charges His Majesties last Gracious Proclamation in the point of Prelimitations, is both known and disliked by many even of your own pretended Covenant; but whether your Courses, especially in the Elections of the Members of this Assembly, be not onely Prelimitations of it, but strong Bars against the Freedom of it, nay utterly destructive both of the Name and Nature of a Free Assembly, and unavoidably inducing upon it many and main Nullities, will be made manifest to the whole World.

But his Majesties Sincere Intentions being to perform in a lawful Assembly all he hath promised in his Gracious Proclamation, if you find out a way how these things may pass, and be performed even in this Assembly, such as it is, and yet His Majesty not made to approve any way the Illegalities and Nullities of it, for satisfying all His Majesties good Subjects of the Reality of his Meaning; I am by His Majesties special Command ready to doe it, and content to advise with you how it may be done.

[And after this he caused read his Majesties Concessions, as they had been before proclaimed: upon which he took instruments, that by producing and signing of them, first his Majesties Intentions were made known: next, that in the producing and delivering of them, the Lawfullness of the Assembly was not acknowledged. After that he went on, and discoursed against the Constitution of the Assembly in the following words.]

But now I am sorry I can go on with you no more, for the sad part is yet behind, about Ruling-elders; for neither Ruling-elders, nor any Minister chosen Commissioner by Ruling-elders, can have voice here, because no such election is warranted, either by the Laws of this Church or Kingdom, or by the practice or custom of either: for even that little which appeareth to make for those Elders in the Book of Discipline, hath at this time been broken by you, there being more Lay-elders giving votes at every one of those Elections, than there were Ministers, contrary to the Book of Discipline; as in Lanerick but eight Ministers and eighteen or nineteen Lay-elders; and so in divers other Presbyteries: and in every Presbytery, when the Ministers upon the List were removed, the remaining Elders exceeded far the remaining Ministers. But say there were Law for those Lay-elders, the interruption of the execution of that Law, for above 40 years, makes so strong a Prescription against it, that without a new reviving of that Law by some new Order from the General Assembly, it ought not again be put in practice; for if His Majesty should put in practice, and take the Penalties of any disused Laws without new intimations of them from Authority, it would be thought by your selves very hard dealing.

To say nothing of that Office of Lay-elders, it being unknown to the Scripture or Church of Christ for above 1500 years, let the World judge whether those Laymen be fit to give Votes in inflicting the Censures of the Church, especially that great and highest Censure of Excommunication, none having power to cast out of the Church by that Censure, but those who have power to admit into the Church by Baptism: and whether all the Lay-elders here present at this Assembly be fit to judge of the high and deep Mysteries of Predestination, of the Universality of Redemption, of the Sufficiency of Grace given, or not given to all men, of the Resistibility of Grace, of total and final Perseverance, or Apostasie of the Saints, of the Antilapsarian or Postlapsarian Opinion, of Election and Reprobation; all which they mean to ventilate, if they do determine against the Arminian, as they give out they will.

In many Presbyteries these Lay-elders disagreed in their Elections wholly, or for the most part, from the Ministers, and carried it from them by number of Votes, though in all reason the Ministers themselves should best know the abilities and fitness of their Brethren: and this was done in the Presbyteries of Chirnside, Linlithgow, Aberdeen, and divers more.

How can these men now elected be thought fit to be Ruling-elders, who were never Elders before, all or most part of them being chosen since the Indiction of the Assembly, some of them but the very day before the Election of their Commissioners; which demonstrates plainly that they were chosen onely to serve their Associates turn at this Assembly?

Since the Institution of Lay-elders by your own Principles is to watch over the Manners of the People in the Parish in which they live, how can any man be chosen a Ruling-elder from a Presbytery, who is not an inhabitant within any Parish of that Presbytery, as hath been done in divers Elections, against all Law, Sense, or Reason?

By what Law or Practice was it ever heard, that young Noblemen, or Gentlemen, or others, should be chosen Rulers of the Church, being yet Minors, and in all Construction of Law thought unfit to manage their own private Estates, unless you will grant that men of meaner Abilities may be thought fit to rule the Church, which is the House of God, than are fit to rule their own private Houses, Families, and Fortunes?

By what Law can any Ruling-elder be sent to a Presbytery to Vote in anything, especially in choosing Commissioners for the General Assembly, who is not chosen for that purpose by the Session of that Parish in which he is a Ruling-elder? And who gave power to the Minister of every Parish, to bring with him to the Presbytery for that purpose any Ruling-elder of his Parish whom he pleased?

But it is well-known, that divers Elders gave Votes in these Presbyteries to the Elections of some Commissioners here, who were not chosen by the Sessions of their several Parishes to give Votes in those Presbyteries; and therefore such Commissioners as were chosen by such Lay-elders can have no Vote here.

By what Law or Practice have the several Parishes or Presbyteries chosen Assessors to their Ruling-elders, without whose consent some of the Commissioners here present are sworn not to vote to any thing?

This introducing of Ruling-elders is a burthen so grievous to the Brethren of the Ministry, that many of the Presbyteries have protested against it for the time to come, some for the present, as shall appear by divers Protestations and Supplications ready to be here exhibited.

For the Ministers chosen Commissioners hither, besides that the fittest are passed by, and some chosen who were never Commissioners of any Assembly before, that so they might not stand for their own Liberty in an Assembly of the nature whereof they are utterly ignorant, choice hath been also made of some who are under the Censure of the Church, of some who are deprived by the Church, of some who have been banished and put out of the University of Glasgow, for teaching their Scholars that Monarchies were unlawful, some banished out of this Kingdom for their Seditious Sermons and Behaviour, and some for the like Offences banished out of another of His Majesties Kingdoms, Ireland, some lying under the fearful Sentence of Excommunication, some having no Ordination nor Imposition of Hands, some admitted to the Ministry contrary to the standing Laws of this Church and Kingdom, all of them chosen by Lay-elders; what a Scandal were it to the Reformed Churches to allow this to be a lawful Assembly, consisting of such Members, and so unlawfully chosen?

Of this Assembly divers who are chosen are at the Horn, and so by the Laws of this Kingdom are incapable of sitting as Judges in any Judicatory.

Three Oaths are to be administered to every Member of this Assembly, the Oath for the Confession of Faith, lately renewed by His Majesties Commandment, the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; and whosoever shall refuse any of these, cannot be a Judge in any Judicatory of this Kingdom: and therefore resolve presently whether you will take them or not.

You have cited the Reverend Prelats of this Land to appear before you by a way unheard-of, not only in this Kingdom, but in the whole Christian World, their Citations being read in the Pulpits, which is not usual in this Church; nay, and many of them were read in the Pulpits after they had been delivered into the Bishops own hands. How can His Majesty deny unto them, being His Subjects, the benefit of His Laws, in declining all those to be their Judges, who by their Covenant do hold the principal thing in question, to wit, Episcopacy to be abjured, as many of you do? or any of you to be their Judges, who do adhere to your last Protestation, wherein you declare, that it is an Office not known to this Kingdom, although at this present it stand established both by Acts of Parliaments, and Acts of General Assemblies? Who ever heard of such Judges as have sworn themselves Parties? And if it shall be objected, that the Orthodox Bishops in the first four and other General Councils could not be denied to be competent Judges of the Hereticks, though beforehand they had declared their Judgments against their Heresies: it is easily answered, that in matters of Heresie no man must be patient, since in Fundamental points of Faith a man cannot be indifferent without the hazard of his Salvation, and therefore must declare himself to be on Christs side, or else he is against him; but in matters of Church-government and Policy, which by the Judgment of this Church in the 21th Article of our Confession is alterable at the will of the Church, it is not necessary for any man who means to be a Judge, to declare himself, especially against that Government which stands established by Law at the time of his Declaration, being not onely not necessary, but likewise not lawful for him at that time so to doe; now this Declaration all you who adhere to the last Protestation have made, even since you meant to be the Bishops Judges. Besides, even those Orthodox Fathers never did declare themselves against the Hereticks, their Persons or Callings, by Oaths and Protestations, as you have done; for that had been a prejudging in them, and this prejudging in you makes you now to be incompetent Judges.

Upon the whole matter then there are but two things left for me to say: first, you your selves have so proceeded in the business of this Assembly that it is impossible the fruits so much wished and prayed for can be obtained in it; because standing as it does, it will make this Church ridiculous to all the Adversaries of our Religion, it will grieve and wound all our Neighbour Reformed Churches who hear of it; it will make His Majesties Justice to be traduced throughout the whole Christian World, if he should suffer His Subjects in that which concerns their Callings, their Reputations and their Fortunes, to be judged by their sworn Enemies. If therefore you will dissolve your selves, and amend all these errors in a new Election, I will with all convenient speed address my self to His Majesty, and use the utmost of my Intercession with His Sacred Majesty for the Indiction of a new Assembly, before the meeting whereof all these things now challenged may be amended: if you shall refuse this Offer, His Majesty will then declare to the whole World, that you are disturbers of the Peace of this Church and State, both by introducing of Lay-elders against the Laws and Practices of this Church and Kingdom, and by going about to abolish Episcopal Government, which at this present stands established by both the said Laws: two points (I dare say) and you must swear it, if your Consciences be appealed to, (as was well observed by that Reverend Gentleman we heard preach the last Sunday) which these you drew into your Covenant were never made acquainted with at their entering into it; much less could they suspect, that these two should be made the issue of this business, and the two stumbling-blocks to make them fall off from their Natural Obedience to their Sovereign.

As for your pretence of your unlimited Freedom, you indeed refused so much as to hear from His Majesties Commissioner, of any precedent Treaty for the preparing and right-ordering of things before the Assembly; alledging, that it could not be a free Assembly where there was any Prelimitation either of the Choosers, or of those to be chosen, or of things to be treated of in the Assembly, but that all things must be discussed upon the place, else the Assembly could not be free: but whether you your selves have not violated that which you call Freedom, let any man judge; for besides these Instructions, which it may be are not come to our knowledge, we have seen, and offer now to produce, four several Papers of Instructions sent from them, (whom you call the Tables) containing all of them Prelimitations, and such as are not onely repugnant to that which you call the Freedom, but to that which is indeed the Freedom of an Assembly. Two of these Papers were such as you were contented should be communicated to all your Associates, to wit, that larger Paper sent abroad to all Presbyteries, immediately after His Majesties Indictioun of the Assembly, and that lesser Paper for your meeting first at Edin-burgh, then at Glasgow, some days before the Assembly; which Paper gave order for chusing of Assessors, and divers other particulars: but your other two Papers of Secret Instructions were directed, one of them onely to one Minister of every Presbytery, to be communicated by him as he should see cause, but to be quite concealed from the rest of the Ministers; the other Paper was directed onely to one Lay-elder of every Presbytery, and to be communicated by him as he should see cause, but to be quite concealed from all others: in both which Papers are contained such Directions, which being followed, as they were, have quite banished all Freedom from this Assembly; as shall appear by reading the Papers themselves.

[These he caused read, but they were disowned by the Members of the Assembly; and they said, they might have been the private Opinions of some, but did infer no Prelimitation on the Assembly: to which the Marquis answered]—

That all the Elections being ordered according to these, was a clear proof, they were sent by an Authority which all feared to disobey. And after that he told, That for many moneths the Orders of the Table had been obeyed by all; but he would now make a trial what Obedience they would give to the Kings Command: and protested, that one of the chief Reasons that moved him to dissolve this Assembly, was to deliver the Ministers from the Tyranny of Lay-elders, who (if not suppressed) would (as they were now designing the ruine of Episcopal Power) prove not onely Ruling, but Over-ruling-elders.

CHARLES by the grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith. To Our Lovits

Heralds, Pursevants, Our Sheriffes in that part conjunctly & severally specially constitute, greeting. Forsameikle as out of the royall & fatherly care which We have had of the good & peace of this Our ancient and native Kingdome, having taken to Our serious consideration all such things as might have given contentment to Our good & loyall subjects: And to this end had discharged by Our Proclamation the Service Booke, Booke of Canons, and high Commission, freed and liberate all men from the practising of the five Artieles, made all Our subjects both ecclesiasticall & eivill liable to the censure of Parliament, generall Assembly, or any other Iudicatorie competent, according to the nature and qualitie of the offence; and for the free entrie of Ministers, that no other oath be administrate unto them then that which is contained in the Aet of Parliament: had declared all by-gone disorders absolutely forgotten & forgiven: and for the more full and cleare extirpating all ground & occasion of feares of innovation of Religion, We had commauded the confession of faith, and band for maintenanece thereof, and of authoritie in defence of the same, subscribed by Our deare Father, and his household, in anno 1580. to be renewed and subscribed againe by Our subjects here: Likeas for settling of a perfect peace in the Chureh and Commonwealth of this Kingdome, We caused indiet a free generall Assembly to be holden at Glasgow the 21. of this instant, and thereafter a Parliament in May 1639. By which element dealing, We looked assuredly to have reduced Our subjects to their former quiet behaviour & dutifull earriage, whereto they are bound by the Word of God, and Lawes both nationall and municipall, to Us their uative and Soveraigne Princee. And albeit the wished effects did not follow, but by the contrary, by Our so gracious procedure they were rather emboldened, not onely to continue in their stubborne and unlawfull waies, but also daily adde to their former procedures acts of neglect, & contempt of authority, as evidently appeared by open opposing of Our just & religious pleasure and command, expressed in Our last Proclamation anent the discharge of the Service Booke, Booke of Canons, high Commission, &c. protesting against the same, and striving by many indireet meanes to withdraw the hearts of Our good people, not onely from a hearty acknowledgement of Our gracious dealing with them, but also from the due obedience to those Our just and religious commands, notwithstanding We had been formerly so oft petitioned by themselves for the same. By their daily and hourelly guarding and watching about Our Castle of Edinburgh, suffering nothing to be imported therein, but at their discretioun, And openly stopping and impeding any importation of ammunition, or other necessaries whatsoever to any other of Our houses within that Kingdome: Denying to Us their Soveraign Lord that libertie and freedome, which the meanest of them assume to themselves, (an act without precedent or example in the Christian world,) By making of Convocations and Councell Tables of Nobility, Gentry, Burrowes and Ministers within the Citie of Edinburgh, where not regarding the Lawes of the Kingdome, they, without warrant of authoritic, conveene, assemble, and treat upon matters, as well ecclesiasticall as eivill, send their injuuetions and directions throughout the country to their subordinate Tables, and other under-ministers appointed by them for that effect. And under colour & pretext of religion exereing an unwarranted & unbounded libertie, require obedience to their illegall and unlawfull procedures and directions, to the great & seen prejudice of Authority, and lawfull Monarchieall government. And notwithstanding it was evidently manifest by the illegall & unformall course taken in the election of their Commissioners for the Assembly, whereof some are under the censure of this Chureh, some under the censuro of the Chureh of Ireland, and some long since banished for open and avowed teaching against Monarchie, others of them suspended, and some admitted to the Ministerie contrary to the forme prescribed by the Lawes of this Kingdome, others of them a long time since denounced Rebels and put to the Horne, who by all law and unviolable custome and practique of this Kingdome, are, and ever have been incapable, either to pursue, or defend before any Iudicatorie, far lesse to be Iudges themselves: some of them confined, and all of them by oath and subscription bound to the overthrow of Episcopacie. And by this and other their under-hand working, and private informations and perswasions, have given just ground of suspicion of their partiality herein, & so made themselves unfit Iudges of what concerneth Episcopacie. And also it was sufficiently cleared by the peremptorie and illegall procedures of the Presbyteries, who at their own hand by order of law, & without due forme of processe, thrust out the Moderatours lawfully established, & placed others, whom they found most inclinable to their turbulent humours; associate to themselves for the choosing of the said Commissioners for the Assembly, a Laick-Elder out of each Paroch, who being in most places equall, if not moe in number then the Ministerie, made choice both of the Ministers, who should be Commissioners from the Presbyteries, as also of a Ruling-Elder; being directed more therein by the warrants from the foresaid pretended Tables, then by their owne judgements, as appears by the severall private instructions sent from them, farre contrary to the Lawes of the Countrey, and lowable custome of the Church: by which doings it is too manifest, that no calme nor peaceable procedure or course could have been expected from this Assembly, for settling of the present disorders and distractions: Yet We were pleased herein in some sort to blindfold Our own judgement, and overlooke the said disorders, and patiently to attend the meeting of the said Assembly, still hoping that when they were met together, by Our Commissioner his presenee, and assistance of such other well disposed subjects who were to be there, and by their owne seeing the reall performance of all that was promised by Our last Proclamation, they should have been induced to returne to their due obedience of subjects: But perceiving that their seditious disposition still increases, by their repairing to the said Assembly with great bands and troupes of men, all boddin in feare of warre, with guns and pistolets, contrary to the lawes of this Kingdome, custome observed in all Assemblies, and in high contempt of Our last Proclamation at Edinburgh the 16. of this instant: As also by their peremptory refusing of Our Assessors, authorized by Vs (although fewer in number then Our dearest Father was in use to have at divers Assemblies) the power of voting in this Assembly, as formerly they have done in other Assemblies; and by their partiall, unjust, and unchristian refusing, and not suffering to be read the reasons and arguments given in by the Bishops, and their adherents, to Our Commissioner, why the Assembly ought not to proceed to the election of a Moderatour without them, neither yet to the admitting of any of the Commissions of the saids Commissioners from Presbyteries, before they were heard object against the same, though earnestly required by our Commissioner in our name. And notwithstanding that our Commissioner under his hand, by warrant from us, gave in a sufficient declaration of all that was contained in our late proclamation and declaration, the same bearing likewise our pleasure of the registration of the same in the books of assembly for the full assurance of the true religion to all our good subjects; And yet not resting satisfied therewith, lest the continuance of their meeting together might produce other the like dangerous acts, derogatory to royall authoritie, we have thought good, for preventing thereof, and for the whole causes and reasons above-mentioned, and divers others importing the true monarchicall government of this estate, to dissolve and breake up the said Assembly. And therefore OVR will is, and we doe discharge and inhibit all and whatsoever pretended Commissioners, and other members of the said pretended assembly, of all further meeting and convening, treating and concluding any thing belonging to the said assembly, under the pain of treason, declaring all and whatsoever that they shall happen to doe in any pretended meeting thereafter, to be null, of no strength, force nor effect, with all that may follow thereupon: Prohibiting and discharging all our lieges to give obedience thereto, and declaring them, and every one of them, free and exempt from the same, and of all hazzard that may ensue for not obeying thereof. And for this effect we command and charge all the foresaids pretended commissioners, and other members of the said assembly, to depart forth of this city of Glasgow, within the space of xxiiii houres after the publication hereof, and to repair home to their own houses, or that they goe about their own private affaires in a quiet manner. With speciall provision alwayes, that the foresaid declaration, given in under our Commissioners hand, with all therein contained, shall notwithstanding hereof, stand full, firm and sure to all our good subjects in all time coming, for the full assurance to them of the true religion. And our will is, and we command and charge, that incontinent these our letters seen, ye passe, and make publication hereof by open proclamation at the market crosse of Glasgow, and other places needfull, wherethrough none pretend ignorance of the same. Given under our signet at Glasgow the 29. of November, and of our reign the fourteenth year. 1638.

101. *The Protestation of the generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, &c. Made in the high Kirk, and at the Market Crosse of Glasgow, Novemb. 28. and 29. An. 1638.**

Wee Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghes, and Universities, now convened in a full and free Assembly of the Church of Scotland, indicted by his Majestie, and gathered together in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ the only Head, and Monarch of his own Church, And we Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgesses and Commons, Subscribers of the Confession of Faith, Make it knowne that where We His Majesties loyall Subjects of all degrees, considering and taking to heart the many and great innovations and corruptions lately by the Prelates and their adherents intruded into the doctrine, worship, and discipline of this Church, which had been before in great purity to our unspeakable comfort established amongst us, were moved to present many earnest desires and humble supplications to his sacred Majesty, for granting a free generall Assemblie, as the only legall and ready meane to try these innovations, to purge out the corruptions, and settle the order of the church, for the good of Religion, the honour of the King, and the comfort and peace of the Kirk and Kingdome: It pleased his gracious Majesty, out of his Royall bountie, to direct unto this Kingdome, the Noble and Potent Lord, James Marques of Hammiltoun, with Commission to hear and redresse the just grievances of the good Subjects, who by many petitions, and frequent conferences, being fully informed of the absolute necessity of a free generall Assemblie, as the only Iudicatorie which had power to remedie those evils, was pleased to undergoe the paines of a voyage to England, for presenting the pittifull condition of our Church to his sacred Majesty; And the said Commissioner his Grace returned againe in August last, with power to indiet an Assemblie, but with the condition of such limitations, as did both destroy the freedome of an Assemblie, and could no wayes cure the present diseases of this Church; which was made so clearly apparent to his Grace, that for satisfying the reasonable desire of the Subjects, groaning under the wearinesse and prejudices of longsome attendanee, He was againe pleased to undertake another journey to his Majesty, and promised to indeavour to obtain a free Generall Assemblie, without any prelimitation, either of the constitution and members, or matters to be treated, or manner, and order of proceeding; so that if any question should arise concerning these particulers, the same should be cognosced, judged, and determined by the Assembly, as the onely Iudge competent: And accordingly by warrant from our Sacred Sovereigne, returned to this Kingdome, and in September last, caused indiet a free Generall Assemblie to be holden at Glasgow, the 21. of November instant, to the unspeakable ioy of all good Subjects and Christian hearts, who thereby did expect the perfect satisfaction of their long expectations; and the finall remedie of their pressing grievances: But these hopes were soone blasted: for albeit the Assemblie did meet and begin at the appointed day, and hath hitherto continued, still assisted with His Graces personall presenee, yet His Grace hath never allowed any freedome to the Assemblie, competent to it by the Word of God, acts and practices of this Church, and his Majesties Indiction, but hath laboured to restraine the same, by protesting against all the acts made therein, and against the constitution thereof by such members, as by all law reason and custome of this Church were ever admitted in our free Assemblies, and by denying his approbation to the things proponed and concluded, though most cleare, customable, and uncontraverted.

And now since his Grace after the presenting and reading of his owne commission from our sacred Sovereigne, and after his seeing all our commissions from Presbyteries and Burghes produced and examined, and the Assembly constitute of all the members by unanimous consent, doth now to our greater griefe, without any just cause or occasion offered by us, unexpectedly depart and discharge any further meeting, or proceeding in this assemblie, under the paine of treason: and after seven dayes sitting, declare all Acts made, or hereafter to be made in this Assemblie, to be of no force nor strength; and that for such causes as are either expressed in his Majesties former proclamations, (and so are answered in our former protestations) or set downe in the declinatour and protestation presented in name of the Prelats, (which are fully cleared in our answer made thereto) or else were long since proponed by the Commissioner his Grace in his eleven articles or demands sent unto us, before the indiction of the Assembly (and so were satisfied by our answers, which his Grace acknowledged, by promising after the receipt thereof to procure a free generall Assembly, with power to determine upon all questions, anent the members, manner, and matters thereof) all which for avoiding tediousnesse we cease to repeat: Or otherwise the said causes alleaged by the Commissioner, were proponed by His Grace, in the Assemblie; such as first, that the Assemblie refused to reade the Declinatour and Protestation exhibited by the Prelats, which nevertheless was publickly read and considered by the assemblie, immediately after the election of a Modérateur and constitution of the Members, before the which, there was no assemblie established, to whom the same could have been read: Next, that ruling Elders were permitted to have voice in the election of commissioners from Presbyteries, which was knowne to His Grace, before the indiction and meeting of the assembly, and is so agreeable to the acts and practice of this Church, inviolably observed before the late times of corruption, that not one of the assembly doubted thereof, to whom by the indiction and promise of a free assembly, the determination of that question, anent the members constituent proprietie belonged.

And last, that the voices of the six Assessors, who did sit with His Grace, were not asked and numbered, which we could not conceive to be any just cause of offence, since after 39. Nationall assemblies of this reformed church, where neither the Kings Majesty, nor any in his name was present, at the humble and earnest desire of the assembly, His Majesty graciously vouchsafed His presence either in His owne Royall Person, or by a Commissioner, not for voting or multiplying of voices, but as Princes and Emperours of old, in a Princely manuer to countenance that meeting, and to preside in it for externall order; and if Wee had been honoured with His Majesties Personall presenee, His Majesty (according to the practice of King James of blessed memorie) would have onely given his owne Judgement in voting of matters, and would not have called others who had not been clothed with commission from the church to carry things by pluralitie of voices.

Therefore in conscience of our duty to God and his truth, the King and his honour, the Church and her liberties, this Kingdome and her peace, this Assemblie and her freedome, to our selves and our safety, to our Posterity, Persons and Estates, We professe with sorrowfull and heavie, but loyall hearts, That We cannot dissolve this Assemblie, for the reasons following.

1. For the reasons already printed anent the necessity of conveening a Generall Assemblie, which are now more strong in this case, seeing the Assemblie was already indicted by his Majesties authority, did conveene, and is fully constitute in all the members thereof, according to the Word of God, and discipline of this church, in the presence and audience of his Majesties Commissioner; who hath really acknowledged the same, by assisting therein seven dayes, and exhibition of His Majesties Royall Declaration, to be registrate in the Bookes of this Assemblie, which accordingly is done.

2. For the reasons contained in the former Protestations made in name of the Noblemen, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons, whereunto We doe now iudicially adhere, as also unto the Confession of Faith & covenant, subscribed and sworn by the Body of this Kingdome.

3. Because as We are obliged by the application and explication subioyned necessarily to the Confession of Faith subscribed by Vs; so the Kings Majestie, and his Commissioner, and Privie Councell, have urged many of this Kingdome to subscribe the Confession of Faith made in an. 1580. and 1590. and so to returne to the doctrine and discipline of this Church, as it was then professed: But it is cleare by the doctrine and discipline of this Church, contained in the book of Policie then registrate in the books of Assemblie, & subscribed by the Presbyteries of this Church; That it was most unlawfull in it selfe, and prejudiciall to these privileges which Christ in his Word hath left to his Church, to dissolve or breake up the Assemblie of this Church, or to stop and stay their proceedings in constitution of Acts for the welfare of the Church, or execution of discipline against offenders; and so to make it appeare, that Religion and Church government should depeud absolutely upon the pleasure of the Princee.

4. Because there is no ground of pretence either by Act of Assemblie, or Parliament, or any preceding practice, whereby the Kings Maiestie may lawfully dissolve the Generall Assemblie of the Church of Seotland, far lesse His Maiesties Commissioner, who by his commission hath power to indict and keep it, secundum legem & praxim: But upon the contrarie, His Majesties prerogative Royall, is declared by Act of Parliameut, to be no wayes prejudiciall to the privileges and liberties, which God hath granted to the spirituall office-bearers, and meetings of this Church; which are most frequently ratified in Parliaments, and espeially in the last Parliament holden by His Maiestie himself: which privileges and liberties of the Church, his Maiestie will never diminish or infringe, being bound to maintain the same in integritie by solemn oath given at his Royal Coronation in this Kingdome.

5. The Assemblies of this Church have still enjoyed this freedome of uninterrupted sitting, without or notwithstanding any contramand, as is evident by all the Records thereof; and in speeiall by the generall Assembly holden in anno 1582. which being charged with letters of Horning by the Kings Majestie his Commissioner and Councell, to stay their proesse against Master Robert Montgomerie, pretended Bishop of Glasgow, or otherwise to dissolve and rise, did notwithstanding shew their liberty and freedome, by continuing and sitting still, and without any stay, going on in that proesse against the said Master Robert, to the finall end thereof: And thereafter by letter to his Maiesty, did shew clearly, how far his Maiesty had been uninformed, and upon misinformation, preiudged the prerogative of Jesus Christ, and the liberties of this Church, and did inact and ordain, that none should procure any such warrant or charge under the pain of excommunication.

6. Because now to dissolve, after so many supplications and complaints, after so many reiterated promises, after our long attendance and expectation, after so many references of processes from Presbyteries, after the publick indiction of the Assembly, and the solemn Fast appointed for the same, after frequent Convention, formall constitution of the Assembly in all the members thereof, and seven dayes sitting, were by this act to offend God, contemne the Subjects petitions, deceive many of their conceived hopes of redresse of the calamities of the Church and Kingdome, multiply the combustions of this Church, and make every man despair hereafter ever to see Religion established, Innovations removed, the Subjects complaint respected, or the offenders punished with cousent of authority, and so by casting the Church loose and desolate, would abandon both to ruine.

7. It is most necessary to continue this Assembly for preveening the prejudices which may ensue upon the pretence of two Covenants, whereas indeed there is but one, That first subscribed in 1580. and 1590. being a Nationall covenant and oath to God; which is lately renewed by Vs, with that necessary explanation, which the corruptious introduced since that time contrary to the same, inforced: which is also acknowledged by the Act of councell in September last, declaring the same to be subscribed, as it was meant the time of the first subscription; And therefore for removing that shame, and all prejudices which may follow upon the show of two different covenants & confessions of Faith in one Nation, The Assemblie cannot dissolve, before it trie, finde and determine, that both these covenants, are but one and the self same covenant: The latter renewed by us, agreeing to the true genuine sense and meaning of the first, as it was subscribed in Anno 1580.

For these and many other reasons, We the Members of this assemblie, in our owne name, and in the name of the Kirk of Seotland, whom We represent; and We Noblemen, Barous, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons before mentioned, doe solemnly declare in the preseuce of the everliving God, and before all men; And protest,

1. That our thoughts are not guilty of anything which is not incumbent to us, as good Christians towards God, and loyall Subjects towards our sacred Sovereigne.

2. That all the Protestations generall or particular, proponed or to be proponed by the commissioner his Grace, or the Prelats and their adherents, may be presently discussed before this generall Assemblie, being the highest Ecclesiasticall judicatorie of this Kingdome: and that his Grace depart not till the same be done.

3. That the Lord commissioner depart not, till this Assemblie doe fully settle the solide peace of this church, cognoscing and examining the corruptions introduced upon the doctrine and discipline thereof: and for attaining hereof, and removing all just exceptions which may be taken at our proceedings, we attest GOD the searcher of all hearts, that our intention, and whole proceedings in this present assemblie, have beene, are, and shall be according to the word of GOD, the lawes and constitutions of this church, the confession of faith; our nationall oath, and that measure of light, which GOD the father of light shall grant us, and that in the sincerity of our hearts, without any preoccupation or passiou.

4. That if the Commissioner his Grace depart, and leave this church and kingdome in this present disorder, and discharge this assemblie, that it is both lawfull and necessary for Vs to sit still and continue in keeping this present Assemblie, indicted by His Majestie, till we have tryed, judged, censured all the bygone evils, and the introductors, and provided a solide course for continuing Gods truth in this land with purity and liberty, according to his Word, our oath and Confession of Faith, and the lawfull coustitutions of this Church; and that with the grace of God, We and every one of Vs adhering hereunto, shall sit still and continue in this Assembly, till after the finall setling and conclusion of all matters, it be dissolved by common consent of all the members thereof.

5. That this Assemblie is and should be esteemed and obeyed, as a most lawfull, full and free generall

Assembly of this Kingdome : And that all acts, sentences, constitutions, censures and proceedings of this Assemblie, are in the selfe, and should be reputed, obeyed, and observed by all the Subjects of this Kingdome and members of this Church, as the actions, sentences, constitutions, censures, and proceedings of a full and free generall assembly of this Church of Scotland, and to have all ready execution, under the Ecclesiasticall paines contained, or to bee contained therein, and conforme thereto in all points.

¶ 6. That whatsoever inconvenience fall out, by impeding, molesting, or staying the free meeting, sitting, reasoning, or concluding of this present assembly, in matters belonging to their judicatorie, by the word of God, lawes and practice of this Church, and the Confession of Faith, or in the observing and obeying the acts, ordinances and conclusions thereof, or execution to follow thereupon, That the same be not imputed unto us, or any of us, who most ardently desired the concurrence of his Majesties Commissioner to this lawfull assembly ; But upon the contrary, that the Prelats and their adherents, who have protested and declined this present assemblie, in conscience of their owne guiltinesse, not daring to abide any legall tryall, and by their misinformation have moved the Commissioner his Grace to depart and discharge this assemblie, be esteemed, repute, and holden the disturbers of the peace, and overthrowers of the liberties of the Church, and guiltie of all the evils which shall follow hereupon, and condignely censured according to the greatnesse of their fault, and Acts of the Church and Realme : And to this end, Wee againe and again doe by these presents cite and summon them, and everie one of them, to compeere before this present generall assembly, to answer to the premises, and to give in their reasons, defences, and answers against the complaints given in, or to bee given in against them, and to heare probation led, and sentence pronounced against them, and conforme to our former cytations, and according to Iustice, with certification as effeirs ; Like as by these presents Wee summon and cyte all those of his Majesties Councill, or any other, who have procured, consented, subscribed, or ratified this present Proclamation to be responsible to his Majesty and three Estates of Parliament, for their counsell given in this matter, so highly importing his Majestie, and the whole Realme, conforme to the 12. act. King James 4. Parliament 2. And protest for remedy of law against them, and every one of them.

7. And lastly wee protest, that as we adhere to the former protestations all and every one of them, made in the name of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burghes, and Commons ; So seeing wee are surprised by the Commissioner his Graces sudden departing, farre contrary to his Majesties indiction, and our expectation, we may extend this our protestation, and adde more reasons thereunto in greater length and number, whereby wee may fully cleare before God and man the equitie of our intentions, and lawfulnessse of our proceedings : And upon the whole premises the foresaid persons for themselves and in name aforesaid, asked Instruments. This was done in the high Church of Glasgow in publike audience of the Assembly, begunne in presence of the Commissioner his Grace, who removed and refused to heare the same to the end, the twenty eighth day of November : and upon the Mercate Crosse of Glasgow, the twentie ninth day of the said Moneth, the ycere of God 1638. respective.

102. *Letter from Traquair to Hamilton.**

Falkirk, Nov. 30th.

I could not find the Earl of Argyle yesterday at his own house ; and being unwilling to go from Glasgow before I saw him, I came to the Lord Boyde's lodging, where I was told he was, with the Lord Loudon and some others. He resolves to stay still in Glasgow, some time at least ; and during his abode there, will haunt the assembly, and be careful to make them go on in such a way as shall be justifiable.

The Service-book will be condemned in general, as repugnant to the tenets of this church ; episcopal government, as not agreeable to the government thereof ; and presently all the bishops of this kingdom are condemned, and presently excommunicate.

The Lord Loudoun acknowledges one of the papers, your Grace produced in the assembly, but the certificate refused ; the same was required of me, which at the kirk-yard entry I acknowledged and declared to be such as became an honest man ; for truly, if I should say otherwise, I should deny truth and my own judgment. And if I should subscribe any covenant or confession, which, in my judgment, excluded episcopacy or episcopal government, I behoved to subscribe against the light of my own conscience ; and this I declared publicly, as I shall do while I breathe.

This morning the Lairds Carberry, Nidrie, and Colintone, with John Smith of Edinburgh, parted from this, about four in the morning, to attend my coming to Edinburgh, for protesting against the proclamation ; which they expect at the cross of Edinburgh.

As your Grace shall be pleased to honour me with any of your commandments, I shall not be wanting with the uttermost of my power ; and without consideration either of life or fortune, shall witness myself to be

103. Letter from the Archbishop of Canterbury (Laud) to Hamilton.†

MY VERY GOOD LORD,

I received your Lordships Letters of Novemb. 27th, they came safe to me on Decemb. 2<sup>d</sup>, after 8 at night. I was glad to see them short ; but their shortness is abundantly supplied by the length of two Letters, one from the Lord Ross, and the other from the Dean. They have between them made their word good to your Lordship, for they have sent me all the passages from the beginning of the Assembly to the time of the Date of their Letters : and this I will be bold to say, never were there more gross absurdities, nor half so many, in so short a time, committed in any Publick Meeting ; and for a Nationall Assembly never did the Church of Christ see the like.

Besides His Majesties Service in general, that Church is much beholding to you, and so are the Bishops in their Persons and Callings : and heartily sorry I am, that the People are so beyond your expression furious, that you think it fit to send the two Bishops from Glasgow to Hamilton ; and much more that you should doubt your own safety. My

Lord, God bless your Grace with Life and Health to see this Business at a good end, for certainly, as I see the face of things now, there will very much depend upon it, and more than I think fit to express in Letters; nay perhaps, more than I can well express if I would.

I am as sorry as your Grace can be that the Kings Preparations can make no more haste. I hope you think (for truth it is) I have called upon His Majesty, and by His Command upon some others, to hasten all that may be, and more than this I cannot doe; but I am glad to read in your Letters that you have written at length to His Majesty, that you may receive from himself a punctual Answer to all necessary particulars: and I am presently going to him to persuade him to write largely to you, that you may not be in the dark for any thing.

But (my Lord) to meet with it again in your Letters, that you cannot tell whether this may be your Last Letter, and that therefore you have disclosed the very thoughts of your Heart, doth mightily trouble me: but I trust in God, he will preserve you, and by your great Patience, Wisdom, and Industry, set His Majesties Affairs (to your great Honour) in a right posture once again; which if I might live to see, I would be glad to sing my Nunc dimittis.

I pray (my Lord) accept my thanks for the poor Clergie there, and particularly for the Bishop of Ross, who protests himself most infinitely obliged to you.

I heartily pray your Lordship to thank both the Bishop of Ross and the Dean for their kind Letters, and the full account they have given me; but there is no particular that requires an Answer in either of them, saving that I find in the Deans Letter, that Mr Alex. Henderson, who went all this while for a quiet and calm-spirited man, hath shewed himself a most violent and passionate man, and a Moderator without Moderation. Truly (my Lord) never did I see any man of that humour yet, but he was deep-dyed in some violence or other, and it would have been a wonder to me if Henderson had held free. Good my Lord, since you are good in the active part, in the commixture of Wisdom and Patience, hold it out till the People may see the Violence and Injustice of them that would be their Leaders, and suffer not a Rupture till there be no Remedy. God bless you in all your ways, which is the daily prayer of

Your Lordships most faithful Friend,
and humble Servant,

104. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I never expected other than that you would have too just grounds to dissolve this Assembly; and certainly I were very unjust if I did not approve you therein, since not onely your Instructions warrant you the same, but even the Council hath testified to me the Necessity of it. And now I shall lay before you some Considerations; in the first place to take care, that your coming away do not cast things so loose, that the honest men of my Party do believe that you leave them as in a case desperate, or at least, that by your Absence they be denuded of Advice and Protection: therefore I hope before you come up you will take so good order, that your Absence do neither dishearten, nor prejudice my Party. As for my Preparations, I doubt not but ere this you have had a full account by your Cousin Sir James, whereby you find that I shall not be able to shew my self like my self before February or March; wherefore I lay it to your Consideration, whether it were not fit to give hopes that the Parliament shall hold, (notwithstanding all the impertinencies of this last Assembly) so that their Follies break not out into open Acts of Rebelious Violences: and really I will not say, but (that things may be so prepared) it may be fitting that it should hold. To conclude, I hope you do not conceive, that the Date of your Commissionership is out; wherefore I expect that (if you find cause) you send out Commissions of Licutenancies to Huntley for the North, and to Traquair or Roxburgh, either joyntly or severally, (as you shall find most fit) for the South: yet all as subaltern to you. This I confess is not to be done but upon great necessity, of which I leave you (as upon the place) to be Judge, (being abundantly satisfied of your zeal and dexterity to serve me) as I do of all that I have now written: and so I rest

105. *Letter from the Archbishop of Canterbury to Hamilton.**

MY VERY GOOD LORD,

I received your Letters of the second of December upon the sixth of the same at night, and could not speak with His Majesty till this day. This day I did, and shewed him your Letters and the Deans; and I read to him more than the later half of all the long Discourse which the Dean wrote unto me, for his Majesty was very desirous to know what occasion you took to dissolve the Synod, and how you prosecuted it; in both which that Paper gave him great satisfaction.

With your Letters I have received three other Papers, that which shews you have kept within your Instructions, the Copy of the Proclamation which dissolves the Assembly, and a Copy of the Councils Letter to the King; both which His Majesty takes to be very good Service done for him, and commands me to give your Grace thanks in his Name, which I am very glad to doe, and I doe it heartily.

For the Earl of Argyle I can say no more than I have already, though now I know him more perfectly than I did. Your Resolution was to put him from the Council-Table, if he refused the Kings Covenant; he hath now deserved it more, but whether it be a fit time as yet to proceed so far, I dare not determine here. This I am sure of, if he do now publickly adhere to the Covenant and the Assembly, may be the professed Head of the Covenant, (as the Dean calls him,) yet he will have much ado to look right upon that, who ever looked asquint upon the Kings business.

Concerning your coming up to Court, I am glad I find His Majesty in that Opiniou which I cannot chuse but be of, that is, to leave it to your self, and your own Judgment upon the place, whether it be fitter for you to come or stay: for the truth is, my Lord, in my poor Judgment the King must needs leave this to your self, or discern himself; for if he bids you come, you will not stay; and if he would have you stay, you will not come: but whether it be fittest to come or stay cannot be prudently judged here, therefore (my Lord) doe that which shall be best approved there for His Majesties Service. And as much as I desire to see you, I will be bold to adde this, that I hope you will not stir to come thence, till you have so settled the Country, or at least the Kings Party there, as that you may be sure they maybe safe, till farther course for Security may be taken: for I do not know how much it may dishearten them if your Graee come away from them too soon.

In tender care of His Majesties both Safety and Honour, I have done and do daily call upon him for his Preparations. He protests he makes all the haste he can, and I believe him; but the jealousies of giving the Covenanters umbrage too soon, have made Preparations here so late. I doe all I can here with trouble and sorrow enough.

Here is News that three Ships-full more of Arms are come to Leith from Poland; whence have they money to buy all this? If this be true, the King of Poland hath watched a shrewd opportunity to quit the King for the late neglect of his Ambassadour. And that which troubles me not a little is, that the Kings Party there (I doubt) is not half so well provided of Arms as the Covenanters are.

For the Money you mention, I wish with all my heart you had received it, for at the rising of the Assembly most miserable will be the Condition of them who have faithfully served God and the King. I have now again put it to the King, and he sees enough, but cannot well tell how to help it; yet this he said, If he could possibly scrape so much together, it should be had.

I pray be pleased to thank the Dean for his great pains, though it cost me the sitting up some part of the night to read it. His Letter, beside that Discourse, contains but two things, The necessity of a present shew of Force against the rising of the Assembly, before men be urged to new Confederacies, and Subscriptions to all things determined in this Assembly; The other, that some care may be had for the poor Ministers, who will be put to the greatest sufferings, and all for God and the King. And to these two I have said as much as I can, and shall daily labour with the King to doe all that may be done for them. I pray God bless your Lordship, but I am infinitely sorry so much Grace and Goodness of the Kings should be no better received. To Gods blessed Protection I leave you, and all your Endeavours, and shall ever shew my self

Your Graces most faithful Friend,
and humble Servant,

106. *Proclamation by the King.**

CHARLES, By the grace of GOD, King of SCOTLAND, ENGLAND, FRANCE, and IRELAND, Defender of the FAYTH, To Our Lovits, Heraldues, Pursevantes: Our Shyreffs in that part, conjunctlie, and severallie, speeiallie constitute, Greeting. WHERE-AS, for the removing of the Disorders, which haue happened of late within this Kingdome; And, for settling of a perfect Peace in the Church, and Common-wealth there-of, WEE were pleased, to call and indiet A FREE GENE-

RALL ASSEMBLIE to bee holden at GLASGOW, the xxj day of November last; And for Our Subjects their better content and assurance, that they should bee freed of such thinges as by their Petitions and Supplications given in to the Lordes of Our Privie Councell, they seemed to be grieved at, WEE, in some sort, prevented the Assemblie, by discharging, by Our Proclamation, the Service-Booke, Booke of Canons, and High Commission, freed and liberate all Our Subjectes, from praetising of the five Articles, excemed all Ministers at their entrie, from giving anie other Oath, than that which is containd in the Act of Parliament; Made all persons, both Ecclesiasticall and Civill, lyable to the Censure of Parliament, Generall Assemblie, or anie other Iudicatorie competent, according to the nature of their Offence; Had declared all by-gone Disorders absolutelie forgotten, and forgiven: And last; For securing to all Posteritie, the Trueth, and Libertie of RELIGION, did command the Confession of Fayth, and Band for mayntenance thereof, and of Authoritie in defence of the same, subserybed by Our deare Father, and his Householde, in ANNO 1580, to bee renewed, and subserybed agayne by Our Subjectes heere. And, albeit that this Our Gracious and Pious Commaund, instead of Obedience and Submission, rancountred open and publicke Opposition and Protestation agaynst the same; And that they continued their daylie and hourlie guarding and watching our Castle of Edinburgh, suffering nothing to bee imported there-in, but at their discretion: stopping and impeding anie importation of Ammunition, or other Necessaries what-so-ever, to anie of Our Houses within this Kingdome: Denying to Us their Soveraygne Lord, that Libertie and Freedom, which the meanest of them assumed to themselves, (an Act without precedent or example in the Christian World:) Lyke as they spared not, boldlie and openlie to continue their Conventions, and Councell-Tables, of Nobilitie, Gentry, Ministers, and Burgesses, within the Citie of Edinburgh: Where, not regarding the Lawes of the Kingdome, without warrand of Authoritie, they convened, assembled, and treated vpon Matters as well Ecclesiasticall as Civill, Sent their Injunetions and Direetions throughout the Countrey, to their subordinate Tables, and other vnder Ministers apoynted by them for that effect: And, vnder colour and pretext of Religion, exereising an vnwarranted Libertie, requyred obedience to their vnlawfull and illegall Directions, to the seene prejudice of Authoritie, and lawfull Monarchicall Government. And not-with-standing it was evidentlie manifest, by the illegall and vnformall Course taken in the Election of the Commissioners for the Assemblie; whereof some of them were vnder the Censure of this Church, some vnder the Censure of the Church of Ireland, some long since banished, for avowed teaching agaynst Monarchie: others of them suspended, and some admitted to the Ministerie, contrarie to the forme preserybed by the Lawes of this Kingdome: others of them Rebels, and at the Horne: some of them confined, and all of them by Oath and Subscription, bound to the overthrow of Episcopall Government. And by this, and others their Under-hand-working, and private Informations, and perswasions, had given just ground of Suspicion of their Partialitie; and so made themselves vnfit Iudges of what concerneth Episcopacie. And als, albeit it was sufficientlie cleared, by the peremptorie and illegall Procedures of the Presbyteries, who at their owne hand, and by order of Lawe, and without due forme of

Processe, thrust out Moderators lawfullie established, and placed others, whome they found moste inclynable to their turbulent Humoures, assoeiate to themselues, for choosing of the Commissioners to the Assemblie, a Laicke Elder out of each Parioch; who beeing in moste places equall, if not moe in number than the Ministerie, made ehoyse both of the Ministers who should bee Commissioners, from the Presbyteries, as also of a Laicke Elder, (which in tyme will proue to bee a dangerous Consequence, and import an heaue Burden to the Libertie of the Church, and Church-men) beeing more directed therein, by the Warandes of the foresayde pretended Tables, than by their owne judgementes; as appeared by the severall Instructions sent from them, (farre contrarie to the Lawes of this Countrey, and lovable custome of this Church) some whereof were produced, and exhibit by Our Commissioner, and publicklye read: One whereof directed to the Noble-men and Barons of each Presbyterie, doeth amongst manie other odde passages, require Diligence; lest (say they) by our owne Sillesse and Treacherie, wee lose so fayre an occasion of our Libertie, both Christian and Civill. A strange phrase, to proceede from duetifull or loyall-hearted Subjectes! The other, to the Moderators of severall Presbyteries, vnder the Title of Private Instructions, August 27, contayning, first, That these Private Instructions shall bee discovered to none, but to Brethren well-affected to the Cause. 2. Order must be taken, that none be chosen Ruling-Elders, but Covenanters, and these well-affected to the Businesse. 3. That where the Minister is not well-affected, the Ruling Elder bee chosen by the Commissioners of the Shyre, and spoken vnto particuarlye for that effect. 4. That they bee careful, that no Chappell-men, Chapter-men, or a Minister Iustice of Peace bee chosen, although Covenanters, except they haue publicklye renounced or declared the vnlawfulnessse of their Places. 5. That the Ruling Elders, come from everie Church, in equall number with the Ministers. And if the Minister oppose, to put themselues in possession, notwithstanding of anie opposition. 6. That the Commissioner of the Shyre, cause conueane before him the Ruling Elder of everie Church, chosen before the day of the Election, and injoyne them, vpon their Oath, That they giue voyce to none, but to those who are named alreadie at the Meeting of Edinburgh. 7. That where there is a Noble-man in the boundes of the Presbyterie, hee bee chosen: and where there is none, there bee chosen a Baron, or one of the best Qualitie; and he only a Covanter. 8. That the ablest man in everie Presbyterie bee provided to dispute, De potestate supremi Magistratus in Ecclesiasticis præsertim inconuocandis Conciliis, &c. Whereby it is moste euidet, what Prelimitations, and indirect and partiall Courses, and dangerous Propositions, haue bene vsed in the Preparations and Elections to this pretended Assemblie. By which vnlawfull doinges, altho Wee had sufficient reason, to haue discharged the Meeting of the Assemblie, yet We pleased patientlie to attende the same: Still hoping, that when they were met together, by the presenee of Our Commissioner, and assistance of some well-affected Subjectes, who were to bee there, and by their owne seeing the reall performance of what was promised by Our Proclamation, they should haue bene moved to returne to the due obedience of Subjects. But when Wee perceaved, that ther turbulent Dispositions did increase, as was manifest by their repairing to the sayde pretended Assemblie, with great Troups and Bands of Men, all boden in feare of Warre, with Gunnes and Pistolls, contrarie to the Lawes of this Kingdome, and in high contempt of Our Proclamation at Edinburgh, the xvj of November last. As also by their peremptorie refusing to the Assessoures authorized by Us, (altho fewer in number than our dearest Father was in vse to haue) the power of Voting in this Assemblie, as formerlie they had done in all others: openlie averring, That Wee nor Our Commissioner had no farther power there, than the meanest Commissioner of their number: and by their partiall and vnjust refusing, and not suffering to bee read, the Reasons and Argumentes given in by the Bishops, and their Adherentes, to Our Commissioner, why they ought not to proceede to the Election of a Moderator, neyther yet to the trying and admitting of the Commissioners, before they were heard, tho in Our Name they were earnestly requested therevnto by Our Commissioner. And not-with-standing that Our Commissioner, by Warrant from Us, gaue in vnder his hand, a sufficient Declaration of all that was contayned in Our late Proclamation: Bearing lykewyse Our Pleasure, of the Registration of the same in the Bookes of Assemblie, for full assurance of the Trueth and Libertie of Religion, to all Our good Subjectes; as doeth clearlie appeare by the Declaration it selfe, where-of the Tenour followeth: THE KING'S MAIESTIE beeing informed, That manie of his good Subjectes haue apprehended, that by the introducing of the Service-Booke, and Booke of Canons, the inbringing of Superstition hath bene intended, hath bene graciouslie pleased to discharge; Lyke as by These hee doeth discharge the Service Booke, and Booke of Canons, and the practise of them, and eyther of them; and annulleth and rescindeth all Actes of Councell, Proclamations, and other Aetes and Deedes whatsoever that haue bene made, or published, for establishing of them, or eyther of them; and declar-eth the same to bee null, and to haue no force, nor effect, in tyme comming. THE KING'S MAIESTIE, as hee conceaved for the ease and benefite of the Subjectes, established the High Commission, that thereby Iustice might bee administrate, and the faultes and erroures of such persons as are made lyable therevnto, taken order with, and punished, with the more conveniencie, and lesse trouble to the people: But finding his gracious intention therein to bee mistaken, hath bene pleased to discharge, Lyke as by These hee doeth discharge the same, and all Actes and Deedes whatsoever made for establishing thereof. AND, The King's Majestie beeing informed, That the vrging of the fiue Articles of Pearth Assemblie, hath bred Distraction in the CHURCH and ESTATE, hath bene graciouslie pleased, to take the same to his Royall Consideration; and, for the Quyet and Peace of his Countrey, hath not onlie dispensed with the practise of the saydes Articles; But also discharged all and whatsoever persons, from vrging the practise thereof, vpon eyther Laicke or Ecclesiasticall person whatsoever; And hath fred all his Subjectes, from all Censures and Paynes, whether Ecclesiasticall or Secular, for not vrging, practising, or obeying them, or anie of them, notwithstanding of anie thing contayned in the Aetes of Parliament, or Generall Assemblie, to the contrarie. AND, His Majestie is farther contented, That the Assemblie take the same so farre to their Consideration, as to represent it vnto the next Parliament; there to bee ratified, as the Estates shall bee found fitting. AND, Because it hath bene pretended, That Oathes haue bene administrated differeut from that which is set downe in the Actes of Parliament, his Majesty is pleased to declare by mee, That no other Oath shall be required of anie Minister at his Entrie, than that which is set downe in the Act of Parliament. AND, That it may appeare howe careful his Majestie is, that no Corruption, or Innovation, shall creepe into this Church, nether yet anie Scandall, Vyce, or Fault, of anie person whatsoever, censurable or punishable by the Assemblie, goe long unpunished. HIS MAIESTIE is content to declare by mee; and assure all his good People, That Generall Assemblies shall bee kept so oft, and also oft, as the Effayres of this Church shall requyre. AND, That none of his good Subjectes may haue cause of Grievances agaynst the Proceedings of the Prelates, HIS MAIESTIE is contented, That all and everie one of the present Bishops, and their Successours, shall bee answerable, and accordingly from tyme to tyme, censurable, according to their merites, by the Generall Assemblie. AND, To giue all his Majestie's good People full assurance, that hee never inteded to admit anie Alteration, or Change, in the True Religion, professed within this Kingdome; AND, That they may bee truelie and fullie satisfied, of the Realitie of His Intentions, and integritie of the same, His Majestie hath bene pleased, to requyre and commaund all his good Subjectes, to subscribe the Confession of Fayth, and Band for mayntenance there-of, and Of His Majestie's Person, and Authoritie, formerlic signed by his deare Father, in Anno 1580; And nowe also requyred all these of this present Assemblie, to subscribe the same. AND, It is His Majesties will, That this bee insert and registrat in the Books of Assemblie, as a Testimoniall to Posteritie, not onelie of the sinceritie of his Intentions to the sayd True Religion, but also of His Resolution, to mayntayne and defend the same, and His Subjectes, in the Profession there-of. Which Declaration was by Our speciall Commaund and Direction given in, and subscribed by Our Commissionour, vpon Protestation made by him, That his assenting to the registrating heere-of, should bee no Approbation of the lawfulnessse of this Assemblie, nor of anie of the Actes or Deedes done or to bee done therein. And finding them in lyke sort, nowayes to be satisfied therewith, and that nothing else was able to giue them content, except at their owne pleasure they were permitted to overthrowe all Episcopall Government in the Church, and thereby to abrogate Our publicke Lawes standing in vigour, by the space of manie yeares by-gone, and to alter the fundamentall Government of this Kingdome, in taking away one of three Estates, contrarie expresse Actes of Parliament. And lest the continuance of their meetings, might haue produced other the lyke dangerous Actes so derogatorie to Royall Authoritie; Wee were forced for preveaniug thereof, and for the causes and reasons aboue mentioned, and dyverse others importiug true Monarchicall Government, to dissolue and breake vp the sayde pretended Assemblie, and to discharge them of all farther meeting, treating, or concluding of anie thing therein: And yet in that calme and peaceable way, as Our Commissionour before his removing desired their pretended Moderator for that tyme, to haue sayde Prayer, and so concluded that dayes Session; that so they might haue had tyme to thinke vpon the just reasons of his refusing, to assist or bee anie longer present at the sayde pretended Assemblie; and of the causes moving Us to the dissolving thereof. And notwithstanding his earnest vrging the same, and being willing to returne the next Morne to heare their Answer, in place of all other satisfaction to his so reasonable and moderate desires, was refused, and met with a Protestation, of an high and extraordinarie strayne: Thereby presuming to sute and call our Counsell in question, for their duetifull assistance, and obedience vnto Us, and Our Commissionour. And finding their disobedience thus to increase, Wee were constraied to discharge them anewe agayne the next day thereafter, by publicke Proclamation, vnder the Payne of Treason. And albeit that their continuance is such, as hath not bene heard in former tymes yet they shall never moue Us, to alter the least poynt or Article of what Wee haue alredie declared by Proclamation, or Declaration vnder Our Commissionour's hand: All which was publicklic read, and by our Commissionour requyred to bee insert and registrated in the Bookes of Assemblie, therein to remayne as a Testimonie to Posteritie; not onlie of the sinceritie of Our Intentions to the true Religion; but also of Our Resolution, to mayntayne and defende the same, and Our Subjectes, in the Profession thereof. AND perceaving lykewyse, That in contempt of OUR PROCLAMATION at GLASGOW, the xxix of November last, they goe still on, to conveane, meete, and to make illegall and vnwarrantable Actes, WEE haue conceaved it fitting, to forewarne all Our good Subjectes, of the Daunger that they may incurre, by being insnared by these their vnlawfull Procedures: And, to this purpose, doe not onelie liberate and free them, from all obedience to anie of the pretended Actes made, or to bee made, at the sayde pretended Assemblie, or Committees direct therefrae: but also doe free them from all Payne and Censure which the sayde pretended Assemblie shall inflict vpon them, or anie of them: AND, THEREFORE, Doe discharge, and prohibite, all Our Subjectes, That they, nor none of them, acknowledge, or giue obedience, to anie pretended Actes, or Constitutions, made, or to bee made, at the sayd pretended Meetings, vnder all highest Paynes. AND, WEE commaund, charge, and inhibite, all Presbyteries, Sessions of Churches, and Ministers, within this Realme, That none of them presume, nor take vpon hand, privatelie, nor publicklic, in their Sessions and Meetings, nor in their Conferences, Sermones, nor none other manner of waye, to authorize, approue, justifie, or allowe, the sayde vnlawfull Meeting, or Assemblie, at GLASGOW, nor yet to make anie Act thereupon, nor to doe any other thing, private, or publicke, which may seeme to countenance the sayde vnlawfull Assemblie, vnder the Payne, to bee holden, reputed, and esteemed, and persued, as guiltie of that vnlawfull Meeting, and to bee punished for the same, with all Rigour. AND SUCH-LYKE, WEE commaund all and sundrie Noble-men, Barrons, Gentle-men, and Magistrates, and all others, Our Liedges, who shall happen to bee present, and heare auie Ministers, eyther in publicke or private Conferences and Speeches, or in their Sermones, to approue, and allowe, the sayde vnlawfull Assemblie, to rayle, or vtter auie speeches agaynst Our Royall Commandementes, or Proceedings of Us, or our Counsell, for punishing or suppressing such enormities; That they make relation, and report thereof, vnto Our Counsell, and furnish probation; to the effect the same may bee accordingly punished; as they will answer to US thereupon: Certifying them, who shall heare, and con-ceale the sayde speeches, that they shall bee esteemed as Allowers of the same, and shall accordingly bee taken order with, and punished therefore, without favour. AND, To this effect, WEE lykewyse straitlie charge, and commaund, all Iudges whatsoever within this Realme, Clerks, and Wryters, not to graunt or passe auie Bill, Summonds, or Letters, or anie other Execution whatsoever, vpon anie Act or Deed proceeding from the sayde pretended Assemblie; AND all Keepers of the SIGNET, from signetting thereof, & that vnder all highest Paynes. AND, Because Wee gaue Order and Commaund, to Our Commissioner, to make open Proclamation, not onlie of Our Sense, but even of the true meaning of the Confession of Fayth, in Anno 1580; by which it may clearlie appeare, That as Wee never intended thereby to exclude EPISCOPACIE; So by no right construction can it bec other wayes interpreted; as is more than evident by the Reasons containyd in the sayde Declaration, and manie moe, which for brevitie (the thing in it selfe beeing so cleare) are omitted. HEREFOR, WEE doe not onelie prohibite, and discharge, all Our Subjectes, from subscribing anie band, or giving anie Writ, Subscription, or Oath, to or vpon anie Act or Deed, that proceedeth from the sayde pretended Assemblie: but also doe requyre them, Not to subscriybe nor swear the sayd Confession, in no other sense, than which is containyd in the sayd Declaration, manifested and emitted by Our Commissioner, vnder all highest Paynes. AND, That none of Our good Subjectes, who in their duetie and bound obedience to US, shall refuse to acknowledge the sayd pretended Assemblie, or anie of the pretended Actes, Constitutions, Warrandes, or Directions, proceeding therefrac, may haue just ground of feare of danger or harme by doing hereof, WEE doe by These promise, AND, UPON THE WORD OF A KING, Oblidge Our Selues, By all the Roall Authoritie and Power wherewith GOD hath endewed US, To protect and defend them, and everie one of them, in their Persons, Fortunes, and Goods, agaynst all and whatsoever person or persons, who shall dare or presume, to call in question, trouble, or anie wayes molest them, or anie of them, therefore. AND, OUR WILL IS, And WEE commaund, and charge, That incontinent, these Our Letters seene, yee passe, and make publication hecreof, by open Proclamation, at the Mercat Crosse of EDINBURGH, and others places needfull; Where-through none pretend ignorance of the same. Given from Our Court at WHYTE-HALL, the viij day of December, and of Our Reygne the fourteenth yeare, 1638.

107. *A Letter from the Generall Assembly at Glasgow to the Marques of Hamilton.**

MOST NOBLE LORD,

Having beene witnesses of the loyall and regall proceedings at the last assembly at Glasgow, q<sup>r</sup> we know a humble supplication was appointed to be * Folio MS., f. 46. There is no date to this Letter in the copy from which we transcribe; but it was probably written about the time the Assembly 1638 dissolved itself on 20th December, when the Supplication to the King from the Assembly was adopted, (vide p. 41 of these Records.) Baillie, in his 11th Letter, dated September 28, 1639, gives the following account of the reception of that Supplication; and it is interesting as an index to the state of feeling on the part both of the King and Covenanters. It is stated in the Folio MS., that the Supplication to the King was "sent up w<sup>t</sup> Mr George Winrahame," who was probably, therefore, the bearer both of it and of this Letter to Hamilton. Baillie says (vol. i. p. 150), "The Supplication which we decreed in the Assembly of Glasgow sent to his graceous Ma., in thankfull acknowledgement of the benefites q<sup>ch</sup>, by the indiction of that Generall Assembly, from his Ma. pietie and justice, doth redound to all his subjects, and for humble supplicating his Ma. to continow in his gracious resolution to performe his royall promise, in holding the Parliament indicted, from his owne bountie and goodnes, for ratifieng the acts and constitutions of that Assembly; as the same hath comfortable refresched his Ma. loyall subjects, so will they be able to justifie themselves to any impartiall reader. Therefore we are bold to intreat your Lo. that, by your favour, our petition may have accesse to his Ma. royall hands, and unfolding your Lo. judgement, impartiallie to receive the simple trueth, his Ma. may have better seasoned informations of his loyall and faithfull subjects' proceedings, then can be expected from the enemies of this Church and State, among quhom we shall be verie sorie to reckon your Lo., tho' we have too good reason to suspect your Lo. carriage here, in opposing the most reasonable motions, and justest actions, q<sup>ch</sup> did proceed from ws, quhensoever your Lo. perceived any of our just demands in the least measure to be any wayes dissonant from his Ma. pleasure. But quhen we remember your Lo. best arguments ever to have beene more for satisfieing of his Ma. desires, (oft tymes proceeding from the Sinistrous information and Calumnies of our enemies, for their owne ends,) then any other ground or reason quhilk we could find, we are confident, as your Lordship loves both his Majesties honour, persone, and authoritie, that yow give reall prooffe of it at this tyme, both by your Lordships meanes, who hes taken so great and insatiable paines in this bussinesse, his Ma. may know the trueth of our proceedings, that neither of these may run hazard in our sufferings. We acknowledge it not to be the leist of our evils, indeed, that our graecous Sovereigne lives at such distance; for, be the fountaine never so pure, the streames may, and oft tymes are, corrupted, before they can run so farr, if the channell be not verie cleane, q<sup>wh</sup>ich, to our great greefe and prejudice, hes beene wanting to our actions this long tyme; and if it be not supplied tymouslie by your Lo., both out of your duetie to our King and Countrie, we may, by interposition of our adversaries malice and power, as eclipsed from the beames of

to be sent to the King, could hardly be got presented. However, many would have ventured to have gone with it though their heads should have gone therefor; yet understanding of the King's wrath and the danger there was, even in peaceable times, for any subject to play the ambassador, or capitulate with the Prince when he did not call for or his council did not send up, which by law and his declared will is appointed to be his only informer in high points of state; also hearing oft words from court of great spite against the very lives of most of our nobles, gentry, and ministry, who were able to agent our business, it was resolved that none of note or parts should go up, without greater assurance of their return than could for that time be expected; and withal, a gentleman of the Marquis of Hamilton's acquaintance, Mr George Winram, undertook, on all hazards, to deliver to the Marquis the Supplication, and, upon his refusal, to give it to the King himself. He was no worse than his word, as, indeed, some of our fair undertaking statesmen thereafter did prove. He went to Court, shewed the Marquis his errand. His Grace acquainted the King, who was pleased that it should be received. His Grace took it, and on his knec read it to his Majesty in the Council. The best answer it got was, 'When they have broken my head, they would put on my cowl.'

his Ma. favour, be the first sufferers. But his Ma. cannot but find his owne losse, by sympathising with his loyall subjects in the so much threatned ruine of this his native and antient Kingdome; and we will never beleive that such thought can possesse the heart of so gracious a King, But are confident, when the trueth of all our actions shall, without any by respect, (as we take God to witnesse, we had no other end but for his divine glory, and the honour of our King,) be made knowne, and pondered in the ballance of his Ma. righteous judgement, our fidelitie and loyaltie shall appeare; and his Ma. gracious dealing, in adding the Sanction of his royall auctoritie and Civill law, by Parliament, for corroborating the religious constitutions of that late and most lawfull nationall Assembly of this Kirk, will be a most evident demonstration of his Majesties pietie and justice to the discoverie of his secrete enemies, the comfort of all his loyall subjects, and his Majesties never dieing glorie; for all quhich ends, and for expressing our ductie and obedient respect to his Majestie, we could excogitat nothing more conduceable then, by that humble supplication, heartilie to acknowledge our thankfulness for the effects of his foregone favour and bountie, and humblie to cravethat his Majestie may, for establishment of religion, joyne the auctoritie of Civill law, as the strongest bond of our obedience; and we hope that your Lordships affection to religion, your countrie, and your respect to his Majesties honour, and the equitie of our desires in a bussines deserving the greatest, and beseeming the best affected, instruments, will be sufficient motives to make your Lordship contribute your best endeavours for settling such a solide peace in this Kirke and Kingdome, as may preserve that love and heartie obedience dew to his Majestie; q<sup>ch</sup> is and shall be the sinccar and earnest desire of

Report of Proceedings

GENERAL ASSEMBLY AT GLASGOW, 1638.

HAVING, in the foregoing pages, given an account of the occurrences which preceded this memorable Assembly, and reprinted from the authentic edition, the principal Acts which it passed; and, having superadded thereto, an abstract of various proceedings not embraced in any copies of those Acts hitherto published, as well as an ample collection of historical documents therewith connected, we shall further add to these particulars, a detailed Report of the whole of the discussions that took place from the first meeting on 21st November to the dissolution of it on 20th December 1638.

For the valuable MS. whence this Report is taken, we are indebted to the politeness and liberality of Mr J. Smith, youngest, of Glasgow. It forms a portion of a volume of MS.S. belonging to Stirling's Library in that city, which also contains a similar report of the proceedings in the subsequent Assembly of 1639, and various other curious documents relative to that period of the Church's history. The hand-writing may be referred to the period of the Assembly, or the middle of the seventeenth century; and from several markings on the volume, in the handwriting of Wodrow, which is well known, it appears to have at one time formed a part of his valuable collection of historical and ecclesiastical records. The volume may be referred to as "The Folio Manuscript." Of its subsequent history we have no information; but from all its characteristics we consider ourselves warranted to assume that it possesses a high degree of authenticity. The volume referred to is marked "Stirling's Public Library, c. i. 11," and in the index prefixed there are the following items:—

"Imprimis—a Collection of Petitions, Remonstrances, Narrationes, Speeches, and other peapers, published in the beginning of our troubles in 1636, out of which may be gathered a perfect historie, y<sup>r</sup>of—from folio 1 to 94."

It is from the record thus described that the following report is extracted.

Before the MS. which we have adopted had come into our hands, Mr David Laing, librarian of the Writers to the Signet, had kindly communicated another and similar report, but wanting several leaves both at the beginning and end; and we were in hopes ere now to have had also in our possession a third MS. belonging to Mr Simpson, schoolmaster of Corstorphine, from which Dr Aiton states he took his account of the Assembly 1638, that is given in his Life of Heuderson. Circumstances, however, have occurred to prevent this; but we are enabled, on the authority of Professor Fleming, of Glasgow College, who has collated these MS.S., to say that it coicides entirely with the Stirling's Library Copy. Mr Laing's copy seems to have at one time belonged to Dr Boog of Paisley: Mr Simpson's was found in the repositories of a deceased brother, who was a preacher of the Secession communion; but we have not been able to learn any further particulars than those now mentioned, with respect to the several MS.S. referred to. The one which we subjoin, however, and the other documents that we have collected, will, we trust, render the present, on the whole, the most complete account of the Glasgow Assembly which has ever yet been published.

In addition to the documents contained in the "Large Declaration," "Burnet's Memoires of the House of Hamilton," and "Balfour's Annales," we have to acknowledge the accession which we have obtained of some of the earlier edicts of Charles I. and the Scotch Privy Council, derived from the original record—an obligation which we owe to Mr A. M'Donald of the Register House, and which we prize the more, because these documents have been suppressed in the various works to which we refer. To the Rev. Mr M'Crie, too, we are indebted for the use of a Collection of Documents which belonged to his distinguished father, from whence we have gleaned several important writs, the authenticity of which is established by the duplicates attested under the hand of Archibald Johnston, the Clerk of the Assembly 1638, still in the repositories of the Church.

[November 21, 1638.]

The first day, the Commissioners from the King and Kirke being convened, after prayer be Mr John Bell, Moderatour, agreed upon till a moderatour was chosen, The King's Commission to the Marquis was [read], next the Commissions from 66 severall presbitries wer given into the Clerkes some of the former Assembly, together with the Commissions from townes and colledges, and the names of the Commissioners red.

After in calling vpon the name of God, The Kings Commissioner requyred that the Commissions might be examined before a Moderatour should be chosen, least some men should voit in choosing a Moderatour, who wer not instructed with a sufficient Commission.

It was answered be the Earle of Rothes, Lord Loudoun, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henrysone, Mr David Dick, and Mr W<sup>m</sup> Livingstoun, that a Moderatour behoved first to be chosen, before the Commissions could be examined, for thir reasons:—A Ecclesiasticall Moderatour should be chosen by the suffrage of such as have given in their Commissions for the Kirke and Burghes before particulars can be tryed—first, becaus this is the order and practise of the Kirke of Scotland. 2 reason, It is agrieable to reason, that the Assembly should descend by degrees to the constitution from a promiscuous convention, to a number instructed with commissions from the severall Kirkes of the kingdome, vnto whose commission that much respect is due, that they may be presumed to be, for the most part, valide and worthie, at the least [to] have a voice in choysing of a Moderatour to themselves, by whose meanes everie commission may be more exactlie tryed. 3 reason, It is one of the poynts of the freedome of the Assembly, that the Commissioners from the Kirkes and burghes choyse their owne Moderatour, incontinent after the exhibition of the Commission, least any thing which concerns them be done inordourly or without the consent in the meeting where they are present. 4 reason, The Tryell of the Commissions is one of the worthiest matters of the Assembly, and never were there any discussion of the validitie of them before a Moderatour was chosen, and the judicatorie brought to a frame, so farre as the whole might judge of everie pairt; nor can they be discussed till the propper judicatorie be ance sett in a tollerable maner, which be the lawes hes authoritie to judge thereof. 5 reason, It was required in all the supplications for a free Assembly, that the questions belonging the maner and matter of Assemblies, should be referred to the Assembly it selfe; and, now a free Assembly is granted and indicted, therefore a formall Assembly must ance be made before any ecclesiastick question belonging to the Assembly can be rightlie discussed, which cannot be done till a Moderatour be chosen by common consent of the Kirke convened. 6 reason, Seeing it is certaine, that these who are come doe represent the Kirkes from which they are come, and are instructed so well as they could be their knowledge, it were wrong done to the Kirkes convened, not to suffer them to begin their owne incorporation, and to draw their owne Members to some ordourlie frame that at the first entrie they may proceed ordourlie. 7 Reason, Whatsomever reason can be alleadgit why the Commissions cannot be postponed to the choosing of the Moderatour, will be more valide to prove that they cannot be discussed before the choosing of a Moderatour. 8 Reason, Progressus erit in infinitum.

My Lord Com<sup>r</sup> his Grace gave way to the choosing of a Moderatour, provyding it shall no wayes import his Graces acknowledgement of the voters, or such as shall be meit, or any of them, to be lawfull Members of this Assembly. But it shall be lawfull to his Grace, or any other at convenient tyme, to say they cannot be lawfull Members thereof; whereupon his Grace took acts and Instruments, as likwayes protested in name of the Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdome, that no nomination or election of a Moderatour, Commissioner, or other Member of the said Assembly, made or to be made, nor the receaving, admitting, or allowing of any pretendit nomination, election, or Commission, before, to, or at the said Assembly, past or to be past in favours of or in the behalfe of any Member thereof, shall prejudge them or any of them in their place, voit, office, jurisdiction, dignitie, or priviledge belonging to them or any of them, be whatsomever laifull right or custome, but that the same shall remaine to them, and everie ane of them, safe and inviolable, notwithstanding of anything done or to be done at the said Assembly; whairupon the said Commissioner his Grace tooke acts and Instruments. Farther craved ane other paper presented be Doctor Hamilton, in name of the Bishops, to be read publictly, quhilk being refused, the said Commissioners Grace protested, tooke acts and Instruments: farder, the said Commissioners Grace declared that his Majestie had appoynted six noblemen, his Assessours, to repair to Glasgow, and to have voit in the said Assembly; and for that effect his Majesties Letters, directed to them, was produced; and accordingle his Grace desired that, before any voting of the Moderatour, it should be condiscended that the foresaid Assessours should have voit, conforme to his Majesties Letters, which being refused, his Grace protested and tooke acts and Instruments.

Farder protested that the Bishops, who were authorized be act of Parliament, are called pretendit Bishops.

The Protestation of the Commissioners fra Presbitries, Burghes, and Universities, and of the Complaints against Prelats.

We Commissioners of Presbitries, Ministers, and Elders, Commissioners of Burghes, and Universities, in our owne name, and in the name of the whole Church of Scotland, whom we represent, That whereas his Majesties Commissioner protested that he gave way to the choosing of ane Moderatour, without acknowledging of the voits of any of them to be lawfull members of this Assembly; but that it be lawfull to him or any other to say, at convenient tyme, why they cannot be lawfull members; We protest that this protestation made be my

* It will be observed that there is a discrepancy as to Sessions and Dates during the earlier sederunts of the Assembly—the third being entirely omitted in this Report or blended with the second, while Baillie and the Clerk's abstract give a different arrangement; but we deem it our duty to adhere inflexibly to the text as it stands.—Ed.

Lord Commissioner his Grace, be no wayes prejudiciall to the lawfull commissions produced be Ministers, Elders, and Commissioners of burghes and unversities, q<sup>lk</sup> shall be allowed unto this Assembly, nor unto the freedome thereof, nor be any ground of quarrelling this Assembly and the proceedings thereof, in any time comeing; bot, on the contrare, seeing we offer to heare all objections in a competent Assembly, at the discussing of the particular commissions.

We protest that this Assembly, now fenced in the name of the Sone of God, be esteemed and reputed a free Generall Assembly in all tyme comeing, and that it shall be lawfull to us to extend this our protestation, and insert the reasons thereof, in any tyme before the dissolving of this Assembly; whereupon we tooke instruments.

Lykeas we Commissioners of Presbitries, Burghes, and Universities in mauner foresaid, That q<sup>as</sup> his Majesties Commissioner, in name of the Archbishops and bishops of this Kingdome, protested that no nomination or election of Moderatour, no allowance of any pretendit commission in favours of any Members of this Assembly, nothing done or to be done in this Assembly, past<sup>r</sup> or to be past, shall prejudice them in their voit, office, jurisdictione or dignitie belonging to them, be whatsomever law or custome: We Protest against this protestation of his Majesties Commissioner made in favours of the pretendit bishops and their pretendit priviledges in this kingdome, untill they and y<sup>r</sup> rights and priviledges now complained upon be the most pairt of this Kingdome in y<sup>r</sup> summons, as usurpations, contrare to the word of God, Confession of faith, doctrine and discipline of this Kirke, to be tryed and allowed or disallowed in this Assembly, and that the determination y<sup>of</sup> therein, according to the word of God and Confession of faith, be esteemed and observed, and most just and lawfull; and we protest in favours of the liberties, priviledges, and discipline of this reformed church, and freedome of this Assembly in all ecelesiasticall matters, conforme to the Confession of faith and Covenant of this Kingdome, renewed with the Lord, and for libertie to extend this protestation, and the reasons thereof, before the dissolving of the Assembly; q<sup>r</sup>upon we tooke Instruments.

Lykeas We Noblemen, barrones, Ministers, burghesses, and Commouns, subscribers of the Covenant and persuers in the Commoun Complaints and Summons against bishops, Protest that the Commissioner his Graces nomination of them, the Lords of the Clergie, and protestation in favours of y<sup>r</sup> calling, voits, dignitie, priviledges, be no wayes prejudiciall to the Covenant subseryved be us, to the polieie of the Kirke, nor to our Summons and Complaints against these our pretendit dignities, titles, and callinges, as contrare to the Confession of faith and word of God, nor to the freedome of this Assembly in their trying and discussing of our said Complaints; and we protest for libertie to extend this protestation; q<sup>r</sup>upon we take acts and Instruments.

Lykeas, We Commissioners for Presbitries, burghes, and Universities, That q<sup>as</sup> his Majesties Commissioner having craved aue paper, presented be Doctor Hamilton in name of the Bishops, to be red publictly, being refused, did protest and take Instruments, We protest that before aue Assembly was constitut, and the Moderatour chosn, we would heare no supplications, billes, nor protestationes, but after the constitutione of the Assembly we should heare the same and give them an answer, and protested that they might be there personallie present for to answer to the Summons and Complaints against them, with libertie to adde y<sup>r</sup>upon and tooke Instruments.

Lykeas, quhensover his Majesties Commissioner protested against our protestations, both the Commissioners from burghes and universities on the one pairt, and the persewars and the Complainers on this, have renewed their protestation against the Commissioners protestations: We Commissioners from Presbitries, Burghes, and Universities, That quhereas his Majesties Commissioner produced his Majesties Letter to Six Noblemen for to be his Assessours, and accordinglie desired that the foresaid assessours should have voit according to his Majesties Letter, and protested upon the present refusall of it before the election of a Moderatour, we protested, that seeing his Grace was his Majesties sole Com<sup>r</sup>, that none should have voit but the Commissioners from Presbitries, Burghes, and Universities, for thir reasons, q<sup>lks</sup> we are readie to slaw, for thir reasons to the Assembly being constitut after the election of a Moderatour, and protested for libertie to extend their owne protestation, and insert the reasons thereof any tyme before the dissolution of this Assembly: q<sup>r</sup>upon we tooke Instruments, and y<sup>r</sup>after gave in the reasons following.

Concerning the voiting of his Majesties Assessours in the Generall Assembly.

With that respect which we ought to his Majesties Commission, and to the persons and places of the pryme Noblemen and Counsellours, his Grace his Assessours, for the preservation of the libertie of the Kirke of Jesus Christ, in this his Majesties Kingdome of Scotland, we the Commissioners from particuar Presbitries, Universities, and burghes, here solemnlie assembled, in all humilitie, doe remonstrat that his Majesties Commissioner and Assessours can have but aue voit, in all matters treated and reasoned in the Assembly, for the reasons following:

1. Becaus the Generall Assemblies, in the matter of it, is ane ecelesiasticall meeting of persons ecclesiasticall, Ministers and Elders, representing the whole particular persons and presbitries quihik collectivelie cannot convenientlie or possible conveine, and the Christian Magistrat doth not so much multiply voits for himselfe, as by his power, auctoritie, and command, and provyde that every particular Commissioners voit be asked and heard in order and quyetnes, that thereby the judgement of the Assembly, in everie poynnt presented to their consideration, may be knowne.

2. We have had 39 Assemblies of this Kirke, without the presence of the Kings Majestie or any Commissiouer sitting in the Assembly in his Majesties place.

3. It is not to be supposed that his Majesties Com<sup>r</sup> should have moe voits in his Ma. personall absence, then if he were in sacred persone present, since, jure representationis, they are all but ane, and ought to voit as ane.

4. This might prove contrare to his Ma. graceous intention, very prejudiciall to the libertie of the Kirke, there being no determination of the number of voits, for thus his M. affirmative voice might be turned in a negative; neither doth this Kirke want experience of this great danger.

5. As assessours sent from particuar presbitries for assisting, thir Commissioners have no place to voit, so it is to be supposed that these assessours, appointed to attend his Majesties Com<sup>r</sup>, are only to give their advicc and assistance unto his Grace in the great affaires of the Assembly, that all matters may be orderlie and peaceable disposed.

6. Although we doe not pry narrowlie into his Majesties Commission, yet since we perceave it is granted to the Marqueis of Hamiltoun as his Majesties sole Commissioner, we cannot admitt that any be equall to his Grace in voiting in the Assembly.

7. As the Ecclesiasticall Moderatour, be the Acts and practise of this Kirke, hath some Members of the Assembly joynd to him to be assessours, who yet thereby have no further power granted to them than they had before be their Commission, so it is with preses politicus.

And whereas, his Majesties Commissioner protested that the bishops who were authorised be Acts of Parliament were called pretendit bishops, the complainers against bishops protested that such they were and such they should be esteemed and called, conforme to the summons; and the Comuissioners from presbitries, burghes, and universities, protested, that they should be so called till the complaints against them for the samien should be discussed, with libertie to adde; whereupon they tooke instruments.

The Moderatour for the tyme having declaired that the constitution of a Moderatour must be the first act, and goe before the act of examination of the Commissions, he puts upon the leitts Mr John Ker, Mr John Row, Mr James Bonar, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Livingston, and Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone: the leitts being approven, and Mr Alexander Hendersone was chosen Moderatour be the voits of all the voits, not ane contrare except his oune.

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour craved that a list might be given for chuseing of a Clerk.

The Com<sup>r</sup> asked why a clerk should be elected, seeing there was a clark there present, and what could be said against him why he should not execut the office in his fathers lifytyme?

The Moderatour answered—Please your Grace, the clerks sone could not be called the clerk.

The Commissioner required that the young man might have libertie to speake for himselfe, who, being permitted to speak, alledgit that his father was provydit to the office by the dimission of Mr Thomas Nicolsone, and hath served in the office after his dimission, and hath kepted the Registers, and hath given out extracts of the Acts and conclusions of the Assembly; and now being infirme and sicke, and not able to serve at the tyme, has surrogat me his sone in his place.

The Moderatour answered—Albeit Mr Thomas Nicolsone had the office and had demitted to his father, yet was not his Father elected by the Assembly; albeit, he had now possessed the office by the space of 20 yeares, yet I see not how the office can goe by deputation.

The young man answered—That beside the office of Mr Thomas Nicolsone, his father had the office by election in anno 1616.

The Moderatour answered—That he was not chosen by the voits of a free Assembly; and whether it was so or not, it matters not now, seeing he was become old, infirm, and sicke, and so unable to attend frequent Assemblies, which now we expect be the mercie of God, and with his Majesties favour and allowance; yet if there be any question in the matter, I shall ask the voits of the brether; but in my judgement, Edinburgh being the centure of the Kingdome, quhereunto all subjects have greatest resort, it is expedient, yea necessar and good, that the clerk should reside att Edinburgh. I grant the Clerk received no detriment be his fathers function, becaus his employment was but small.

The Earle of Rothes answered—Albeit his father had undoubted right to the office, yet the office is not transmissible: whereupon the young man remitted his interest in the office to the consideration of the Assembly.

The Commissioner answered—By what power the young man could demitt his ffathers right?

The young man answered—That he did not demitt his Fathers office, but onlie submitted his interest in it to the Assembly.

The Commissioner said—That he did not call in question the power of the Assembly concerning the election of a Clerk, but he desired to know how Mr Thomas Nicolsone having demitted his right in favours of the young man his father, and how his Father having enjoyed the office to this day, how ane other clerk should be elected, he being yet alive?

My Lord Lowdown answered—That his father being absent, old, and sicke, could not now supplie the place, and y<sup>r</sup> the Assembly, now convened, behooved to see to it, and surrogat ane other in his place—a man of skill and judgement—seeing he was civiliter mortuus—unable to come hither; yet I speake not this to prejudge his sones benefice, for the Assembly may consider of it; but if he hes a power from his father, he may submitt that to the judgement of the Assembly, and the Assembly may choose ane other without doing wrong to the young man.

The Commissioner answered—If, by reason of Gods hand on the man, they would yet macke [him] further to be a sufferer and a loaser, seeing he hath done the pairt of ane honest man, and his gift of office here doeth bear deputation, why will ye not suffer him to depute his sone in his place as others have done before? For albeit he be old, infirme, and sicke, that may not take away his place, if sicknes be on him by Gods hand, and againe throw time he shall be frustrat of the meanes to mentaine his life in his old age.

Lord Lowdown answered—It is charitable and justlie pleaded, and I think he should not be prejudgit the meanes of his life in his old age; but seeing there are here two prejudices in hand—an to the Gencrall Assembly and other personall to the man—the lateis prejudice must yield to the former, and the Assembly must be served, and the man in his age and sicknesse supplied ane other way. As for deputation ane other in his place, we know he hes no power of it.

My Lord Rothes said—That the strenth of his fathers right to the office was not from Mr Thomas Nicolsones admission, but of that which the Assembly gave unto him; and what right the young man craved by deputation, he hath now put it in the hands of the Assembly.

The Moderatour asked—If the clerks place was not vacant for the tyme, and if it be not vacant, how shall the Assembly be provydit for a clerk for the tyme?

My Lord Rothes said—The Assembly calls for a clerk, and his father compeirs not; how is it furnished?

My Lord Lowdown answered—Let the young man who craves the right adhere to it, and let it be decydit by the Assembly, or els submitted to the Assembly, or els choose your oune Clerk.

Whereupon the young man submitted himselfe to the Assembly.

The Moderatour craved that a lite might be given in for chooseing of a Clerk, and so a lite of four was given in : Mr Thomas Sandilands, sone to the clerk, Alex<sup>r</sup> Blair, John Nicoll, and Mr Archibald Johnstoue ; and it was requyred that these men that shall be elected shall be obliged to reside at Edin<sup>r</sup>.

The Moderatour asked the Com<sup>r</sup> which of these four his Grace would voit into ?

The Com<sup>r</sup> answered—That he knew not any of them, neither would he voit to any of them, becaus he had not as yet seene a lawfull dimission of the present Clerk.

The Moderatour replied—Then your Grace will be a non liquet.

The Com<sup>r</sup> answered—I desire that the voits of the Assessours nominat by his Majestie might be asked in a nomination of a Clerk.

The Moderatour said—Secing your Graces assessours get no voit in chiooseing a Moderatour, being a superiour office, it was not fitt to trouble them with asking their voit anent the election of a Clerk, being an inferiour office.

The Com<sup>r</sup> craved that the protestation made yesterday might be read over againe the day, anent the Kings power in appointing of assessours ; which protestation being red,

The Com<sup>r</sup> craved that my Lord Argyle, Traquair, Southesk, Lauderdale, might voit according to his Majesties command, given in severall letters ; which Letters being sein and red, Traquair craved that these assessours appoynted be his Majestie might have voit, as the custome was in King James, of worthie memorie, his tyme ; and declaired, according to his Majesties command, he was readie to assist and give his voit.

The Moderatour answered—That it was not want of due respect to their Lordships that moved them to refuse your Lordships voits in this, but onlie to maintaine the Kings libertie—quherfor your Lordship had als goed reason to be als zealous as any in the house.

Traquair replied—The employment of this particular was of such small moment, that except it were in obedience to his Majesties command, he would never clame it. As to the Kirks liberties, that they should be preserved ; yet why should any in the Kirk debarr the Kings Majestie from that libertie which to this day he never wanted in any Assembly ? If the Kings Majestie be standing in a particular possession of assessours to treat, reason, and voit, who should his Majestie be dispossessed now ?

The Moderatour answered—That they should either condescend to that his Lordship craved, or else satisfie him in reason ; and said, he would not deny but his Majestie had, in sundrie late Assemblies, moe assessours then his one Commissioner, and yet there were also many Assémbles that neither King, Commissioner, nor assessours were present : which late Assemblies he wished this present Assembly had no reason to put them to the tryall.

Traquair asked—If, becaus the King is not present now, as he was not present in ane other Assembly, if they would exclude him and these nominat be him to voit in this Assembly ?

Moderatour answered—There was no intention to exclude his Majestie, but rather wished his Majestie were present to be ane eye wisse to all thir proceedings, and that he hoped for great favour from his Majestie if he were present, and that full satisfaction should be given to his Majestie, by Gods grace, to everie thing.

Sir Lues Stewart said—Secing it hath beene in use that his Majestie hath appoynted assessours, Commissioners, and all pertaining to the Geuerall Assembly, why not now also ?

Lowdown answered—There were sufficient reasons why it should not be so, and these reasons were put in the hand of the Moderatour to be red.

Thir reasons being red, why the King only should have ane voit, Traquair said—Not out of any affection of in-employment, but of love to the obedience of so gracious a prince, doe I take upon me to answer these reasons ; neither yet am I of such sharpness, capacitie, and quickness of witt, to make answer to everie ane of these particular reasons ; yet seeing we are tryed to make answer, we crave ane copie thereof that we may give our answer thereto, and desires that this matter of election of a Clerk may not be put to voiting till our reasons be heard.

The Moderatour said—It is good reason to be so, and all of us hes also good reason to be zealous of the Kings honour, authoritie, and priviledge, as any, yet his Lordship had also good reason to see to the Kirkes weill and libertie—the Mother of us all ; and when we perceave that the Kings Majestie, or any in his name, would urge that which may eneroach upon the liberties of the Kirke, they would labour to satisfie them in reason.

Traquair said—If I knew any thing would conduce more to the preservation and priviledge of the Kirkes liberties, then that his Majesties wonted authoritic should continue in the former vigour, I would condescend unto it.

The Commissioner said—I render my protestation, made in name of my assessours appoynted be his Majestie.

My Lord Rothes said—And we also adhere to the protestation made be us.

Traquair craved that his assessours might eik to his Graces protestation, which was granted.

Then the Voits of the whole Assembly wer craved anent the election of a Clerk ad vitam, and Mr Archibald Johuston was chosen and admitted unto all the rights, fies, and priviledges, pertaining to ane Clerk of before, to be extractit at large ; who, after the acknowledgement of the weightiness of the charge, and his insufficiencie for it, embraced it as having a calling from God, and the honourable Assembly.

The Moderatour desired to be informed if any more was requisite for his admission but a solemne oath of his fidelitie and diligence ?

Mr Johu Row answered—Nothiug further, but that he should bring foorth, keepe, and preserve the Registers of the Church ; at least so many as shall come in his hands, seeing pitifull experience could show how these Registers had been marred in former tymes.

Theu Mr Archibald gave ane solemne oath of his fidelitie and diligence, and conscieus keeping, and use making of all Registers and documents, was taken of his acceptance and admission.

The Moderatour said—The Bookes and Acts of all former Assemblies should be produced, and put in Mr Archbalds hands.

Mr Thomas Sandilands answered—That he had received no Registers from his father, but only two books, containing some acts from the yeare 1590, till the Assemblée at Aberdein, holden 1616. which thereiu is only begunne with the Minuts of the Acts of the said Assembly of Aberdein, in a paper-apairt with the Minuts of St Androwes following 1617, with the acts of the Assembly at Perth, subscribed be Mr James Saudilands, and delivered the samen to the Assembly : And, being posed for therest of the registers, answered, in his fathers name, that he had gotten these two from the Bishop of St Androwes, and had never received any moe, neither from him, nor from the Assembly, nor from auyther.

The Moderatour craved that all the Registers might be had and brought fourth from the hand of any Clerk or haver of them, affirming that these bookes had in them matters of greater weight then all uther evidents of land; for they wer the Kirke of Scotlands MAGNA CARTA, contayning all her priviledges since the reformation. He wished also that this Assembly should not be deprived of so powerfull a meane of information for proceeding in matters to be handled there.

The former Clerks sone affirmed that he had destroyed none of these bookes.

The Moderatour urged the production of these bookes, and desired the Commisisoner to take course for it.

The Commissioner answered—That he was willing to use any good meane that could be used for production of these bookes, if any could show in whose hands they were; for (said he) I desire uot that any register should be absent, but, above all, the Kirkes Registers.

My Lord Rothes said—That, by a warrant from King James, the bookes wer taken from Mr Thomas Nicolsons and the last Clerk, and put in the hands of the pretendit bishop of St Androwes, and so of neid, foree and course must be taken for getting of these bookes from the Bishop.

Mr Archbald Johnston said—That, by Gods providence, als many bookes were come iu his hands, as should be able to make up a perfite register of the whole affaires of the Kirke, from the Reformation until this day, which Bookes he produced on the table, and declared by whom and what meanes they wer come to his hands—To witt, Mr Robert Winrahame, Depute-clerk under Mr Thomas Nicolsons, and from him to Alex<sup>r</sup> Blair; of quihel bookes there are fyve volumes in folio. But Mr Patriek Adamsons, Bishop of St Androwes, rent ane of them, and yet there are four to the foir of them, written be Mr James Richie and Mr Thomas Nicolsons, q<sup>o</sup>f the first two containes the acts of Assembly from the year 1560 to 1572, subscribed by John Gray, Clerk to the Assembly; and the third volume, fra 1586, till 1590, written and subscribed in the margine be Mr James Riehie, Clerk to the said Assembly—the first Booke being ane great volume of the Acts of the Assembly, fra the year 1560 to 1590, (whereof he had but ane len from ane minister,) whereof, the first four volumes the said Mr Archbald declared he had received them from Alex<sup>r</sup> Blair, wreater, who was servant, and succedit in the place of modifications of Stipends to Mr Robert Winrahame, who had a deputatiou from Mr Thomas Nicolsons, Clerk to the Generall Assembly.

The Moderatour said—These are good and comfortable newis unto the Church of Scotland—that a perfect Register of the Acts of the Assemblies are yet to the foir, and that it was neidfull that course be taken for tryell of these bookes, whether they be these same bookes written be the Clerks, or be their deputs, or Copies only of these bookes.

It was answered be the Clerk, That they are the same, written and subscribed be the Clerkis oun hand, and the leaves riven out of ane of them be the bishop from the 22 to the 27 leafe, may yet be knowne be the marked number of the leafes. The first Clerk, Mr John Gray, who subscribed everie Assembly with his hand. The next is also subscribed; and ane Memorandum on the first leaf of it, where Mr Archbald Huntar past to the Chancelour Maitland and receavet that Volume, and this uther, and the halfe of that which was rent by Bishop Adamsons, is marked in the next booke. The third booke, and the first act of it, is the election of Mr James Richie, Clerk; which booke is all of ane hand write. The ane booke is from the 60 to the 70 year; the next from the 79 wherein the bishop of St Androwes is censured and excommunicat; and now, in God's Providence, there is now in the present Clerks hands a perfyte Register from the 70 year to this last Assembly, for which all of us have reason to praise God.

The Commissioner said—See that we build on aue suir foundation, and try weill that these bookes be authenticks.

The Moderatour craved that some judicious men, and skilled in dignoseing hand writtes, might be nominat for tryell of these bookes; and intreated the Earles Lawderdall, Southesk, and Argyle to take inspection of the Bookes.

Argyle objected his youth and unskilfulness for so weightie a charge, yet, at command of the Commissioner, declaired his willingnes to assist the work.

The Com<sup>r</sup> said, that if his aune paines could contribute any thing to the furtherance of the worke, he would be readie to sit up day and night, but would not lay the burthen on his assessours; for, he said, seeing it is refused that they should be Members of the Assembly, he said he saw not how they could be appoynted for trying of these Registers.

The Moderatour answered—We are hopefull that their Lordships will not refuse to further the good of this Assembly, seeing it is said heir, it is not for want of due respect we owe to their Lordships, but only for preservation of the Kirkes liberties, as said is.

The Com<sup>r</sup> said—I cannot see how these that are not granted to be Members of the Assembly, can eognosce bookes containing matters of so great weight.

The Moderatour answered, that they can best judge.

The Commissioner said—But I cannot cousent unto it. Therefor

The Moderatour said—Let the skilfullest of the Clerks of Session, Counsell, and burrow Clerks, with the Ministers, such as the Laird of Durie, the Clerk of Dundie, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Pearsons, with their Assessours to help them of the Ministrie.

Mr John Livingstone. Mr Andrew Ramsay.

[The Moderator called upon] Mr John Row.

Mr John Row answered—That he had yett in his hands the booke of the Kirke Policie subscribed be Mr James Riehie, Clerk, which will serve to dignosce the hand writt.

Mr Archbald Johnston said he had the principall Booke of Policie, written in lumbard paper, in his hand, which also would condee to that end.

This being judged to be the fittest way for tryell of the Registers of the Kirk, and makeing them to be authentick,

The Moderatour desyred that the Commissioner would proceed to try the Members of the Assembly and the Commissions, that soe the Assembly might be fullie constitut.

The Commissioner answered—That he who yesterday presentit a written paper from the Lords of the Clergie, desires that his bill or paper might be first read for information giving, anent the Members of the Assembly to be constitut; and becaus the reading of it yesterday was denyit before a Moderatour was chosen; now ane Moderatour and Clerk also being chosen, I desire this paper to be read; seeing the objections q<sup>ch</sup> were proponed yesterday are now removed, and that Doctor Robert Hamilton may be called, to produce the paper, written in name of the Lords of the Clergie and their adherents; who being called, compeired and presented his paper to the Commissioner, desiring he would give charge to read it.

The Moderatour said—Some parte of the Impediments of reading it in publiet are removed, but not all; for the Assembly is not as yet constitut fullie. But, so soone as the Assembly is constitut, it shall be read before any other bill or paper qwhatsoever.

The Commissioner urged still the reading of it before the Members of the Assembly were agried upon and constitut, becaus the paper contained many thinges neidfull to be knowen before the Members of the Assembly be constitut.

My Lord Lowdown answered—That the reasons proponed yesterday for not reading of it, are yet standing in foree; and as it was inexpedient yesterday that it should not be read till a Moderatour was chosen, so it is yet inexpedient till all the Members of the Assembly be fullie constitut; for, (said he,) there is no Assembly constitut till the Commissions of the Commissioners to the Assembly be tried.

The Commissioner replied—It is a hard cause, that a man eited before the Assembly should not be heard to object against the Members of the Assembly who were to be there judges. Who ever heard that a man accused as guiltie of a fault, was refused to be heard to object against his judge?

My Lord Lowdown answered—If the objection wer now against the whole Assembly, it could not be read before the Assembly wer constitut to be judges. But if the objections wer against any particuler Member of the Assembly, it were only fitt tyme to object when that mans Commission were in reading.

My Lord Rothes said—Let objections be given in against a particuler Member and it may be heard, but cannot be heard against the whole Assembly before it be constitut; and

The Moderatour eiked—If that paper should open your eyes to give further light after constitution of the Assembly, that the error of not reading it before shall be repented in dew time; for no sooner shall the Assembly be constitut but it shall be first read.

My Lord Commissioner said—I take instruments of your refusall to read it.

My Lord Lowdown answered—It cannot be said that the Assembly hes refused till it be ane Assembly constitut. Neither yet is the paper presented to the Assembly, but to your Graace.

The Commissioner replied—Because ye have refused I took it; and I crave it might be read.

My Lord Lowdown answered—So soon as it is an Assembly, it shall be read.

The Moderatour said—Then let us proceed to the tryell of the Commissions, that the Assembly might be constitut, and then it shall be read.

The Commissioner said—I am content, so be my Lords of Clergie receave no hurt nor prejudice; and before yee proceed, I ask documents that nothing be done in tryell of Commissions, and constituting the said Members of Assembly, to the prejudice of the said Lords of Clergie; and I desyre that the newlie constitut Clerk may pen aue act for this effect and give out ane extract of it.

The Clerk answered—I can neither make nor give out Acts without a warrand from the Assembly; and the Assembly cannot give warrand till it be constitut.

Then (said the Commissioner) I will take instruments in the hands of the Lord Register, seeing the Clerk of the Assembly refuses to write.

The Clerk said—I shall write it quhen the Moderatour gives direction; yea, I shall write it presentlie, but cannot give ane extract of it till the Assembly be constitut.

The Commissioner said—If ye be Clerk to all, why not to me? Shall I make a Clerk for myselfe? I did protest before, that niether the Lords of Clergie nor their adherents should be prejudged in their dignities or priviledges, by their refusing to read their paper, presented by Dr Robert Hamiltoun; which paper containes reasons against election of the Members of Assembly.

My Lord Traquair said—It is very hard that these reasons against the election of such and such Members of the Assembly should not be heard.

The Moderatour said—When the Assembly is fullie constitut, then the Member complained of shall be removed.

The Commissioner said—I still will protest in name of the Lords of Clergie and their adherents, that they receive no prejudice by your not reading of their paper before the Assembly proceed to the examination of Commissions.

My Lord Traquair said—The protestation is upon your refusall to read it.

My Lord Lowdown answered—Their refusall is no longer then till the Assembly be constitut; their reading of it is only deleyed till then.

The Commissioner said—But for my securitie I will take instruments of all in my Lord Registers hand, till that promise be performed; for, albeit I be his Majesties Commissioner, yet am I a poor subject, and must answer for my service.

The Moderatour said—I will judge reverentlie of your Graces proceedings; yet I may say there is a too too burning haste in these men for whom your Grace pleads, that they will have their bill read before the Assembly be constitut.

The Com<sup>r</sup> answered—They have reason to look to themselves, seeing it stands them now on their reputation, dearer to them nor their life; and, therefore, thinks it only now fitt tyme to use their best defenees: for what weight will their reasons have when their parties are constitut their judges? If myselfe were to be constitut judge, I would not refuse to heare reasons why I sh<sup>d</sup> not be such a mans judge; therefore, I request the Moderatour to state the question, and ask the Assembly what they think of it?

Then the Moderatour said—There is a motion made anent the reading of a paper, given in be the pretendit Archbishops and Bishops, and their adherents, for clearing of y<sup>r</sup> mynds who are present, concerning the election of the members of this Assembly, and ye did formerlie refuse it till the Assembly was constitut. Now, it is urged againe; and, therefore, I ask, whether it be convenient to read it now, or to delay it to the Assembly be constitut, and the commissions tryed?

My Lord Traquair said—If my Lords of Clergies iufornation be not read before the voit and judgement of the Assembly be given, and before a judicatorie be constitut, it shall be to no purpose thereafter; therefore, it is only craved that then information may be heard, and no answer shall be craved till the Assembly be fullie constitut.

The Moderatour said—An absolute judgement of the Assembly shall not be given without reservation.

My Lord Traquair said—Instruments should be taken before they give out their judgements, that it prejudice not my Lords of Clergie.

My Lord Lowdown answered—Ye cannot crave the judges Sentence in this matter before the judge be constitut.

The Com<sup>r</sup> said—We only crave to informe these who should be judges, and that reasons should be heard wherefore they cannot be judges.

My Lord Lowdown replied—It is no wayes competent to this Assemblie to heare that information as a judge, before y<sup>r</sup> be a judge, seeing that information shall be also valide after the Assembly is constitut as now.

My Lord Traquair said—What if it can be shoven by good reason, that such ane election of the members of this Assembly as ye are about, cannot be; and if this be, how shall it be tymeous to show it after the election is made?

My Lord Lowdown answered—The judicatorie being constitut, it shall then be judged.

The Moderatour said—Whether should our owne or externall instruments be first heard?

My Lord Traquair answered—When a judicatorie is to be sett, whether is it more proper to except against those who are to be judges, before or after the judicatorie is established?

The Moderatour answered—They shall be heard; but ourselves must be first heard.

My Lord Argyle said—I compare these here conveined to be ane assise nominat, but not yet sworne why may not then we, ane pairtie accused, informe the assise before it be sworne?

The Moderatour answered—We doe verilie perceive great suffieciencie in the Commissioners Grace, who only should speake here unto us; and if your Lo. have any information to give in, doe it in a convenient tyme; and it is not fitt your Lo. should speake here as a Commissioner; and it will be hard to us to make answer to every difficultie that such a number of wittie noblemen can propone.

My Lord Lowdown said—My Lord Argyles instance is verie fitt, if these men who desires their information to be read would come in here as men pannelled before ane assise.

My Lord Argyle answered—There is a sort of aeknowledgement be them of a judicatorie here, when they desire such a information to be read before it.

The Moderatour said—They shall be judged in nothing here till they have gotten libertie to speak, and except against any Commissioner here present.

The Com<sup>r</sup> said—If this be ane free Generall Assembly, why may not any propone their doubts? How can this be refused to my Lord Argyle and others, they being Peires of the land, which cannot be denyed to Seottismen?

After sundrie speeches uttered be my Lord Argyle, Traquair, and answers given thereto be the Shirreff of Teviotdaill and my Lord Lowdown, anent the comparisone taken from assise, it was coneluded that the paper given be Doctor Robert Hamilton, in name of the Lords of Clergie and their adherents, should not be read till the Assembly was fully constitut.

November 24, 1638.

The fourth day, be reason of the Commissioners delay in not coming at his appoynted houre, the Moderatour desired that matters to be handled might goe one in his Grace his absence, and a promise that a full narration of thinges handled should be made knowne unto his Grace at his first incomeing, which the Com<sup>r</sup> refused, seeing he was bound to give particular accompt to the Kings

Majestie of everie thing done, therefore behoved to be ane witsse of everie thing that should be done.

The Moderatour said—We left at the examination of Commissions, which serves for the eonstitution of the Assembly; and we crave that we may now proceed in the examination of Commissions; and the Commission given in for the Presbitrie of Dunee, was first read; next, the Commission for the Presbitrie of Chirnside.

The Moderatour said—We need not to crave the voits of the Assembly anent every Commission; but, if none speake against a Commission, after it is read, we will hold silence for a consent and approbation of the commission.

The Commissioner answered—If ye appoynt that silence shall be taken pro confesso that the Commission is valide, I protest that my silence be not so exponed, but that I may have libertie to object against any Commission or Commissioner, in my owne tyme, becaus for the present, I am not instructed with objections which I have and will make hereafter; and to this protestation, the Moderatour, in name of the Assembly, assented; and so the Clerk went on to the reading of the rest of the Commissions, and red the third from the Presbitrie of Kelso; the 4 from Jedburgh; the 5 from toune of it; the 6 from Ersiltoun; the 7 from Lawder; the 8 from Selkirk; the 9 from the toune of it; the 10 from Dumbar; the ij from the toune of it; the 12 from Northberwiek toune; the 13 from Hadingtoun; the 14 from Dalkeeth; the 15 from the Presbitrie of Hadingtoun; the 16 from Edinburgh; the 17 from the Colledge of it; the 18 from Linlithgow; the 19 from the toune of it; the 22 from the Presbitrie of Peibles, and a Protestation given in against it be Mr Robert Elliot, as a Commission purchased be indirect meanes used be the Lord Traquair.

My Lord Traquair, hearing his name called in question, thought himself much wronged, being calumnat be such a man, whom he would prove to be both a bryber and ambitious; and that he should be by him brought upon the stage before so reverent and grave ane auditour; and complained to the Commissioner of the Ingiver of the Protestation as ane infamous lybeller against ane officer of Estate, and Counsellour of his Majestie; and the Com<sup>r</sup> promised that the ingiver should be censured according to justice, in tyme and place convenient: therefore, both the Commission and the protestation was layd by till the fitt tyme of tryell.

The 23 commission was then read from the toune of Peibles; the 24 from Middlebie; the 25 from Loehmaben; the 26 from the toune of it; the 27 from Mentoun; the 28 from Penpont; the 29 from Drumfreis; the 30 from the toune of it; the 31 from Kireudbright; the 32 from the toune of it; the 33 from New Gallaway toune; the 34 from the Sanquar toune; the 35 from Wigtoun toune; the 36 from Wigtoun Presb.; the 37 from Stranrawer; the 38 from the toune of it; the 39 from Air; the 40 from the toune of it; the 41 from Irving; the 42 from the toune of it; the 43 from Rosay; the 44 from Argyle; the 45 from Dumbartoun; the 46 from the toune of it; the 47 from Paisley; the 48 from Renfrew toune; the 49 from Glasgow; the 50 from the toune of it; the 51 from the colledge of it.

It was asked, why the Colledge of Glasgow put in 4 in their Commission, when uther Colledges hes but ane, and it was layd by to be examined.

The 52 [Com.] from Rutherglen toune; the 53 from Hamilton; the 54 from Lanerk; the 55 from the toune of it; the 56 from St Andrewes; the 57 from the toune of it; the 58 from the Colledge of it; the 59 from the toune of Creall; the 60 from Kilreny toune; the 61 from Anstruther Easter; the 62 from Anstruther Wester; the 63 from Pit-tinweeme; the 64 from Coupar; the 65 from the toune of it; the 66 from Kirkealdie; the 67 from the toune of it; the 68 from Dysert; the 69 from Kinghorne; the 70 from Bruntlyland; the 71 from Dumfermling; the 72 from the toune of it; the 73 from Culros; the 74 from Innerkeitling; the 75 from Dumblane; the 76 from Auchterardour; the 77 frome Perth toune; the 78 from Dunkell; the 76 from Megle; 80 from Dundie; 81 from the toune of it; 82 from Forfar toune; 83 from Brechen, on the back of which Commission there was y<sup>r</sup> a declaration written in favours of the Laird of Din, Commissioner, subscribed be ane number of barons, and some noblemen to it, beside these insert in the Commission it selfe, who gave consent to the Commission. This writ, on the backsyde of the Commission, was for clearing the sufficiencie of it, in respect that ane vther Commission was granted be the same Presbitrie of Brechen, appoynting my Lord Carnage, ruleing elder, for ane Commissioner; ane copie of which Commission, with ane declaration upon the back thereof was craved be the Commissioner, vnder the Clerks hand, that he might thereby be the better instructed for objecting against any vther Commissions, and might have his mynd cleared in sundrie particulars which might conduce for the furtherance of his Majesties service.

The Moderatour answered, That his Grace should have ane copie of the Commission it selfe, but not of that which is written on the back of it, seeing it is not given as a parte of the Commission, but only a privat thing written by the ingiver, for clearing of his Commission.

The Commissioner said, Seeing that which is written on the backsyde of it may serve to further my masters servie, why should a copie of it be denyed to me, seeing my desyre is reasonable? I cannot compell to give it, but, if it be denyed, what can I say but I am vsed in that as in the vther things?

My Lord Rothes said—The pairtie ingiver hes yet in his power to retreat and draw back both the Commission and all that is written upon it; and therefore the Clerk can give no copie nor extract of it till the Commission be authorized and made lawful in judgement; for, till that, as it is only a privat paper which the ingiver may doe now if he have not a mynd to stand to it.

No, said my Lord Traquair, he may not draw it back, if it may contribute to the furtherance of the Kings service.

My Lord Lowdown said he may not only draw it back, but ryve it.

No, said my Lord Traquair, seeing it is now produced in judgment; and the Commissioner eikit—Not only is it produced in judgement, but hes at it the subscriptiones of a number of Noblemen barrons, who we hope will stand to it.

My Lord Montrois said—We will not passe from a jote of that which may serve for the clearing of the Commission.

Therefore, said the Commissioner, that which is written on the backsyde of the Commission, serves to prove the legalitie of the election of the Commissioner, and is used as ane argument to prove the illegalitie of ane uther Commission from the same Presbitrie. Why then should I not have a copie of that which is written on the backsyde of the Commission, seeing I find it serve much for the furtherance of my Masters service?

My Lord Yester answered—It is not propper for the Clerk to give ane copie or extract of that which is not insert in the records of Assembly; and only the Commission will be registrat in the bookes of Assembly, when it is approven, but not that which is on the back of it.

The Moderatour eikit—Only that which is given to the Assembly for a Commission, may be craved of the Assembly; but that which is on the back of it is not given for a Commission, or any parte thereof, but only written on the back of the Commission given in accidentallie, and may be obliterated.

The Commissioner asked, how that could be called accidentall which had at it the subscription of 40 hand writtes, and produced in judgement to be read?

The Moderatour said—That on the back of the Commission is only accidentall, and I shall eleir it by ane supposition. There is ane evident given in before the Lords of Session, and on the back thereof there is ane compt written on some privat bussinesse of the owner of it. Shall the Lords of Session, or the Clerk, be obliged to give out ane extract of the mans compt? No more can the Assembly or Clerk give out ane extract of that which no wayes belongs to them.

My Lord Forbes said—The ingiver hes power to eike, paire, or draw back at his pleasure, and such Commissions that are contraverted are referred to ane vther day.

Mr David Diek said, Let the Ingiver of the Commission be asked, whether that on the back of it serves for approvation of his Commission or not? for, if it be only a probation of it, then that which is on the back should not be read till the time of probation, and for the tyme, only a copie of the Commission may be craved.

The Com<sup>r</sup> asked the voits of the Assembly whether or not a copie of all should be granted.

My Lord Lowdown answered, that there could be no voiting till the Assembly be established; but so soone as it shall be established, it shall be granted.

Then, said the Com<sup>r</sup>, I take Instruments that such a Commission was given in to be read, on the baek whereof there is a written declaration of the lawfulness of the election of the Commissioners of Brechin, and desires it may be kept in the Clerks hands.

The Moderatour regrated much that the weightie and grave matters of the Assembly should be thus deleyed, and said that it had been better to have wanted all the Commissioners from Brechin; quhereat

Souteske cappit and unreverentlie replied to the Moderatour, that he wronged them that wronged not him, and whom he had no reason to wrong.

The Moderatour answered—That what he did speake was within the bounds of reason, and he would be answerable for it to the Assembly; neither would [he] have expected from his Lordship such an undeserved censure.

Lowdown answered—That it was ane great wrong that the Moderatour should be upbraided by any for preferring the publict weill, and the effaires of the Assembly to any mans particular.

Mr David Dick said, That God will trouble the impeaders of his owne work.

This was like to have drawn to a great heat if the Commissioner had not prevented it by commanding them to silence.

The 84 Commission from Ruthentoun was read; 85 from Arbroath; 86 from Montrois; 87 from Arbroth toune; 88 from Mernes; 89 from Aber-deine ; 90 from the Colledge of it ; 91 from the toune of it ; 92 from Die ; 93 ; 94 from Ellon ; 95 from Turreff ; 96 from Kincardine.

Sess. 5.

[November 25.]

After in calling vpon the name of God,

The Clerk went forward in reading the rest of the Commissions ; and the 97 Commission, Garrioch, was first read, and billes of Complaint given in against the Commissioner, containing reasons why he should not be received as Commissioner, and was referred to tryell. The 98 from Fordice ; 99 from Bamff toune ; 100 from Elgin toune ; 101 from Strabogie ; 102 from Forres ; 103 from Forres toune ; 104 from Innernes ; 105 from Innernes toune ; 106 from Chanrie of Ross, and a protestation against it by Sir John M<sup>c</sup>Kenzie ; 107 from Tayne ; 108 from the Toune of it ; 109 from Dingwall ; 110 from Sutherland ; 111 from Cathnes ; 112 from Orkney, from Patrick Smyth of Braco,* and it was castin, being found nather from a Presbitrie, burgh, nor subscribing Miuster.

The Moderatour said—Now the whole Commissions are read ; and of all there are onlie 13 contravertit ; and we have now reason to praise God, that, be the silence of all that are present, the rest of the Commissions are approven, and that, in Gods siugular favour, we have place and power to voit and treat of all matters that shall come before us. As for these contraverted Commissions, it is now tyme we should examine them.

The Commissioner said—If ye proceed to examination, I shall adhere to my former protestation of libertie to object against any Commission in my owne tyme.

My Lord Rothes answered—It is now fittest tyme.

The Commissioner answered—I find not yet my fitt tyme to make any objections, but seeing tyme reserved to me I will choose it.

Then the Moderatour said—Let the Commissions which are in question be discussed, and begiu at the Presbitrie of Peibles, given, October first, to Mr James Benuet, and Laird of Posso, subscribed be the Clerk.

The Commission was read, and a protestation against it, alleadging that that election was not free, for many reasons.

My Lord Traquair craved libertie to speake in defence of that Commission ; and

The Moderatour required that he should speake of the Minister who gave in the protestation, with a respect due to a Minister of Jesus Christ, till he was declared infamous.

My Lord Traquair answered—That he had no purpose to reckon for the tyme, but would referre the challenge against him to the Presbitrie ; only craved libertie to regrat that so unjustlie he was brought upon the stage, seeing he did attest all the witnesses that were present at the out giving of that Commission, that he did carry himself humblie and modestlie, as became a good Christian, iutending nothing but a free and peaceable election ; and that he did not utter any crosse word, or a word smelling of passion or discontent ; and he attested God that the matter was as he said. Then he declaired that there was a formall process [extract] of that election in the hands of the Clerk of the Presbitrie, which, being produced, would make it cleare how unjustlie he was accused ; which process he promised to produce the next day.

The Moderatour answered—If the process come from ane honest hand, and be clearlie and formallic deduced, it shall have faith ; and, if the pairtie protester against the Commission can prove the contrare be suffieient witsesse, he also must be heard.

My Lord Traquair answered—It is hard to heare witnesses ag<sup>t</sup> a eldar, and formal process given in by a famous Clerk in writt.

The Moderatour asked at Mr Robert Elliot, (who gave in the protestation,) what he could say ? He answered, That it was a vyld imputation layd to his charge, that he should be aue vnjust accuser of such a uobleman ; but, sayth he, if I have done no evil, why am I called a basse, ambitious, brybbish boddie, in the hearing of this reverend assembly ? But I passe it, seeing my Lord was called a Carpenter, a wine bibber, and ane enemie to Cæsar, and that he had a divel ; yet I have said nothing as a libeller against my Lord Traquair, for I was readie to spend my life in his service ; and I judged that he should have lyked the better of me, that I should have protested against any thing which seemed to prejudice this Assembly.

The Moderatour asked if the protestation made against that election was made in a Clerks hearing before witnesses, and if it was written and marked ?

Mr Robert Elliot answered—That he protested openlie, and desired to be so heard, but it was refused.

My Lord Traquair answered—The process in the Clerks hand will clear all which is ordained to be produced ; and if, after tryell, I be proven uot to have been ane intruder of my selfe, or ane indirect dealler, seeing I walked so circumspectlie, I crave the wrong done to me may be redressed ; for, before God, there is not a circumstance of that which is alleadged true.

The Commissioner answered—If he should continue in his office, he should have the wrong redressed : if not that, he should deale with auy to occupy his place.

To that end, my Lord Rothes said—If there be wrong on his parte, the censure of it is competent to this Assembly.

The Commissioner said—I intend not to derogat any thing from the authoritie of this Assembly, but rather would contribut unto it, and preserve it in its owne integritie. But I would not that the Royall authoritic should so suffer that ane officer of Estate, being accused unjustlie, and so wronged, should not be repaired according to Justice.

My Lord Rothes said, that the tryell of this alleadged wrong is ouly competent to this Assembly.

The Commissioner answered—I doubt not but the Assembly will doe to my Lord Traquair what is right ; but I speake of the King's right, and I know the Assembly may only judge in ecclesiasticall matters.

My Lord Traquair said—I declyne not the Assembly as judges in this matter ; for I am content to subscribe ane blank paper, to be filled up by the Assembly ; yea, I darre remitt the tryell of it to any Member of the Assembly.

The next Commission that was examined was from the Colledge of Glasgow as singular, containing four Commissioners, when other Colledges hath but ane, according to the act of Assembly.

The Principall, Doctor John Strong, craved the production of the Act ; and after that the Act was considered, it was found that Colledges could have no privildiges above a Kirk, and therefore, ane act was sett downe, that ane colledge should have but ane voit in ane Assembly.

The 3d Commission from the Colledge of Glasgow was layd by till the Commissioner should find a fitt tyme to object against it.

The 4 from the Presbitrie of Ross. It was objected against it that it was onlie ane parte of the Presbitrie of Irwing, and it was acknowledged to be so of old, but was now disunited by the Bishop of Iles, as was alledged; but because it was not clearlie instructed, neither yet had becne in use to send Commissioners to former Assemblies as a presbitrie constitut, It is ordained that the Commissioners now sent shall have no voit in this Assembly; and becaus of ane large distance of place, and sea betwixt it and Irwing, it was thought fitt that hereafter it shall contribut a presbitrie of itselfe.

The 5 Contraverted Commission from the Presbitrie of Brechin, which after reasoning much too and fro, the tryell of it was referred to a particular committee—

Masters Andrew Ramsay,	Robert Douglas,
David Dalglesh,	John Robertsons,

with power to them to take the oathes and deposition of the thrie Ministers Commissioners for clearing the matter, and reporte the diligence to the Assembly.

The 6 Commission, from Kincarden presbitrie, was examined; and being found that the Commissioners were not elected in the ordinar Meeting place, nor in the ordinar tyme, but only by the Bishop in ane uther place, and ane uther tyme, and without the consent of elders, and without the knowledge of particular Kirks, therefore it was rejected.

The 7 Commission, from the Presbitrie of Aberdeen, after tryell, was approven, and Mr James Harvie and Doctor Barrous was rejected, as done nather in place nor face of a Presbitrie, without any advertisement to the congregations, and being only subscribed at that tyme by themselves, who wer Commissioners, and by thrie uther Miisters thereafter, in their owne houses.

8. Anent the Commissioner of Garrioch, Mr Andrew Logie, sundrie complaints being given in against him, wer remitted to a Committee—viz., Mr Andrew Cant, Mr James Martine, Mr Thomas Mitchell, and Dr Guild.

9. The two Commissions given in from the Chanrie of Ross. The Laird of Tarbet produced ane Instrument against Mr Thomas M<sup>c</sup>Kenyics Commission, and assured the nther lawfull Commissions were comeing. The said Mr Thomas being rejected, produced a protestation against the Constitution of this Assembly of Ministers and elders.

My Lord Rothes asked instruments, and protested that such a Complaint and protestation was given in by the said Mr Thomas. The Commissioner also tooke instruments of the production of it.

Mr Andrew Ramsay offered presently to prove from Scripture, antiquitie, consent of uther reformed Kirkes, standing practices of our aune Kirke, and bookes of Assemblies, that ruling Elders are lawfull and necessar Members of ane Assembly.

The Commissioner, acknowledging his owne weakness for disputing of that question, promised, in a convenient tyme, to bring foorth some who would dispute against ruleing Members, as no lawfull Members of ane Assembly.

The last question, about the Commission from Orkney was declared null, having no consent of Presbitrie, nor subscription of ane Minister, toune, nor colledge.

The Moderatour answered—Now the whole Commissions are examined, and found good, except some few. It is now expedient that the sufficiencie of the Kirke Registers be cleared, that they may be declaired authentick.

The Commissioner answered—It is a good work; but I have some scruples not yet removed.

Then, said the Moderatour, Let some be appoynted for tryell of the Registers; for the Assembly being now full constitut, after the examination of all contraverted Commissions, may give their Commission for tryell of the Registers, and let their testimonie anent the perfection of the bookes be given in the morne.

Masters	Masters
Andrew Ramsay,	John Adamsons,
Robert Murray,
Alex <sup>r</sup> Gibsons,	yo <sup>r</sup> of Durie,
Alex <sup>r</sup> Wedderburne,	Clerk of Dundie,
Alex <sup>r</sup> Pearsons,	Advocat; with such uthers

as they please to joyne with themselves.

Sess. 6.

[November 26.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour said—Let us begin where we left, at the tryell of the record of Assemblies. There was a Committie appoynted yesternight to give in their testimonie anent the authentickness of the Registers. If it please your Grace, let their answer be heard.

The Commissioner having assented,

The Moderatour called upon these who wer appoynted for the examination of the Registers, to report their testimonie.

Durie said—Please your Grace and this reverend Assembly, We shall either give in our reasons be word or writt.

The Commissioner said—I desire to heare them give them in any way ye please.

Then the reasons of the authentickness of the Registers were given in be writt, and read by the Clerk.

The Moderatour said—Please your Grace, here is the testimonie of these that have skill in trying the Registers better nor any here present can relate. Hes your Grace gottine satisfaction?

The Commissioner answered—Verillie it is a matter of verie great importance, and there shall be no man more glad nor I, to see the Registers of the Kirke found reall, and proven to be authentick. I am far from contradicting anythling these worthie gentlemen hath done; for it were impertinent so to doe. I can say nothing at the first hearing of a paper read; but it may be, that many scruples come in my mynd concerning them; yea, I have already, whereof I am not resolved. This is the first tyme that ever I heard it read, and, therefore, I cannot give my judgment of it. I must confess my ignorance in thir things; and, therefore, I must be verie loath to give my assent or approbation to anything wherein I am not both clear and persuaded.

The Moderatour said—Hes your Grace any scruples to propone for the present?

The Commissioner said—I must think upon all before I propone them.

The Moderatour said—I would desire this reverend Assembly, that if there be any here, noblemen, gentlemen, ministers, that if they have any thing to say agst this information concerning the authoritie of the Registers, that they would propone them, either now by word, or in a short tyme by writt, that this Assembly may make a declaration that they are authentick; and, if no objection be made against them, we will take your silence for an approbation of their authoritie. If ye have any thing to say, bring it foorth presentlie; if not, produce it in writt against the morne.

The Commissioner said—I am verie confident that there is not the Regents hand writt.

Durie answered—If it was not his hand writt it w<sup>d</sup> have sic subscribitur, as all uther copies uses to have. I will not affirme that everie reason given for proving the authoritie of the bookes is unquestionallie good; but que non prosunt singula, multa juvant. I daresay this farre: all the Registers of Sessioun, Counsell, and pryme judicatories of this kingdome, are also farr short of the Registers of the Kirke, as these Registers are short of these things treated here.

The Commissioner said—Truely, sir, I cannot but acknowledge these reasons hath cleared verie much, and verillie they have removed many scruples that myself had before the hearing of them; so that I will not contradict them: but I still doubt if that subscription be the Regents hand.

Moderatour said—If there be any brother that has any copie of James Richie, or John Gray, clerk to the Assembly, their hand writt, let them produce, to give farder information to confirme this information; for, possible, some minister or uther that hes some record that may give testimony and approbation to this hand writt.

Then Mr John Row produced ane copie of severall acts of the booke of Policie, written be the said Mr James Rielie, and subscriyved with his hand; ane uther brother of the Presbitrie, which he had kepted himself now 52 yeares; and the hand writt of the Assembly Booke and the Copies being compared, and seene be the Commissioner himself, they were acknowledged to be ane hand writt.

The Moderatour said—If any man have any thing to oppose against these bookes, let him now bring it foorth, that ane Act may be made; for, if no man produce anything, they will be acknowledged be the Assembly to be authentick hereafter.

Then the Moderatour, professing his owne insufficiencie for so weightie a charge as was now layd upon him, craved that some assessours might be nominat to joyne with him in a privat conference for ordering of matters to be proponed in Assembly.

The Commissioner answered, that he would not oppose any laudable custome of former Assemblies; but let the Clerk and Lord Register mark that my assent be no wayes prejudiciall to my masters right.

Mr David Dalgleish said—I have seen Assemblies of old, and such pryme conferences, according to my poore observation, hath wrought great prejudice to the Kirk; therefore, I would wishe that all were done by a voluntar consent, and by the concurrence of the whole Assembly.

Moderatour answered—Please you, the advice of the Privat Conference has done harme to the Assembly, but not the use and institution; for, of its inowne nature, [it] is very helpfull. They aught, deed, to keepe themselves within their owne bounds, and doe nothing that may be prejudiciall to the Assembly; but doe yee think it is possible for a man to propone matters for so great a meeting without assessours?

The Assembly declaired, there needed no Act be made for assessours, but that the Moderatour may choose at his owne discretion, some few to assist him in the ordering and proposition of matters; whereupon the Moderatour nominat—

Mr Hary Pollock, Minister at Edinburgh.
Mr John Adamson, Principall of the Colledge thereof.

Mr David Dick, Minister at Irwing.
Mr David Dalgleische, Minister at Coupar.
The Earles of Rothies and Montrois.
The Lords Lindsay, Lowdown, and Balmerino.
Sir William Douglas of Cavers.
The Laird of Keir.
The Laird of Houghton.
James Cochrane, burges of Edinburgh.
James Fletcher, Provost of Dundie.
Mr Robert Barclay, Provost of Irwing.

My Lord Lowdown said—Please your Grace, these assessours are only to advise what is to be done first, and what next, for greater expedition and acclerating of buseinesse.

The Commissioner said—I have alwayes bene carefull to eschue the speaking of any thing that might impede this great and good worke, and so shall I still be; yet must I be carefull that my silence be not prejudiciall to my gracious Master and Sovereigne; and, I hope neither your disposition, nor any here present, intends any wrong be what they say or doe, to auctoritie. But I have bein told that the overtures and proponing of matters doe principallie belong to his Majestie, what he thinks fitt to be agitat in the first place, in the midle, and in the last place; therefore I cannot passe by my just protestation, that this prove no wayes prejudiciall to my Masters service, and I receive no imputation by saying nothing. Whereupon his Grace tooke protestation.

The Moderatour said—Your Grace needed not to have protested, seeing the Assembly was content that everie thing done in the Assembly should be done with his Graces consent.

My Lord Rothies protested that the ordering and proponing of matters pertained only to the Moderatour.

The Commissioner said—Indeed I am weill pleased to heare that from yow; but I must be carefull of my Masters right; and I hope it shall be seene to future ages that I have bein ane honest and trustie servant to my good and gracious Master.

The Moderatour desired his Grace to condescend upon ane hour for the Meeting of the Assessours formerlie nominat, and said it was the custome to meit in the Morning before Sermon.

The Commissioner said—I am told that the tyme and place uses to be appoynted be his Majestie or his Commissioner, who was alwayes present at these privie conferences; and therefore I protest that I be present at them all.

The Moderatour said—We shall be verie glad of your Graces presence and assistance; for we hope your Grace will be a helpe and not a hinderance unto us. Therefore lett us know the tyme and place which seemes to be most convenient, that the tyme be conforme to the dyet of this Assembly.

The Commissioner said—When my leasure can serve, I shall be readie to give attendance.

The Moderatour asked the opinion of some of the brethren. Mr Robert Douglas, Mr James Bonar, Mr Andrew Cant, Mr John Bell, said, that the tyme might be appoynted by the Moderatour; but it must be advertit that nothing be determined in these privie conferences, nor any thing prejudiceall to this free Assembly; but only that matters be ordered and digested be them, that soe things might be rightlie proponed in the Assembly.

The Moderatour said—I was present at these Conferences, at ane Assembly in Aberdein in 1616, and they tooke very much upon them, for all matters were concluded and determined; that the privie Conferences satt 3 or 4 houres, and the Assembly satt but ane houre, and intimation was only made in the Assembly of their Conelusions, and the Assembly was asked if they had any thing to say against it; but I hope they shall hold themselves within their bounds.

The Moderatour said—There uses some to be naimed for receiving of papers and billes that are to be given in, becaus it will not be convenient that the whole Assembly be troubled with everie particular complaint; therefore let some be nominat for vieuing of the Billes, that hes best skill in matters of this kynd, that they may report to the Assembly, what is pertinent to be handlit here, and what not.

The Commissioner said—There is nothing that hes bein the order and custome of Assemblies but I shall heartillic consent unto it.

The Assembly appoynted for receiving of Billes, &c.

The Moderatour desyred that the rest of the Commissions that were not cleared and approven, might now be examined; and first he desyred to hear the report of these that were on the Commission for Breehin. They answered that they were not sufficientlie instructed.

The next was Commission from Peibles.

My Lord Traquair said—For clearing of the suffieencie of this Commission, ye maysee the whole process under Mr Patriek Purdies hand, Clerk to the Presbitrie, who is here present.

Mr John Bennet said—We, the Commissioners of Peibles, have hitherto been silent; now we desyre to be heard, and that this reverend Assembly would take this matter to their Consultation; for here is ane whole Elderschip accused by ane man, whereas the Scripture sayes—“Accuse not ane elder but under the testimonie of two or three witnesses;” and this Man, ane of our bowells, of whom we expected better things, hes now brought us on the stage, and spitted on our face, and brought us in suspition, by surmizing speaches, and open challenges; and this he hath done under pretence of zeale for the freedome of this Assembly, quihilk God forbid we should prejudge. We are heir, Men, haters of vyce and lovers of veritie, willing to give all our coneurance to everie good worke.

The Moderatour said—It is not an accusation, but ane Protestation; and it will appeare by the determination of the Assembly, whether he hath done wrong or not.

My Lord Traquair said—I know certainly they have a Commission most warrantable; but since now it is contradieted, I submit myself to the judgement of the Assembly; and I erave that the whole proces may be read to the Assembly, that it may be knowne on whose parte the fault is; and if it doe not clearlie improve what Master Elliot hes said, and make good what I have said for myselfe, or if there be a syllable or circumstance of that quihilk he alledges true, or if ever I have a thought in that kynd, I were not worthie to come amongst Christians, let be to come here; for it is impertinent, if not impudent, for a man to intrude himselfe in such an action as that which is against all conscience and dignitie. But I propose not now to use any recriminations.

Mr Robert Elliot said—My Protestation is not accusation or challenge against any mans persone, but ag<sup>t</sup> the informality of the election of the Commissioners, least this Assembly should be challenged afterward for admitting such a voice in matters as was not instructed with sufficient Commissions. Al-way I am sorry that my Lord Thesaurer should be offendit. I thought his Lordship should not have been offendit; for, God is my wnesse, I neither intendit, neither have I given any occasion of offence.

My Lord Traquair said—I submit to the judgement of this honourable company, if this be not rather an accusation nor a protestation, and that in a high streame, challenging me for intruding myselfe in that bussines after so unjust a way; but neither this assertion nor myne can take away ane judicciall act. I hope both our partes shall be cleared be the Proces quhich must have faith, except ye will offer to improve the writt, and prove the Clerk to be false.

The Moderatour said—It is possible he may give some information for himselfe, which will not contradict but may subsist with the proces.

Then the proces was given to the Clerk and read.

Traquair said—I doe not say but my judgement may differ from Mr Ellots or any other mans; but if thare hes been any illegall way usit by me, I am readie to answer according to law and reason; but if his judgement doeth not goe alongst with me, I hope this will be no reason to condemn myne for it; and when this honourable meeting hes considered this proces, if they be not satisfied, I will submit myselfe to their judgement.

Moderatour said—That Mr Elliot had nothing to say against the proces; quherupon the Thesaurer took Instruments, that Mr Elliot acquiesced to the truth of the proces.

My Lord Yester requyred that these who were present might be asked concerning that quihilk Mr Robert had alleadged; for he sayes nothing contrare to the proces, but something more nor is in the proces. And he hath given in a protestation only, and not ane accusation; and when I posed him straitlie, what moved him to give in the protestation, he tooke God to wnesse that he did it out of conscience and love to the good of the Cause.

Traquair said—My Lord, let me speake as good friends and Christian subjects ane to another.

Yester answered—I desire earnestlie it may be so; but it may be I cannot speake so pleasantlie to your Lordship as I would, be reason of this throng about.

Traquair said—I take it to be a clame and accusation against the formalitie of the election; and what is in the proces, I remitt it to the judgement of the Assembly, and if any thing be called in question which the proces cannot cleare, I shall justifie ane uther way.

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour said—We left at the testimonie which was given by skilled men who wer appoynted for trying of the Kirk Registers, and their testimonie was read in your hearing; and we requested all to bring in this day, their objections and scruples concerning these registers; now we crave that ane who pleases would object; for if no man object, an act or record will be insert in the bookes of the Assembly, declairing that these bookes are authentick.

The Commissioner said—No man here shall have greater joy nor I, to heare the registers of the Kirk perfyte, and no man shall contrbut more to it then I, being a matter of so great importance or weight; for upon the acts set doune in these bookes very much depends. But becaus ye have heard [objections] be the Lords of Clergie made, and their adherents, against the legallitie of the proceedings of this Assembly, I am tyed yet to say somewhat ; and I am sorrie that I must protest against that in word which my heart desires not. Sore grieved I have reason to be to protest against so good a work as is the restoreing to the Kirk of her records ; yet considering many causes which now I will not expresse, I am forced to protest against it : ffor albeit these bookes may be found authentick be the consent of this Assembly, yet may I doe nothing which may import either his Majesties assent to it or myne ; and therefore heir I make protestation against.

The Moderatour said—We only crave the Assemblys approbation ; and if the pretendit Bishops or any uther will take upon them to improve these bookes, or any parte of them, they shall be heard. It is pittifull there should be such a rent in our Church, so fearful, and that any point of the cause of it shall be imputed to authoritie, if we consider what a sweete unitie was ance in this Kirk. To clear this unitie, I will read a testimonie out of the preface of the booke called “The Harmony of the Confession of the Reformed Kirkes.” After the reading of it in Latine, he exponed it, shawing the rare priviledges of the Kirk of Scotland beyond uther Kirkes ; that for the space of 54 yeares it remained in puritie of doctrine and discipline, without any errour or schisme, and gave a reason of it ; becaus the Kirk of Scotland was reformed in doctrine and discipline according to the word of God : so it is clear, the Kirk ance had unitie, and it is clear also by what meanes and Instruments schisme hes come in.

The Commissioner said—I pray God the Kirk may enjoy this puritie 40,000 yeares more, if the world should endure so long ; yet I must protest, in more pathetic words, against the authoritie of these bookes (for I did it in modestie before) ; albeit, I would give my estate and venture my life in furthering the Church to be restoired to her registers ; but becaus of the manyfold exceptions I have against the way of the meeting of this Assembly, and against sundrie persons which are Members of it, I protest heir, that neither the Kings Majestie nor the bishops be wronged be any act in these bookes, and that they are not obleist be the acts of any booke, which is not subscrievd be the Clerk of Aberdein.

My Lord Rothes said—Your Grace promised to propone some scruples against these bookes, wherin your Grace was not yet satisfied, which we desyre to heare ; for they are found, of all who have tryed them, comparatively authentick, and utherwayes also.

Moderatour said—We are sure if his Grace had perused these bookes, he would approve them also.

The Roll being called be the Clerk, the Moderatour asked if the brethren did approve the registers ? Who answered that they did ; and desyres that reasons of the approbation might also be insert in the bookes of the Assembly, and that there was not any protestation made be his Majesties Commissioner. They desyred also that the Bishop of St Andrews might be summonsed for the production of these bookes which are wanting.

The Moderatour said—Ye heard of a declinatour given in be the pretendit Bishops and Archbishops, containing many divers crymes and challenges ag<sup>t</sup> the Members of this Assembly ; therefore it is desyred that some paper may be read, containing some answers to many pointes of their declinatour, and not a full answer, such as shall be given in hereafter ; only this shall serve to give some answer, &c. : which two papers being read be the Clerk,

The Commissioner said—I did not expect an answer to the Bishops declinatour aud protestations, seeing the declinatour was only presented to me, wherefore ane answer from the Assembly was needless.

The Moderatour answered—The inscription of the Declinatour sayth, “A Declinatour to be red before the Assembly,” and therefore ane answer must be given be the Assembly.

Rothes said—There is no more pertinent matter to be handlit in the Assembly then that declinatour, which in it hath so many criminations against the Members of it, and alleadges wronges in the Constitutions of it.

Mr Andraw Ramsay said—Your Grace hes als good reason to answer and object against the bishops declinatour as any in this house ; becaus in it they declyned the Kings Grace and his Commissioner, be thrie testimonies cited be them, and will not suffer him or any other King or Emperour to hold voice in Assembly, saying, “Nemo preter Episcopos debet se ecclesiasticis protractibus immiscere.”

The Commissioner said—I thinke they have no intention to declyne the Kings Majestie as judge, seeing sundrie pairtes of their paper declaires their reverend subscription to his Majestie. But I will not wrong these reverend Lords be my disputing of their cause, who am so insufficient for it ; but if I thought they intendit any prejudice against my Master and soveraigne, I would protest als soone ag<sup>t</sup> them as any.

Then the Clerk was desyred to read some answers made to the Prelats and some Ministers objections in their declinatour and protestations against ruling elders had any voice in the sentence of excommunication.

The Moderatour answered this—The Presbitrie hes it, and they as members of the Presbitrie. Further, he said, these papers being unperfyte, and not having fully exped all that is to be answered to be the bishops declinatour and protestation ag<sup>t</sup> Elders, there is the more to be expected ; and in the meanetyme we are obleist to God that the lyke declinatour and objections wer given in be the remonstrances against the Synod of Dort ; so that we neid no uther answer to the bishops objections then these the Synod of Dort made to these remonstrances.

Then the Moderatour red the answer out of the booke of the Synod of Dort, and said, this is Judicium Theologorum magne Britanniae.

The Commissioner answered—Heir is a man by me, who desires to make answer of that which ye have red from the Synod of Dort.

Balcanquell asked libertie to speake, seeing he was not a Member of the Assembly ; pleading so farre, of the caice of the remonstrances and our bishops was different in two maine respects—therefore the same answer could not serve the bishops declinatour, which was most valide ag<sup>t</sup> the remonstrances :—first, becaus the matter of the remonstrances accusations was anent points fundamentall, such as election upon foirseene faith,—universalitie of Christs death, and co-operation of Gods Grace with our will—resistabilitie of Grace,—the finall apostacie of the saintes : in which pointes, and uthers of that nature, are all bound, under the paine of damnation, to betake them to the one syde ; and therefore the remonstrances could not justlie declyne the Church of the Low Countries in questions of that nature, though they had before that Synod, cleared themselves to the contrarie ; for if any such execeptions are of force to declyne a Nationall Assembly, of necessitie they behoved to be referred to the judgement of strangers ; but the questiones in the Church of Scotland were not anent fundamentall poynts of religion, which, by our Confession, are declared to be eternal and unchangeable, but anent matters of policie and order, which the twenty first article of our Confession shawes to be alterable. Secondly, he excepted that the Kirke of the Low Countries had not before that Synod, bund themselves by oath and subscription, against the doctrine of the remonstrances, as we in the Kirke of Scotland had done against the bishops, and the causes depending betwixt us and them.

The Moderatour said that it was a questione of great difficultie, to deeerne what pointes are fundamentall and what not ; and, if this whole Assembly were sett to it, it would take them to the morrow at this tyme. Secondly, That Synod of Dort did not pronounce these pointes contraverted betwixt them and the remonstrances to be hereticall, but only to be erroneous. Thirdly, Doctour Feild, and others, distinguishes errours in two fundamentall poynts about the foundations of these that are more remote, and preter fundamenta. In the first sort, meir ignorancie was damnable, but, in the third, obstinacie, as Doctour Feild instances Pauls eloake, what became of it, or whether Onesimus was Pauls Servand now. Now the Moderatour assumed that Dr Balcanquell would not affirme that sinne ignorancie of these pointes of Arminianisme was of the selfe damnable. Fourthlic, Our Church holds, that all the maine poyntes of her discipline ordour, were warrantable by the word of God ; and that, be God's grace, we are able to prove it to be so ; for the second article of our Confession, declaring Ceremonies to be alterable, it is to be expounded only of the circumstanees of the tyme and place.

Mr David Dalgleish addit two answers farder :— 1, Antient Counsell had proceeded, and finds themselves competent judges, even when matters of inferior degree are questioned, as in the questions of Novatus and Danatus. 2, That the Bishops wer indytit for poyntes of heresie, such as the Doctour acknowledged to be fundamentall poynts—to witt, poynts of Poperie and Arminianisme.

Then the Moderatour said—Seeing, in Gods providence, this Contestation is tymeouslie fallen in, it is fitt that this Assembly should voice, whether they find themselves competent judges to the pretendit Bishops, notwithstanding of the Declinatour and Protestation ?

The Commissioner said—I find in myselfe a great contrarietie—causes of joy, but greater causes of grieff ; causes of joy, that I am able, before God and all that heares me, to make good all the whole offeris his Majestie hes made to this Kingdome, be severall proclamations and declarations, and more also. But I have sorrow that I cannot goe on so as to bring matters in hand to such ane peaceable end as I would ; therefore, before ye proceed further, I will renew all my protestations, made in name of my Master, and Lords of Clergie, here. I will present unto yow his Majesties gracious pleasure, signed with my owne hand by his warrand.

Then the Clerk tooke and red it, and it contains a discharging of the Service Booke, Booke of Canons, High Commission ; ordaines the 5 articles of Perth to be no more urged, and gives libertie to the present Assembly to represent their judgment of these articles to the next ensuing Parliament ; and that no oath be taken of ministers but that which is insert in the Act of Parliament. It promises Generall Assemblies to be indicted als oft as shall be found expedient. It shoves that his Majestie is content that the bishops be censured be the Generall Assembly, and that he intends no change of Religion. It hath a command to subserve the Covenant and band made 1580 and repeated 1589. After the reading of it,

The Commissioner said—Now, I hope all these to all aspersions, anent change of religion, are declared to be unjust ; so, if any change of religion had bein intendit, this Assembly had never been granted, nor yet these offers made unto yow. I am entrusted with a full commision for the preservation of religion, punishing of vyce, and to consider of all the just exceptions against the Bishops and Episcopacie, and have power to rectifie all the abuses of that office, so farr as that sort of government may still remaine in the Kirk, as government not contrare to the word of God ; and anent the practice of this and other churches, I have power to limite it so, that it shall not be able to wrong the church ; and, if they wrong it, they shall be punished : yet, my commision is more ample than I will expresse. But, seeing I have not found that respect dew to ane Commissioner, and know what prejudicat opinion these here hes of me present ; and, when I consider what directions were sent from the Tables of Conveiners of Meetings at Edinburgh to presbitries, be noblemen, gentlemen, ministers, and others, it gives me just occasion to declair, that I can give no consent to any thing that is heir done ; and to cleare what I have said, I present heir two uther papers, ane sent from the Table at Edinburgh to presbitries, the uther from persons to their friends, and I desyre they may be red. I cannot designe the men who sent these papers ; but sure I am these papers are sent, dispersed through the kingdome, and that mens proceedings are according to the directions of these papers ; for there is not a Commissioner chosen but Covenanters, or, if any uther be, there is a protestation against him, or else they are chosen becaus none other could be found. I find, also, ane absolut resolution to maintaine the lawfulness of the election of ley Elders, to voit here, and the election of ministers by ley Elders, and everie thing in this Assembly going on contrare to the practice of all former tymes and positive lawes of this kingdome : Therefore, I can aeknowledge nothing to be heir done by the voit of such men. In the meane tyme, I desyre that this declaration of the Kings will, may be insert in the Bookes of the Assembly, as ane testimonie of his Majesties sinceritie in religion, and that he hath no intention of any change in Religion, and is readie to perform all that is here promised, and what further may conduce for the peace of the land, and especiallie, that Assemblies shall be indicted als oft as the affares of the Church shall requyre.

It weell beseemeth us, his Majesties Subjects, convened in this honorable Assembly, with all thankfullnes, to receive so ample a testimonie of his Majesties goodnes, and not to disesteeme of the smallest crumbes of comfort that fallis unto us of his Majesties liberalitie. With our hearts doe we aeknowledge before God, and with our mouth doe we desyre to testifie to the world, how farr we think ourselves obleist to our dread Sovereigne ; wishing that the secrete thoughts of our hearts, and the way wherein we have walked this tyme past, wer made manifest. It hath bein the glorie of the reformed Churches, and we aeompt it our glorie after a speciall maner, to give unto Kings and Christian Magistrats, what belongs unto their places ; and as we know the fifth command of the law to be a precept of the second table, so doe we acknowledge it to be the first of that kynd; and that next to pietie towards God, we are obleist unto loyaltie and obedience to our King. There is nothing due unto Kings and Princes, in matters ecclesiasticall, which, I trust, by this Assembly, shall be denyed unto our King: ffor, beside auctoritie and power in matters civil, to a Christian King belongeth, first, inspection over the affaires of the Kirk, et debet invigilare not only super ecclesiasticis sed super ecclesiastica: He watcheth not only over Kirkmen, but over Kirk matters. Secondly, The vindication of Religion doth also belong unto the King, for whom it is most proper, be his Majestie, to vindicat Religion from contempt and all abuses, he being keiper also of the first table of the law. Thirdlie, The functions, also, are in his Majesties hand, to confirme, be his royall auctoritie, the Constitutions of the Kirke, and to give them the strenth of a law. Fourth, His Majestie also hath the power of Correction: he both may and aught compell Kirkemen in the performance of their duties which God requires of them. Fifthly, The Correction, also, must be from the Prince, who hath power from God to coerce and restraine them to his terrour and auctoritie, from what beseemeth not their places and callings. Sixth, The Christian Magistrat, also, hath power to convocat Assemblies, when they find that the urgent affaires of the Kirk doe call for them: and in Assemblies when [they] are convened, his power is great, and his power aught to be heard—first, as he is a Christian, having the judgment of discretion in all matters debateable and contraverted; next, as he is King or Magistrat, he must have the judgment of his eminent place and high vocation, to discern what concernes the Spirituall weill and Salvation of his Subjects: and, third, as a Magistrat singularlie gifted with more then ordinarie, gifts of knowledge and auctoritie; and we heartlie acknowledge that your Grace, as his Majesties high Commissioner, and representing his Majesties Royall persone, hes a cheefe place in this reverend and honorable Assemblie—first, as a good Christian; next, as ye are his Majesties great Commissioner, and third, as ane endued with singular graces, and after a speciall maner, fittest for this employment. Far be it from us to deny any thing that is done to these who are in supreme auctoritie, or to such as are subordinat unto them and delegat be them. When Alex<sup>r</sup> the Great came to Jerusalem, he desyred that [an] Image might be sett up in the temple, which the Jewis modestlie refused as inconsistent with the law, which was the law of God, but libertie offered in their power, and more honourable for the King, that they would begin the reckonings of the tymes from his coming to Jerusalem, and would call all the first borne sons be his name. What is Cæsars or what is ours, let it be given to Cæsar, but [let] the God by whom Kings reigue, have his owne place and prerogative—be whose graee our King reigneth, and we pray may long and prosperouslie reigne over us.

The Commissioner said—Sir, ye have spoken as a good Christian and duetifull subject.

The Moderatour said—Indeed we take this to be a free Assembly indicted be his Majesty, and we trust that all thinges in it shall be so moderat, that the word of God and reason shall seeme to proceed in everie thing, and that we shall not goe forward ane steppe, but as a clear light shall be holden out before us; and we trust to make it evident to all men that we cannot nor darre not walke in ane uther way, and we are hopefull, that such a righteous King as ours is, needs nothing but to have a clear trueth pointed out before him, and when he sees it, he shall fall in love with it.

The Commissioner said—I am hopefull that ye will proceed so as ye are obledged by your oath of alleadgence, and I trust that all his commands shall be found to agrie with Gods commands.

The Moderatour said—It is our heartie wishe it be so; and we rander to his Majestie heartie thanks for this Assembly, and we trust that, be Gods assistance, in nothing shall we pas the bounds of a free Assembly.

My Lord Lowdoun eikit and said—As your Grace hath declaired his Majesties graecous pleasure, to the contentment of all the hearers, in condiseending to many points of the petitions of his subjects, for the which we heir rander, as the Moderatour hath said, heartie thanks; and we humblie desyre ane eopy of the Prelats paper, conteining so many criminations against us, opposing this lawfull constitut Assembly, that we may consider it and censure it, and thereafter the giving of it, according to the word of God and Constitution of this Kirke, may clear ourselves of all the imputations layd to our charge.

The Commissioner said—It hath a claus in it, as I remember, bearing registration; therefore ye may get it.

My Lord Lowdoun said—But we crave that we may have ane copie of it, with your Graces allowance, out of the Clerks hands.

The Commissioner said—I will not hinder yow to clear yourself of any imputation layd to your charge; but I will not suffer yow to goe on in censuring the prelats as I wishe I might.

My Lord Lowdoun said—We trust that all our proceedings against them shall be found frie of partialitie.

The Moderatour said—As before I asked if the bookes and Aets were the rule whereby their faults should be censured, Sir, now I ask if this Assembly finds themselves competent judges to the Prelats?

The Commissioner answered—If they proceed in the censure of their persones and offices, I must remove myselfe.

The Moderatour said—A thousand tymes I wishe the contrare; and I intreat your Grace to heare the voites of this Assembly in this matter, seeing it belongs to the Assembly to be judge of their Constitutions.

The Commissioner said—I must not wrong myselfe, and much more the great bussinesse I am entrusted with, if I should argue the question with such a learned man as yow are; but I thinke it strange, notwithstanding the exceptions, documents, protestations, and declinatours usit be me in name of my Master and Lords of the Clergie, that they can take this matter to the consideration of the Assembly. Surely it is not the Bishops but the King ye have adoc with?

The Moderatour said—I must yet ask if this Assembly finds themselves competent Judges?

The Commissioner said—I wish that question may be deferred this tyme.

The Moderatour said—It is only the fitt tyme to propone this, after the reading of the declinatour; and I am only a servand to this Assembly, and can doe nothing at myne owne hand.

The Commissioner said—I can tax your carriage in nothing you have done, as a wise and discreit Gentleman; but I see now that this Assembly hes determined to go on for all that can be said; therefore I may no longer keepe silence, but oppose myselfe unto it.

Roths said—It seemes that the Commissioners Grace hath exceptionnes against this Assembly—for two reasons—first, becaus too many ruling Elders have voice in it; to which I answer, there are no more nor are warrantit be the word of God, practice of uther Kirkes, and positive law of this Kirke; and if that any yet thinke that Elders should not have voice in this Assembly, also free as any in former tymes, let them cleare it be good reason, for we are yet readie to dispute the matter. The uther exception his Grace seemes to have against this Assembly is, that he thinkes partialitic will be used heir, and that matters are determined by us before hand, as his Grace hath laboured to cleare be his two papers that are red, which are said to come from the Tables at Edinburgh; but we deny these papers to be ours; and heir I produce the two verie true papers which came from us, which have no thing in them so absurd as is said to be.

The Commissioner said—I excepted not ag<sup>t</sup> your privat, but against your publick papers.

Roths answered—There came no papers from ws but these two be me produced; and if any uthers there be, they are only the advice of privat men to their privat friends; and if any thing be worth the challenging in these papers, let the author of them answer for it. And now we crave and humbly entreat your Grace if there be any exceptionnes against our former proceedings, that they be declared; for we are verie hopefull to justifie all we have done to the full, and that we shall be able to defend all as warrantable: for we never intendit but to proceed according to the word of God and lawes of this Church and Kingdome.

The Commissioner said—Your refusing to give voitt in this Assembly to the Kings Assessours, is enough to prove the contrare, if there were no more.

Roths answered—Their voits is contrare to the Constitutions and liberties of this Kirke, and therefore our refusing must not be taken in evil pairt.

The Commissioner said—That the Kings Majestie hath bruiked the priviledge of having assessours to voitt in Assembly these 50 yeares past, and why not in this Assembly, seeing our King hes shown such myldnes and beuignes, and hath not uttered any angrie word since I came to this Kingdome?

Roths replied—As we acknowledge that he hath beene a good and graceous King, so whatsomever is competent to be done to such a King, shall be done by us, to witt, at his willing, obedience heartily prayes and wishes that he may lang and prosperously reigne over us; and if we doe not so, let not Gods blessing be upon us. But we must so proceed as this free Assembly be not prejudged, nor the liberties of this Kirk impaired, seeing we must make answer to ane higher judge. If the privileg craved were in matters that were in our power, we would soue have yealded; but seeing they are not, I thinke we should be excused.

The Commissioner said—Seeing ye will not give to our King what was given be our predecessours, I cannot thinke ye will have that obedience ye speake of.

Roths answered—Obey we will, in everic thing dew to his Majestie, be the word of God and lawes of this Kirk, and shall be readie to thrust out of doores all such as will be utherwayes. But if that which is now craved was given in former tymes, not by a right law but by a corrupt practice, and matters were caried utherwayes in his Majesties absence then they should when many moe eorruptions, as now to be redressed, why not that amongst the rest?

The Commissioner said—It is enough for us to prove that he had Assessours.

My Lord Rothes said—Let your Grace say that he had be right, and we shall agrie to it.

Moderatour said—Thinks your Grace of these worthie and Noble Lords that sitt by yow, that this is refused out of any disobedience to our King, or disrespect to these Nobles, but from a respect to God and his Kirke, and these Commissions may verie weill agrie?

The Commissioner said—No man may thinke but our graceous King will maintaine the liberties of his Kirk in all heartie and sincere wayes as any of his predecessours, and thinke he nowayes intends to incrotche vpon the liberties of the Kirk at this tyme, but only to defend it from the oppression of overruling Elders; and yet I tax no man—for I have no charge to that end; and if I had, I thinke I have a heart to execute my Masters Command as ane other Man. But our King, intending only the maintenance of the puritie of religion in a quyet maner; and, therefore, I desyre that nothing be put in practice in this Assembly by ley Elders, which hath beene so long out of practice. If these Elders should have beene pleased that this Assembly should have beene constitut, after the late ordinar maner, and than have comed in and claimed their right to sitt and voitt here in a fair way, I thinke it would have beene grauted; for what could conduce more to further a Kings end, and strengthen his auctoritie in ane Assembly, than that a number of wyse and learned laymen should have voitt in it? But becaus he intendeth only the preservation of the puritie of religion, he cannot consent that ane Assembly should consist of such a great number of ignorant men, wanting abilitie to judge matters to be handlit heir, but desyred only that this Assembly may consist of the Churches owne pure Members, that so she may receive no prejudice heir.

Lowdoun said—I perceave the maine objection against the voiting of the Ruling Elders is yet urged, and their ignorance to judge in matters that are to be handlit heir; therefore I offer heir to dispute, that the office of a Ruling Elder is warranted by the word of God, practise of uther Kirkes, and lawes and practise of our owne Kirk, and referris the decision of the question to the Assembly as the only competent Judge. The question is already dispute heir be Doctor Balcanquell, and it is grantit from the testimony of the Synod of Dort, that Elders have voitt in matters of faith, and matters of discipline and order; and where it is objected that these Elders at the Synod of Dort were learned and judicious men, able to dispute and treat of the greatest matters in the Latiue tongue, and these heir assembled are not such for the greater pairt, I answer, it is not alwayes men of the greater place and learning who bring forth clearest light in matters that concerne religion. There are heira number of Gentlemen and burgesses of the lowest sort, trained up at schooles and colledges, taught all the ground of religion, and able to decerne trueth when it is pointed forth; therefore—seeing be the lawes and practice of this Kirke, such hath beene in use to voitt before, and we have offered to dispute the matter yet more—referring the decision of the question to this Assembly, we hope there is enough said for clearing of our power.

The Commissioner said—It is hard for me to make answer for everie speach of such a number of learned and understanding men. But, as I remember, Doctour Balcanquell said not that the Elders of the Synod of Dort had voice in matters of faith.

My Lord Lowdoun answered—It is true the Doctor made a distinctione of more and les fundamentall poyntes of faith. But that Synod did determine what was more fundamentall and what was less fundamentall poyntes of faith; and it is clearlie proven that the Elders had voit in all matters proponed their.

The Moderatour said to Doctor Balcanquell—Let the question be yet stated and agitat; for the question now in hand is not, whether the office of Ruleing Elders be warranted by the word of God—which I thinke none will deny—but the question is, whether the Elders, according to the Acts of Assembly and Customes of this Kirk, hes plaece to voice heir? And if ye, or any, will be pleased to conferre or dispute the question, we are ready for it. The Convocation House of England would not be content that any should say, “Your Church is not weill constitut;” far les can we heare it said to us; therefore we would be glad to heare what ye have to say in this question; and if the Commissioners Grace would stay, we trust he shall heare this and many uther questiones discussed.

My Lord Rothes said—The Commissioner seemes to take speciall notice of that expression which was in the Letters from Edinburgh, called the Tables; as if the Letters from these Tables did import a judicatorie; therefore I desyre to cleare it. When great numbers were conveyned in Edinburgh from the sense of evils lying in this Kirk, and wer joyning together in putting up a supplication to the Lords of Counsell, my Lord Thesaurer taxed us for such numerous Convocations, quhilk as the Convocation was out of love to Religion, which seemed to be in hazard, and therefore everie man having onie particular interest, conveyned: we answered, that such a Convocation behoved either to be, or Commissioners in their name; and your Grace desyred that when ye came to Edinburgh, that the toune might be emptied of such multitudes; and your Grace ordained that the schires should convene be their Commissioners: therefore, when the Commissioners from schyres and presbitries mett, and sett downe, what absurditie is in it, to call them so mett, “a Table,” seeing it is not called a Counsell Table, or a Judiciall Table, such as the Prelats called their Tables? If we called it a Judiciall Table, let us be hanged for it. A taylors table, sitting with his men sewing about it—so-called a Table—or a company eating at such a mans table, there is no absurditie in the speache; and we did not call ourselves “The Tables,” but uthers gave it that name.

The Commissioner said—I except not much against the name of Table; neither have I spoken any thing in passion against it, albeit I be naturalie passionat; yet I thank God there hes not much passion escaped me heir. I have no caus of passion to heare these Meetings called a Table; for there is passion enough at my heart, that I find so much power at these Tables, and so little at the Counsell Table—for it is weill knowen, your positive Counsells are more regarded nor the Kings Counsell Table. But I forbear to speake more. I could bring foorth many moc just causes and exceptions against your proceedings, but I know they will be to no end; for I feare your prejudged opinion of all that I can say.

My Lord Rothes desyred that his Grace would bring foorth any one instance wherein any had failed at that Table.

The Commissioner said—Ye know that all the ordour from them hes been readilie obeyed, but little or nothing from the Counsell Table.

My Lord Rothes said—I know neither direction nor obedience given in any thing from that Table, but according to the word of God, and lawes of this Kirk and Kingdome.

The Commissioner said—I came not heir to reeriminat, and therefore I pas it.

My Lord Rothes said—Please your Grace to heare the true directions from that Table; for, in trueth, I never heard of these given in be your Grace; and, when ours are read, we trust we shall be found to surrogat no auctoritie to ourselves.

The Moderatour said—If any good success come from these directions, it is to be imputed to God, and not to their auctoritie.

My Lord Lowdoun said—I would ask at your Grace, what are these directions from the Counsell Table, which have not gotten readie obedience from us? For I know none but such as could not be obeyed for conscience sake, and that cannot be compted disobedience.

The Commissioner said—I know that all my Masters Commands are justifiable, and such as good Christians should obey; and I thanke God for his righteous and clement heart.

My Lord Lowdoun said—We think that your Graces labours hes still turned matters to the better, and we pray it may be so still, till thir matters be at ane end.

The Moderatour said—I would ask the voits of the Tables, whether you thiuke yourselves a Nationall Assembly or not?

The Commissioner said—If I could patientlie continow, I should tell my opinion; but seeing now my loyaltie and faithfull discharge of my Commission is in hand, I must remove my persone; for my estate is not so deare to me as my reputation and fidelitie to my Master.

The Moderatour said—We only crave the renewing of your Graces former patience.

The Commissioner said—I cannot assist nor consent to any thing that is done heir, except ye adhere to that which ye have heard red, in the sealed paper; and still I protest that nothing done here may inferre his Majesties consent or myne, or yet oblidge any of his good subjects.

Rothes said—After many supplications were presented to his Grace, your Grace was employed for sattelling of matters, and we expected a happie conclusion when your Grace promised to deale for a free Assemblie; and, if any just exceptiones were against the Prelats persone or discharge of their office, it should be referred to the Assembly: And now the free Assembly is granted, and is fullie constitut. If your Grace, who is a cheafe Member of it, be protestation and deserting of it, labours to make this Assembly most unfree, it is more nor we expected. If your Grace hath any just exception against our former proceedings, or doth feare that we shall not proceed in such a just maner as becomes us, we are readie to cleare our selves. In both we shall repell, or give satisfaction, for by-gones, or for tyme to come—the law of God, and Constitution of this Kirke, shall be ane rule, as it hath beene hitherto.

The Commissioner said—I attest God, I have laboured as a good Christian, loyall subject, and kynd countryman, for the good of this Kirke, laying aside all privat considerations, as I shall answer to God; and, at my last going to Court, I said to some of my particular friends, that I should doe what in me lay for procureing a free Generall Assembly; and now a most free Generall Assembly hath beene procured and indicted: but things in it are so carried that it is like to be a most unfree Generall Assembly. For the reasons I have already expressed, glad would I be to have it urtherwayes, as there is nothing which can be proponed, keeping my self within the bounds of my Commission and fidelitie to my Master, but I shall doe it; for I desyre to [serve] God, my King, and my Countrie. But a weightie burden is layd on the back of a sillie young man overcharged with a toilsome bussinesse, and unable to bring it to such ane end as I would.

Rothes said—And the present evils, and further inconvenients like to come by your Grace rying, must be ane; and we protest that we are free of all: Therefore it must lye upon these unhappie men; they are the band of all the evils, and their source sends foorth all thir secrete suggestions and privat whisperings against Ruling Elders, is a chiefe cause of this.

The Commissioner said—But I heard these men swear that, for procureing the peace of the Land, they were content to lay downe their offices and livings, and leave this Kingdome. I grant the offer is but small, for the Prince whom they servo can make it up another way.

The Moderatour said—I wische these men were more wise then to make themselves more odious to the land, by moving your Grace to leave this Assembly; for it is evidentlie scene by all, that they are the cause of your Grace rying.

The Commissioner said—I grant the cause is be urging in of a declinatour and a protestation against lay Elders; but, truelie, they are free of this my declaration, now red in your hearing, which I desire to be insert in the bookes of the Assembly.

The Sheriff of Teviotdaile said—The paper your Grace craves to be insert, is full of grace and goodness, and the registration of that, proves the bookes to be an allowed Register, and the Assembly to be lawfull; and if your Grace hath protested against the auctoritie of these bookes, and lawfulness of this Assembly, and will leave it as unlawfull, how dissenting are these?

The Commissioner replied—Whenever I have assented, it shall stand good.

The Moderatour answered—Your Graces direction to registrat these papers in this, is ane acknowledgement that these bookes are good.

Mr David Dalgleishe said—I perceave, by your Graces speach and the Bishops paper, that they desyre to be cleared of these foule aspersiones and imputations given in lybell against them. If, then, your Grace shall leave this Assembly, it is evident that they have the wyte of it, and have no will to be cleared, but would have all their challenges and imputations lye undiscussed.

The Commissioner answered—I am sure the Bishops desyres nothing more then to have a lawfull hearing before a judge free of partialitie; but no man will submitt himself to a judge whom he thinks his partie, as they think this Assembly to be.

Mr David Dalgleishe said—If I were in their case, and judged myselfe free of such imputations, I would submitt myselfe to the meanest subject of this kingdome, let be to such an honourable Assembly.

My Lord Lowdown cikit—If they would declyne the judgment of ane nationall Assembly, I know not ane competent judgment seat for them but the King of Heaven; and, as for us, we swear we have no personall prejudice at them: but in sua far as they have wranged the Church, the King, and Countrie, we desire they may be censured for it.

The Commissioner said—I stand to the Kings prerogative as Supreme Judge over all causes, civill and ecclesiasticall, to whom I think they may appeale, and not let the causes be reasoned heir.

My Lord Argyle desired the Assembly to heare him a little before his Grace should departe, and said—I was called to this Assembly by his Majestys command; but uow, being come, I desyre to cleare myselfe, that my pairt hes bein fair in every thing that I know, neither as flatterer of the Kings Grace, nor for my own ends. I have not striven to blow the bellows; but studied to keepe matters in als soft a temper as I could: and now I desyre to make it knowne to you, that I take you all for members of a lawfull Assembly, and honest countriemen. As this Assembly consists of members civill and ecclesiastic, I wishe that care may be had that this bodie may byde together, as ye all band yourselves by the late subscryved Confession of Faith; but I desyre that nothing be done in this Assembly to the wronging of that Confession subscryved by us of his Majesties Counsell, as if I had subscryved it with a mynd different from that which all had at the first making and subscryving of that Confession.

My Lord Lowdown answered—Your Lordships protestation is very reasonable, seeing it is very scandalous that ane Confession should be subscryved be the Lords of his Majesties Couussell and Session, and ane uther be the bodie of the countrie, as if they were two different Confessions of Faith among the professours of ane religione in ane kingdome; therefore, it is earnestlie desyred of all, that the Confession of Faith be cleared, and a full explanation of all the heads and articles of it, that all may heartilie joyne in ane Religion, and duetifull obedience to our King, and that no slander goe abroad to uther nations.

The Commissioner said—What is done by warrand of auctoritie shall be cleared by the lawes of this Kirk and Kingdome, and wayes also shall be found to cleare his Majesties intention and will.

My Lord Lowdown replied—We are nothing diffident of that, neither is anything of that sort said by us to prescrive your Grace; but seeing two Confessions are subscryved of divers constructions, as humble supplicants we desyre that the Confession may be cleared, that all his Majesties subjects may be joyntlie tyed to God and the King.

The Commissioner said—I had warrand to give order for that and much more, but alace! I may not now stay.

My Lord Rothes said—It is pittifull that the Confession should not be cleared, seeing it is subscryved with three severall Constructions, and in Aberdein by some after a Popishe mauer, admitting all the ordinances of the Kirk introduced or to be introduced, and this is the Papists implicate faith; by uther with that Construction only which it had when it was first subscryved anno 1580; and a third sort with a mere abjuration of all novations introduced since that tyme: therefore it is necessar that the Confession be cleared in the Assembly.

The Commissioner said—I cannot stay now.

My Lord Rothes said—Becaus your Graces departure was surmized this morning, therefore it was found necessar by this Assembly that a protestation should be made against your Grace. But we are most unwilling for to present it, and would rather intreat your Grace to propone your scruple and exceptions against this Assemblie, that they may be cleared. If your Grace will not, but will depart, we must protest that your Grace hes departed without a just reason.

The Commissioner said—I make a declaration that nothing done heir in this Assembly shall be of any force to bind any of his Majestys subjects; and I in his Majesties name discharge this Court to sit any longer.

[The Commissioner leaves the Assembly.]

And while the Commissioner was in departing, the protestation against his departure was put in the Clerks hand and red, and Instruments tane of the protestation.

The Moderatour said—All that are heir knowes the reasons of the meeting of this Assembly; and albeit we have acknowledged the power of Christian Kings for conveying of Assemblies and their power in Assemblies, yet that may not derogate from Christs right; for he hath given divine warrants to convocate assemblies whether Magistrates consent or not: therefore, seeing we perceive men to be so zealous of their Masters commands, have we not also good reason to be zealous toward our Lord, and to maintaine the liberties and priviledges of His Kingdome? Ye all know that the work in hand hes had many difficulties, and God hes borne us through them all to this day; therefore, it becometh us not to be discouraged now by any thing that hes interveined, but rather to double our courage when we seeme to be deprived of humane auctoritie. He desired some of the brethren should speake a word of encouragement and direction to the Assembly, as God shall put in their heart for the tyme.

Mr David Dick said—Ye all understand that the great worke now in hand hes been from small beginnings; for at the first, we intendit only to exoner ourselves, and to leave a testimonie to the posteritie that we were witnesses to Christs oppressed cause. We thought the Cause desperat when we were chargit to buy the Service Bookes under the paine of hornung; yet we gave in supplications to the Conncell, desyring us to be heard against such indireet proceedings. When we knew not what to doe next, God hes led us on steppe by steppe, keeping us still within the compasse of his word and lawes of this Kingdome, for any thing that we ken; and we have only followed our cans with humble supplications to our King, and protestations against that which we could not obey; and it is evident that God hes accepted our testimonie—for his hands are about us still—for if he had not directed us, and his hand had not gnyded us, we had bene long since confounded in our witts, and could have done nothing for the compassing of this great worke, more nor young children; neither could we have continued in ane mynd till this day, if ane spirit had not told us. Seeing the Lord hes led us in a safe way to this day, he is now to crave a solemne testimonie of the Kirk of Scotland, and to ask of everie Man, who is his God? And we have clearlie presented unto us, a lesson of our fidelitie to our Lord from my Lord Commissioner. He hath stood punctuallie to the least point of his Commission. It becomes us to be als loyall to our God, seeing we are not restricted to particulars as he: Therefore, seeing this Court is granted to us of God, under our King, and with allowance of our King, and a parliament indicted to warrant all the Conclusions of it; and now he hes drawn back his granted warrant, shall we for this be disloyall to our God, and slyde from that which He hath granted? If we goe not, we shall prove traitours both to God and our King; or if we be silent, and passe from this Assembly, how shall the will of God be demonstrat to our King in pointes controverted? There is not a meane to informe our King fullie and clearlie, but the determinations of this Assemblie: Therefore we must now proceed, and so proceed as all our proceedings must answer for themselves, and, it may be seine, we have procedit as good subjects to God and our King. We must either goe on, or take upon us all the imputations of scandalous and turbulent persones, and grant that there hes been als many wronges as there had been false imputations layd out against us; and this were to sin more deeplie, and to quite these glorious priviledges which Christ hath granted to us, above all our Sister Churches, seeing there is not a meane to cleare ourselves to the Christian world but this. Let us goe on, putting over the matter upon our Lord and Master, and he shall answer for us at the Court of Heaven, and justifie us in the eyes of all that are wise.

Mr Hary Rollock was called next, who uttered a speech to the effect foresaid.

Mr Andrew Cant, and some uther of the brethren, spack likewise to the same purpose.

In the meane tyme came in My Lord Erskine, before the Assemblie, and, with teares, did regrait his so long refusall to subscrieve the Covenant, and was now most willing, with heart and hand, to subscrieve it, if the Assemblie would be pleased to accept of him: the seeing and hearing whereof caused no small matter of joy to the whole Assembly; acknowledging, with admiration, the wonderfull Providence of God—that some had deserted and gone from them, so others were sent unto them. To encourage them there were also, at that tyme, four or five uthers, some whereof had been in uther countries, in tyme past, who all did enter in ane Covenant with joy to themselves and the whole Assembly. After which, the voices of all the Assembly were craved by the Moderatour—Whether they would adhere unto their Protestation uewlie red, or continow to the end of the Assembly now discharged?

All and everie ane of the Assemblie except six or seven, declaired solemnelie, that, with all their heart, they adhered unto their Protestation, and promised to continow till this Assembly, after the settling of all matters, be dissolved be commoun consent of the Members.

The Moderatour, having renewed the question againe, Whether they found themselves lawfull and competent Judges to the pretendit Bishops and Archbishops of this Kingdome, and the Complaints given in against them and their adherents, notwithstanding of their declinatour and protestation? The whole Assemblie, except four, declared this Assemblie to be most lawfull and competent Judges to the pretendit Bishops and Archbishops of this Kingdome.

The Moderatour having called upon the name of God, this Session dismissed.

Sess. 8.—Nov<sup>r</sup> 29, 1638.

Moderatour—I must intreat yow, honourable and welbeloved, to consider yow are in the sight of God, who not only requires inward reverence, but also outward respect; because these who hath bene our old adversaries, and hath now declaired themselves to be so, hath spoken reproachfullie against this Generall Assembly, especially because of the tumultuous carriage of the Members thereof, when they speake concerning the suffrages—the voits of the Members of the Assembly. But that no such occasion may be given to them hereafter, let your carriage be grave as in the sight of God. Keep yourselves quiet; because ye ought to have your judgements exercised about the matter in hand, and elevating your mynds to God to send downe light; and, when he sends downe a good motion, ye may expresse it with gravitie, and that two or thrie speake with leive—not that I assume any thing to my selfe, but I am bold to direct yow in that, wherein I have the consent of your owne mynd.

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour uttered these words :—The Assemblie is not fullie constitut—not that I call the lawfullnes of it in question, for the authoritic of it is manifest—but let us leave nothing undone that is necessar for the constitution thereof. There are some Commissions controverted, quhilks are not yet discussed; therefore let the Committies delyver their papers, and tell their judgements.

Then the Clerk called the Committie of Peibles.

Moderatour said—Have ye found these Commissions good and valide enough?

Answer—We find no reason against it; but yet we think it good to heare any that hes any further information.

Moderatour said—If there be any Member of this Assemblie that hes any further information to give to the Committie for the Presbitric of Peibles, let them give it in to my Lord Burlie at 4 o'clock.

Then was the Committie for Brechin called on.

Mr James Bonar said—We are not able to give ane answer to the Assembly as yet, in respect we have not mett since. But if the Assembly please to give us farder tyme we shall take farder tryell.

Moderatour said—Think ye not that ane of the fyve Commissioners that are pretendit to be chosen, Mr Lawrence Kinneir, who is designit be both sydes, may voit presentlie in the Assemblie; and no question if the Assembly knew the Man, none would object against his persone, and his Commissione cannot be cantraverted, since both pairties hath chosen him?

Lowdown said—Enquyre both the pairties if they have any thing to object against him.

Carnegie was absent.

Moderatour asked Din if he had any thing to object, who Answerd—I beleive it is knawen to the Committie who tooke the oath of the Ministers concerning the declaration of the veritie of the businesse.

Moderatour—We'll heare the judgement of the Assembly.—Then he called on Mr David Dalgleishe, who approved that Mr Lawrence Kinneir should have voit. Then he called on

Mr Robert Dowglas, who said—I was upon the Committie, and I think it meit to let it lye, and let none have voiting till tyme it be better sighted; for it may be, informalitie be found on both sydes—for Carnegie being absent, it is good to let lye to see if he will compeir to-morrow: if not, consider if the uther have such insufficiencie that it cannot stand as a Commission; and if it be not insufficient, let him voit.

The Moderatour desyred ane uther of the Ministers of Carnagies Commission to stay still, becaus he was a reverend Father, and was acquainted with the Assemblies. Though his Commission was not lawfull, yet he may be a witsse to their proceedings: who answered, he should stay if the Assembly would allow of his Commission.

Moderatour said—We are not to give sentence whill the morne.

Moderatour said—In the declinatour and protestations given in by the Prelats, there were some exceptions tane against some worthie men [who] came out of the Kirk of Ireland, admitted Ministers in Scotland, and now ehosen Commissioners to this Assembly; therefore it is good the Assembly had all their myndes cleare concerning them: and after that we will not have much adoe with Mr Robert Blair, Mr John Livingstoun, Mr James Hamiltoun; for Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Turnbull he is under censure.

Mr Robert Blair said—We have our reasons to give in against the unjust proceeding of the Prelats against us in Ireland, proving their Censure to be null. If the Assembly thinke it expedient, we shall read them.

Moderatour said—Doe ye remember the words of the Declinatour concerning yourselfe?

Mr James Hamiltoun said—These are the words: “also some Ministers under the Censure of the Kirk in Ireland.”

Then the Reasons were given to the Clerk and publictly red.

Moderatour said—Take head to these Reasons that ye may object and propone in any thing wherin ye get no satisfaction.

Mr Robert Blair said—There were some that were under censure, and we were never chargin; only we heard about a year after we came away they were seeking us.

Mr David Dick said—Moderatour, I will tell some thing to cleare that, becaus I am their neighbour. Now, I heard that when they wer under proces, the bishops had respect to their not coming back againe, or if they came, it might scarr people from hearing of them.

Moderatour said—I beleive our Church is independent, and depends not on the Church of Ireland.

Mr Blair said—And there is not ane in this Assembly that adheres to the Confession and Covenant of the Kirk of Scotland, but the Prelats, both heir and there, judges them all worthie of the deepest censure that their pretendit power can inflict. It had bein small matter that some four or five of ws been carceired, were not thereby the publict caus had been woundit; for the same prelats are alreadye to charge this whole Assemblie with the same, wherewith they charge us; therefore, if there be any heir who have any thing to say, let them doe it publictly in the face of this Assemblie. If the declarations be not cleare, the Assembly may get full assurance of this.

The Moderatour said—Ye have not a mynd to bring this Assembly to a snair; but if there fall out any thing to be written against the Assembly, ye will cleare the same by writt.

Mr Blair said—We promise so to doe, and for our owne parte, we thinke all that speakes in ane Assemblie, should speake in the sight of God.

Shirreff of Teviotdail said—I thought to have gotten farder satisfaction and some information concerning your depairture out of this Kingdome, at first removed.

Moderatour said—Weill remembred; for there is something of that in the Proclamation, saying these who made Sermons against Monarchicall Government are Members of this Assembly.

Mr Blair said—I thank God that, by occasion of this and that which the worschipfull Shirreff have said, my declaration of this point is occasioned, all which of my owne accord I would gladly have motioned, were not I feared the imputation of takeing up too much tyme in this Honorable Assembly. I first take God to witness, that all the afflictions that hath befallen me from my youth, at my hand, hath beene, for aught I know, for constant adhering to the Confession of Faith of the Kirk of Scotland, since the day that Perthes Acts were determind, where I was present, and the Lord furnished me with resolutions to stand to the truth, which there I perceaved to be oppressed. And I am sorie that this declaration, if I be particular in it, will force me to expresse the names of some whom rather I would desyre to sparr. It is weill knawne, while I was a Master of the Colledge of Glasgow, there came a learued Couuntryman of myne, that had been in forraigne pairts, and promised to reduce the Colledge to conformitie to Perthes Articles; and finding me somewhat resolute to stand out, it made some little grudge in that learned mans mynd. There was addit to this ane uther in a publict theologiall dispute. It fell out that a poynt of Arminianisme in the poynt of election, where foirsein faith was mentained by that learned mans schollers, who came out of France with him, I being the opponent. What I say can be justified by a Commissioner within this house, who will be loath to utter it unles he be put to his oath, in respect of the respect that he beares to that learued man. This being the Controversie, standing out against the corrupt course of conformitie, and that in a dispute I taxed that Arminian poynt in my notes upon Aristotles Ethicks and Politicks. Heirupon I, not being called to any publict, civil, or ecclesiasticall Judicatorie; but in ane academicall or schoele meeting I was called there, and examined upon some dictats in Aristotles Ethicks, where I stood before all the Universitie, offering dispute upon all that I had taught, and for three houres dyted aff hand answers to the questions that were made, subscribed them with my hand, and offered that they should be transmitted to the Kings Majestie of blessed memorie. This being done, Mr Robert Wilkie, Rector of the Colledge, being a hearer, stood up and said, "Would to God King James himselfe were present to hear the declaration that this man hes made:" Lykewayes, Mr Rob<sup>t</sup> tooke me in his armes and thanked God that I had so far cleared myselfe. Perceiving what undermining powers were against me and the course of the tyme, I resolved to have resigned my place, whereto I was bound seven yeares: wherupon Mr Cameron, that learned man—a learned man indeed, whose name I wished altogether to have spaired—perceiving he was lyke to have lost his thanks for labouring to reduce me to conformitie, dealt with me in privat, and ingadgit himselfe that I should ryse to preferments if I would be drawn to conformitie, and that it was aue happie occasion to give up my name to the King, having declaired myselfe to their satisfaction. Ane uther poynt—the Archbishop of Glasgow was drawn on this course to examine the poynt; but perceiving how he had bein led, and that malice had caried on the course, he delyvered my papers wherein I had given my answers, and would not take them back againe, and told to a worthic man, Mr James Robertsou, that he perceived the ground of all the matter was meere malice agaiust me, and withall sent for me and requested me not to leave the Country, for I should shortlie be provydit for: And after I had goue to Ireland, he declared to my brother-German, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Blair—a grave and judicious man, knawen be the most parte of the Assembly—that he was resolved to plant me in the Kirk of Air, where God by his providence hes now brought me. This was written to me the first moneth I was in Ireland—and moreover, there was ane Letter written be the Archbishop of Glasgow to King James; and before he wrote it he send for me and said, "I fear there be some that not only carries evill will at yow but me in this matter, and least we should be both wranged, I will write ane Letter to his Majestie for our exoueration;" and thene he wrote ane letter, and there was an answer returned to me by my Lord Alexander, Earle of Stirlings sone, resolving me that the King was more nor satisfied; and so there was no cryme layd against me, but that I proponed some question out of Aristotles Ethicks; swa there was never any judicall proces, let be ane sentence against me: only there was ane academick meeting, and becaus I wearied of philosophie and demitted my place.

The Moderatour said—Then it is unjustlie said by same, that being censured, yow are put out of the Colledge.

Then Mr George Young and Mr Robert Baillie and Mr Zacharie Boyd declared that he had related the matter truelie.

Mr John Adamsone said—There is ane generall accusation against them as is against the whole Assembly; and so they are but scandalls.

Moderatour—They scandall us for having laick Elders, and we shall make it manifest be the word of God, that we should have them. Then the Moderatour ealled on sundrie members of the Assembly—Mr Robert Wilkie, Mr James Bruce, Mr Andrew Ramsay; Nobles—Johnstoun, Lowdown, Cranstoun, who answered they were all satisfied.

The Moderatour said—Altho' the prelats accusation be generall, yet for stopping of the mouth of malicious persons, we will stryve to answer any particular that we can perceave they ayme. Ye remember that there are some genccrall thiuges in the declinatour concerning some ministers uuder censure and not, were stryving to find out who they could meane, bethought they be not named; and we find that there were some under the censure of the High Commission: Mr David yow are one.

Mr David Dick said—I was admitted Minister of Irwing before Perth Assembly six months; and having understood that Perth Articles were given out, I fell to and studied the cause as I should answer to God; and being under sickness for the tyme, I held me quyete the space of two yeares and heard all men and [carried] not myselfe hither aud yond: and last, when I saw it lyke my life should not have been long, I saw it necessar to give my testimonie to that trueth that I thought was borne downe. The Bishop got notice that I spake frielie, and yet in such modest termes as they would not have gotten me in the calk; for within three or four yeares after my entrie, was summondit before the High Commission. I compeired; and becaus it was the first day of the Bishops their new rooffe—having gotten the greene wax from Court—that is, that day they were made sole bishops as they were not before—I tooke course, after the incalling of the name of God, to doe as became a faithfull member of the Church of Scotland, to mell with what belonged to my calling, I drew to a declinatour of that Judicatorie, because I was inhibited be act of Parliament. When I red my summons, I looked wher they should have said, "James, be the Grace of God, King of Great Britaine," and I found that they said, "James, be the mercie of God," &c., "and John, be the mercie of God, Bishop of Glasgow," which I made a reason of my declinatour, and offered to be judged by the first General Assembly; and this declinatour they turned to be my quarrell: which day I was appointed to waired; and least I should be mistane, albeit I acknowledged not their sentence, I removed from Irwing, in regard to the Kings auctoritie, to Turray, where I was three quarters of a year. After, I was, by the diligence of my Lord Eglintoun and the toune of Irwing, by my knowledge, brought to Glasgow, where Cameron tooke in hand to couvert me or to put my heid in the perrill; and after I had talked with the Bishop, I obtained this honour that he should not make conformitie the matter of my challenge, but wherein I had done wrang to auctoritie I would cleare it. And my Lord Eglintoun, Mr John Bell, and Mr Robert Scott, who is now dead, was present when I cleared myselve, to have done no wrang to auctoritie by my deeliuatur. After this the Bishop of Glasgow gave ane warrand to my Lord Eglintoun, under his hand write, to send for me to keip for my exoneration. I took Instruments of my hand, coming to Irwing: heir the act and the letter of the Bishop, which I desyre the Clerk to read.

The Moderatour said—I hope the brethren hes gotten satisfaction.

The Moderatour called on Mr Samuel Rutherford and said to him—Were you not sent to Aberdeine by the High Commission?

Mr Samuel sayes—Most true. I was sent in and summonsed be the High Commission for divers pointes the Bishop of Galloway lybelled against me, and there was nothiug at all proven against me, notwithstanding three severall dayes I was before them; and the third day they had no uther question to propone but these wherewith they attempted me the first two dayes—only the matter of none conformitie which I stand by; and upon this they sentenced me, after I declared, by write, the unlawfulness of that seat, and that I durst not be answerable to the King to acknowledge that Judicatorie, because it was against the standing law of the Kingdome. Notwithstanding of this, they proceeded against me, deprived me of my ministrie in Anweh, and confined me in Aberdeine. I watched on in Edinburgh, desyring the Clerk to give me ane extract of the sentence, but could not get it, and the reason why he schifit me was, becaus the Bishop of Galloway caused him adde a pointe to my sentence that I was not sentenced for—to witt, that I should exercise no ministeriall functione within the Kings dominious. The Clerk denyed it was a pointe of my sentence; notwithstanding, the Bishop of Galloway caused adde that pointe, and I could never have the extract of it, onlie I got the Copie of it, and so I went in without a charge; and, hearing that the Secrete Counsell had accepted a deelinatur against the High Commission, I came out without a charge.

Clerk sayes—By Act of Parliament, all the Kings leidges are discharged to give obedience to any judicatorie, but that which is established by Act of Parliament and lawes of the Kingdome; therefore ye ought to be condignlie censured for entering into waird.

The Moderatour said—Earlstoun, yow have beine lykewayes under their Censure; who answered—I was confined in Wigtoun under the High Commission, where I gave ane appellation to the Counsell which Lorne can declair.

Argyle said—Indeed I remember weill of the Decreit past against Earlstoun when I was in England, and, when I came home, it was the day before Earlstoun was appointed to goe to waird. I desyred earnestlie that he might not be confyned but fyned; and so the pretendit Bishops did, which is not overseene in their dittay. There was a decreit given out from the High Commission upon no warrand but his none compeirance, as if he had bein present in foro contentissimo. The Bishops went on as if he had compeired, and decreitit all that was libellit, as if it had been proven; and the Bishop eikit, at his owne hand, “because Earlstoun presumed to protest.” Upon this I found it was a litle informall, and desyred Earlstoun to forme ane bill and give in to the Counsell. When the bill was given in, I dealt with the Bishop of Galloway, to see if he would keep it from a publict hearing, and he was satisfied, but afterwards he was not so willing. I insisted and solicitat the Counsell that they should be content to dispense with the confynement, upon the payment of his fyne, which they were content with.

Moderatour said—I beleive verilie that these to whose cares the voice of the speakers hes come, be satisfied with that which hath bein said. If any be not yet satisfied, or hes any point or circumstance to show that they have heard objected against thir worthie Men, let them bring foorth.—Since there is nothing to say, let us goe on.

Although we doe not match or equal the Confession of Faith of any reformed Kirk with the word of God; altho’ we doe not make it formam fidei sed formam confessionis; yet we have great reason to think reverentlie of our owne Confession; becaus uthers, who have bein Strangers, give a great testimonie to it. That it may be the better thought of, it is expedient that we have a cleare understanding of the particular arteies therein contained, espeeciallie these that are controverted. Ye know what a bussines hes bein about the subscriptions of the Confession of Faith—some subscriyving it with some interpretation of it, or application to the Scrvice Bookes and Cannons, and uthers subscriyving that of late tryed by his Majestie, and the short Confession of Faith, with the generall band nakedlie, without any siek application or interpretation, subscriyvit be the Counsell. We are to think advisedlie to it as of great importance, and hope we shall heare somewhat to give us light to encouradge us to goe forward in the interpretation thereof, that that light we have may shine to uthers.

Argyle said—I should be glad that all that are heir might heare me to the full; and least I should be mistaken of what I said yesterday, I would gladdie let it be heard to this company, I intendit that two thinges should have beene knowne before we parted in the termes we did. The first was, onlie to take the Commissioner and States to witnes on the one parte, that what had beene my parte in all this bussines was neither flatterie nor seeking my owne ends; that, upon the uther pairt, it ought to be knowne that I was never a desyrer of any to doe anything that might wrang soveraine auctoritie, but studied to keepe thinges in the fairest order I could. The second thing was truelie, I heard some dispute was like to grow by somewhat that was spoken be Doctor Balcanquell concerning the Constitution of this Church; and, although it was incumbent to me to beware that that dispute should not grow dangerous—that when a whole Kingdome was entered in a nationall oath, the Assembly might not enter in any dispute, nor go in any thing that might prejudice any thing that by their owne knowledge and consent had been done; I say it was incumbent to me to beare witnes that nothing should be done prejudiciall to that voit; not that I thought that I desyred it should not be tane to consideratione what it were, becaus some hes done it doubt-somlie—uthers hes referred it to the Generall Assemblie—uthers, not out of any dislike to religion, subscrivit it as the meaning of it was when it was first sett downe, which I now adhere unto, and declaires, that in the publict way that we did it, it was as it was then profest, without any sophistication or equivocatione whatsoever, and I heare of no uther interpretation; and that I adhere to againe and againe, and desyres that any thing of that kynd be done wiselie, and be so looked to, that a whole kingdome run not themselves to a nationall perjurie. And if I have beine anything intricat, I cleare my-selfe, and make it knowne unto the world that I adhere unto the meaning of that Covenant as it was first subscriv'd, againe and againe, shortlic wisheing this nobile and worthie meiting to go on wyselie, considering the goodnes of our gracious Master, who hath condescendit to many things, and gone further on nor many looked for; and what is wanting I hope it is misinformation. And for the Commissioners cariage, it hath beene very modest; and therefore I recommend to you to consider that ye have both the estate of the countrie and the estate of religion in hand, and according to your discreit cariage will this glorious worke be done: and doe it in that respect to your graceous Sovereigne as becomes obedient Subjects.

Then the Earle of Montrois said—My Lord Wigtown was to come heare with my Lord Argyle to make his owne declaration, and will be heir on Tuysday to declair himself to the Assembly as my Lord Argyle hes done, and will give all satisfaction.

Then the Moderatour spacke to the Assembly—My Lord Argyle desyres yow to know that his Lordship hes put his hand to the Confession of Faith, and uthers of His Majesties Counsell, with this express declaration, that they have subscribed according to the meaning of it when it was first sett downe, and willes the Assemblie to proceed consideratlie concerning that, lest they doe any thing to bring any man that hes subscriv'd it under the suspition of that they cannot tell what; and Wigtowne hes declared by Montrois that he could not stay to day to make the same declaration, but will returne the next week for that effect; therefore since we have this recommended to us after this manner, and the matter requyres the same, it is good for us to proceed advysedlie and consideratlie, as that which will have light to any menes myndes—I mean when we come to declair what was the meaning of the Confession of Faith when it was first subscribed—what was abjured therein in doctrine, discipline, worship, or government—so as it may give all satisfaction to all men; and I trust this grave Assembly will give their declaration from good reasons and weil groundit, for it is a material poynte.

Then the Moderatour, in name of the Assembly, desyred Argyle to stay in the towne and be a witness to their proceedings, though he was not a Commissioner.

Argyle said—My interest in religion, as I am a Christian, though not a member of this Assembly, yet in the Collective bodie of the Kirk, induces me thereto.

The Moderatour said—This is a material poynt, and it would take up a lang tyme to heare all the acts concerning the clearing of the Confession of Faith; therefore I thinke it good, if the Assembly be pleased with it, to appoynt a Committie to view the bookes therefore, that they may advyse about thinges and make them ryper to the Assembly: for next unto the word of God, this Confession, so solemnlie sworn, should goe deepest in our myndes.

Lowdown said—It must be the rule of all our proceedings, and the ground of all our comfort, when we are put to farther tryells; therefore it would be verie deeplie considerit, and some judicious men named upon the Committie.

Auldbar said—There is some in the North that hes a thir'd Covenant.

Moderatour said—We are not oblist to expone that.

The names of the Committie:

Mr David Lindsay, Mr Andrew Cant,

Mr James Martine, Mr Harie Rollock,
Mr Thomas Mitchell, Mr David Dick,
Mr Walter Balcanquell, Mr Robert Hendersone,
Mr Thomas Wilkie.

Roths, Lowdown, Balmerino, Burley.

Barons—

Auldbar, Keir, Shirreff of Teviotdaile.

Burgesses—

James Cochrane, Patrick Bell provest of Glasgow,
James Fletcher provest of Dundie.

Montgomerie said—Moderatour, we desyre our Summonds and Claime against the pretendit Archbishops and Bishops be red.

The Moderatour said—Ye know the Prelats wer summonsd in the best way could be thought upon; and now, since the Assemblie is constitut, and hath discuss'd all objections that can be imagin'd against us, let us heare what is said against one of the Bishops, and remove the rest to be looked on by these that have the charge of the Billes. We need not spend tyme in reading the generall Complaint against the Bishops; but here is a particular, condescending upon some things which will cleare the generall. This is against the Bishop of Galloway.

There was a lang Clame red, containing fifteen or sixtein scheits of paper, against the pretendit Bishop of Galloway: Then he was called upon by the Officer of the Assembly, James Bell.

The Moderatour said—This is a great bussines we are enter'd upon, and we may perceave, by the reading of the Clame, what will be said against all the rest; and becaus it will trouble the Assembly, let them be first view'd by a Committee delegat by the Assembly for that effect, who may give accompt to the Assembly.

The names of the Committee—

Mr John Jamiesone, for the Diocie of Glasgow,
Mr W<sup>m</sup> Dalgleishe, for Galloway,
Mr Donald McElwrath, for Argyle,
Mr John Duncane, for Dumblane,
Mr George Symer, for Dunkell,
Mr Robert Murray, for S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes,
Mr George Halyburton, for Brechin,
Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Martine, for Aberdcene,
Mr W<sup>m</sup> Falconer, for Murray,
Mr David Monro, for Ross,
Mr George Leslie, for Cathnes,
Mr W<sup>m</sup> Stewart, for Orkney,

Nobles—

Eglintoun, Wcymes, Johnstoun, Wedderburn, Lawers, Kinliet,

Provest of Kinghorne, Baillie of Invernes,
Mr George Gray clerk of Dundie, [Haddington.]

To thir wer addit—

Mr John M<sup>c</sup>Kenzie, of Lewis, and George Gordoun, brother to Sutherland.

When the Clerk called on Doctor Robert Hamilton, Procurator for the Bishops, to answer to any thing he can say to the Summonds and Complaints given in against them, he compeired not.

The Moderatour said—Ye know I was saying that the first occasion of our Complaints and Supplications were the Servic Booke, and these Canons that were urg'd upon us. Ye know how miserable the face of this Church and State had bein before this tyme, if we had not supplicated against these evils, and what great mercie the Lord our God wham we sarve hes shawen in delyvering ws so farr from them ; yet that it may be knawen to the world that our supplications wer just, and that there may be some monument of the wickednes of that Booke left to the generation following, it is very expedient that it be examined heir, that your judgments may be knawen and the reason of your judgements ; and that we may goe on the more compendiouslie, it will be good that there be a Committee chosen also for this. Then the advyce of some of the Members of Assembly wer taken, who all gave consent to this.

The names of the Committie—

Mr Andrew Ramsay,	Mr John Adamsonsone,
Mr Robert Baillie,	Mr Edward Wright,

The Moderatour said—The Booke of Cannons, Service Booke of Ordination, and High Commission, all of them are to be sighted by yow.

Sess. 9.—Nov<sup>r</sup> 30, 1638.

After prayer to God by the Moderatour,

The Moderatour uttered these words—We trust in God, that the more our good cause hath bein defending, and for which we are now conveyed, is agitat, it shall be the more clearlie seen, and the more to be seen the more it shall be affected, and these that shall see the excellent lusture that shall be on it, shall, no doubt, be enamoured with it.

Argyle said—I have gotten a paper which I never saw before. It is from the Earle of Kiughorne, and, becaus it is a missive direct to me, I shall read it, and desyres it may be kepted by the Clerk.

Roths said—Heir is ane uther of that same nature from my Lord Galloway. Lowdown, Yester, Home, went to him, and he spack something before, and we caused put it in writt and sent to him, and he renewed it ; quherein his Lordship declaired that he had subscribed the Confession of Faith, as it was professed in the year 1581, and wishes all the Assembly to make it the rule of all their proceedings ; and he shawes that they were all wyld in, secretlie, to the Commissioners Chamber, and, being debarrit, they subscriyvit the proclamation, not knowing what was in it ; but, when Galloway heard it, he would have had his hand from it, and, when he saw that he could not get it back, he was so excessively greeved that he professed he got no sleepe all that night.

Then the Earle of Montrois said—That the Earle of Mar had given him Commission to declair to the Assembly, that he had the same meaning in the subscriyving of the Confession of Faith ; and, quhen tyme was fitt, he would declair it before all the world. Lykewise said the Earle of Mar, he being hardlie pressed to subscriyve the proclamation, he refused, and said, he would not declair his Sone a Traitour, who yester night had subscriyved the Covenant, and professed to the Marqueis and these who pressed him, that, as long as his blood was hote, he would think Covenanters als honest Men as themselves. Likewise, Montrois said—That he had Commission from my Lord Napier, to declair to the Assembly, that he had the same meaning in subscriyving the Schort Confession, as it was first sett doune. Montrois said, further, my Lord Amont would declair the same before the Assembly.

The Moderatour said—Though we had not a

Nobleman to assist us, our cause were not the worse nor the weiker ; but there is occasion given us to blesse God that they are comeing in daylie in throngs.

Then the Moderatour called on the Committie for Peibles.

My Lord Burlie answered—Since this charge was layd upon us, to collation the Commission and protestation with the Proces, we find no great reason why the election shall not stand good ; and for Mr Robert Elliot, we find, in the last article of the proces, that he did clearlie protest, and that upon good reasons. Ane was, that this honourable judicatorie should no wayes be prejudged in the friedome thereof, in case there were any illegalitie or informality in the election, and that no place of carping were left to our adversaries ; the next was, he had some scruples in his mynd anent the illegalitie thereof, of which, after conference, he gat satisfaction, and is content now to take up his proces ; and quhereas my Lord Thesaurer was pleased to take some offence at this protestation, and he did it now de animo, he is sorie for it, and, if his Lordship were heir present, he would crave his Lordships pardon.

Mr Mathew Brisbane said—I think it should be tane notice of, that my Lord Thesaurer was present at the election, and did approve the Ruling Elders, and came there as ane himselfe, and, in the face of the Assemblie, pleaded for the Commission.

Then the Moderatour called on the Committie for Brechin, who promised to make report to the Assembly to-morrow.

Moderatour said—There were, in your hearing, some Committies appoynted for some materiall poyntes ; for considering the Confession of Faith ; the Complaint ag<sup>t</sup> the Prelats ; the Service booke ; the booke of Cannons ; High Commission, and Booke of Ordination ; but it is impossible to examine thir in so short a tyme, and therefore we passe them.

Lowdown said—Please yow Moderatour, we began to looke upon that purpose, being a matter of great importance, and deserved an accurat investigation of thinges that did passe, especeallie, not about the Confession of Faith, which was first made and subscriyved at that tyme. We went back, in looking to these registers and Bookes of Assemblies quherein we find the discipline of the Kirk accurately expressed, so that I thinke, if, in Gods Providence, these Bookes had not bein found, it had bein hard for the Church of Scotland ; because it is about matters as they wer then presentlie established and concludit. The seeking out of this and the looking over of many Acts, tooke a long tyme ; but, on all, we find a great harmonie and cohesione, clearlie set doune, to put out Popperie and Episcopacie. The name is examined ; the Corruptions is examined ; the office is examined ; and their severall considerations tane to many Assemblies. The Discipline, of long deliberation, is sett doune. The Confession of Faith following, is a confirmation both upon the ane and the uther ; and the ground of thir hes bein the root of many of our proceedings through this Kingdome, especeallie the renewing of the Confession of the same oath first [framed], which I hope will give satisfaction to all men who could not weill understand it before, when they shall take knowledge of thir bookes. We dar not now give out our judgement fullie ; but we will goe on in consideration, to satisfie yow all, and we crave your patience to acquyet yourselves in it. It must have long tyme ; for matters of so great importance cannot be done but accuratelie, for every mans satisfaction.

The Moderatour said—It were better not to touch it at all then not to handle it accuratlie and solidlie; yet we allow not the Committies for determination of any thing, but only to prepair matters for the Assembly their judgement, and if need be, tyme may be prorogat further to them.

Lowdown said—God, the Father of light, give light unto it, for it must be the rule of all our proceedings.

The names of the Committie for the Prelats called upon for their Complaints.

Mr Robert Murray said—That the Complaint against every particular Prelat behoved to be tryed, and therefore desyred the Moderatour to intimat to the Assembly, and, if any had information against any particular Dioeesian Prelat, that they would give it in to the Committie.

Then the Committie for the Billes were called on.

Mr David Lindsay answered—We have discussed some particular Billes that came before us, and we conceave this; that where the caus is weightie and the proces red, we think it good that Summonds be directed both for the Pairties and witnesses. There be uthers against whom there is no formall proces, and it will be weill done to heare the judgement of the Assembly anent these.

Moderatour said—There be two sortes of processes: one sort are these which are closed alreadie before the particular Judicatories; I meane the Presbitries from whence the Pairtie are complained upon, who have heard the witnesses and set downe their deposition; and nothing left to the Assembly but to pronounce their Sentence. These may come in pertinentlie before the Assemblie. But for uther proceses that are not concludit, and witnesses not heard, but to be heard, before the Assembly consider whether it be more expedient to send citations to the Pairtie and witnesses to compeir before the Assembly, or if they shall be remitted to their Presbitries, or the next adjacent Presbitrie, as having Commission from the Generall Assembly to put a finall conclusion to them, and report it to the next Generall Assembly.

The question was moved concerning Doctor Hamiltons proces, whether it should be heir agitat or remitted to the Presbitrie, in respect that the Presbitrie had refused proces alreadie, and it was reported that he would goe shortlie out of the Countrie? And therefore it was concludit to be decydit by the Assembly.

The Moderatour said—Lett us come to the third Committee concerning the Service Bookes, Cannons, and High Commission.

Mr Androw Ramsay answered—It is a toylesome taske—a Papall Service Booke, anti-Christian constitutions, and a superstitious Booke of ordinations—and will take us eight dayes at the least.

Moderatour said—Ye would consider that ye are not to dispute against ane adversarie, but to make such abridgement of the errours therein contained, as may be seine to such a grave Assembly.

[Complaints against Prelates.]

Moderatour said—Ye know there be some Complaints against the Prelats, common against them all—some of them more personall against Pointes of Doctrine and Conversation: As, for example, there is a transgression of these Caveats, and limitations put upon them by the Generall Assemblie when they wer first admitted to voit in parliament. Matters of this kind will be so notour as the Assembly at the reading of the processes, that we will not need great probation; and therefore the Commit-ties neids not to trouble themselves but in poyntes of doctrine.

Then were the Caveats red.

The Moderatour said—I would wish that uther some of them or all of them had been heir to answer for themselves, and some of them objected, and specialie Doctor Lindsay, that these Caveats were put upon them, but Assemblies had lowsed them. The Bishop of Sanct Androwes, in a Booke which he calls "The Refutation of a litle booke anent the Government of the Kirk of Scotland," giving ane answer to that that is against their booke of the Caveats: he says they never had a purpose to keip them, but only to delyver them from the contentions of turbulent men. This is not red that ye should give out definit sentence till the whole complaint be considered by these to whose consideration it is presented; but there may be an abridgement of the Caveats, and particular transgressions of them drawn up.

The Shirreff of Teviotdaile [said]—That these transgressions, many of them be notour to us, yet not to strangers, to whom the relation of our proceedings shall come; therefore it is necessar all to be proven.

Moderatour said—It is objected be these that wrote that litle booke of the Government of the Kirk of Scotland, which was sent over to Holland at what tyme the Synod of Dort was sitting, for weightie Causes and considerations, to prevent evils that might have come in in the Kirk of God: It is said in that booke, that when they went forward, there was protestations used against them. He answered, what protestation they meanced I cannot tell, but for that Covenant wherein they please themselves so much, it was rashly and unadvisedly forged by braine-sicke men, to the destruction of the King and republict, and to the mocking of God; therefore God hes recompensed them with shame and ane unhappie success of all their interpryses.

Then answered ane Mr Law—That he saw him subsryve that Covenant that he had so traduced. Then some said that things alleadged against the Prelats which seemed most evident neided not to be proven.

Moderatour said—Abundantia juris non nocet; and it is necessar when a nation or Kirk would make it manifest to the world the lawfulness of their proceedings, though it were never so notour to themselves.

Moderatour said—We have not farder to doe till the Committies have tane paines and presented their labours to the Assembly. For the present ye see they are relaxed from that limitation in the Assembly holden at Linlithgow 1606 and 1608, and at Glasgow 1610. There are something heir in a paper given in to be considered by the Assembly, concerning these forsaid Assemblies, together with the Assemblies at Aberdeine 1616, at S<sup>t</sup> Androwes 1617, at Perth 1618. These are the speceall Assemblies they trust into, and these are the Assemblies that hes wrought this Kirk meikle woe. It is not unfit for yow to heare them in the minutes of the proceedings in the Assembly 1616. The Bishop of S<sup>t</sup> Androwes changed the Acts with his awne hand on the margine, deleiting and adding acts quhercof some wer against Papists. The hand writt was seene by severall of the Assembly, who constantlie affirmed, on hazard on their life, that it was his hand. Some declaired that when the Bishop of Murray said to ane uther of the bishops, "we will tyne the field," he answered, "I shall devyce a vyce—we shall give idle Ministers ane warrant;" and so they sent for the number of 36, that were not Commissioners, and delt w<sup>t</sup> them for their voices; and they put out Commissioners whom they suspected and put others in their places, and sundrie that were Commissioners were not called on, and the Moderatour said in face of the Assemblie, "I will committ twenty prejudices to please the King."

Mr David Dalgleishe said—There was neither booke nor Bible opened; but the Kings Letter was read at everie Sessioun immediatlie before the voiting; and in the tyme of the voiting, Waughtoun said they sett doune the names of some who came away from that Assembly, quhereof I was one.

Mr James Bonar said—He called on all these first that he knew would voite with them, for he had a croce upon all their names, and lykewayes he said that a number of voites should not doe the turne, for these articles should be proclaimed at the Croce by sound of trumpet.

Mr James Cunninghame said—When I desyred Zancheus to be produced for a testimonie, all the Bishops said the King was more learned than ten thousand Zancheus; and he threatened continually with banishment, imprisonment, and deprivation; and they put all their names together whom they knew would voite for them, and resolved to gar them goe all in a hurle together, quhilk they did quhill Mr John Martine turned the chase, and this they did to weaken the hands of many.

The Moderatour said—There would be a Committie appointed for the considering of these Assemblants, for it is a poynt of no small importance.

The names of the Committie—

Earle of Home, Lords Sinclair, Yester, Balmerino, Compar, Cranstoun.

Sessio 10.—Primo Decembris 1638.

After prayer, the Moderatour said—Ye know a great pairte of these affaires to be agitat this day, was committed to some worthie men upon a Committie, to be presented to your view—such as the Confession of Faith, the Complaint against the Preiats, the matters of the Service Booke, the auctoritie, or null auctoritie of the Assemblies; and we tooke this little tyme to heare some particular complaints against some ministers, especiallie these who have their proces closed already, in a manner, and nothing left but the sentence and determination of the Assembly; for they must be viewed by you. We should do nothing without a warrant; and I doubt not but ye are better acquainted with the warrant and ground of our proceedings nor I can expresse. Ye knowe there is no familie, nor hous, nor republik—no eitie, no kingdome, or corporation—nor any humane societie, that can subsist without order; and, in the midst of the world, where the Divell is opposing, and corruption mightilie working, we may be assured that the integritie of the Word of God cannot stand without Government and ecciesiasticall discipline. Our Lord gives it the name of the Keyes of the kingdome of Heaven—a glorious name, indeed; and the Apostle, 1. Cor. 5., calls it a power committed to the Kirk, not for destruction, but for edification. In the nature of it, it is not so much magisteriall as ministeriall power; and, though the power be great it is principally in his hand who is Lord and Maste of the house—the Son of God, who hes absolute power; and we are but his ministers and servants. Ye know it is requyred in a servand, and especiallie in a steward, (and we are called stewards and dispensatoures of the misteries of God,) that they be found faithfull. We must stryve to approve our selves in the Masters sight, who is sett over the house. The power committed to us is very great, if we consider the effects of it. Mathew, eh. 18. the effects of it are set doune. If we proceed in sentenceing of a man, especiallie if we goe on that far as to excommunicat him, he against whom the sentence is prononnet, is counted a publican; or, if ye looke the Apostles word—more: he is given over to the hands of the Divell: he is put out of the Kirk; and, although it be horrible to think on such a thing, yet the fruites of it are sweet—for God heirby is glorified; for surelie, in despyte of the world and the Divell, he will be sanctified of these that drawes neare him. The terrible example of Nadab and Abihu is a suffieient document of this. Ye know the Word and the Sacraments are holy and sufficient meanes to convey grace. They should be purged of inventions that men hes put upon them; and sicklyke that Gods house should be purged of scandall and leaven, and these also against whom the sentence passes, if they be not in a damnable caise and incorrigible, it serves for the subdueing of the fleshe and wakening of the spirit—if there be any such distinction to be made between the fleshe and spirit. This is the last and most extreame remedieto subdue the fleshe and waken the spirit. So it is necessar, that we now assembled in Christs name, so solemnlie and so weil warranted, goe on with auctoritie; for, though we be weake and unworthie instruments, we must consider what keyes he put in our hands, that hes the keyes of the house of David, that shutts and no man opens, that opens and no man shutts. I may give you assurance, in the name of our Lord, that if we goe on as we are warrantit by Him, without partialitie and respect to men, but having respect to the honour of God and weifair of this Kirk—if we goe on with sentence and excommunication, that which we doe on earth he shall ratifie in Heaven, and we shall be all witnesses that he shall ratifie the same. If there be any of the particular Complaints that are to be given in, let them be presented heir, to be red be the Clerk.

Mr David Lindsay said—We have met, and thir processes which are dedueit and concludit we have sent the formalitie; and such as we produce heir, according to our judgment, are of weightie causes, and formerlie dedueed. Others complaints are considerit by us, and we have advysed and tane this course, only to advyse them before what judicatorie they shall not intend proces; and if the Presbitries where they dwell be competent judicatories, let them goe to them; and if not, let uther Presbitries be joyned to them. Heir is ane proces against Mr David Mitchell.

[Case of Mr David Mitchell.]

Moderatour said—We should have heard truelie with regrait of their persons—yea with joy when we see the Lord putting to his hand to purge his awne house.

Then was the proces red against Mr David Mitchell.

Then Mr Henry Rollock said—It may be thought that he should now have spoken more of that kynd; but truelie, till the last day of his suspension, he was bussie therein; and some pointes of doctrine came to our knowledge after the proces was closed—namely, that it was ane abasement for kings to be subject to the Word of God; and when he wrote to us, he carried so much neglect to us, that he called us not brethren of the Presbitrie, but brethren of the Exercise of the said judicatorie—alluding it was nomine tenus non re. Lykewise he hes declyned the Assembly; but, indeed, it wer a pittie of him, for utherwayes he hes good partes.

Rothes said—Bellerminc had good partes; but he would be ane evill Minister for the Kirk of Scotland.

The Moderatour said—There are two sortes of Arminianisme. One is that which hes troubled the Low Countries, and hath spred itselfe so farr, and that is nothing but the way to Socinianisme, and Socinianismus inchoatus is Arminianismus consociatus. Certainlie no man that will consider aright of the poyntes of Arminianisme, but he will see more uor the seids and grossnesse of Socinianisme. There is ane uther Arminianisme mentioned by some in England, and uthers in Scotland, and that runs in aue uther way—it runs to Papistrie, and is inchoatus Papismus; and if ye consider this, how our doctriue, and the particulars of our Confession of Faith, taught by the Ministers of the Kirk of Scotlaud since the Reformation, how thir pointes began to be depraved by Arminianisme, and poyntes of Poperie, joyned with their poyntes of Arminianisme, and next consider how that the externall worship of God was in changeing by the Service Booke, I see nothing deficient for the whole bodie of Poperie but the Pope himselfe—Conversion of a Sinner—universalitie of the matters of Christs death—justification by workes—falling away of the saints; and then, if we had receaved the Service Booke, what difference had bene 'twixt the Roman faith and ours, if we had subjected ourselves to the Pope? I say it, that we may ackuowledge the goodnes of God that hes thought good to visite us thus with so sensible an opportunitie, that if we had gone on, our case had bein so desperat and miserable, that none of us can conceave: but great is the Lords mercie; and we have all of us reason to make good use of this good occasion, quherin sick evils may be prevented in tyme. We heard the proces, and we desyre not to proceed to the sentence this day; but we will heare the judgement of the brethren.

Then was Mr David Mitchell called upon.

The Moderatour said—We have to consider that this Kirk hes not been acquainted with Censures of that kind, blessed be God! Howsoever, there hes bein a great and lamentable schisme in this Kirk these many yeares, yet few poyntes of heresie could be objected against any of this Church who were verie free of it before; therefore no marvell is that we Ministers and Elders be not so throughlie acquainted with their differences as utherwayes we would have bein: but since the matter is gone so farr on, and corruptions are vented so braid and wyde in this land, it were meet we were acquainted with them that we may discern betwixt truth and errour, light and darknes; and if it seeme convenient to the Assembly, it is good that some Miinisters that are best able make some discourse of this matter, especiallie to shaw what we hold with the reformed Kirkes, which hath bene so publictly contradicted by thir preachours, and how their tenets contradicts our tenets as the reformed Kirkes. I know there is ane uther proces against some uthers in Schooles of Divinitie that hes the same poyntes, and uthers preachours lykewayes, and it would seeme to have bene done of purpose, and that they are all joyned in ane combination together for venting such poyntes of doctrine; for there is come doune some poyntes from England, which were holdin to be the tenets of a great learned man, and thir preachers seemes to be his schollers.

Then said the Moderatour—Let us heare some moc two or thrie Billes.

Then there was red against Doctor Panter, Master of the New Colledge of S<sup>t</sup> Androwes, containing many erroneus and Papisticall poyntes of doctrine.

Then there was read a proces against Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Gledstanes, Minister of S<sup>t</sup> Audrowes.

Then the Committie for Din and Carnaigies Commission was called.

Mr James Bonar said—If we find that if the last election had not intervencen, the first had bene good; and if the first had not proceedit, the last had bein good. The first wants ane act of the Presbitrie and their Subscription, and so it wants the formall poynt but gives commission; and the uther hath proceedit from ane desyre to be electit.

The Moderatour said—It wer les prejudice to want the voices of them both, then to doe auy thing that may prejudge the Assembly afterward.

After lang controversie to and fro about this particular, the rows were called, and the Assembly voided that neither of them should have voite.

After prayer made by the Moderatour,

My Lord Argyle said—Ye remember heir I made protestation that nothing might be done that might seeme to wroug Sovereignc auctoritie; for albeit I be not a Member of this Assembly, yet I have leive to represent my opinion; and truelie I will say, I know no better way for you then every way to cary yourselves modestlic, keeping all dutie and respect to whom it is due. And I remember of a good passage—si tacitus possit corvus, &c.—therefore my humble desyre to you all, and especiallie to the Ministerie, is, that ye be very spairing to meddle with the Kings power and auctoritie—not that I suspect any, but that I hope all knowes what is my meaning. They are wise I hope who are entrusted in this worke, and knowes what is their duetic to a good and graceous King; and I trust our Master will be wise in his commands, and so there will be the lesse neid to meddle with any thing of this kind; therefore take this advertisement from me, least any selander be layd on this bussines. I am very spairing to insist; but what I have said it is out of affection to the caus.

Moderatour said—We are obleist to the goodnes and providence of our God that hes given unto us so wise and honourable a Member to sitt heir to give tymous advertisement concerning our ductie—perhaps rather to prevent that which might ensue nor to censure any thing that is done; and surelio we ought to consider, that, altho' the Kirk of Christ, especiallie assembled in ane counsell and such ane Assembly as this, hath very great power, yet they should very weill observe the limits of their power; for, first, altho' we have power to judge betwixt true and false doctrine—altho' we have power also to consider the mater of the Sacraments—the sealles of the doctrine of the life and manners of men throughout the kingdom, and of the maters of the Policie of the Government of the Kirke—yet our power is not autocratistical but ministerial and subordinat, and ought to give the Lord his owne soveraigntie anuxed to him, and to give every one their owne place. Let the Lord have the first place—we will not give his glorie to another ; and let Cæsars have their owne places. And surelie he thoelt I spack very distinetlie of this purpose that said—“ God or his Spirit, speaking in Scripture, is the judge, and that the Kirk is not judge but index, and that the Christian Magistrat is Vindex ; and so give every one his owne place.” The judgement of Sovereigntie and absolute jurisdiction belongs to God ; and this is that great Sovereigntie which must keepe us in the right way, without the which our sillie witts would wander in the bypaths of errour. Since it hath pleased Him to manifest his will in his word as if he were among us and we heare his voyee, we should stryve to decerne his voyee, and governe our proceedings thereby. Next for the Magistrat—he is the keeper of both the Tables, and ane avenger of the breakers of both ; and we are not to judge so uncharitable and so unreverentlie of our superiors, especieallie of him who is in the highest place above us, that he will usurpe any thing propper to the Lord, who is only absolute Sovereigne. It becomes us to content ourselves with the interpretation of Scripture, or with the indications of it as that word which I already used imports ; and for that which my noble Lord hes bein speaking, it becomes us to think reverentlie and speake modestlie of superior powers ; and I am sure there is no subject but they will be more carefull to take heid to their words and wayes both in pulpits and other places, nor if the Kings Majestie were present himselfe. I remember of ane example of ane worthie man in this Kirk who did oftentimes preach in the presence of King James ; and when the King was absent he alwayes spacke with greater reverence, and recommended subjectione and loyaltie to all subjects ; but when he was present, he told him all that he heard of him ; and I wish all of us would carry us so ; and altho’ his place or his Commission be emptic, let us thinke and speake as if one of them were into it : let us carry ourselves as in the sight of God and of our Conscience which are both ane ; for seeking the approbation of a good Conscience we approve ourselves to God, and next in his Majesties sight ; and we need not thinke that the wordes that are spoken heir will [not] be caried to him with a worse sense put on it. If his Majesties Commissioner wer heir present there neidit no report ; but since it comes to passe that things are made worse, we have so much the more to take heid to ourselves : and I hope of the Spirite of Wisdome and Pietie, which teaches all loyaltie and subjection to superiour powers, shall so direct us as there shall be no caus to censure any man justlie.

You remember, right reverend and weil-beloved, there ware some thing spoken heir be occasions of a particular complaint given in against Mr David Mitchell, for mentaining poynts of Arminianisme ; and we desyred ane of our reverend brethren to speak somewhat for refutation of that errour.

[Arminianism discussed.]

Then Mr David [Dick] raise and spack as folowes :—The taske is large, the tyme is short ; therefore I will sett myself to as little tyme as I can ; only I would have this preface in the beginning, that we would all labour to have errours in als great detestation as any corporall vyee ; and doubtlesse, if our eyes were open to see the bewtie of trueth and the good fruites of it, and to see the vyldnes of errours, and the fearfull consequences of it, we would need no exhortatioun of this sort. For the preaching of errour is like the selling of poysoned pestied bread, that slays the eater of it, and infects with the breath every man that comes neir hand ; and albeit the Lord hath brought in wholesome food in his house, and hes held his table long covered, yet the malice of Sathan, and the bussines of the Pope to recover his Kingdome, and the dalliance of worldlie men, hes sett instruments on foot to trouble our Church againe ; and God, in his deep wisdome and justice, hes suffered the matter to goe that farr on, that we might see what a fearfull sin it was to put the keyes of the house of God in wrong hands, and what evil freicks, errours in discipline would bring forth, and also that he might punische the unsanctified and proud witts of men that would take upon them to governe his Kirk, as also he would have these ministers in this land corrected for their negligence who are like the rest of the countrie, who thinkes of armes whilst they are in peace. So have we done. In tyme of peace, we were all secure, and dreamed not of straites, and studied for no more but to get ane sermone in the week ; yet blessed be our God, who hes also many painfull and faithfull servands as will be sufficient to cleare his trueth of his Kirk against all that will say the contrair.

By the power of Jesus, I will take up my speach in thir heads. First, I will lay out their errors in 4 heads ; Secondlie, I will lay out our doctrine in uth 4 ; then, Thirdlie, I will lay out before you the cullours they use instead of probation ; Fourthlie, then I will lay before you some maine reasons which are the cause and ground of all the errours, and the grounds whereupon the dispute runs wrong on their syde ; then I will shaw you the bulwark wherein our strenth stands ; Lastlie, I will answer some objections, and so close. For the trueth of our doctrine, I will content myselfe with a place or two, and is in the hinder end of the 52 Isai, and 6 of John, 29 v<sup>se</sup>, which is sufficient for a confirmation of our all doctrine against all Arminians.

(1) For the first, The Arminians they grant ane election ; but such a ane as makes man to be a chooser of God, and not God to be chooser of man, that by their course God shall choose a man 20 tymes, and refuse him or reprobate him 21 tymes, and the man to goe to hell in the hinder end.

(2) For the death of Christ they make a great bussines for it, as if they were the only men that knew to extend the worth of it ; but it comes home to this :—Christ layes doune his blood, and buyes no waires bot a possibilitie of some mans salvation—that is to say, they extend his death in drawing on of a bargane betwixt God and man, to put man in the termes that Adam fell into, that man may take a new essay of himselfe, by the force of universall grace, to hold his feet where Adam fell.

(3) There is concerning mans conversion, wherein they would seeme to plead for themselves, that they are seeking no more but to make man to be no stock nor bloek, and if they had no further, we should easillie grant that he were not a stock in his conversion ; but he is a quick divell, and when it comes to the upwith, heir doe they schoot to put all the matters in mans awne hand, that God shall be the giver of abilitie to convert by giving the man a power of frie will, but the man shall have the glorie to turne himselfe to God or receive grace.

(4) For the last and fourth poynt ; they sever poor simple man, and setts him alone with the staff of his frie will tottering in his hand, and the Divell, the world, and sin tempting him ; and then they dispute with him, saying, that there is no assurance of perseverance, and that the saints may fall away and all the rest of it, while, as they should joyne all his helps with all his hinderances, and should put him in the hand of ane cautioner and guyd to teach him and correct him, and raise him up when he is fallen.

These being their four errors, I oppose to them the doctrine of the Kirk of Scotland, whereof we may all thinke good the day, and thank God most heartilie for it; and seeing I have gotten leuve to speake, I blesse God in Jesus Christ our Lord, that evir looked upon the Kirk of Scotland, to give us a doctrine that will not suffer itself to be disgraced by errors or false doctrine, but will take the place of it in the hands of weake Ministers who will not boast of their learning, but whose glorie is simple trueth; and in that we will glorie more nor in all the learning in the world, finding ourselves guarded against all the Scribes and disputers of the world, since they have the trueth of Christ in simplicitie according to the word.

1. We give this for our doctrine out of the word of God—That there is a number severed out, in Gods speceall purpose, from the race of mankind, and advanced above the state of nature, to the estate of Grace and Glorie, by a speceall designation, and that for no foirseene good workes in the man, but for his free Grace and good purpose who helped to make the man, then to put the saule in him, and then to put such and such graces in his saule, and restoir what was fallen in him, and so make him doe good workes. This ground is cleare from Scripture. Ye know he will have mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardnes; for he is a Sovereigne Lord, and, of his owne workmanship, he can advance ane pairt higher of it then ane uther, and doe no wrang to the rest.

2. For the matter of Christs purchase by his death, we teach that our Lord made no blind blocke, but wist weill what he bought, as the Father wist what he sold; and had his sheepe before his eyes and was content to lay doune his lyfe for them; all thinges that belonges to lyfe and Salvation he layd downesuch a pryce to the Father, and declaired, by a voice from Heaven, that he was pleased with it—"This is my beloved Sone."

3. For conversion we say, that how quicke, how reasonable soever a man is in the houre of his conversion, considering him as he is, a naturall man and so wicked in himself, that there is so much power in the Gospell of Grace, the Spirit of God concurring therewith, that he is able, not onlie morallie to perswade and convince the man, but effectuallie to induce the mynd of him—keeping himselfe still in a freedome of will, that most willinglie and frielie makes the man turne unto God, and to take his Mediator and God in his armes, who before was in the armes of Sathan.

4. For the fourth we say, that, albeit it is true there is nothing vainer nor man—nothing lighter than he—he being laid in the balance, and nothing fickler nor he, for at his best estate he is altogether vanitie—yet He that hes bought him deare will never leave him nor forsake him. That man that he has begun to take be the heart, and to speake to as he uses to doe to these quhom he setts his mynd upon and calls according to his purpose, he so admonishes him, reproves him, corrects him, and causes him to eat the fruit of his owne wayes in case he deborred, that he causes him cast all consolations from himselfe—from men—from the world—from sin—and makes him faine to ereipe in under his Lords winges, and bringes him through all doubts, and rubbs difficulties and temptations, and never leaves him till he sett him before his Master and Lord.

Now, their cullours are chieffie thrie—first, from

Scriptures, rent ane of them from ane uther, as if there were no Scripture but that text quhilk they would seeme to prove their errours by, quhilk text of theirs being compaired with uthers, is our doctrine; and by soe doeing they deale lyke sophists rather then telling the mynd of the Spirit of God, who tells not all his mynd in ane sentenc, but must be waited on till he tell his last word; and reason it be so—as, for example, when the matter of mans salvation and conversion is spoken of, to say the Lord swears he loves not the death of a sinner, and we oppose to them ane uther Scripture, that he laughed at the destruction of the wicked; where they take the ane place and not the uther, and takes not that quhilk agries with—but he rejoyces at their destruction—not as it is a destruction of the creature: but when man wilfullie rejects grace and mercie and scornes God, it is righteous w<sup>t</sup> God to rejoyce in his destruction when the man will not rejoyce in his mercie.

Ane other of their cullours is a number of calumnies of our doctrine, where before the ignorant and unlearned, that understands not what we teache, they seeme to speake to them with some face, as if our doctrine did open a doore to sin; whereas howsoever as in other professions there are too many prophane among them, if all of them be not so, yet amongst us, the doctrine is not such that if any man be prophane or abuse the trueth that is spoken, he beares the blame himselfe and not the Lord.

Their third cullour is plausible humane reasones and discourse, drawn from the corrupt judgement of unsanctified men—as if men wer to sitt downe and lay the platforme of his owne Salvation, and not to leave it to the Word and to the Lord; but humane reasones shall prove a foole when it comes to the contrare of these two.

The grounds of their mistaking are thir—1. That they confound the decret of God concerning the last end of man with the maner of the executiones of the decree of the meanes: as, for example, they draw all their objections from the matter of Gods treating with the Visible Chureh, wherein God takes up the ridle and seif and fyne of his promise and comandments, threatenings, and conditionall offices, and sifts out the man that is his owne, and leaves the rest unexeusable. They draw out a decret of this, as if God had been unresolued when he began to speake conditionallie to man—as if there had beine no more determinat concerning the man he had a purpose unto, nor the preacher that must speake to every ane of his auditours; and this error draws verie deepe, for they make Gods decret, reducit according to his frie will, layes Gods decret by, whill man falles in his lappe, and so makes God resigne his Soverainitie, whill the end of the world they make man goe and God to stand by: for man will guyde the matter of his salvation by his frie will, and so they make God a spectator or a furnisher of directions only as he is called by the mans frie will. God comes in at frie-wills baek and furnishes directions, and frie-will determines; and so they give a Godhead to frie-will, and makes God resigne his Soverainitie quhill doomsday, and only now coming in at the back of free-will, following the designationes of man.

Ane uther reason of theirs is this—that they extend the death of Christ only to a possibilitie of the salvation of all men, and to the possibilitie of the salvation of no man—making Christs death to have the oune operation suffiecientlie, if Christ facilitat the way betwixt God and man; howbeit, Christ never got a man saved nor ever eat the fruit of his laboures, whereas our Lord was never so evill a Merchand as to lay downe his lyfe, and never will therefore, nor sick a foole as to make a bargane whilk might be suspended by mans fickle frie-will, who hes that much prudence that he forsee a losse or danger he will governe it.

A third error is this—That they think Gods effectuall working in the conversion of man eannot subsist with the reservation of the nature of his owne frie-will, even as if the saints in Heaven, and the spirits that are perfyted, and Jesus Christ our Lord, in his manhead, had never done, nor could never doe, a turne but of necessitie, and nothing of frie-will; for, except they got this soveraigntie to mans frie-will, if the will of God overrule him, and determine him to doe good, presentlie they ery out, he's destroyed the mans frie-will; as when a man preaches morallie to ane auditour, leaving nothing udone to persuaed them by his word, he hes left their freedome never a straw the less.

According to the Popish and Arminian grounds, the man being left standing his alone, he must fall away from Grace; for sure Christ hes done all that can be done by a Mediatour, and then only stand besyde as a spectator (as they say.) I wonder nothing that they speake of perseverance as they doe; for if the world were left to us our alone, we would fall in the myre; whereas, in the perseverance of the Saints, the man and the master goes together—the debtor and the eantioner goes together—the eaptaine and the souldiour goes together—Christ and the man never sheds; and howsoever we grant that without Christ we can doe nothing, and that if there were no more nor our strength, all would goe wroug; yet, with Christ, we are able to doe all things, and bring any thing about that he is to imploy us in.

Their maine error is this, (let me speake it with reverence towards your learning)—not knowing the Scriptures, and the power of God in the matter of the Covenant of redemption betwixt God and Christ; yet there is enough of it in the Scripture. They pointed at it themselves, which, if they should have followed, they might sein all their matter in the midst; for the Covenant of Salvation betwixt God and man is ane thing, and the Covenant of Redemption betwixt God and Christ is ane uther thing. The Covenant betwixt God and Christ was done and endit before ever there was a word of it in the world; but the Covenant betwixt God and man is by the meanes of the Mediator, which makes all sufficient, and he is our strenth and bulwarke; and when all their objections are made, we steppe to our Magna Charta, and where we can get any gripping we hold it fast, to wit—the Artieles of a Superior Covenant made by Jesus Christ, our Mediator and Advocat, in which there are artieles contradictorie to all Arminians, that so there shall be no more possibilitie of the breaking of these Artieles, nor of garring God and Christ fail. When an end of a bridge falles, the uther must fall with it; so when our frie-will is the ane end, and Christ the uther, then must it stand; and heir, I say, is our bulwarke.

Their generall objections are three. The first is, that our doctrine is not good, for we terrifie them, telling them that God has a speeiall election and speeiall reprobation; and our doctrine, say they, is not good for tender consciences that are converted. We desyre no better answer for the tyme, nor retort their objections back againe upon them; and we say that their doctrine is not good for Conversion, becaus they keepe the man unhumble and unpenitent. They never gar a man say, "I have no strenth nor abilitie to doe any good to my selfe—Lord amend me!" But they keepe a man from denying himselfe, and how shall follow Christ? But our doctrine layes man in the dust, and garres him peepe of it: and so our doctrine for conversion is very fitt; and if our doctrine prevaile that farr with any man as to garr him grant that he hes nothing, then presentlie our Lord keepe him, and gives Grace to that unworthie bodie. Every man that takes with his sinfulness, our doctrine pulles that man in the armes of it. I say more: our doctrine drawes any man fra that—"I will not be saved albeit God bid me," but garres him either come to a note, or professe himselfe to be hypoerite; and for these that are tender and weake, he caries the matter so, that he will not breake the bruised reid, if he grant he hes inlaiked and would be helped of yow, but if (a would be helped) he keepe him, and proppes him up on all hands. Upon the uther hand, our doctrine will not let a man lay his platt upon Heaven: that is, not in the way to it. It will not let him say he is a believer, except he be labouring to worke by love, and expres his faith be his obedience; and we retort this upon them, for they say it is in the mans power, when, how, and in what measure he will determine what he pleases; and so a man may say, "I am young, and I may delay till death comes, for it will come not so soone but I will get halfe an houres advertisement;" and so their doctrine opens a doore to siuning rather then ours.

Now for the grounds. Looke what the Scripture sayes for us, and that will settle the bussines. The last part of the 52 Chap. Esai—"Behold my servand shall deale prudentlie; he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high." There Christ is called the Fathers servand, becaus he was designed to take on our nature, and to bring in the Elect Children. It is said of him, that he shall deale prudentlie—he shall keepe up the doctrine of electione and reprobation, so that never man shall get the doore dung in his schafte that would be in, but does good to all, to the kind and to the unkynd, and layes no stumbling blocke before them that perishes. No man shall ken the reprobation of any; bnt election shall have many markes, whereby the man may elimb up to the Palace, and by tyme read his name in the Booke of Lyfe. How will this matter be brought about, his visage was so marred more nor any man? They say that indeed Christ will get a blecked face by the gate; and he get this done, he must waide the glare myre of our sins and the punishment thereof. Our Lord got his visage marred; but what will be uncertaine of recompence? This it was told him 5000 yeares agoe, that he should be exalted, extolled, and be very high, and that kings should speir for him. Take yow all good heart. The caus that we are about the day, Kings shall speir for it, and shall be forced to heare it in due tyme, by Christswise bringiug about the matter; and becaus men would thinke this universall, he tells in the beginning of the next chapter that it was for none but these to whom the Lords arme is reveilled. The reasons wherefore the reprobates would not believe:—he tells us there are some wiked persons, who, tho all the miseries were before them, and wer dealt with by never so many arguments to turne from their former wickednes, yet they will not leave their owne wayes, but wilfullie choyse the wayes of death of their owne accord. And (John 6) our Master telles—"All that the Father hes given to me shall come to me; and they that comes to me I will not cast out, but will raise them up at the last day." He must keepe not only your soules but your bodies, yea, and your very dust, and shall never be tane aff the hand of the Sone of God til he render up the Kingdome to the Father.

Now I will close my Speache. By all meanes lett Christs parte in the Scripture, and the thinges that concernes his kingdome and persone be better studied by us; lett this Covenant, made betwixt God and Christ, and betwixt God and us through Christ, be better studied; for since the whole Byble takes the denomiuation from this Covenant, it is recommended to us to studie it better, where ye see our Lord hes tane course to make all thinges fast, and hes so wiselie expressed in the Scripture, that no man shall have leave to presume to despair, to be profane or abuse the doctrine of Grace upon any just ground.

Now for the theses. They shall be given in write ryplic at a convenient tyme.

1. There is a Covenant of redemption betwixt God and the Mediatour Christ, preceeding the Covenant of Grace and Salvation made betwixt God and the faithfull Man through Christ, which is the ground of all this treating that God hes with Man in the preaching of the Gospell.

2. In this Covenant of redemption betwixt God and the second persone, designed Mediatour betwixt God and Man, the elect wer designed and condescendit particularlie upon their number and names, with their gifts and graces of grace and glorie to be bestowed upon them, and the tyme and meanes to bestow it, was all condescendit and agreed upon.

3. The pryce of the redemption, what and how much should be payit by the Redeemer for the purchase of all these gifts, how lang he should be holden captiue of death, &c., all was determined.

4. The Mediatour was made sure of succes before he pat hand to the making of the world; and all the elect were given to him and their salvation put in his hand, with all power in heaven and earth given to him to bring it to passe; and so he is sure to find out the man to persuade and convert, to lead him through touches and temptations, through fears and falls, till he bring him to peace; and this refuge of the soule is a sufficient post against all Arminians doubts.

5. He manadges this matter in the dispeusation of the Gospell so wiselie, as it gives no man any reasonable ground either to presume of Gods mercie or to despair of Gods grace; he tempers it so that the holiest man shall have no matter of comfort except he walke in the way of holiennes, and the wickedest man shall not be put out of hopes but to be received whensoever he will turne in to seeke Grace, and lyfe, and holiness in Jesus.

Then Mr Androw Ramsay was desyred by the Moderatour to speake somewhat of that subject.

Mr Androw said—I have nothing premeditat; but this shortlie, ex tempore. The questiou betwixt us and the Arminians are thir—1. Whether our salvation runs upon the lingers of our owne will or upon Gods grace? Our salvation is considered in five respects—1. As it is ordained; 2. As it is purchased; 3. As it is offered; 4. As it is applied; 5. As it is perfyted.

First, as it is ordained, it depends on God, according as he forsook mans warkes, (as they say,) and swa to depend on mans will. Some, he saw their warkes would be good, and he choosed them; some he saw their warkes to be evill, and he rejected them; and so they make the first originall chartour to depend on mans will, salvation being ordained.

2. Then it is considered as purchased, either actuallie or potentiallie; potentiallie, as Christ died for all; effectuallie, as it depends on our will; actualle, he died for all. Who would receive his grace should be received, and who rejected should be damned.

3. As it is offered by God or accepted by us, it depends on mans will.

4. As it perseaveirs, it depends on mans will; and so they make his whole salvation to depend on his will. He elected us becaus he saw our will that we would accept grace, and died effectuallie for these whom he saw would accept grace, and that he would offer grace to such as he saw would perseaveire.

(1) We say it depends upon Gods grace, and that he elected such and such to salvation when he might have condemned all.

(2) We say that Christs sacrifice was not offered for all, nor for one of the reprobats.

(3) That the effectual calling of man, when the Lord offers grace, the man may potentiallie reject, but not effectuallie; for he wriths the law in his heart that he can reject it.

(4) It stauds not by mans will, but by Gods grace; so the Arminians question our salvation in these poyntes, and says it depends on mans will. We say it depends on Gods grace. Our reasons are these—1. If it depend on mans will, and not on Gods grace, then Christ had not said, “I thank thee, O Father, that hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes; even so, Father, because it was thy pleasure.” 2. If our salvation dependit on our will, then grace should depend upon nature, and should be a subservient caus to nature. 3. God, who is a independent being, should become a dependent being; for, if his will dependit on man, then Gods will, who is independent, should become independent. 4. Last, it is against that action in the schooles: for actus secundus should be prestantior primo; and so they give all the glorie to man, and we give it to God; and we have the consent of all the antients, and the whole Roman Kirk, (till of new some Jesuits has risen up,) that our election depends on Gods grace.

Then the Moderatour said—We have reason to blesse the Lord for his graceous providence, that, before this errour spread very far, it hes pleased him to nippe it in the bud; and God be thanked, who hes raised up some spirits in our tyme to acquaint themselves with this errour, that they are able to refute it. I have some tymes hard that there be two very small poynts, as would seem, wherein this great errour does consist. They are like two grammarians: the one is, whether the word Elect, or, in Latine, Electi, is nomen or participium. The question is, whether we doe believe, becaus we are ehosen to faith? They say God chooses men because they believe. We say this—That we are elected comes from Gods free grace. There is an uther word about the signification of ante and pro. They take pro, that Christ hes died, pro omnibus, for the behove and benefite of all. We say that it hes ane uther signification, vice omnium—I meane as Scripture takes it—that is, for all sortes, and if it be tane vice electorum, they must be saved in whose place Christ hath died.

[Bishop of Orkney's Submission.]

After that there was ane Letter from the Bishop of Orkney, and produced by his sone, wherein he submitted himselfe in all respects to the Assembly.

After that, Sir Archbald Stewart of Blackhall, as Counsellour, declaired, by Mr John Hamiltoun, his Minister, that he subscriyved the Confession of Faith, as it was first subscriyved in the year 1581.

After that, a young Gentleman, of excellent partes, called Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Forbes, brother-German to Craigievar, who had bein in forraigne countries, and in ane Universitie in England long, and drank in the love of the customes of these Churehes, and, after he came to Scotland, was confirmed in the lyke opinions in Aberdeene, by the Doctors there, and came onlic occasionallie of purpose to have stayed but ane night, and then retired to Ireland; and, seeing the progres of this Assembly, it pleased God so to worke with him that he was enamoured with it, and, contrare to his former resolution, came in before the Assembly and subscriyved the Covenant.

Then was Mr David Mitchells proces red, and the Acts of the Kirk was red in the caces of deprivation.

The Moderatour said—There is a difference betwixt the censures of the Kirk of England and ours. They make a difference betwixt deprivation, deposition, and degradation. They say, deprivation takes away his benefice, deposition his office, and degradation, according to the Priests of old in the Bookes of Martyres, were degradat when they made apostacie from the Roman Religion; and they mentained, with the Papists, that, notwithstanding of all their Censures, there remains something which they call character indelibellis, which is a certain impression put upon the saule of a man when he receaves ordination; but they themselves cannot tell what it is. But censures usit in our Ministers, beside admonition, or suspension, deprivation, deposition: Suspension for a tyme from exercising the function of the Ministerie; deprivation and deposition we take to be ane, becaus, when he is deprived of his benefice, so of his office. There is ane of thir censures already put on Mr David Mitchell, Minister in Edinburgh. Now ye have to consider what ye have to doe further. Ye have heard the proces, and he has declyned the Assembly, contrare to the Act of the Generall Assembly at Sanct Andrewes, the year 1595.

Then the Moderatour asked Mr Robert Douglas opinion, who answered—He is clearlie conviet of Arminianisme and many Poyntes of Poperie, and the Censure of the Kirk is deprivation for his false doctrine, and excommunication for declyning the Generall Assembly; therefore, I thinke this Assembly should extirpat such birds, least the Kirk receave prejudice heirafter.

Mr Androw Ramsay said—That he promised to forbear such doctrine, but did it not; and not only declyned this Assembly, but used meanes to stoppe the course, by letters from the Bishop and Commissioner, commanding the Presbitrie to desist from any censure. Therefore he deserves deposition.

Moderatour said—This is a suffieient ground of a Sentence against him, that his doctrine is the doctrine of the remonstrances that they avowed at the Counsell of Dort, contrare to the doctrine of all the reformed Kirkes, whose Commissioners were there; and consequently to the doctrine of the Kirk of Scotland; for he defends universall grace, resistabilitie of Grace—efficacie of Christs death—apostacie of the Saints; so he is both conviet of heresie, and obstinatelie glories in the venting of it; and so in respect of his false doctrine and declinatour, merito ejiciendus.

Then the rows were called, and the whole Assembly voiced to his deprivation.

Moderatour said—There is none here, I am sure, more loath to pronounce a sentence of deprivation nor I, who never did the lyke; yet, since place is given unto me, in name of this Assembly, and in name of Jesus Christ our Saviour, I declair, that Mr David Mitchell shall no more exereise the function of the Ministerie; and, for that whilk is laid to his charge, he is not worthie of any Ministration of the word and Sacraments in the Kirk of God, and declares his place to be vacaut; and ordaines the Presbitrie of Edinburgh to make intimation thereof in their Kirkes.

After prayer to God, there was a long and learned speach against Arminianisme, uttered by Mr Robert Baillic, Minister at Kilwinning.

Then the Commissioners of Edin<sup>r</sup> declared to the Assembly—That the Citizens of Edin<sup>r</sup>, so soone as they heard their Ministers had declyned the Assembly, they were in such a rage against them, that they would neither heare them preaching, nor joyne with them in their Sessions; therefore, they cravit the benefite of the Acts of the Assembly; and in respect it would have tane up meikle tyme to have heard the particular clauses of everie ane of them, the Assembly resolved to delegat some men, who should have full power and Commissione from the Assembly, to heare and examine all complaints given in against them, and, if they deserve deposition, that they shall have also great power to pronounce it as the Generall Assembly, according to the Customes of the Assemblies of the Kirk in former tymes, who may transmit the power by Commission, quoad ad hunc effectum. Some Complaints were given in against Mr George Sydeserff and Mr W<sup>m</sup> Maxwell, q<sup>ik</sup> was red, and proces produced against the persone of Leith, and Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Watsone. The Commission hes power upon all the forsaid persons in Edinburgh, Leith, Canongeit, and Dumbar.

The names of the Commissioners—

Mr John Ker,	Mr Androw Blackhall,
Mr James Fleyming,	Mr Jo <sup>n</sup> Oswald,
Mr James Porteous,	Mr Robert Douglas,
Mr Richard Dickson,	Mr James Symson,
Mr Robert Cranstoun,	Mr Frederik Carmichael.
Mr Alexander Henderson.

Nobles—

Roths, Montros, Lowthian, Lindsay, Lowdown, Balmerrino.

Barons—

Auldbar, Waughton, Schirreff of Teviotdaile.

Burgesses—

Mr George Gray, Mr Robert Cunninghame, or any thirteen of them, 7 thereof being Ministers. They are to sitt doune before the end of Januar.

Then some Ministers were sworne before the Assembly to depone faithfully to the Committie upon the complaint against the pretendit Prelats what they know—namely, Mr James Blair, W<sup>m</sup> Dalgleshe, Androw Anderson.

Then there was a proces against Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Gladstones, Arehdeane of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes; and the whole Assembly voited to his deprivation, and the Moderatour pronounced the sentence.

Then the Committie, that was appoynted to be upon the nullatie of the Assemblies, gave in their reasons, quhilk wer all red, and verified by Acts of uther Assemblies, the Presbitric bookes, and the Kings Letter.

The Moderatour told that the Acts of Linlithgow Assembly were sent up and doune to Court; and, at last, when they came home, there was ane Act shifted in among them, that these who were Bishops, ratione beneficii, (for there was no such office,) should be constant Moderatours of provinceiall Assemblies, and this was proven to be false in Mr James Nicolsones face, and the clerik called Philip, which was the caus of the said Mr James his death. John Stewart, Provest of Dunbar, was there, and told that he never heard such a thing voited. Adam Colt, Mr William Watson, Mr James Carmichael, Mr James Cauldeleuch, Mr Androw Melvill, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Scott, and uther worthie men of the Ministrie, were sent to Court and detained quhile this present Assembly should passe.

Mr John Ker told, that, in the Assembly 1608, all the names of the Nobles, Barrons, Burgesses, Ministers, directed by the King, voited without any uther Commission, and the 13 Bishops, and from sundrie Presbitries, four or fyve Commissioners.

Mr John Row said—I was not Commissioner to the Assembly at Glasgow 1610, but I was Moderatour in our Presbytrie for the tyme, and Mr George Gledstaines brought the Kings Letters, quhilk is registrat in our bookes, and he brought three particular Letters to thrie brethers of the Presbitrie nominat by the King to goe to that Assembly. I, with the advyce of the brether, made them stand and swear, as they should answer to Jesus Christ, that they should admit no alteration in government of our Kirk, nor consent to any thing that might derogat from her former auctoritie. They went to the Assembly, and, when they came baek againe, we asked at them what they had done or concludit: they would not tell us. Alwayes ane of them, that had gotten no gold, said—“God be thanked I have gotten nothing.” The other two said nothing; and we thought thereby that they were in the ealke. There wer thrie sorts of voits at that Assembly—affirmative—negative—and non liquet; and he that said non liquet gat nothing; and this brother of ours, Mr John Stewart, voited non liquet, and a friend of his, Patriek Stewart, hearing that he said non liquet, said to him, (not knowing what non liquet meant,) “How now, eusigne, they say devill belieket yow gatt?” Alwayes the uther two that had gotten it, would not declair what they had done. The God of Heaven made it manifest what they had done; for ane of them, Mr Andro Foster, fell into a pittifull sicknesse, for he had taken silver out of the poore folkes box with false keyes. It came to passe that he, not being gifted for such ane place, his parochiners would fain have beime quyte of him, and desyred him to dimitt his plaee to Mr John Murray, and offered him a great soume of money, and lykewayes offered to get him a landwart kirk, and, if his stipend were not good, they promised to make it also good, whereto he would not consent; but, through vehemeneie of sicknes, troubled in mynd, feares and terrours of conscience that God struek him with, he was in a pittifull ease, and even readie to put hand to himselfe, as I can bear witness, who was sent for to comfort him. He tooke apprehension of a word that Chancellor Seaton said to him when he reveiled to him what he had done—“that it were well waired he wer hanged.” He apprehendit that he would be presentlie tane and hangit; but, having perswaded him of the contrair, I desyrit him to tell the trueth to Gods glorie, and he promised to answer me of any question I would propone; and I demandit of him, first, saying—‘Brother, are yow perswadit in your heart that God ealls yow to the Ministrie?’ who answered—“Nay, nay, I soght ever the world, and so seene on me.” Secondlic, I asked at him—“What he gat in Glasgow for selling the liberties of the Kirk of Seotland?” He said—“Fyftie merkes.” I said to him—“It is good for yow to prepaire yourselfe for death;” whereupon he apprehendit that he was presentlie to be execute. I besought him to pray. He said he could not; but desyred me to pray for him, whilk I did; and, in the tyme of the prayer, all the buttons lapp aff his breast, and [he] bled horriblie at mouth and nose. After prayer, I asked him—“Are yow prepared to die?” He answered—“No, woe is me!” Said he—“If you would spare my life till the morne, I would be better prepared;” and requested me to deale with Patriek Stewart for his life, and might I give him assurance it should be so; so, the morne I came to see him, and he was beumed, and wist not what he did or said, and granted that he was not in the ease he was in before. At last, he deserted his calling and came to the Presbitrie, and gave over his place to Mr John Murray. And the lyke fell out too with Mr W<sup>m</sup> Patoun; for he gat uther fyftie merkes: and, the poore folkes box being broken in his house, the Bishop, at his visitation, made him to lay doune uther fyftie merkes for it, and so he had no vantage for that shift.

Mr David Dick said—Doctor W<sup>m</sup> Guild and I was auditors of ane who was a verie penitent man, for taking some money at their Assembly. He confessed he gat 40 punds; and we asked what he did with it? He answered—he bought ane silver satt fatt with it, and he said “there was no more to give me.”

Doctor Guild said—In trueth there was some money in dealling, but he came to the hinder end and when the purse was weill neare teemed.

Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Ker said—I know a minister, Mr John Lawder, that came when the bag was almost teemed, and the Earle of Dunbar, who was his patron, said—“Well, Mr John, yow are too lang a-coming, for I have no more left but teu punds, 40<sup>d</sup> less,” and that he gat.

Mr Thomas Mitchell said he had a good-brother that was there, and when he came hame he was asked what he gat. He answered, he saw it in dealling, but not a penny he gatt, but was threatened by the Bishop to be sent to Ireland.

Mr Simeon Johnstoun said—He was there, but gat no money; only went thither upon the Kings Letter.

The Moderatour said—That might weill be your reward.

Then diverse other of the brethren arose and declaired that there was both money taken and given at that last Assembly, and lykewayes they nominat sundrie that had receaved it. Then the reasons for the nullitie of the pretendit Assembly at Aberdein 1616 was red and proven to be valide.

The Reasons of the nullitie of Perth Assembly 1618 was red and fund valide, and Mr Laurence Kinneir told that his name was put out and uthers wer put in the rows.

Mr George Musehet said—Some that came with Commissions, because they trowed their voice would be negative, their names wer put out, and Mr John Murray offered thre or foure tymes to speake the pretendit Moderatour, but gat not libertie; and when he came hame he said he never saw [such] ane ordour at ane Assembly.

Mr James Cunninghame said—The Bishop or pretendit Moderatour, in his discourse which he had be way of preaching, he was there labouring to cleare himselfe of any imputations which he said was layd on him for being the devyser of the 5 Articles. He tooke aff his hatt, which he had on all the tyme of the preatching, and attested God that he never knew of the 5 Articles till the King sent them doune, and commanded to ingrosse them in the Assembly; and Doctor Lindsay, who was the man that answered all the arguments, when it came to the voiting, said, "I confesse there is neither Scripture, antiquitie, nor reason for them;" and farder, he was heard say, "If either reason, Scripture, or antiquitie had place, he will tyne the cause." The question was stated, whither, in respect of the Kings Commandment, the 5 Articles should pas or not in ane Act? And it was urged onlie to be acted in the Assembly bookes, and the Bishop said they should never be urgit with the practice of them; and the Bishop of Galloway, directing his speache to Mr James Carmichael, said, "Yow may see we conceived the Act be way of Councell and not be way of Command," and so, many gave way to the inserting of it in the booke for the Kings pleasure, who for conscience sake would never have practised them.

The Moderatour said—Brethren, I think when ye read constitution of Synods, and these conditions that are essentiallie required for making up of lawfull Assemblies and Synods, ye will find many peccant humours in these Assemblies against these rules, and ye will find scairce any of them kept. I have sundrie tymes considered the Conditions that all divines think requisite to be kept in Assemblies, but I could never see ane of them kept in their Assemblies, especiallie in that of Perth.

Mr David Dalgleshe said—I remember it was said that these articles seemed to Poprie, and the pretendit Moderatour said he would meet the Pope midgate; and in voiting they wer commandit either to grant all or deny all, for the Articles wer all voited together.

The Moderatour said—If there be any other brether in this Assembly that hes any uther particular concerning Perth Assembly, let them now declair it before it goe to voiting, and let us doe all out of cleare light, solide knowledge, and certane persuasion, that we pas; not from it the next day. Ye know what pitiful perturbations and tragical tribulations hes bein upon the urging of these articles, and we have reason to blesse God, who this day calls them to examination. I think there was four yeares betwixt the elosing of the Assembly and Parliament that ratified it, and all the tyme betwixt, there could never a certane forme be gotten of that Act. Alwayes brethren, becaus this is a matter of importance, and I would have you all fullie perswaded in your mynd; any man that hes anything to say, he hes now tyme.

The Assembly was all silent, and thereby declared their satisfaction. Then the rolles wer called, and the whole Assembly, all in ane voice, without contrare voice, declaired all the forsaid Assemblies to be null.

The Moderatour said—Ye have voited unanimsly; and these Assemblies I trust be not only null, but hereafter shall be a beacon that we stryke not against such rocks; pathemata nothemata, nocumenta documenta.

Then the Moderatour pronounced, in name of the Assembly, these Assemblies to be null, in these words:

The Assemblie heir declaires these Assemblies to be null—to have no ecclesiastical nor civile authoritie; and consequentlie whosoever practises any thing under pretence of their authoritie, shall be censured.

After in calling on the name of God,

The Moderatour said—We have great reason to blesse the Lord for these very cleare and sensible demonstrations of his presence amongs us, both in veritie and unities, as we did sensible find yesterday. There is none of us that hes now assented to the declaration of the nullitie of these Assemblies, but they can gather such ane appendix as this, That since these Assemblies ar null, no oath that were taken of any Minister shall have any further obligation; and if these pretendit Assemblies had no pretext of ane Assembly, and the rest that wer pretendit to be Assemblies, are declaired to be null: and this was ane great pairt of that intollerable tyrannie and yoke that was upon the neck of this Church; and since all these things are now in effect dischargit and declaired to be null that were concludit in these Assemblies, we ought all to turne to our former practice, warrantable by lawfull Assemblies and customes of this Church, and, no more to be acknowledgit, the power of these null Assemblies. And sicklyke since Presbyteriall power was tane away by these pretendit Assemblies, their power is now returned againe; and therefore let all of us use it when we goe hame.

Mr David Dick said—I desyre that that may be insert in the bookes of the Assembly; and becaus that some Ministers are admitted be Presbitries, wham the Bishops refused to admitt, it wer good it wer ratified in the Assembly.

The Moderatour said—That which they have done in Presbitries, according to Presbyteriall order, cannot be null.

Lowdoun said—The corrupt Assemblies, which are now declaired to be null, was a impediment to the positive grounds and the government of the Kirk, and therefore these considerations that are propounded heir, tho' they follow ex consequentia, divers [deserves] to have a severall act by themself.

Moderatour said—I think it necessar that all bands and yokes be tane off this Kirk, that all that are of the Ministry may find and acknowledge their libertie; but let thir things be referred to the hinder end of the Assembly.

Then was there some witnesses sworne for information according to their knowledge concerning the Bishops of Galloway and Brechin, namely Mr Hugh Huehesone, Andrew Agnew, James Agnew, Allan M'Gill, Mr George Home, Mr John Weymes, Mr Lawrence Kinnier, Mr Mathew Weymes, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Wedderburne.

Then there was a proces produced against Mr George Hanna and the Minister of Dirleton which are referred to the Commission at Edin<sup>r</sup>.

After this there was a proces produced against Doctor Hamiltoun, and the executions produced; and the officer reported that when he summoned him, he bad him hang himself—he was not a traitour to compeir before rebels; and that he was ane honest man nor any that sat at Assembly. Then he was called on, and ane day assigned for the witnesses.

Then Mr Wilkie, Henry Stirling, Sir Robert Boyd of Bonschaw, Mr David Elphinstoun, Mr Hendry Semple were sworne to declair what they knew against Mr James Forsythe, Minister of Kilpatrick, to the Commissioner for the Billes.

Moderatour said—Now let us goe on in this great complaint against the Prelats; and if there be any thing done in it, let it be accuratelie and orderlie; and that it may be upon some sure grounds, for our proceedings will be strichted to the uttermost.

Yee know there was two sorts of accusationes given in against them. The ane was generall, and that was the breach of the Caveats that was put upon them to keepe them. The Moderatour said—The uther was particular faults against them. Let us first examine the generall, and be very exact in it, becaus the examination of ane is a rule of the rest.

There was the Complaiut against the Bishop of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes red, and it was found that he had sworne the Caveats at his admission to the Bishoprick of Glasgow, bot he had not subscribed as the first Caveats requyres.

Mr John Livingstone said—That his father declaired to him that he was present at the Bishops admission, and heard him swear; and a little thereafter he went to Court, and, being reproved by King James for swearing of the Caveats, he purchased a testificat from the Presbitrie of Glasgow that he had not sworne and subscribed, quhilk was true, being tane conjunctim; whereas he was adstricted to doe nothing in Parliament to the prejudice of the libertie of the Kirk, but by warrant from the Kirk. It was found that he had divers tymes voided in Parliament to the prejudice of the Kirks libertie, but never had a warrant from the Kirk, quhilk poynts wer notour to the whole Assembly, and declaired by Rothes, Eglintoun, Lowdoun, Mr Robert Blair, Mr David Dalglesche, Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Grahane, Mr James Martine, and Mr James Sibbald, to be most true.

Moderatour said—Since the Kirk of Scotland, who should have given him a warrant, is heir, and declaires he had none from them; and, lykeways, since he compeires not to shaw his warrant, it is cleare he never had any. It was also found that he had sett tacks, and sold patronages to the prejudice of the Kirk; and diverse noblemen declaired that he had sold patronages to them, and they said they tooke their pennyworthe of him.

Lowdoun and the Laird of Blair, Provest [of] Dunbarton, and Mr George Young, wer taken sworne to declaire to the Committie what they knew in this particular.

Whereas the fyft Caution requires residence with their flocke, to be present at their Presbitries, the Contrair was notour to all the Assembly; and the Moderatour declaired that this 20 year he heard not 3 exercises in their Presbitrie.

The 6 and 7 Cautions were more manifest to the whole Assembly. The breach of the 8 is evident by their declinatour, whereas they call themselves “the Representative Kirk.”

Lowdoun declaired—That when our Petitions were framed and given in to Counsell, the pretendit Bishop rejected it, becaus it bure, “in the name of the Kirk and Clergie joyning with the Nobles, Gentlemen,” &c. The Bishop of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes answered, “Whom call ye the Kirk? A number of baggage Ministers, worthie to be banished: ye shall understand that we are the Kirk.”

This James Cochrane witnessed also; and Mr James Bonar declaired that in a Convention of Bishops at Leith, he heard them say these words: “They say that they are the Kirk, but we are the Kirk, and it shall be so; who will say the contrare?”

[Process against John Crichtoun.]

Then there was a proces given in against Mr

John Crichtoun, Minister at Pasley, whilk was red. It contained many blasphemous poynts, both of Arminianisme and Poperie—about 48—besyde his scandalous lyfe. Then the roll was called, and the whole Assembly voided to his deprivation.

Then the Moderatour said—Though it be our parte to doe what the Lord hes commanded us, we should doe it with griefe and compassion of heart; for a just sentence may be pronounced with ane evill heart: notwithstanding, we ought to have hope that the Lord will give him repentance; but since ye have thought him worthie of deposition, In the name of this Assembly, and in the name of Christ, our Lord, I depose him from all function of the Ministrie, both in doctrine and use of Sacraments, and declaires his place to be vacant.

After prayer to God, there was some witnesses sworne to give their information concerning the Complaint [against] the Prelats—as namelie, Doctor Guild, Mr David Lindsey, Mr David Young, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Robertsons, Mr Andrew Strauchane, Mr John Rutherford, Mr Thomas Mitchell, Mr David Forrest, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Menzies, Mr George Robertsons, Mr George M<sup>c</sup>Gill, Mr George Fleyming, Thomas Durhame, Mr George Muschet, Mr George Grahame, and James Row, Archibald Campbell, Mr Robert Bruce; and becaus these persones are witnesses, they cannot be judges, and therefore they cannot sitt heir as voiteres in that particular.

The Moderatour said—Ye know there was a Committie of some learned and worthie brethren anent the Service Booke, Cannons, &c., and we trust their labours shall have a large approbation of yow. Ye shall heare some of them red unto yow, which we hope shall give great light unto your myndes. Take head to them that you may be able, after the hearing of them, to the voiting, that after the declaration of your mynd, ane act may be drawn up such as beseemes the General Assembly, and that by the auctoritie of this Assembly, order may be given for printing a Treatise which may be a guard for the posteritie to come against such evills, and perhaps for uther Kirkes also; and albeit the laboures of our worthie brethren take up some tyme in reading of them, I hope we will not wearie, becaus there are many notable poyntes of heresie and error in these bookes; and since there hes beine great paines taken by the authors of these bookes thir many yeares in framcing of them, I hope ye shall find it a well bestowed day, to see the darknes and errors of them discovered; and I am sure it will be more delectable for us to heare thir thinges reading, nor to have bein reading these Popishe bookes ourselves in our churches.

Then there was a large and learned Treatise red by these reverend brethren that were in that Committie, descryving the Idolatrie and Superstition of the Service booke, the tyrannie and usurpation of the Booke of Cannons and Ordination, and the unlawfulness of the High Commission, which gave great satisfaction to the whole Assembly.

The Assemblies condemning the Service Booke and High Commission.

Then the Moderatour said—Your Honours and Wisdomes all know how this Church hath bein burdened with these great weights and multitudes of evills, the Service, &c. Ye know also how a great parte of the Subjects of this Kingdome, of all rankes, did joyne together in a great, peaceable, and humble maner, and did supplicat his Majestie against these manifold and great evils; and when at the first, they had not such great hope as utherwayes they would have wished, to have beene free of these great evils, how they joyned together in that Confession of Faith and in a publict declaration, that in their judgement these evils were abjured in the Confession of Faith 1580. Ye are acquainted with the words wherein these same evils are abjured; "and becaus efter due examinatione we plainlie perceave and undoubtedlie beleive that the forsaid narations and evils," &c. Ye know it pleased the Kings Majestie at last to discharge all these bookes and High Commission, for the which we have reasone heartilie to thanke his graecious Majestie; and it hes pleased God, by the indiction of this present free Generall Assemblie, to bring us all heir, and is now calling us to give our judgements concerning these bookes and High Commission. I did not thinke that any of yow neids any farder information, both becaus the Kings Majestie hes discharged them alreadie, and becaus it is not the first day that ye have heard of them, but hath informed yourselves of the evill of them or now; and though your judgements had not bein prepared by the laboures of our reverend and learned brethren, I put no question but ye would have done it before out of verie cleare light. Ye know ye must consider whether these bookes and the High Commission have bein brought into the Kirk without warrant of the Kirk, contrare to the order thereof, whether they containe thinges abjured in our National Confessione of Faith we have latelie subscribed—and, in a word, whether they be by this National Assembly to be condemned?

Then Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Somervell raise up and spacke.—I approve the travells of our worthie and learned brethren, which, I hope, hes given full satisfaction; and for these proud men who gives proud titles to them quihilks, calling the Service Booke "a booke of commone prayer;" for it is commone to all the reprobats that walke in the broad way; and, for the uther booke callit "Cannons," it is a name which is given to Scripture itselfe; and for their owne pride, they were not content with that which kirk, country, and parliament gave them, but would rise above all; and nothing would satisfie their unlimited ambitione. It seemes that Gods hand is upon them in this instance, and not only will take from them that which they have usurped, but also that which was given unto them; ffor as long as there was nothing coneludit but the Five Articles, many were deceaved with their indifferencie; but now their courses are discovered, and it is weill knowne now they are leading us toward Rome; and we have reasone to blesse God that by the Kings majesties indiction of this Generall Assembly, they are now coming to voiting. And if personall faults be so worthie of censure, much more their ministeriall errorrs which crosse that holy calling; and, therefore, I hope ye are all readie, not only to give sentenee against these bookes, but against the authors of them.

Then the Moderatour stated the question—Whither doe ye reject or condemne these Bookes and the High Commission, for the reasons foresaid, or not?

Then the Clerk called the rolles.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kersé being first called upon, said—As for these bookes, sepeliantur sine honore: as they were hatched and introduced in ane unlawfull maner, let them be buried with reproach and shame, and send them ad infortunatas insulas. As for the High Commission, no tyrannie is of long durance, and, therefore, with a short cutt, I abjure it.

Mr Thomas Ramsay said—I reject them to the jacks of eternal destruction.

Mr Androw Cant said—I think the High Commission like the Spanish Inquisition. I think the Booke of Canons full of Popishe and Pop-lyke tyrannie. I think the Service Booke full of superstition and massing Poperie; and I think that Booke of Ordination, like the beast in the Revelation, with which none could buy or sell; and, therefore, I abjure and condemne them all.

Then all the rest of the Assembly, without a contrare voite, rejeeted and condemned them all.

Moderatour said—We have very great reason to acknowledge the goodnes of God to us, that joynes us together after such a maner, in giving so ample a testimony to Christ our Lord, and so large a testimonie against the worke of Antichrist in this land; and every one of us should wishe for the same spirit to goe on with us to the end of the worke.

Then divers of the Assembly desyred that the labour of these worthie and learned men might be put to the presse, whilk was promised.

Then there was some desyred to depone their oathes concerning the Bishop of Galloway, Mr Robert Aird, Neven Agnew, Mr George Gillespie, Mr James Bonar.

Then there was a commission nominat for Dundie and some adjaent paroches, for taking order with some transgressions in their ministrie and in Angus, as namely—

Mr John Robertstone,	Mr George Halyburtone,
Mr Andrew Wood,	Mr Frederiek Carmichael,
Mr George Somervell,	Mr John Robertstone,
Mr Silvester Lammie,	Mr James Lightoune,

Nobles—

Montrois,	Sinclare,
Lindsey,	Cowpar,

Barrons—

Auldbar,	Din,
Fintray,	Newtoun,
Scottiseraig,	Auehterhouse,
Thomas Durhame,	James Sword,

The quorum ij, whereof 6 ministers being alwayes present; and so their session dismissed.

Sess. 15.—Dec. 7.

After in calling upon the name of God,

Then Mr James Stewart brought in a letter, and produced before the Generall Assembly, which came from the Bishop of Dunkell, wherein he humbly submitted himselfe to the judgment of the Generall Assembly; and Mr James Steuart shew ane letter written to himselve, wherein he had given him commission to intreat his reverend brethren not to rank him among the rest of the Bishops, in respect he had neither subscrievd the declinatour nor protestation.

Then there was [a complaint] given in against Mr George Halyburtone, and red, wherein he was accused for sacriledge for declyning the Presbitrie, and for denying some of his parochiners the benefite of baptisme, marriage, buriall, and uther benefites of the Kirk. The Assemblie, having manie weightie and grave matters and affaires in hand, remitts the same back againe to the Presbitrie of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes, and adjoynd unto them, in Commission, the Earle of Rothes, Mr Robert Douglas, Mr Robert Cranstoune, &c.

Then there was complaints given in against Mr James Fleck, wherein he was accused for defeuding universall grace; who answered that he did never defend it, as a parte of the doctrine of the Arminians; but only that he said to the gentleman that he should not thinke hardlie of him for that, because it was the doctrine of the Lutheran Kirk. I confesse I citted two texts of Scripture—John 2. 1, 2, Pet. 2; but I was never of that opinion that Christus mortuus est pro singulis. The Assembly, finding it would consume much tyme to discuss the particulars, and that they had weightie occasions in hand, did appoynt a committie for that effect—namely Mr Matthew Brisbane, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Somervell, Mr John Moncreiffe, Mr John Maitland, and Mr Samuel Rutherford.

[Bishop of Galloway deposed, &c.]

Then were the Articles that were approved against Mr Thomas Sydserff, pretendit Bishop of Galloway, given in; and it was sufficiently proven and notour to the whole Assembly that he was guiltie of the breach of the Caveats, besyde many poyntes of Poprie and Arminianisme, and many grosse personall faults.

Then was red the paynes and censures of the Caveats furth of the Acts of Assembly.

Then the Moderatour said—We must not esteeme of mans faults according to the worlds estimatione; for ye know if a man be not a drunkard, a theiff and robber, &c., in their estimatione he is a good man, whatever fault he has utherwayes. But we of this Assemblie ought to thinke utherwayes; not that I would extenuat the foir-named faults, but are to consider their habituall and ordinary transgressions of a publick law is a great guiltines; or, as schoolmen speakes, spiritualia peccata are greater than temporalia peccata. So say I. The preaching of false doctrine, and venemous poysons of that kynde, to bring the people from the trueth of their profession to Papistrie and Idolatrie, must have a great censure; and, consequently, the breach of these Caveats by him, the declyning of this Assembly, and the bringing in of the Service Booke—which you have already censured and condemned for the manifold guiltinesse that it hes in the bowells of it—he deserves no lesse than excommunication. I remember in the English Church there is a sort of excommunication which the Papists call excommunicatio lata—that is, when the man committs the cryme, he shall be declared to be excommunicat. And there is two sortes of excommunication used in this Church: the one is called summar excommunication, and the uther uses to have admonition before, and is propter contumaciam. Summar excommunication hath bene used in this Church in two cases, and was for hynous crymes. The uther was when the Kirk was in danger by suffering of such a member—as a rotten member is cut off least it should corrupt the whole bodie. The uther, which is propter contumaciam, is knowne to all men. In respect that this pretendit Bishop of Galloway is guiltie of contumacie, being cited to compeir heir, and having declyned this Assembly, his excommunication cannot be called summar, but propter contumaciam. It is pittifull to see some hath such a great conceat of their owne words, learning, and engyne that they will not be ranked among uthers; but, as they thinke themselves above uthers in gifts, so they thinke they should be advanced above them in place—and, therefore, an ordinary stipend cannot content them; and then they begin to tyre of preaching and catechising; and thus are tane away with the pleasures and caires of the world and idleness. Therefore ye have to consider what shall be their censure; and least you eire, ye shall heare some articles that were gathered out of the Acts of the Generall Assemblies of the Kirk, as lykewayes ane Act of 9 Parl<sup>t</sup> K. Ja. 6., wherein is exprest the censures that is due to them. And ye shall understand, whatsoever sentence the Assembly shall thinke fit to pronounce against these, when it is all for their good—for the destruction of their fleshe that their saule may be saved in the day of the Lord. But let us remember that these that are deponed witnesses against them sitt not heir as voitors.

Then the Moderatour desyred some of the brethren to give their advyce how they should proceed in that matter.

Mr David Dick said—It is weill enough knowne that they, having exeemed themselves from ane particular flocke, and from the censure of Presbitrie, and acknowledged no kind of Judicatories but only the Generall Assembly, whilk cannot alwayes sitt; and, therefore, for the wronges they have done to Christ Jesus our Lord, and to the poore Kirk of Scotland, which they have tossed to and fro now these sixteene moneths; and, notwithstanding that everic sermon hes been taught all this tyme hes been a summons for them to repentance, yet doe we see no appearance of it, but a constant ougoing to bring this Kirk to ruine—stirring up the Prince against the people: therefore, my opinion is, that we declair our zeale for the Lord; and that the last censure which is the meanes to humble proud men, be given out against them though they should laugh at us for so doing; for since neither the troubling of this poore Kirk, nor our prayers and teares could humble them, it is good the last meane be assayed, and sollicite God to voiting.

My Lord Lowdown said—The not appearance of these men upon their citation and decluying of this Assembly, proves their contumacie.

Moderatour said—Their great guiltinesse is notour to the world; and yet, notwithstanding of all, they could never cry so much as peccavi; and since we excommunicat all that wer Papists, and disobedient to preachers and pastors, from partaking of the holy Communion; since they are guiltie of both, why should not the censure pas against them? I will read some words of a reverend Father, Mr Andro Melvill. When the Bishop of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes was to be excommunicat, he said, “That old dragon had so stinged him with avarice, and swalled so exorbitantlie, that he threatened the destruction of the whole bodie, if he were not cutt off.”

Then the Moderatour stated the question, which was this—Whither Master Thomas Sydserff, pretendit Bishop of Galloway, upon things layd to his charge—the breacking of the Caveats—for preaching of false doctrine, Arminianisme, and Papistrie, and bringing in of the Service Booke—whither he shall be deposed and excommunicat, or not?

Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse, being first nominat, answered— I chanced lately to see ane Extract of ane Act of a Generall Assembly holden at Glasgow, Appryle 26, 1580, wherein is registrat that the Bishops of Isles, Aberdeine, and S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes submitted themselves to the Assembly, and I looked that our oune Bishops should have done the lyke; but instead of their submission, whereby they might have quenched the fire that they have kindled, they have addit contumacie; and the said Mr Thomas Sydserff is Incendiarius. Soloman sayes, “he that breakes doune ane hedge, a serpent shall byte him;” and they have broeken doune a hedge, and therefore the serpent of sharpe excommunication shall byte them. And since he is also guiltie as any, he deserves excommunication, so abscindatur quem nos perturbatur.

Then the rest of the names were called; and the whole Assembly in ane voite unanimouslie did voite to his deposition and excommunication, except Mr Silvester Lammie, Mr Andro Ker, Mr Robert Baillie, Patrick Bell, who the morne, efter advise-ment, did voite to his excommunication.

Then Mr John Hay, Minister at Raffoord in the North, produed a censure of the Service Booke which he had written; and the Moderatour received with all thankfulness, and the Assembly thought fitt that it and the laboures of some uther worthie men upon that subject should be put to the presse.

Moderatour said—Ye may see that the same spirit which breaths in the South blowes also in the North; and as some of our reverend brethren about Edinburgh and the South hath contributed to this, so also some in the North hath not bene idle.

[Spottiswoode, Bishop of St Andrews.]

Then the pretendit Bishop of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes was called on and the proces red, and he proven to be guiltie of adulterie, drunkennes, preaching of Arminianisme and Papisticall doctrine; and for this cause the whole Assemblie voited to his deposition and excommunication as of before.

[*Bishop of Brechin.**]

Whilk being done, the Clarke proccaded in reading of the Crymes given in by the Committie against Mr Walter Whytefoord, Bishop of Brechin, [consisting of five Articles.]

After that thir and manie other faults proved against him were redde iu the Assemblie; ane paper was given in by the Committie, conteaning the probation of his adulterie with Aleson Chrichtone, by the circumstances which were done thereanent; as who had given her money at his instance, who hes baptizd the bairne at his request, and sundrie other passages thereof were their commemorat. Which being redde, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Ramsay gave in ane paper, conteaning that ane certaine woman, servitrix to ane Nobleman, had told him, being to come to the Assembly, that shee had lykewise borne ane bairne to the said Bishop, but by his persuasion had given it to another, which her conscience accusing her for, shee was forced to tell: whilk woman he had warned to be present at the Assemblie for the probation of the same.

The voyces at last being sought anent his censure, he was adjudged, as the other two, to be deposed from his office, Ministeriall and Episcopall, and lykewyse to be excommunicat. After whilk, thankes being given, they dissolved.

Sess. 16.—Dec<sup>r</sup> 8, 1638.

[Lindsay, Bishop of Glasgow.]

After prayer to God,

The Moderatour said—We wer going forward yesterday in the lybell of the Bishops, and the complaints against them. We began at the Bishop of Galloway and then at S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes and Brechin, and least it may seeme a neglect that we aro lang in coming to the Bishop of Glasgow, whose residence is so hard by us, let us goe on to the tryell of him.

My Lord Weymes said—The Bishop of Glasgow sent ane gentleman to me desyreing me earnestlie to speake with him; and because I could not goe to him before the Assembly, he intreated me to desyre the Assembly that nothing might be done anent him till I speake with him.

Moderatour said—It is good for that cause to take some uther purpose in hand; and since your Lordship desyres that he may be superceidit, yee shall be pleased to joyne ane or two discreit Members of the Assembly with you to speake with him, for it is better to wound ane then to losse twentie.

[Confession of Faith—Episcopacy.]

Then the Moderatour called on the Committie for the Confession of Faith, and desyred my Lord Argyle to speake somewhat anent it.

Argyle said—Beeaus I believe occasion may fall out that I must of necessitie goe to Edinburgh shortlie, therefore I desyre that the Confession of Faith, wherin I acknowledge myselfe to be tyed, might be explained before I goe, that I may both be a witsse to what is done and be able also to informe uthers. There are two Confessions. One is the Confession with the explanation: the uther is the Confession, that which breids much questioning; some referring the explanation of it to the Assembly, uthers subserving it according to the meaning of it when it was first sett doune, as the Counsell hes done: therefore it is wisdom to consider whether ye take it to consideration as a thing fitting and expedient or not? Or if ye take it (as the Kings Commissioner and these of good qualitie hes done) as it was first subserved? If ye take it to your consideration whether Episcopacie should be or not, it may be that more disputable; for I confesse I have never dyvit deeplie in it. Therefore I humbly represent unto your consideration the lawdable acts and estate of the Kirk at that tyme, and to consider as in Ecclesia constituta.

My Lord Rothes said—I thinke it is absolutelie necessar, in regard that my Lord Argyll is to be at ane Counsell day shortlie in Edinburgh, where it is like, the Commissioner will be present, and so his Lordship shall have occasion to give them satisfaction, if we make such grounds heir as shall be answerable to explanc the Confession that they themselves have subserved.

Then the Moderatour desyred Lowdown to declair his mynd.

Lowdown said—It is sufficientlie knowne to this reverend Assemblie what great straites this Kirk was redacted to when the Popishe Booke of Service, Cannons, &c., now justlie condemned, were enjoyned as the only forme of Gods publict worschip, and that some of the most sineeare Ministers, Gods faithfull servands, were ehargit, under the paine of rebellion, to receive these Bookes, till by a Bill of Suspensione they obtained some breathing tyme, that men of all rankes might supplicat against these evils. It is knowne to yow also, that by the Bishops malice and misinformation of our Prince, the answer of all our Supplications at Stirling was returned by a proclamation, under the paine of treason, that we should not presume to meit any more to prosecute our desyres; so that at that tyme we are driven to such exigencie that we behoved either to fall in rebellion and excommunication on the one hand, or forfeiting of the way of trueth and true religion and breach of our Nationall Covenant with God on the uther hand; and we knew not to what hand to turne us, till it pleased God to lead us by his light to the renewing of our Confession of Faith, which ye know was verie solemnie sworne throw this Kingdome; and ye know also that no meanes hes bein left unassayed to have rescindit the same. Then it was taxed to be ane unlawfull combination, whereof we did cleare it sufficeintlie. That our Supplication of it should be left out, that it might be the more ambiguous in the interpretation, and therefore it necessarilie at this time requyres ane explanation, and the way that we have proceedit therin is this: First, we have drawn up some reasons of the necessitie of ane explanation to be made; next, that we may selunne the neidles dispute of Episcopacie in abstracto, and of these corruptions that were introduced after they were expelled out of this Kirk, we thought it most necessar to state the question thus: Whither Episcopacie and these corruptions be comptable with the doctrine and discipline of the Kirk, as it was established in the year 1580 and 1581 to adhere? And this being examined, we hope it will cleare all the scruples about the Confession of Faith, and for this purpose we have drawn up a number of Articles thereanent. And when we consider how the Bishops have striven to ereip in by degries, and have abstracket the Bookes of Records of the Kirk, which now in Gods providence are come in our hands—and how they made many Acts of Generall Assemblies which now are declaired to be null—and how they have thrust themselves in the pryme places of the Estate, and by their boundles power in the High Commission, and sheltered themselves under the shaddow of auctoritie, oppressed the word of God;—no wonder that some hes beene deceaved rather to think them tollerable then to suffer themselves to be thrust from their flocks and places. We trust in God, when it shall appeare that they have done nothing but what hes beene protested against by Gods servands, and that they had never a warrand from Eeclesiasticall power, and that these things were once abolished as mens inventions, tending to the overthrow of religion and wanting a warrand from Gods word, we hope, these grounds being cleared, we shall all returne to our former puritie, and, by so doing, shall give testimonie of our obedience to God, loyaltie to our King, and happie conjunction amongst ourselves.

The Moderatour said—I am glad that my Lord Lowdowns speach hes come to your eares; and I think that whilk scarres some most, is feare to offend the Kings Majestie. But we are sure, when the Kings Majestie sies we make conscience of our oath, and when it is manifest to his Majestie that we doe nothing but what is sworne to be done in the Confession of Faith enjoyned be himselfe, we hope he will think them good and loyall subjects to him, who have proven so obedient to God.

Then there were reasons heard by the Clerk, showing how necessar it was that there should be a necessar explanation of the Confession of Faith.

After the reading of the Reasons,

The Moderatour said—Ye have heard many reasons showing a necessatie of this explanation: now heir the explanation itselfe. And I intreat yow, Nobles, Gentlemen, Miinisters, Elders, or any Minister of this Assembly, call for reading of any Act that will cleare your mynd, and they shall heare them out of the Book of the Assemblies; for I think there be many Theologs in this Assembly that are not weill acquainted with the Acts of Generall Assemblies.

The Clerk said—To show yow how diligent our Reformers wer in gathering of their Acts, there wer two fasts appoynted, to seik Gods direction therein—the ane 26 April 1577, and the [other] 1578. Then all the Acts of the Assemblies, clearing the meaning of the Kirk of Scotland, concerning Episcopacie in the year 1580, 1581, wer red by the Clerk.

Then the Moderatour desyred to read the Act of Counsell 22<sup>d</sup> of September 1638, in which Aet his Majesties Commissioner and Lords of Counsell declaired, that they subseryved the Confession of Faith, as it was professed and established in the forsaid years 1580, 1581. Then there was a Letter, in Latine, writtine to some of our divines by the Kirk of Helvetia, red by the Moderatour, giving approbation to the Confession of this Kirk, and showing their opinion in the poynt about Episcopacie, wherein they declaired it to be but humano consuetude that appoynted the prioritie of Pastors above Pastors, and that divine iustitutions had only appoynted a paritie among Ministers.

Then the Clerk said—It is evident that, in all their Assemblies, the abrogation of Episcopacie, the establishing of the Booke of Discipline, and the injoying of the Subscription of the Confession, wer alwayes conjoynd. After the reading of many uther Acts,

The Moderatour said—Heirby any may perceave what the meaning of the Kirk of Scotland was concerning Episcopacie, in the 1580, 1590, and 1591; and what shall be our meaning, except we shall deall deecatfullie with our God in our Covenant?

Then the Clerk said—I know certainlie that this office of the Bishops was never established by any Aet of Parliament in Scotland, which I never knew my selfe but within this twelfemonth, that I tooke speecall notice of all the Acts of Parliament for that effect.

The Moderatour said—It becomes us to have a reverende estimation of the Lawes of the Countrey; yet there is no Acts of Parliament that can be the ground of our Eeclesiasticall Polieie.

Lowdown said—It is but too cleare what we are doing in Eeclesiasticall Judicatorie hes nothing in the civill law repugnant to it. Then my Lord Lowdown red the Aet of the 15 Parliament of King Jas 6, and ane uther Aet Parl<sup>t</sup> 1612. In the former there is nothing concerning the office of Bishops, but only reserving to the Kings consideratione and advyement with the Generall Assembly; and in the last there is a relation to the former; so that there is nothing in the interveining Acts 1606 and 1609, and the Aet 1612 does not ratifie that which is concludit in Glasgow Assembly, which now is condemned. That ground being taken away, the Ratification also falls.

The Moderatour said—Ye have heard a cleare deduction of this purpose; and if it would please my noble Lord Argyle, whom I know hes tane paines to be cleare herein, if it would please his Lordship to declair if he be satisfied, we would be glad to heare him.

Argyle said—Indeed I cannot deny but all this tyme, both before the Confession was subscriyvit by the Counsell and since, I have ever found that the question was drawn much narrower nor it was before; for the greatest question ever since that tyme hath been only concerning the government of the Bishops, and that will be the greatest question; and, I think, for the declaration of any uther thing, we did all show that we could be ruled by yow of this Assembly: and, since I am requyred to speake, I must not thinke shame to confesse my ignorance. I neither studied it nor did I see the Bookes of Assembly, and, whenever I was demandit of this, I answered I would not determinatelie say anything till it should come to be considered by a free Assembly, and find what was the constitution of the Kirk. At that time I said, for aught I know, I said, it was a lawfull offee established by Parliament and lawes; and I could not have thought even [when] the Commissionier went away, that things had bein so clear as they are, and, for my oune part, it satisfies me fullie—that, according to the Constitution of our Church, the Government established at that tyme, when it was first subscriyvit, is verie cleare in my judgement.

Moderatour said—There is a lang tyme spent, and therefore we will proceed to state the question—Whither, according to the Confession of Faith, as it was professed in the 1560, 1581, and 1590, (I keip the words of the Act of Counsell, because it is a clause of the explanation of it,) there be any uther Bishops but a Bishop over a particuler flocke? or, Whether there be any to be acknowledged Pastor over Pastors, having preheminece over the brethren? and, consequentlie, Whither all uther Episcopacie, place, power, or preheminece is to be removed out of this Kirk?

Abjuration of Episcopacie.

Then the Rolles were called, and

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—The true sentence and meaning of the Confession of Faith being made clear by these Assemblies, shoves a incompatibilitie betwixt Episcopall Government and Presbyteriall Power, that they are to be removed and abjured out of this Kirk.

Then the whole Assembly unanimouslie in one voice, with the hesitation of ane allanerlie, voided that Episcopacie should be abjured and removed out of this Kirk.

Then the Moderatour spaek—I think there be nane of us heir but we have beine oftentimes calling upon the name of God in secrete and open, that he, and he only who was able to doe it, would have beine pleased to stay the course of defection that was going so fast on. And I think there be nane of us but it was the earnest desyre and wish of, that we might have sene a day to have taken to a consideration, whether we have transgressed the Covenant of God or not, and gane on in a course of defection; and now he has granted us the day wherein we may call all matters to a reckoning, which day we much long for; and many a tyme have I myselfe besought God to stop this course of defection, and so he hes done. Many are the miseries, burdens, and calamities that hes beine upon this poore Kirk thir yeares bygone; and we are scorned by utliers that it was for the brecke of the Covenant of God; and we trust it shall kythlie to the world, when we are dead, that we have turned unto him and renewed it againe. It rests now that we be thankfull unto our Lord for the same; and I trust there is nane of us that are come heir with ane honest mynd, but they would have bought this day at a deare rate, and given a deare pryce for this voiting, whilk God hes done far beyond our deserving or expectation—and our adversaries neid not to say that it was the voites of a number of Gentlemen and Elders that carried it away; but, blessed be God, that Ministers and everie ane heir present, with great unanimitie, hes gone together without any contradiction, which is a matter of admiration, and a wonder of wonders, for the whilk we know not what we shall rander unto our graceous Lord. Therefore we will not meddle with any uther purpose, but goe altogether and give heartie thankes unto our Lord for this harmony.

After prayer to God,

Mr John Row declaired—That a brether sone of his, who had bein in Germany and Poll<sup>d</sup> these 13 yeires bygane, was willing, with heart and hand, to subscriyve the Covenant, which the Assemblie willinglie accepted.

Then there was a Committie appoynted for gathering and viewing any overturie that was to be made for good order of the Chureh in tyme comeing, when we had removed some of the cheefe corruptions—namely:

Mr John Adamson,	Mr John Row,
Mr James Sibbald,	Mr John Moncreife,
Balmerino, Kinliet, Auldbar,
James Cochrane,	Gilbert Gourlay,

Moderatour said—We must begin where we endit on Saturday and goe forward in that worke. There is ane great mountaine removed, blessed be our Lord, who have done it. Ye know that in the explanation of our subseribit Confession of Faith, we did oblischè ourselves to forbear the practiee of all novations or approbation of the corruptions of the publick Government of the Kirk till a free Generall Assemblie, which hes beine done conscientiouslie by many; and now, blessed be our Lord, and blessed be he ten thousand tymes! and great reason have we to bless him more—and I hope the posteritie that heares of it shall call it a happie work that is past—hes bein done without any contradiction of the voites of the Assembly. Now it rests that we goe to the uther parte—the Inovations already introduced. As for the Service Booke, Cannons, &c., the Assembly hes declaired their judgement of them. By the innovations introduced, I mean, principallie, the Fyve Articles of Perth Assembly, which now is null, and, by consequence, they must fall; yet we are obleist to hear the judgement of the Assembly anent these novations, and, to the end ye may be prepared for voiting, ye shall heare something red concerning these novations; which the Clerk tooke and red. After reading the first concerning Festival Dayes,

The Moderatour said—It is knowne that a festivall and holy day hes, first, a cessation frae a' warkes; 2; There is some serviee ordained to be done where there is feasting, rejoyceing, or hilaritie, as it is called. That commonlie is called a festivall day. Ye know the Apostles doctrine concerning these dayes; and, altho' there hes bein great dispute about them, I think the brethren heir present are to satisfie what to think concerning them. There is three words that the Apostle uses. The first is to judge of a holy day—that is, to mentaine it in our judgements. The second imports, that we affect it because we esteime of it; and, thirdlie is, to proceed from our estimations and affection to observe it. Indeed the common and rude sort gave an estimation of ane day above ane uther: as Baronius sayes—an e yeird of ground is more fertile then ane uther, so there is some dayes produces better effects then ane uther—as the day of Christs resurection, assension, &c.; and I thinke there are none heir that are judicious, but they can answer to this, and then truelic ye would consider that the Kirk of Scotland is utherwayes oblissed, as ye see by that which is red, then uther Churches. All uther Churches, except the Church of England, and even in it before the latter tymes, it would appaare that they rather speake of these dayes as tollerable then as a contendable observation; and, becaus they cannot amend it and the Church purged, therefore they excuse it. But, for us, we blisse God that our Reformers hes gone so far on as to purge out those dayes from this land. We are not to judge of uther reformed Churches, but to consider what is expedient for ourselves. I have beine grieved many tymes to see the writtings of some divines, upon the Sabbath day. They divide holy dayes, in ordinary and extraordinarie dayes, and anniversarie holy dayes, wecklie dayes, and the Lords day. Anniversarie are Pасhe, Zuill, &c.; and is it not a fearfull sort of divinitie to matche these dayes with the Lords day? What dispute hes beene concerning these dayes thir ycares past, ye are not unacquainted with, and ye perceave what is attributed to these dayes of mens institution. Even als much is derogat from the Lords day; and therefore, if any of you hes any scruple to propone, there is now a tyme wherein ye shall be heard.

Mr John Row said—Truelic I am perswadit, in my soule and conscience, that, if the Bishops had not beine raised up amongst us, the memorie of these dayes had bein utterlie abolisched, both out of their owne hearts, and hearts of people; and therefore let them goe with the Bishops, in Gods name.

Then the Clerk procedit in Kneilling at the Communion; and, as some things were cited out of the treatise before the Psalmic Booke, printed at Aberdeen, 1625, where prayer is made against hyreling Papists, that God would confound them. In these that are printed at Aberdeen, Papists are left out. In ane uther prayer, these words, “the Romish Idol,” are left out in reading.

Then Doctor Guild, in Aberdene, desyred that the printer might macke accompt of it, who had bein the occasion of that. And after the Clerk had endit concerning kneilling,

These considerations (said the Moderatour) are not presented to yow concerning the gesture of Sacrament in generall, or concerning kneilling in uther places, but what we should think of it in Scotland, according to the order of our Church; neither doe we yet begin to dispute the question, but only this—Whether it ought not to be removed according to the Confession of Faith, and according to the order of the Kirk of Scotland?

Then the Clerk procedit in reading concerning the privat administration of the Sacraments and Confirmation.

Mr John Row said—As for Confirmation, it is one of the five bastard Sacraments, and is expressed in our Confession; and seeing Episcopacie is condemned, the imposition of their handes falles lykewayes.

Moderatour sayes—I remember againe how circumspetlie and warilie we have gone on in this busines; not censuring uther Churches, but wishes all thinges may be regulat weill in our owne Church. Neither goe we to trouble any mans conscience with idolatric, superstition, or any uther thing of that kynd. The question shall be this—Whither or not, according to the Confession of Faith as it was professed in the year 1580 and afterward, festivitie dayes, kneeling, &c., are abjured, and ought to be removed? And if any of the brethren hes any thing to say to clcare this matter, say it.

Mr David Dick said—The first year of my ministerie, when thir thinges began to be agitat, we wer tryed with also subtle distinctions and insinuations as could be; and, when the matter was brought before our Presbitrie concerning preaching at Zuill Day, the question was made, Whether it was lawfull to preach that day or not? Whereupon I resolved to take the narrowest way I could to try if there were superstition in it; and I waited till the people conveyed that day, having no advertisement of any thing to be spooken from me, but only the ordinar course of prayers. And there I fand the Kirk fuller than ordinar; quherupon I tooke occasion to preach against the idolatric that was lyke to break fourth; and this I fand to be exponed a thort the cuntry for a Zuill preaching; and out of that I learned to make a distinction betwixt the act and honest intention of some that were slidden aff their feet; for they sett downe the act aue way, and pleadit for them ane uther way, and they were praefised a third way. I speake not this to excuse the wrong that God hes gotten, but only to excuse some honest myndes a tanto onlie.

Moderatour said—In St Andrewes, where I live, they professe that they keepe holy these dayes only in tyme of preaching, and yet they have a great bell they ring on these dayes.

Lowdoun said—There is ane thing not to be forgot, that, upon the humble petition of the subjects unto the King, the Kings Majestie hes beene pleased in these Articles given in be his Commissioner, to discharge these thinges by a reall edict; and, withall, did offer to the consideration of the Assembly what thinges they thinke fitt to be represented unto the Parliament; so that none neids to scarre at that. Not only is the Assembly at Perth, which gives auctoritie to them, null, but if any fear the sanction of the civill law, they are abrogat by it also, and full power given to present unto the Parliament what ye thinke farder fitting to be requyred. And for the thinges themselves, let men think of them as they will. The tries are knowne by their fruits. What fearfull obstractions they have bein, usher to all thir thinges that are come since?

Moderatour said—Indeed they have made way for the Service Booke, and are principall limbs of it.

Mr Andrew Ramsay said—I allow altogether and think it expedient, that these Articles be removed; but for the information of some I will speake a little. First, What is a holy day? There is twa things to make up a holy day. The first is the commandment of God; the second is the duties commandit to be performed that day. This may be evinced and cleared out of the fourth precept—“Remember to keep holy,” &c., and thir twa is includit in the same precept—“He rested”—there is a cessation from worke—“and hallowed it”—that is dedicat to holy uses; therefore a cessation from a’ worke, and a dedication to holy uses, makes up a holy day. So these three makes up a holy day—a commandment, a cessation, a dedication. Now for kneilling at the Communion, it is dissonant to the practice of Christ, and discrepant from the practice of the Kirk; and for the action, a Papist could say that the action of the Commuion being ane action of joy, we should not use a humble gesture. If a Papist conclude thus, much more we. And for privat Baptisme, it is not to be understood when it is ministred in the church or at publict prayers, but when it is ministred in a privat house; for in countrie kirks there is sett doune preaching in week days. As for Confirmation, I altogether condemno it.

Mr Robert Baillie said—For the removing of the Articles of Perth out of the Kirk, I heartilie consent unto it; but to remove them as abjured in the Confession of Faith, so that they all shall be abjured who practised them, I doe not think.

Then the Moderatour stated the question of new againe, and desyrit Mr Robert Baillie to tell his opinion when his voice was speired.

Then the Rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—All these Articles being at once dead in this Church, had bein revived and preached again by some unlucky birds, because it makes for their purpose; and the more that stuff abounds, it addes the more to the vaine lusture and glorie of their Episcopacie, which had neid of much fairding and learning; and, if so be, we should take them from these falcities and idle toys, it would befall to them as the Poet said, "Moveat cornicularisum surtivus undata coloribus"; and so with heart and affection, I send them, and the revivers of them, both ane way; for they are abjured by the Confession of Faith, and therefore are to be removed.

Moderatour said—I thinke there is no question; but if the question had been made to the Generall Assembly when the Confession of Faith was subscribed, Whither they shall observe Kneilling, Pasche, Zuill, &c., but many would have declaired negativelie; and if ever they had thought that they should have bein introduced upon this Kirk, they would have bein more particular in it, albeit the generall is cleare enough, as it is cleare by the interpretation of the Confession of Faith according to the Acts of the Kirk, that they are abjured, and therefore to be removed. And, truelie, considering the great woe they have brought in this Kirk, we have verie great reason to rejoyce in God, and to give his Majestie heartiethanks that hes brought us to this comfortable conclusion; and ye may see how comfortable a thing it is for brethren to meit together thus in ane Assembly, whereof we have bein depryved thir many yeares, and that these Articles hath bein the caus of this division. It is notour how many honest and faithfull servands of Christ hes bein put from the ministrie, to verie hard shifts, and are not yet admitted, of whom I thinke notice should now be taken; for in all halcion tymes, when sore troubles were blowen over the head of Gods Kirk, there hes bein still notice taken of these whom God made sufferers; and ye know how many of ourselves hes bein threatened to have bein put from our places; and if they had gotten their will, there had bein few honest ministers left in the land; and therefore we have caus to blesse God that we are delivered from these corruptions.

Then there was a letter produced from the Bishop of Cathnes, declairing that the caus of his not coming to the Assembly was his bodilie sicknes and his extreame disease, wherein he acknowledges the lawfulness of the Assembly, and declaires that willinglie he had subscribed the Covenant; and it was found that he had not subscribed the Bishops Declinatour.

My Lord Weymes declaired—That he had bein at the Bishop of Glasgow; and he said that the Bishop regrated that he had put his hand to the Declinatour, and told that he had intention to come to the Assembly, but the Commissioner diswaded him; for Declinatour, sayes he, they urgit him with it, and he did it in great suddentie, and repents it; and said he would take his hand from it were it not that it would be disgraceful to him; and when I desyred him to give two lynes under his hand declairing his submission to the Assembly, he said he had not his wittis about him, and desyred the Assembly that he should be dealt with as those who had submitted themselves. And the Assembly answered, that since he was amongst the subscrivers of the Declinatour, he behoved to have his owne place.

[Bishop of Edinburgh.]

Then there was Articles of Accusation given in against Mr David Lindsay, pretendit Bishop of Edinburgh; and he was called upon and his procurator, and his proces red, and probations thereof.

Then Mr Andrew Jaffray and Sir John M<sup>c</sup>Kenzie declaired that they saw him bow to the altar. Mr Andro Kerr and [George] Dundas saw him dedicat a kirk after the Popishe maner.

Then the Rolles wer called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—He is a violent brecker doune of the hedge whereof I spacke the last day; and, seeing he continowes obstinat, let the sentence of excommunication byte him.

And the whole Assembly in one voyce voited to his deposition and excommunication.

Then the Moderatour said—Ye see the Assembly agries, without a contrare voit, that he shall be deposed from his present office of Episcopacie, and from all function of the ministrie. I am perswadit that this Assembly is seeking their salvation allanarlie; and we know no other remeadie for gaining their soules but this only; therefore let us doe it out of compassion to the Kirk of God and him also.

[Bishop of Aberdeen.]

Then the Bishop of Aberdeines proces was red, and the probation thereof.

Mr John Row declaired, that he subscribed the Protestation given in to the Parliament 1606, and that there was no man more against Bishops in the toune of Stirling nor he; and he was mightilie offendit at Mr John Grahame, who was taking a bishoprick; and, since that, all the brethren here present were in mynd he should be given to the Divell for betraying the liberties of the Kirk; yet, nevertheless, he was the man that tooke out the bishoprick out of Mr John Grahames hand. I remember when he subscriyvit the Protestation, he subscriyvit verie neir the end of the paper, and it began to weare; when he began to get the bishoprick, we said he was going to loupe the dyke.

The Moderatour said—Mr Patrick Symsonne said to me, he never lyked Mr W<sup>m</sup> Coupar, and Mr Adam Ballantyne; for they were too violent against Bishops, without any light, or good reasons; and, therefore, he feared that they should never be constant.

Auldbar and Mr David Lyndsay declaired that they, being in the Bishops house, when Auldbar said, "The only meane to take away abuses and disorders in this Church was a free General Assembly," he arose in a great flame and passion, and said, "The first article that he would make then will be to pull the crowne off King Charles head."

Moderatour said—Though his hand be not at the Declinatour, yet he has not submitted himselfe to the Assembly, and this would be considered beyond the rest, (I may call it so,) his apostacie; for the being once of our opinion, and now so far degenerat, that he is become osor sui facti.

Mr Andrew Cant said—There entered a contest betwixt Craigievar and this Mr Ballantyne, concerning the patronage of the Kirk of Kinghorne, and was long agitat before the Lords. Alwayes Craigievar presented a Cusing of his, and the Bishop impedit him, pretending that the King had the right, and, consequentlie, the Bishop of Aberdeine. At last, the Bishop gave Craigievar 160 merks to desist, to the end that the Bishops sone might get the place.

Mr Thomas Mitchell declaired that he was present by accident when he did consecrat a chappell, the chappell being richlie hung, and all the rest of it. The lady came in, and gave him a catalogue of the things that are within, which she had wrought with her owne hands, and desyred that they might be dedicat to God, and so delyvered the key to the Bishop, who went in and preached a sermon of consecration, and baptized a child, and then went to their feisting. His text was upon Solomons dedication of the temple.

Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—Besyde that he is guiltie of the breake of the Caveats, there are many grosse faults proven against him; and therefore, albeit he hes not subseryvit the declinatour, he deserves deposition and excommunication. And the whole Assembly voited the samine, except Mr Richard Inglis, and two or three more, who voited onlie to his deposition.

[Bishop of Ross.]

Then the Bishop of Ross was called on, and his procurator, and proees red and the probation thereof.

The Provost of Dumfries said—That when he was in their toune on the Sabbath day, they expected his comeing to the kirk, and layd cushoons for him; yet he came not, but went to a exeommuniat Papists house, and stayed all day.

Lowdown said—He was sent up to Court by the Counsell of the Bishops for the Kirk, that order might be tane for Papists; and, instead of that, he brought doune Artieles from them, and newis came to this toune to givo in the Bishops Declinatour.

Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—He is the vive example and perfyte paterne of a proud Prelat, and enters in composition with the Pope himselfe; and, therefore, let him have his due deposition and exeommuniation. And the whole Assemblie, in ano voice, voited the same.

[Bishop of Dumblane.]

Then the proees against Mr Ballantyne, pretendit Bishop of Dumblane, and the probatione thereof, was red. The rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—I heard, of late, a notable sermon by a brother in Edinburgh, wherein he sent him to the land of Nod: and let him be sent there and arrecast there, with deposition and exeommuniation. And the whole Assembly, in ane voyee, except Keir, voited the same.

Then the complaint ag<sup>t</sup> Mr James Forsyth, minister of Kilpatrick, was given in; and, efter the reading of the proees, and probation thereof,

The Moderatour said—I think there is two great faults in that proees; that, upon the Saturday before the Communion, (at night,) the Sunday morning, he was writting of summonses to send athart his paroehe; and, upon the Sabbath day efter the first sermone, when the tables were going to serve, he brought ane Officer at Arnes to the end of the communion table, in presence of 1600 communicants, and caused him reid Letters of Horning. And lykewayes he hes both deelynd the Presbitrie and the Assemblie. He is already suspendit; and, therefore, ye are to give your judgement whither he merits deposition or not?

Then the rolles were called, and the whole Assemblie voited to his deposition.

Moderatour said—We hope God shall give him repentance, that he may make use of his gifts afterward; but, for the present, I, in name of the Assemblie, discharge him from all function in the ministerie, and declaires his place to be vacant.

After in calling upon the name of God,

[Bishop of Orkney.]

The Moderatour said—There are heir two writes come in my hand concerning the Bishop of Orkney. The ane may be proven by witnes in this house, and the uther is more large, punetualie deduced and subseryved be 12 ministers of Orkney. If the generall satisfie you not, ye shall heare the particullar.

Then Mr George Grahame, pretendit Bishop of Orkney, was called on, and his proees red, and probatione thereof. After the reading thereof,

The Moderatour said—Ye see what he hath committed against all the Caveats, and what tyraniacall usurpation he hath exereised above the ministrie, and many uther particulars which ye heare in the proees; and, notwithstanding of all this, he hath be his letter offered a kynd of submission to the Assembly, in saying, if God spair his lyfe, he will be readie to doe and answer whatever the Assembly shall impose and requyre; and, lykewayes, he hes not subseryved the declinatour, and, therefore, it would seeme that he deserves not such a sentenee as some uthers.

Mr Walter Stewart objected that there was nothing in his letter which could import a formall submission; but was rather to be understood of his intention to answer to what was to be layed against him.

It was answered by my Lord Lowdown, that it was a materiall submission, howbeit not formall; and to this answer the Assembly applaudit.

Furthermore, Mr Walter Stewart declaired, that he had gotten information, under the clerks hand writt of Leith, that there was a gentlewoman there present delivered of a ehilde, and she declaired that Mr Patriek Oliphant, minister at Scheitland, sister sone to the forsaid Bishop, was father to the chyld, and this the Bishop knew before Lambes, and, notwithstanding, tooke no order therewith.

Then the Moderatour answered—Whither or not the pretendit Bishop of Orkney, (not having subseryved the declinatour, and given in a materiall submission to this Generall Assembly,) should be deposed, or have any further censure? To the which, after calling of the rolles, the Assemblie did agree; and, farder, if he did continow obstinat, he should be exeommunicat.

[Bishop of Murray.]

Then there was given in a proees against Mr John Guthrie, pretendit Bishop of Murray, wherein it was found that he had transgressed all the Caveats. It was objected that the Assembly could not proceed against him, in respect he was not personallie summondit. The clerk answered that he had summonded him at the Kirk of Edinburgh and Leith, the ordinarie places of citatione in ecclesiasticall causes. 2<sup>d</sup><sup>lie</sup>, That he was personallie summonded; but the executions of the summons was not produced; 3<sup>d</sup><sup>lie</sup>, It was answered, that the 2 Caveats oblessed every one of them to compeir before everie Assemblie, to make aecompt of their doings; 4, That the protestatione was suffieient, protesting that it might be instead of summons for them.

Mr Androw Cant said that he knew him to be a common ryder on the Sabbath day, and lykeways that he was a prettie dancer, as Mr Thomas Abernethie can testifie. At his daughters brydell, he danced in his shirt. Lykeways, Mr Androw said, that he conveyed some gentlewoman to a chappell, to make a pennance, all bair footed. This Mr Thomas Abernethie declaired to be of trneth.

Mr Frederick Carmiehaell said, that the Bishop being, by occasion, ryding from the church on the Sunday morning, he was desyred to stay all the night, becaus it was the Sabbath day. He answered, he would borrow that piece of the day from God, and be as good to him some uther gate.

The Moderatour said—I think, though he hes not subseryvit the declinatour, yet deposition should passe against him, if the Assemblie thinks it good; and, if he declair his contumacie afterward, when the sentence of the Assemblie comes to his hearing, they will declair that he shall be worthie of excommunication.

Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—His not subseryving the declinatour deserves some mitigating consideration. Therefore, I think he should be deposed for the present, not exeeming him from excommunication, if he continow obstinat; for he deserveth both; and the rest of the Assembly voited the same. Some voited that he should make his repentance in the church of Edinburgh, where, he said, he w<sup>d</sup> be more vyld in the eyes of uncais, for the pleasure of his king. Twelwe did voite he should presentlie be excommunicat.

[Bishop of Glasgow.]

Then the Bishop of Glasgow was called on, and his proces red.

Mr David Lindsay said—I and Doctor Guild went in to him, and we represented unto him the fearfull caice he was in till that he did submitt himselfe to the Generall Assembly, and pas from his declinatour. He began to make a numeration of the good turnes he had done in favours of this Kirk against Papists, and requested the Assembly, for Gods caus, that the sentence of excommunication might not be given out against him till the latter part of the Assembly.

The Moderatour said—It would seem that, notwithstanding the Assembly shall find him worthie of excommunication, yet, if betwixt the decret and pronouncing of the sentence, he shall give his submission, the sentence of excommunication shall be suspendit.

Mr George Young declaired—That my Lord Lindsay Sinclair, Mr Androw Ramsay, and himselfe, had bein presentlie in at the said Bishop, and whillas, by your Lordships advyce, he was condescending upon some doctrines for satisfaction of the Assemblie, the said Mr George Young declaired that he drew up a writt what he was speaking and gawe it to himselfe to read, and, as he was reading it, he swarfed; and, after that, he protested that he could not take it to his consideration for that tyme, and therefore besought the Assemblie, for Gods caus, to delay the sentence for the tyme, and desyred that his former lyfe would be tane notice of, and that he was never violent in urging the novations; and, for the declinatour, he said it was not only offered unto him, but he was commandit to subseryve it.

The Ministers of Glasgow answered—That there was no man more violent in urging the Service Booke, &c.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Spittall declaired that the said Bishop did transport two Ministers at his oun hand, without the advyce of the Presbitrie or Paroches. Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—It is a heavie matter that one of his age should choose to die under a vaine title of honour, and to east him under the danger of such a unhappie viaticum, and not rather to joyne himselfe with this honourable Assemblie. My opinion is, that he be presentlie deposed, and, if he did not submitt himselfe to the Assemblie before it end, let him be excommunicat.

Then the rest of the Assemblie voited that he was worthie of deposition and excommunication, but that his excommunication should be delayed, to try if he would submitt himselfe.

[Bishop of Argyle.]

Then the pretendit Bishop of Argyle, Mr James Fairlie, was called on, and the Articles proven, before the Committie, wer red: whereon it was found that he had broken the Caveats, and uther guiltinesse beside.

Moderatour said—There are diverse degries of guiltinesse, and, proportionallie, there should be degries of censures; and, if the Assemblie thinke good, let these be deposed, and, upon their repentance, let them be received to the Ministerie. Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—It is said of one that he was so vigilant a Consul that he slept nano all his tyme, for he was entered in the morning and put from it ere night. So was it with this Prelat; for he sleipit but few nights in his Episcopall nest, and was not weill warmed in his Cathedrall chyre, whill both chyre and euschane was taken from him. Therefore, depose him only; and, if he obey not the sentence of the Assemblie, let him be excommunicat. The Assemblie voited the same.

[Bishop of the Isles, &c.]

Then was the Bishop of the Isles called on, and his proces red. The rolles being called, the Assemblie did all agrie to his deposition; and, concerning the order of his repentance or excommunication, let it be thought upon afterward.

The Assemblie coneludit that the Billes should come in only according to the order of the rolles. A reverend Father, Mr William Livingston, Minister at Lanark, gave in his excuse to the Assemblie. Because of his sicknes he behooved to retire hame, and cravit leave of the Assembly, whilk was granted.

Then the Complaint was given in against D. Andro Lawmont; was remitted to the Presbitric of Kirkealdie, and the Commissioners of Coupar and S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes were joyned to them.

Then there was a proces given in against Mr John McNaught, Minister at Chirnsyde; and, after the calling of the rolles, the Assemblie voited that, for deserting of his Paroche, deelyning his Presbitrie, and preaching of Arminian doctrine, he absolutelie should be deposed, and his kirk declaired to be vacant.

The proces against Mr Francis Harvie was referred to the Commission at Edinburgh.

Then Mr Thomas Fosters proces was given in, containing many grosse and blasphemous poynts; and, after the calling of the rolles, the Assemblie voited that such a minister as he should be put off in a singular manner, and deposed from the ministerie.

After prayer to God, there was a letter red, from Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Lindsay, Bishop of Dunkell, wherein he had declaired, that he had subseryved their Covenant—that the Assemblie was lawfull—and that he submitted himselfe to it, and supplicat the Assemblie that he might die a Minister at Lyneydors. After that his proces was red,

The Moderatour said—Ye heare what is said against him—the common Episcopall transgressions, and many grosse thinges besyde; and it would seeme verie hard that he should be continowed in the Ministerie, except he make his publict repentance, and make some discourse of the Corruptions of the Kirk; and, if he be not able to come to the kirk, let some brethren of the Ministerie, of the gravest number, be sent to him to be witnesses of his recantation and repentance.

Then it was questioned whether the foresaid Bishop should be deposed from the Bishoprick, and all functions in the Ministerie, or whether he should be deposed from his Prelacy only, and, according to his desyre, continowed Minister at Lyneydors?

Mr Andrew Cant said—I lyke the Bishops notion weill, that desyres to die a Minister; but it is to be feared that he have respect to his owne credit and meanes, as in former tymes, and so many poore saules disappointed.

Mr David Dick said—If we believe that Episcopacie is such a wrang to the Crowne of Christ Jesus, and to this Kirk of Scotland, and we believe that the making of so many saules to starve you way, it is a bloodie sin before God. We must have a speciall cair of restoiring God to his honour; and, therefore, how sicke soever he be, he can write a letter of his full dimission and repentance, utherwayes let him be deposed and excommunicat.

Lowdown said—Howbeit he had sent a formall dimission to the Assembly, it is necessar to use deposition, and, I thinke, what is done heir should be drawn up and sent to him, that he may make his dimission formall, and may restoir what he hes wrongouslie detained pertaining to the Kirk.

After much reasoning to and fro,

The Moderatour stated the question—Whether or not upon his dimission, which is singular, he shall be deposed, not only from his Prelacie, but from all function of the Ministerie? Then all the rolles were called, and all the Assemblie except 20, resolves upon this—That he shall be deposed from his Episcopacie; yea, and from the exercise of all Ministeriall function, till such tyme as he satisfie by his paines these who are sent unto him by the Assembly, whose names follow:—Mr Robert Murray, Mr John Robertson, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Petrie, Mr George Muschet, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Menzies, Mr George Symmer, Mr John Robisoune; the quorum fyve. The provyding of the kirk of Lyneydors, and a competent allowance for it was referred to the Presbitrie.

[Bishop of Cathnes.]

Then the Articles against the pretended Bishop of Cathnes was given in. After the reading thereof, there was some of his noble friends desyred that he might be continowed in the functione of the Ministerie since he hes acknowledged the Assembly and subseryvit the Covenant.

Lowdown said—He behooved to be deposed and suspendit from any function of the Ministerie, till he take him to a particular flock.

The Shirreff of Teviotdaile said—That he was willing to have tane him to the Ministerie, but the High Commission put him from it, and would either have him keip his Bishoprick or quyte them both. Lykewayes, within this short tyme, there was a fast indicted for the good of the same caus, and Mr James Burnett, the Minister of the Paroche, would not keip the fast. He keipit it in his house, and a number of the Paroche resorted to him, and he may doe good in that Paroche, for the people hes a love to him, and a great detest to their Minister.

Moderatour said—There is a difficultie in it. We cannot for the present interpret him to be a Minister, becaus he hes not a particular flock; and so it would seeme the greatest favour the Assemblie can do to him is this—that upon his repentance they may admitt him to a particular flock.

Lowdown declaired that when the High Commission put him from the Ministerie, he gave in ane protestation against Mr James _____, whom they put in his place; and there is 50 in Jedburgh that subseryvit the protestation.

The Moderatour said—The question is concerning his deposition; for I thinke ye doubt not of his Episcopall office; but whether he shall be deposed from all function of the Ministerie?

Then the rolles were called, and the whole Assemblie agried upon his deposition from his Episcopall office; and, upon his repentance, to be admitted to the Ministerie.

Mr Andrew Rollock, Minister at Duncce, declaired that he had ignorantlie subseryved the Bishops declinatour; and now, having gotten light, he was content to pass from it.

Moderatour said—There are a number of the Bishops who are ordained to be excommunicat, and now we are to consider the tyme when it shall be done—the persones that shall pronounce the sentence—the place where—and the maner how it shall be done; or whether the sentence shall be delayed any longer or not?

Lowdown said—The delaying of the sentence would seeme to be verie prejudiciall. For these that are absent out of this toun, there is no appearance that we shall get them to deall with; neither is there any appeairance of their repentance as yet who hes subscrivet the declinatour: And becaus we know not what interruptions may be shortlie, it is good to make use of the occasion which God, of his great mercie, offers to red his Church of them; and it is the justice of God recompenceing their pride, on the ane hand, and the trumpet of his mercie to recall them to repentance, if it be possible, on the uther hand; and so the delay of such a good worke seemes to be verie dangerous. As for the place, where ye are seemes to be verie fitt; and for the persone, doubtlesse it must be yourselfe who is the mouth of this Assembly, to pronounce the Judgement of the Assembly against them, that this Kirk may be delyvered from the thraldome it was in.

The Moderatour said—There was no practice of the Kirk for that, and that Bishop Adamson was not excommunicat by the Moderatour of the Assembly.

Nevertheless, the Assembly desyred that the Moderatour himselfe would take it upon him, and that he should deliyver a Sermon in the same church the morne at Ten hours, and let them be excommunicat. This was concludit be the consent of the whole Assemblie.

Mr James Cunninghame, Minister at Sum . . . oke, gave in a Bill to the Assembly, desyreing earnestlie that he might be transported, for many weightie reasones, such as his age and unabilitie to travell throw that parochie, being 9 or 10 myles boundes, and having small meanes of provision; that for thir thrie yeares he gat no stipend, and many uther pressing difficulties which the Assemblie fand to be truc, and granted him libertie of transportatioun, by advyce of the Presbytrie, when God sends occasion.

[Deposition of the Prelates.]

[In the MS. from which this report is transcribed, the Sermon by the Moderator and Act of Deposition of the Bishops, appointed at the former sederunt, are entirely omitted. As, however, that was one of the most solemn and important proceedings of the Assembly 1638, we deem it iucumbent on us to supply the void; and we have been so fortunate as to become possessed of the means for doing so. In the year 1762, Alexander Henderson's Sermon, including the Act of Deposition, was published in a small pamphlet, entitled, "The Bishops' Doom," of which the whole title and a prefatory note are subjoined;* and although the particular record from whence that publication was taken is not specified in the note, we find its tenor corroborated by Mr David Laing's MS. Report, formerly referred to (p. 128), in which the Sermon is given. These two copies we have accordingly collated, and what follows, therefore, may be considered as substantially correct.]

* "The Bishops' Doom. A Sermon preached before the General Assembly which sat at Glasgow anno 1638, on occasion of pronouncing the Sentence of the greater Excommunication against eight of the Bishops, and deposing or suspending the other six. By Mr Alexander Henderson, moderator of that and several subsequent Assemblies. With a Postscript on the present decay of church-discipline. Edinburgh: Printed by John Gray and Gavin Alston. Sold by them at their printing-house in Jackson's close, and by W. Gray bookseller in the east corner of the Exchange. MDCCLXII.

"Advertisement.—It must be observed in justice to the venerable author of the following sermon, that by the journal of the general assembly 1638, he had only allowed him from the evening of the preceding day to study that sermon. His thoughts, amidst such a multiplicity of work as was then on his hand, behoved also to be much perplexed; and his sermon, though subjoined at the end of that journal, seems only to have been taken down in the time of delivery by an amanuensis. Yet, mank as such a fragment is, it seems worthy of being preserved; and the same will, it is hoped, prove useful not only for vindicating the practice of that assembly, but also for stirring up others to attempt a faithful discharge of the like duty, upon grounds equally relevant, as necessary not only for reclaiming the impenitent, but also as an indispensable testimony to the truth of our Lord's dominion over the Church."

SERMON.

Psalm ex. 1.

"The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

For taking up the meaning of this text, we need only have recourse to a commentary that the Lord himself makes upon it in the gospel, Mark, xii. 36: for he asked of the Pharisees concerning the Messias, Whose son is he?—they answered, The son of David. He replies, If he be the son of David, How is it, then, that David, by the Holy Ghost, calls him his Lord? And so we have here a testimony of the Spirit speaking in David, a thousand years before Christ came in the flesh, that the Word would be made flesh, and that he would set up his tent and tabernacle amongst us; for so is the word that is used in the 1st of the gospel according to St John rendered; and that amongst the children of men he should drink of the brook, i. e., stiff, bitter things, as is expressed afterward in the psalm; and that he having done so, would be exalted above all creatures in heaven, and, in the fulness of his glory and majesty, sit down at the right hand of the Father, and should from thence rule and dispose upon the affairs of his Church magnificently and mightily, according to the worthiness and excellency of so great a king and so glorious a majesty, till at last all his enemies, both foreign and intestine or domestic, should be brought low, and made his footstool; and as they had trodden upon the holy blood of the Son of God, he should tread upon them, and pour shame and confusion upon them, and utter banishment from his face for ever.

Right honourable and well-beloved, we are but short-sighted naturally; we look upon persons and things that are present, and cannot look afar off to things that are past, neither have we a very great prospect to look forward to things that are to come. And as our sight is short, so it is weak also: if we but look upon things here below, our eyes are soon dazzled with the splendour of them, although, when all is done, their lustre be not great; we cannot get in with our sight to things that are above. But if we will take the right view of this text, it would help us both in the one and in the other; for you see it leads from that which is past to that which is to come.

"The Lord said." This hath an eye to the time to come. There is a time coming when all the enemies of God, the most proud and insolent of them, shall be made the footstool of God, shall be brought low, and made base and contemptible. And it helps us to lift up our eyes from things on earth to things above, especially to Christ himself, who is in the highest heavens, at the top of glory and majesty, the right hand of the Father. "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand," &c.

In these words, beloved, we may see three parts, which determine our method of speaking. The first is the calling and ordination of Christ unto his kingdom: "The Lord said unto my Lord." The second is the dignity and glory to which he is exalted in his kingdom: "Sit thou at my right hand." The third is that glory and triumph that shall be manifested in him at last: "And his enemies shall be made his footstool." I shall speak very shortly of these, because ye know preaching is not this day's principal exercise.

We begin with the first, the calling and ordination of Christ unto his kingdom: "The Lord said unto my Lord." Here ye would look first unto the saying and then unto the persons: "The Lord said unto my Lord." Ye know we used to observe, that there be two sorts of speech or sayings: one that is secret within our breasts, and which we keep in silence within ourselves, as long as we think convenient; another is the expression of our thoughts, when we think meet to make them known. Ye know there is one uses to be called λογος ενδιαθετος προφορικος. Like unto these two, there is in the Lord, (1.) His purpose, counsel, and decree, kept secret within himself. (2.) There is the expression, or the manifestation and proclamation of his purposes and decrees unto the children of men, after what manner and in what measure it seems good unto his wisdom. Of the first, the second psalm speaks, "I have anointed him to be King;" and there the reason is given—"Thou art my son," &c.; then there is the revelation of it—"I have declared the decree." Many times was this said before Christ's coming in the flesh, and the prophets are full of it. I need not spend time on it, especially in such an audience as this. Now, this is laid down as the ground, "The Lord hath said:" his decree, prophecy, and predictions are laid down as a ground of this princely office of the kingdom of Christ, and of that high glory and dignity to which he is exalted; for what the Lord has said, it must be done of necessity.

There is a very great difference between the sayings of men and the sayings of God; for man's sayings are nothing else but the expression of his thoughts and affections of his mind; but, when the Lord speaks, he not only expresses what he will have done, but also there is an effectual power accompanies his saying, that cannot be resisted, but must of necessity come to pass. Again, when we speak, we must speak to them that are, and that have ears to hear, and understanding to conceive, or else our speech is in vain. But, when the Lord speaks, it is otherwise; he speaks to them that are not, and makes them to be; he speaks to them that have nothing of the second creation, and, by his Spirit, he creates it in them; by his speech, he makes darkness to be light, he speaks to them that are dead in sin, and by his Spirit puts life in them, new sense and understanding. Thirdly, Our speeches and sayings have need to be confirmed by reasons and arguments; and, therefore, we support them as strongly as we can. But when it pleases God to speak, he speaks so as he needs no argument: he bids a man leave his trade, and follow him; and the man will never ask the reason, because he convinces him fully, and persuades him irresistibly. Fourthly, It is in vain for us to speak to any that have no ability or power to do what we desire. But the Lord will bid them do that has no power, because, with the commandment, he infuses strength for the performance of it.

It is a good ground that is brought here of the exaltation, dominion, and dignity of Christ—"The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou," &c.—for he having said it, who can say against it? who can resist it? The powers of hell, nor any powers in heaven, or in earth, suppose they were all joined together, cannot obstruct him. If the Lord hath said it, it must come to pass. Christ must be exalted, and his Kirk established also. Ye know that in the 2d of Daniel, the prophet, speaking of the kings of the earth, prophecies of another kingdom that Jesus will set up; and he sets it up with this promise and quality, "that it shall never be destroyed;" he that sets it up, shall uphold it; as sure as it is once exalted and set up, it shall never be destroyed, albeit the devil, and all his accomplices and sophisters, with all their wit, were against it. Dan. vii., 13, 14:—"I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like unto the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days; and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Luke i. 33:—"He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And, Acts ii. 36:—"He hath made him both Lord and Christ." Then, beloved, let us build upon this ground against all the devices, stratagems, and conspiracies of the world. Certainly he is Lord and King, and he shall endure so world without end.

It were a good thing for us, if we could learn to take up the conjunction that is between God and his Son Jesus Christ in his kingdom. I speak it, beloved, for this cause, that there is a kind of natural theology that men pride themselves in, that they gather partly from the works of God, which a natural man may observe and consider, and partly from natural reason. But this is not all; we must take heed, that although it cannot be denied that there is a natural sort of theology, yet we must advert that there is no natural kind of Christianity; for the natural man, by looking on all the works of God, and blowing up the sparks of nature all that he can, shall never be able to know Christ, or receive him, before it be revealed and proclaimed in the gospel; nay, when he hears it, he will condemn it for the greatest foolishness in the world. Therefore we would not please ourselves with this natural knowledge of God, but seek to know God in Christ. This is true Christianity. He that knows not Christ knows not God; he that resists Christ fights against God; he that believes not in Christ—please himself as he will—he believes not in God; and he that obeys the voice of Christ obeys the voice of God. I am assured many men, both in church and commonwealth, and many that preach theology, and perhaps Christianity, to others, consider not this, but please themselves in a natural sort of knowledge; and they go easily through with their forms; and all because there is nothing in nature to oppose the work they are about; but the children of God find a great difficulty—the infidelity of their heart, and other-like ills, fight against it.

Had the men who are to be censured and excommunicated the knowledge of Jesus Christ—notwithstanding that some of them preached him often, and all of them sometimes—I verily believe they could not have gone on so long in this course, and stood it out with such obstinacy and contumacy. Therefore let us learn, by their example, to search for the knowledge of God through Christ; for they are so joined together, as there can be no separation; and as they are joined betwixt themselves so they must be joined in our knowledge. It is not possible for you to know God but by the knowledge of his Son; and if we know not the consolation, virtue, and power of Christ, we cannot know the comforts, power, and virtue of God himself, but must remain strangers to the knowledge of God; for there is no comfort, virtue, nor power for life everlasting, but only through Christ himself.

"The Lord said unto my Lord." You see here again, that the ground of the calling of Christ unto his princely office is from the saying of God—"The Lord said unto my Lord." As he was called of God to be a prophet and a priest, so it was God that called him also to be a King. These three offices are all lawful offices in themselves. And likewise he was lawfully called unto it; for the Lord said it. And these two things, beloved, are necessary for a man that undertakes a calling. One is, that the office itself be lawful, and have warrant from God that the Lord has said, I will be served in such a place, and in such a function and calling. 2. When the office itself is lawful, a man must be lawfully called unto it. For ye know there is a difference between these two: sometimes the office may be lawful, and the man not lawfully called to that lawful office; and sometimes it comes to pass that men are called to unlawful offices; not that any man can be lawfully called to an unlawful office—and this is especially true in churchmen and the office-bearers of the Church. God hath permitted greater diversity of offices, and administration of these offices, to be in the commonwealth, than in his Kirk; because in the government of a state or commonwealth, there may be sundry forms of government and administration of justice, and all lawful. Kings may have governors and others acting under them; but it must not be so in the house of God. All the offices in God's house, from the highest to the lowest, if I may lawfully say highest and lowest, must have a warrant from God; and men cannot say they are called of God, except their calling be from God, and have warrant from divine authority.

Beloved, I put no question but there are divers amongst us that have had no such warrant for our entry to the Ministry as were to be wished. And although the calling itself be not only lawful, but laudable, necessary, and commanded of God, yet, alas! how many of us have rather sought the kirk, than the kirk has sought us? how many have rather gotten the kirk given to them, than they have been given to the kirk for the good thereof? And yet there must be a great difference put between these that have lived many years in an unlawful office without warrant of God, and therefore must be abominable in the sight of God; and these who, in some respects, have entered unlawfully, and with an ill conscience, and afterwards have come to see the evil of this, and to do what in them lies to repair the injury. The one is like a marriage altogether unlawful, and null in itself; the other is like a marriage in some respects unlawful and inexpedient, but that may be mended by the diligence and fidelity of the parties in doing their duty afterward; so should it be with us who entered lately into the calling of the Ministry: if there were any faults or wrong steps in our entry—as who of us are free?—acknowledge the Lord's calling of us, if we have since got a seal from heaven of our Ministry, and let us labour with diligence and faithfulness in our office, and particularly to be faithful in this, to get them expelled and put out of the Church whose office is not from God, such as these men against whom we are to proceed with the censures of the Kirk.

Now I come to speak of the persons. "The Lord said unto my Lord." If ye will cast your eyes upon the words, ye will perceive that there are three ranks of persons here. There is, 1. THE LORD; he that was, and is, and shall be for ever. 2. There is my Lord Jesus Christ, who, after a special manner, is the King and Sovereign Lord of his Kirk, whom he has redeemed with his own blood. 3. There is a king here, David, who calls him my Lord: "The Lord said unto my Lord." David calls Christ his Lord. And I may add a fourth, which may be understood by analogy, and that is the people of God under David. And thus ye shall draw out the line the full length, and make the subordination perfect, consisting, 1. Of the Lord above, to whom there is no match or equal, whose will is an absolute law unto all. And although men curiously dispute, if there be any cause, ground, or reason of the will of God, there is no question but in God himself there is a reason; but looking downward to us, the highest reason is the will of God—he who is divine and unsearchable Wisdom, is a rule for himself of his own commandments; but for us there is not another reason but his will; for he stands absolute in his sovereignty, none above, nor any equal to him. 2. Then the next degree comes: he who is here called my Lord, Jesus Christ the Son of God, whose will is full and perfect, conform to the supreme will of God; and there can be no more a division between the will of Christ and the will of God, than there can be a division of two natures in the person of Jesus Christ. Now, as these two are sure, 1st, The sovereignty of God in his will; and, 2dly, The Son of God perfectly conform to him; were it not a happy thing if kings, and princes, and superior powers would all strive to have their laws and actions, especially and principally in the worship of God, conform to the will of Jesus Christ, and these to stand in their own place of subordination under Jesus Christ, and then the fourth will come in very well—to wit, the people of God: first, the Lord; then Jesus Christ, his son; next, the king, prince, or supreme magistrate; and the people under them submitting themselves to their king and prince. And thus ye may perceive the right line in the course of government, and the right way of subordination; and there is no other right way beside this. And whenever men begin to go out of line, and forget their own subordination, then these that are under them become no way subject to them, because they go out of the right order; but they must look to them that are above them, and hold their eye on these, and so they will keep the right line. "He that follows me," says Christ, "must forsake father and mother;" then, when the father and mother go out of line, we must not follow them, because we are bound to subordination unto God. In like manner, if a prince or a magistrate, who had such subordination from God, depart out of the line, and command things unlawful, shall the people obey them, and go out likewise from under the line? No, no; whoever departs out of this line, cannot have peace and protection of God, and the sweet influences that comes down amongst to all that keep themselves under this line; for the blessing of God comes down the straight line of subordination, and they keeping the line are sure to get a blessing. So did Daniel, he held his eye upon this line; and when Darius the king goes out of the line, he is forbidden by the God of heaven to follow the king, but directs his eye upon the line to Jesus Christ. Beloved, it is now counted jarring contention, and a turbulent humour, for men to refuse subjection to every thing that superiors please to command: but ye may see clearly what is obedience, and what is disobedience: it is not obedience to follow the humours of men, that goes out of this line; but this is obedience, when they obey them that are above them in the line. Therefore we should look to two things, when we hold our eye on this vista— 1. We should consider whether these that are above us have their calling from God or not, and if they be our lawful superiors; and if not, then have they no place in this line; for there is here God, Christ, king, and the people; and so unlawful superiors have no place here. 2. If they be our lawful superiors, look if their commandments be lawful: for in so far as their office is unlawful, they go out of the line; and if they be unlawful superiors, we owe them no obedience: and this day's work is to delete the names of such superiors out of this line. Again, when our lawful superiors, to whom we owe obedience, command what is unlawful, we are not bound to obey them. Therefore, let all and every one of us, as we would that the drops of the sweet influences of God's spirit should come down upon us, hold ourselves under the line, otherwise the blessing shall fall upon them that keep the line, but never a drop upon these that are transgressors, or goes out of it.

We come, in the next place, to speak unto the dignity and dominion unto which our Lord Jesus is exalted—"Sit thou at my right hand." As I told you before, it is not my purpose to enter upon any large discourse, especially on this, which is so amply expressed in the Scripture—viz., the sitting of Christ at the right hand of God. Only a word or two, so far as concerns the present purpose. 1. You see it is said here, "Sit thou at my right hand," or, as is expressed in the fifth verse, "is at thy right hand;" which seems to be opposite—for here Christ is at the right hand of God, but there God promises to be at the right hand of Christ. And this is very comfortable to consider, if we take it up right; for man is in a twofold condition that is very different. Sometimes he is at peace and quietness, rest and ease, and in glory and honour; and then, in this case, the right hand is the best place. I need not clear this; for I think many here understand it perfectly. Sometimes, again, man is in trouble and distress, in great danger and fear, and then it is otherwise; he has need of one to be at his right hand to help him, as in the 5th verse. And this is very comfortable, that, in the time of trouble and distress, the Lord is at thy right hand to keep thee, and guard thee with his right hand. But when the time of honour, reward, and recompense comes, then the Lord, as he sets down his Son at his right hand, so he will give every one their own degree, honour, and glory. And this was it that God promised to Abraham—"I will be thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward, to defend thee, and be at thy right hand in the time of all thy troubles and distress, and will not desert thee." Again, on the other part, when the time of honour and recompense comes, "I will be thy rich reward, and will set thee on my right hand as sheep, when the goats are left." This is not the ambition and pride of churchmen, in striving at the right hand of kings, &c. No, no; and yet this hath been the ground of meikle woe and mischief to the Church of God. Ye will find, and it is worthie of observation, that seldom or never almost does our Lord speak of his Cross, and of his sufferings in the gospel, unto his apostles and disciples, telling them that he is to suffer, but his disciples propone this question, "What place shall we have in thy kingdom?" imagining an earthly kingdom; which surely was a prognostication that the ambition and pride of kirkmen should be the greatest enemies that ever the Cross of Christ should have. And it is not possible for men, when the pride of their heart and ambition are seeking their own greatness, and wealth, and honour in the world, and how to make their houses great after them, and how to make their children live in delight and wealth—I say it is not possible they can esteem of the Cross of Christ as they ought to do. Such churchmen as these, if Christ were in the flesh again, would think they would be rather his masters than his servants, because they aspire after dominion and dignity, and have only a natural sort of theology, whereof I did speak before, but are ignorant of Christianity. Therefore let us strive in all our troubles to have the Lord on our right hand, as in the 5th verse of this psalm, that he may guard us against troubles.

Now, this sitting at the right hand of God is a very high degree of majesty, glory, and dominion, given unto Christ above all the creatures, above all the angels, for they all acknowledge him to be King and Lord. To adventure on describing what particulars this doth contain were a forgetting myself, and those to whom I am speaking. Only I must say, a pity it is and lamentable, that he being exalted after so bitter sufferings and so great abasement, we should not ascribe to him his own due, his majesty, and glory, and dominion, as we ought; and that we cannot learn to entertain communion between him who is at the right hand of God and our souls—for surely there is a communication between him and every believing soul: a pity it is, I say, that it should be so insensible to us, or we so senseless that we cannot conceive or apprehend it. Oh, what a comfort it were to us to have the beams of that sun of righteousness, with light and heat refreshing our souls; and that we would acknowledge his dominion and government in our hearts! This were very comfortable if we were not strangers to this communion with Christ, but were sending up our desires to heaven, and receiving answers from our Advocate. The men of this age are gone so far on, that they think this authority and dominion of Christ is exercised over the visible Church only in secret, and spiritually; but for the government thereof in the external order, they imagine it is committed unto men, especially to civil men, and their authority, which seems to me to be not very far from blasphemy; for it is strange that any man should imagine the Lord would have his own house without order, that holds all the world in order, and exercises a particular providence in ordering every creature and subjecting them to one another; for there is a perfect government to be learned out of the word of God, and you must not dispute what ye think the best form whereby our Church should be ruled, or that any country may reduce the government to another form. But it is the question, what government Christ and his Apostles have set down? Neither is it to be questioned whether it agrees with reason or not; but whether it agrees with the pattern shewn in the Mount. And this right government that he hath established, if we had eyes to see it, we would perceive it to be the most orderly, and the most beautiful and amiable thing in the world, that any lover of wisdom would be enamoured with it. And surely if wisdom could be seen with bodily eyes, it would have many lovers; so if this government that Christ has established in his Church were seen with the eyes of the soul, it would have many to reverence it. But I may not now insist to speak of the order and government of the Church of God. 2. As the order is beautiful, so is it powerful to keep out many corruptions. And surely it is not possible that Christ's kingdom can be ruled with another order than Christ has established in his house. And surely heresy and false religion, and an enumeration of all evils, will come into the house of God, if that be not ruled according to his word. And, 3. As it is powerful, so it is profitable for advancement of piety, religion, and righteousness. And I am sure these that have not seen Assemblies before will understand how profitable this Assembly is unto our Church, when every man is heard patiently till he speak his mind ; and then is a contribution of every gift in a nation joining together and making up a composition of an Assembly. Let it be judged by any man whether the Episcopal power be likest God's own order in his house ; and I put no question but the Kirk of Scotland will be found to be the Church of Christ, and the Antichristian Church shall be found to acknowledge it. 4. As it is a beautiful, a powerful, a profitable order ; so it is very pliable also, or of such a nature that it can well agree with Monarchical government, or any other sort of government in a Commonwealth. Therefore it is but a false aspersion cast upon this order and government of the house of God, to say that it is an enemy to Monarchical government, while as there is none so suitable thereto as it. Oh, say they, there is nothing but confusion in Presbyteries, where there is an equality. To these we would say, are not the Senators of the College of Justice all equal ? and are not the Privy-Counsellors equal ? And shall we say, because they are equal, they cannot consist with Monarchical government ? Nay, Presbyteries, Synods, Provincial and General Assemblies, may as well stand with Monarchy as the College of Justice, the Council, or any other judgment-seat : yea, in all these there is a parity, and yet it occasions no confusion. They will say there are some few that rule all the rest, and that is Episcopal tyranny, which, alas ! is a great mistaking of the gifts of God ; for when God furnishes one with gifts above another, why should not use be made of that gift for the good of the whole Church of God ?

Now for the time to come : "Till I make thine enemies thy footstool." Because I am loth to detain you, I will speak but a word of this by way of application, rather than explanation. You know, beloved, besides the professed enemies of Christ, he hath intestine and domestic enemies. And these men that we are to sentence this day, and to give out the censure of this reverend Assembly upon, have proven themselves the enemies of God and of his Son Jesus Christ, these many years bygone. We may say boldly, they have been the greatest enemies that Christ has had in this kingdom ; for, 1. They have been friends to the enemies of Christ, the Antichrist. Who is Antichrist but the proudest and most opposite enemy that Christ has ? They would not let him be called the Antichrist. 2. They have been friends to the Antichristian Church ; for they would not have the Roman Church called Antichristian, but have disputed for her, and maintained affirmatively that she is the true Church. And ye all know how Papists and the supports of Antichrist have been preferred to honest Ministers, the servants of Jesus Christ. 3. They have proceeded according to the principles that the enemies of Christ have followed since the beginning ; for you see in the first chapter of Exodus how the enemies of God did with his people : "Come," say they, "and let us deal wisely, lest they multiply and increase." They began with a piece of very barbarous cruelty against them, and used the utmost of their power against the people of God, never considering whether they were the people of God or not, nor considering that their multiplication was from the blessing of God. And such have these men done in times past, striving, by all means possible, that the people of God should not multiply, using all the policy and wiles they could, whereby there should be no more any people of God in the land, but only a number or naked professors ; for there was no man that professed the power of religion, but he was ridiculed and mocked as a Puritan. Ye know, in the ninth chapter of the Judges, there is a maxim or principal rule of policy laid down, "Whether is it better for you that all the sons of Jerubbaal reign over you, or that one only reign over you ?" And this is commonly opposed unto us. It is better, say they, that Bishops rule, than that every Minister be a Bishop and ruler ; and therefore they proceeded according to that craft men did propose before them. But now, blessed be our Lord that has taken the crafty in their own snare. Therefore, since we see it clearly that they follow such rules as God's enemies have kept from the beginning, shall we not count them our enemies ? And I add a fourth, surely they that are friends to the world, and follows the world, are enemies to Christ. And it is clear in their practice that they have followed the world ; for what is the world ? nothing but these three things, the lust of the eyes, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. Now, if any man will impartially consider their proceedings, ye shall find that they have followed the world and the lust of their eyes ; for they think if any man be eminent in gifts above others, or, in the course of their philosophy, quicker than others, and then acquire a better gift of learning than others, and better expressions, &c. ; such an one must not lie in the dust of contempt with his brethren ; nay, he must have pre-eminence. And, 2dly, then they must have better fare than ordinary, and fairer houses, &c. than others. And then, after that, they begin to despise the calling of the Ministry as a base thing, and they cannot abide to sit three or four hours catechising a number of landward people ; and they choose rather to attend the court, or some nobleman. And thus, as before they followed the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, so now they follow the lust of the flesh. And it is these three that has made so many Ministers to become unprofitable and rotten members, such as these men are whom we are this day to cut off. But time being spent, I will proceed no further, but go on to the pronouncing of the sentence of this honourable and reverend Assembly against the pretended Prelates.

By the appointment of this General Assembly, so solemnly convened, the like whereof has not been heard of at any time in this land, that we know, there be divers censures to be inflicted upon these pretended Bishops.

We shall first enter with the gravest and weightiest censure of excommunication. The General Assembly hath declared, that they think the persons following worthy of this censure—viz., Mr John Spottiswood, pretended Archbishop of St Andrews ; Mr Patrick Lindsay, pretended Archbishop of Glasgow ; Mr John Maxwell, pretended Bishop of Ross ; Mr Thomas Sydserf, pretended Bishop of Galloway ; Mr Walter Whiteford, pretended Bishop of Brechin ; Mr David Lindsay, pretended Bishop of Edinburgh ; Mr James Wedderburn, pretended Bishop of Dumblane ; and Mr Adam Balcantyne, pretended Bishop of Aberdeen.

I need not inform the honourable and reverend members of this Assembly, for whose cause they are thus censured, for they are well acquainted with it. But, for these that are not well acquainted with their outbreakings, I will cause read a paper unto you, at the hearing whereof I think your heart shall quake, your hair shall stand, and your flesh creep, when ye hear tell that Christians, let be Churchmen, who reckon themselves the chiefest and most eminent men in the Church, and call themselves the pastor of pastors, should have fallen out in such foul acts as these are. [Here the preacher gave out of his hand an abstract of the proof against the Bishops, which having been read publicly by the Assembly clerk, the minister proceeded.] Thus, ye see, they have fallen foully by their abusing and ruining the Kirk—by their consenting to unlawful acts, and voting in Parliament, without consent or warrant of the Church—in not rendering an account of their proceedings to the Church—in wareing on their riotousness and ambition the emoluments of the Church—in dilapidating their benefices—in neglecting the ministerial duties over a particular flock—in usurping and tyrannising over all Presbyteries, Synodal and General Assemblies—in suspending, depriving, fining, and confining faithful, painful Ministers—in relaxing excommunicated Papists—interdicting morning and evening prayers—countermanding synods, and falsifying their acts—moderating and tyrannising in General Assemblies—in causing great disorder and confusion to fall out by their private marriages without proclamation, even contrary to a Popish Council at Trent—in troubling of professors for their maintenance of the doctrine and discipline of the Church—in refusing to admit Ministers except they would first be deacons—in preaching heresy and corrupt doctrine, Popery, Arminianism, &c.—in exacting unlawful oaths of intrants, usurping of civil dignities before the peers of the kingdom—receiving consecration to the unwarrantable offices of Episcopacy—by tyrannising over the laws, liberties, jurisdictions, persons, and estates, both of the Church and Churchmen in the High Commission—by bringing in innovations in the worship of God, such as, the superstitious Service-Book, tyrannous Book of Canons, and Book of Ordination—by their loose and profane lives—their excessive and extraordinary drinking—filthy dancings—common swearing by the name of God—profaning of the Sabbath—profane speeches—and excessive gaming, contemning the public ordinances of the Church—bribery—simony—adultery—slandering of the Church—and stirring up of authority against these who could not go alongst with them. For these, and many other gross transgressions and slanders, at length expressed, and clearlie proven in their process, which is not seemly to be named in this place; and, instead of their repentance, adding to all these evils extreme contempt of this Church, declining and protesting against this honourable, reverend, and duly constitute Assembly, they have incurred, and justly deserve, this fearful sentence of excommunication.

Before we go to the pronouncing of this terrible sentence, the like whereof has not been heard in a land, because we never have heard of such matters in our Kirk, you shall hear particularly the sentence which the Assembly hath ordained to be declared and pronounced against the said pretended Bishops.

[Here the Moderator read the Sentence, which will be found in page 26 of these Records.]

After which the Moderator said—You, who are the congregation of God's people, are called of God to concur in this action. You have heard the ordinance and sentence that this reverend Assembly have given out against the eight persons before named; and you may easily believe their warrant so to do, by the crimes you have heard, which have been proved to the full. If it had been needful, and that time would have admitted, you should have heard the hail process, whereof the crimes you have heard mentioned are but a small part; for ever the further that we searched, the fouler guiltiness was found in them. And surely when any professor of the Christian religion, or member of the visible Church, especially those who profess themselves Ministers of Christ, be found guilty of such things as are laid to thir men's charge; and add thereto contumacy, yea great obstinacy, as these men have done, he deserves no less than excommunication, though it be a very terrible sentence. Ye know that the members of this Assembly do nothing at their own hand, neither is it presumption that moves them to do it, for they are commanded of God, and, being commanded, they dare not be so bold as refuse. As there is a necessity laid upon us to preach the gospel, so is there a necessity laid upon us to pronounce this sentence. Ye know, in chap. xviii. of St Matthew's gospel, our Lord's commandment is, "If he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican;" that is to say, account him as a Turk, or a profane man, a stranger to the household of faith. And 1st Cor. v., St Paul commands the Church of Corinth to cast out the unhappy man that had been guilty of incest; and we have the promise of Jesus Christ, who hath given us this authority, that what we bind on earth shall be also bound in heaven. And, for as mean men as we Ministers are, it shall be found that our sentence shall be ratified; and those who will observe shall see it, that we are sent to Glasgow to pronounce this sentence. Neither is this a new thing in the practice of the Church; from the beginning this sentence was in use. When Adam fell into the great and high sin of disobedience against God's first command, he was cast out of Paradise, which was an emblem of the Church of God. And you will find, under the law, there are many particular precepts and statutes, excluding unclean and leprous persons from eating of the passover. All which represent, by analogy, this sentence under the gospel. In the New Testament there are several examples likewise. 1st Tim. i., 20. Hymeneus and Philetus are registrate to the end of the world, and branded with a note of reprobation, whom Paul delivered unto Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme. And you may not think but as we have commandment, promise, and practice for our warrant, there is also great necessity for it; for, in such a case as this, God cannot be honoured otherwise. Were it not dishonourable to God to have men guilty of such crimes going to the pulpit to preach to his people? Yea, it were enough to make people loathe the articles of their faith, to hear such men as these take the Covenant of God in their mouths; and therefore it is expedient that the Church of God be purged of such foul scandals as it hath been polluted with in these men's persons. And this is profitable likewise for the faithful, that they may learn to be wise and holy, and that they fall not into the same faults, lest the same censure come upon them. And truly if the Lord had directed to another remedy for these men, the Kirk of Scotland would have been glad to use it; but there is no other known meau to keep them from the condemnation of the devil, for the mortifying of their flesh, and saving of their souls, than this.

And, as you see it is warrantable, necessary, and profitable on the matter; it is likewise warrantable and necessary as to the manner. For these and the like faults, the Bishops own tyrannous canons ordain excommunication to be pronounced ipso facto. Next, you that please to read the Book of Common Order before the Psalm Book, will find that summar excommunication was appointed by the Kirk of Scotland, in some cases. But we are not to account this summar excommunication; for it is above a year since these men were summoned by the many supplications, bills, and complaints, that were given into the Council-Table for the superstition and idolatry they brought into the worship of God; for the tyranny they brought into the government of the Church, and for the heresy they brought in upon doctrine; and so, all this time, they have got public warning from the Kirk. And, besides all this, they have given in a declination and protestation against the Kirk of Scotland, and obstinately refuse to hear her; and, therefore, they justly deserve to be accounted as heathens and publicans.

It rests now, before pronouncing the sentence of this reverend and honourable Assembly, that we should call upon God that he may be pleased to join his divine approbation to that which we are to pronounce, that it may be seen by the world to be ratified in heaven.

Great Lord of the heavens and of the earth, who does in them both what seems good in thy own sight—great King and Lawgiver, in thy own church—God eternal and glorious in thy self, but merciful and compassionate to thy people—we, thy servants and children, do again present ourselves before thy Majesty. (The concern of the congregation increasing as the awful part drew near, the amanuensis could not distinctly transcribe more of this very fervent prayer.)

Prayer being ended, the Moderatour pronounced the sentence of excommunication in these words:—

Since the eight persons before-mentioned have declared themselves strangers to the communion of saints, to be without hope of life eternal, and to be slaves of sin, therefore we—the people of God, assembled together for this cause—and I, as their mouth, in the name of the ETERNAL GOD, and of his SON the LORD JESUS CHRIST, according to the direction of this Assembly, do excommunicate the said eight persons from the participation of the Sacraments, from the communion of the visible Church, and from the prayers of the Church; and, so long as they continue obstinate, discharges you all, as ye would not be partakers of their vengeance, from keeping any religious fellowship with them; and thus give them over into the hands of the devil, assuring you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that except their repentance be evident, the fearful wrath and vengeance of the God of Heaven shall overtake them even in this life, and, after this world, everlasting vengeance.

Beloved, let us not think that this fearful sentence is merely the wind of a man's voice; surely these unhappy men shall find the truth of it. It is true a farther blindness of mind, and hardness of heart, is one part of the execution of this sentence; but it may be that the Lord of Heaven shall kythe some sensible judgement upon some of them, whereby they may be made spectacles of his wrath, except they repent. Cain thought little, when he was cast out from the face of God, that any evil should befall him; and surely in a lamentable case was he when he lived, and miserable were his offspring and all that joined with him. So was it with cursed Ham and his whole race; they were rooted out, and the judgment of God came on them. In like manner, the fig-tree being cursed, it withered immediately away; and Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead at the first word of Peter. And though we do not say that miracles will be wrought—for God can execute his judgements in an ordinary or extraordinary manner, as best pleaseth him—we have cause to be grieved that there are such rotten members in the body of this Church; and, truly, it is ill with such Members when they are cut off. We speak only from the visible Church, because they declare themselves so obstinate to her, and acknowledge not their mother; and we mean only the destruction of the flesh that their souls may be saved in the day of the Lord; for it is the earnest desire of our hearts that the same may tend to their salvation. And I do verily believe that there are none here so willing to witness their excommunication as they would be to receive them again to the society of the Saints: and that the Lord may in mercy take the blot off them that is this day put upon them in justice.

Now you shall hear the Sentence of the Assembly on the rest of their colleagues.

[For the Sentence, see pages 27, 28.]

After which, the Moderator's strength being outworn, he only added—

Now you may perceive how circumspectly this Assembly have gone on, in giving out their judgement against these men according to the degrees of their guiltiness. Neither have they judged according to rumours or reports, nor yet by their own private knowledge, but have proceeded according to things that have been clearly proved, which makes us the rather be persuaded of God's approbation of our sentence. Therefore, let us again humble ourselves, and give thanks to our Lord for his presence with us, and entreat him for a further manifestation thereof, to the glory of his rich grace through Christ our Lord.—AMEN.

[Eodem Die.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

A noble Lord, my Lord Montrois, who did formerly undertake, for my Lord Wigtonne, that he would come and declair his meaning to the Assembly anent his subscribing to the Kings Covenant, did give in a letter of excuse, come from my Lord Wigtonne, wherein he declares that he is myndit to come to the Assembly whensoever his busines can permitt him, and give them all satisfaction.

After this, there was ane proces produced against Mr W<sup>m</sup> Annand, sometyme minister at Air, for maintaineing saints dayes, and many poynts of erroneous doctrine; especiallie in ane sermone taught at Glasgow, at ane synod 1637.

Mr John Fergusone and the Provost of Dumbartone, gave a large testimony of his scandalous lyfe and erroneous doctrine. Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—I know he subscrivit our Covenant, and after resedit from it, and so he proved a Proteus quem vertit se in omnes figuras. Therefore, let him be deposed, and then he will be in a figure that he was never in before.

The whole Assemblie did all agree that he should be deposed, and the way and order of his censure to be remitted to the Presbitrie of Air.

Mr Andro Rollock gave in his supplication, declaring that out of meir ignorance he had subscrivit the Declinatour, being brought up with the Constitution of England Church; but now, having gotten farther light from God, and intelligence from Acts of Generall Assemblies, with greiff of heart and conscience, declynes it altogether, and adheres to the acts and constitutions of this present Assembly; and, therefore, did earnestlie supplicat that he might deleit his name from the declinatour, which the Assembly grantit, upon condition that he should make public declaration of his recantation in his parochie kirk, which he willinglie condescendit unto.

Lowdown said that the favour granted to him who had been brought up in the Kirk of England, should not be a preparative to temporizers among ourselves, and so is pure negations, and uthers are prave dispositions, or wilfull ignorancee.

The Moderatour said—Fra we be delivered fra these diseases that hath oppressed the whole bodie, I hope we shall have greater health hereafter; for laying aside aimes the hope of Episeopall dignitie and the fear of Episeopall tyrannie, I hope men shall labour to be more carefull and faithfull in their ministrie; and since God hes moved your heart, Mr Rolloek, to deelyne your declinatour, I hope ye will not stand to give the most publiet declaration that can be; to whilk he willinglie condescendit.

After this Doctor Hamilton, procurator for the Bishops, was called on, and the proccs red and the probatiou thereof. Then the rolles were called.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—He hes bein verie strict in urging thir novations, and he hath bein verie officious et nimium diligencie in agitating: therefore, since the trie is eutt doune, let the woodbine fall with it and be buried: therefore let him be deposed.

The whole Assemblie voited the same.

The Moderatour said—Since this Assemblie finds that he deserves deposition, I, as the mouth of this Assembly, discharges him from all function of the ministerie, exercise of discipline, or administration of the Sacraments, and declaires his plice to be vacant; and ordaines him to make his repentance at Ed<sup>r</sup>, and if he disobey and did not passe from his declinatour, that they should proceed against him to excommunication.

Then there was a proccs given in against Mr Thomas M<sup>c</sup>Kenzie, Archdeane of the Chanric of Ros, who for his fornication, drunkennes, marrying of adulterers, &c. After the calling of the rolles, the Assembly voited to his deposition, and if he did not satisfie in repentance, that he should be excommunicat.

Mr George Musehet, minister of St Andrewes, called upon and his proccs red, and delayed till the next day.

After in calling upon the name of God,

Mr Johu Smart showed his Commission from Caithnes, to the end he might have voit in the Assembly in the plice of the former comissioner, who is gone hame siek, which was accepted, and his name written in the roll.

Then Mr Andrew Sheipheard declaired, that of meir ignorancee he had subseryvit the declinatour, and was deiplic humblit for his oversight, and protested solemnlie that except that ane oversight he did never, nor never would give way to any divisive motion; and therefore desyred earnestlie that he might raze his owne name out of the declinatour, which the Assemblie granted, and ordained him to make signification thereof in the pulpit of Dundie.

Moderatour said—It is expedient, if the Assembly think good, to appoynt Commissions through the Kingdome, for diseussing of Complaints and Lybells given in against Ministers. Then the Assembly appoynted Commissions in severall places of the Kingdome.

The Moderatour said—If the Church were well established in her owne power and jurisdiction, there could be no neid of such Commissions; therefore, let us labour to get the ancient jurisdiction of the Kirk restoired to its full power, and Presbitries, Provincially and Nationally Assemblies, to their owne jurisdictione: for the Generall Assemblies cannot give to the Commissions to consider new processes, but such as they cannot convenientlie decyde themselves, and in such partes of the countrie where Provincially Assemblies cannot be had.

The Moderatour said—We have beine treating hitherto of matters of verie great importanec, howbeit, it hes bein only a primitively sort of dealing; and now we are to fall upou positive acts. Therefore, I will intreat yow to renew your former patience in waiting upon a comfortable conclusion to this worke: for having banished out ane evill order, if we labour not for ane good order, it may justlie be said, ane evill order had beene better nor nane; and therefore resolve to stay till some good order be established, that ye may know how to earry yourselves in tymes comeing. Next, there is a verie great necessitie upon many considerations, that there be something done concerning the Confession of Faith, that hes beine subseryvit with the explanation of it; and concerning that Confession also subseryvit by some few at command of the Counsell; and it were good that some few were separat for it that if it were possible—

Lowdown said that there is something emergent now lately come foorth, that gives the greater reason to aveir to that poynt; for now, when the Assembly hes interpreted the Confession, to whom only it was referred as competent judge, and lyke wayes many of the honourable Counsell having declaired their meaning is to keepe in these things that are contrarie to the Assemblies explanation, so there is a necessitie of some further explanation for takinge away of all seruples.

In the meane tyme, my Lord Wigtonne came and declaired, in the face of the Assembly, that he had put his hand to the Confession of Faith out of a resolution to adhere to the religion in doctrine and discipline, as it was professed in 1580, when the Kirk was in puritie; and this I speake not out of ostentation, but from certaine knowledge and zeale to Gods eaus, and will adhere unto it whilst a droppe of blood remaines in my veins.

For the which declaration, the Moderatour and whole Assemblie rendered his Lordship heartie thankes, praying God to assist his Lordship so to doe.

After this the Moderatour said—I pereceive there is a universall regrait among Ministers who are put to the extraordinary charges by comeing from Orkney, Caithnes, Sutherland, and uther remote places, that their meane portione is not able to beare. Therefore, I desyre that some course may be taken how their charges may be provydit, that they may attend the Nationall Assemblies and uther meetings of the Kirk, since they have a great zeale to give a testimonie to the trueth. Therefore, I would desyre the Noblemen and Elders to consider of it; and I hope it shall not be interpreted to be bryberie where there hes bein too much in former pretendit Assemblies; and we are now stryving to returne to our old eustomes used before Episcopacie, some whereof we have begun—as this of Ruleing Elders to have pairt with us in guying the affaires of the Kirk, which how profitable a thing it is, may appeare by the much helpe that hes contributed to us this year past. Neither neid we feir thir usurpatione, since we hope for Generall Assemblies to beat doune corruptions of that kynd.

My Lord Lowdown said—It deserves to have a present course tane for it, and its eertane the Generall Assemblies is but the representative Kirk of this Kingdome. Everie Minister that comes heir, comes not as a Minister onlie, but representing the parochie or Presbitrie they come from; and therefore it were fitt that the Elders and parochie did beare the burdene of their charges.

Balmerino said—That was one of the overtures which they had to give in, and therefore would come in to be considered heirafter.

Then Mr George Wischart, Minister of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes, was called on, and his proces red, wherein he was accused for rayling against the Covenant, and saying that he should never come in his pulpit if the Covenant were red in it; lykewayes that he had maliciouslie deserted his floeke for the space of 8 monthes, whereas the Act of Dundie beares deprivation upon 40 dayes absence.

Lowdown said—His non residence will be sufficient to depose him; and the question is only that he was not cited; but, according to the Act, his non residence will depose him absolutelie, becaus he went away without advertisiug the Generall Assemblie.

The Moderatour said—It seemes to me that it will be hard for the Assembly to declair his place vacant; but, if S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes will take the hazard to find out ane uther who will be willing to supplie his place, they may doe it; for there must be either dimission or deprivation before it be now filled there. There can be no sentence of deprivation against him, till he be either cited, or his proces closed before the Presbitrie; and, in the meantyme of the proces going on against him in the Presbitrie, and citation used, if he compeare, it is thought he can give no sufficient reasou, and so will be worthie of deprivation.

The Assemblie condiscendit to the Moderatours motion, and appoynted that Sanct Andrewes shall provide for themselves a Minister, and that Mr George Wischart, upon such considerations, shall be cited, and the Presbitrie to proceed against him.

Then there was a supplication presented from S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes for provyding of their Ministry, and many pregnant reasons used by them, wherefore they should have ane able Minister, and that their necessitie was considerable, in respect of their corrupt Universities, and the dangerous fruites that a corrupt Ministry had brought foorth amongst them. Then it was asked whom they had sett their eyes on, and the Commissioner from S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes nammat Mr Andro Flock and Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone.

Moderatour said—Let there be no contest for me, for I have bein thir 24 yeares Miuster at Lewchairs; and now I am growing aue old, withered, and dry tree, and it is pittie to transport such a one, least it bring foorth no fruit. And I doe declair ex animo to this Assembly, that, although I have ane earnest desyre, if I had any thing in me to imploy it for the good of the Kirk of Scotland, yet I think I am able to doe more good heir where I am nor any where els; therefore I intreat the Assembly that some may be appoynted to hear my just reasons that I have to give in, why I should not be transported.

Lowdown said—Becaus the desyre of the parties will be eager on both sydes, therefore, let some indifferent men be chosen by the Assemblie to heare the reasons of the Commissioners of Edin<sup>r</sup> and S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes both, and your owne reasones lykewayes.

The Commissioners of Edin<sup>r</sup> objected, that there could be no committie chosen for that effect, becaus they had alreadie chosen him to be their Minister, and, lykewayes, they had the priviledge to transport any Minister of the kingdome.

Mr David Dick, Mr Andro Cant, Mr James Bruce was ordained to name a committie.

Then there was a proces given in against Mr Hary Scrymsoure, wherein he was accused for abuseing the church yaird, break of the Sabbath day, and for venting of sundrie tenets of false doctrine.

The said Mr Hary gave in a most humble supplication, and, with many teares, confessed sundry of his faults, and shew himsele to be penitent, that he was most willing to undergoe whatsoever censure the Assemblie could lay upon him, to restoir God to his glorie, humbly supplicating that he might be continowed in the Ministerie, and not depryved.

The lairdes of Newtoun and Waughtoune, his parochiners, urged still his deposition, according to the Acts of the Kirk.

Moderatour said—That it were good that he give a testimonie of his unfenzied repentance to his parochiners, and stay with them and build up that whilk he had throwine doune, if his parochie could consent.

Newtoun answered that he might be profitable in ane uther place, but he could not be profitable there.

My Lord Burlie said—I wishe this Assemblie may doe everie thing on good grounds; and, for my owne parte, I cannot be satisfied unles he be deposed, and, upon his repentance, let him merite favour.

Moderatour said—If he be deposed, I hope he shall not find the weight of it long; and, since this Assemblie can find no uther way for him but deposition, let him make his repentance, and come in before the Presbitrie, and receive a warrand from the Presbitrie, and preach any where, and, at the first occasion of a parochie, received and admittit; and let us joyne together to help this our penitent brother where he may have a ministerie.

Then there was a proces given in against Mr Robert Hamilton, Minister at Lesmahago, and the probation thereof before the Presbitrie of Lanerk; and it was found that he had brocken the Sabbath, and taken lends from his parochiners; detained the penalties of delinquents; banished some of his parochiners out of his parochie for not kneilling at the Communion; that he had preached Arminianisme, and declyned the Assemblie.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Somervill said that he behaved himsele verie undecentlie before the Presbitrie, and called some of his parochiners deoboasched villanes, in face of the Presbitrie.

Moderatour asked—If he did cleare himsele before the Presbitrie concerning Universal Grace?

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> said he gave in ane writt to the Presbitrie; but we layd it by in respect it contained not a direct answer, but was full of subterfuges and dubious expressions, and he alleadgit that he ventit it only by way of disputation.

The Moderatour said—When he passed his tryells in the Colledge of St Andrewes, he was suspect of it, for he was a scholler of Wedderburnes; therefore the Presbitrie ordained him to make his theames upon that poynt, and they wer compted orthodox; but it is not well favoured that he yet smellis of it.

Lowdown said—There is ane thing cleare in his challenge, and he grants it—that he hes tane the defence of these articles anent conformitie, and hath made it a reasone of putting many of his people out of his parochie, and surelie there was never any of them refused to joyne with him but out of conscience, and still he tooke penalties from them to wearie them.

Moderatour said—There is no question but he hes bein verie forward in these causes ; always some of his friends lookes for him this night ; and since it is the chief of all our desires to gaine the man, let us use no preposterous eourse, but delay this matter till Monday.

Mr James Flecke having produced his theses before the Assembly, according as he was ordained the day before, anent the universalitie of Christs death, the Assembly ordained him to goe home to his eongregation and Presbitrie, and satisfie them in else solemn a manner as can be, and declair to them this judgment of the Assembly ; and if he failzie herein, that he be summoned before the Commission at Dundie.

A question was proponed to the Assembly anent Mr R. Nairne, minister at Carmichael, who, being imposed upon the parochie lately by the Bishop against the heart both of the parochie and Presbitrie, is now fallen in a ffrenzie, and hes lyen under the phisicians hands ane quarter of a year ; and the parochie desyres the Assemblies verdict of it. The Assembly committs to the Presbitrie.

Doctor Panters proces was produced and delayed till the morne.

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour said—We were speaking of ane of the Doctores of Divinitie in the Colledge of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes, viz. Dr Panter. His proces was red the last day in the Assembly, and if ye will, ye shall heare it againe. The trneth is, he was oft tymes called before the Presbytrie, but did never compeir ; and therefore ye have to consider whether his proces shall be red over againe and deeydit heir, or referred to the Commission of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes.

Auldbar says—He thinkes himselfe to be a pryme man, and the sentence heir will stryke more against him then the sentence of any privat Commission. Let this Assemblie judge if such a man should be a Doctor of Divinitie in ane of the most pryme Colledges of this Kingdome ?

My Lord Balmerino said—We have beine searching over the Acts of the Assemblies, and we find that which may be discussed in Presbitries or Assemblies provincieall, shall not trouble the Generall Assembly, and this Aet I desire the Clerk to read.

After the reading of it,

The Moderatour asked some of the brethren whether his proces should be closed heir or referred to the Commission at S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes ?

Mr Robert Douglas, Mr Androw Cant, Mr Robert Baillie answered—There are else grosse and vyle thinges proven against him as might merite deposition heir, yet let him goe to the Commission at S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes.

Then the Commissioners of Edinbwrgh presented a Supplication from the toune of Edinburgh, for provision of their kirkes with able ministers, alleadging that they not only had the priviledge to ehoyce their ministers, but lykewayes that their Bill should be first heard.

The Moderatour answered—The Bill of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes hes bein first heard alreadie, and therefore it is reason that some answer be given to it, and becaus my name was heard in it, I desyreit my thrie reverend brethren, Mr David Dick, Mr Androw Cant, Mr James Bruce, to thinke on it. I hope they will heare my reasons, and by my reasons they will give satisfaction to the Assembly, to whose judgment I confesse I must submitt myselfe ; but I am verie confident of their wisdom and prudence, that they will heare me to the full in such a matter that concerne me so nearlie.

Then the Supplication of the toune of Edin<sup>r</sup> was put in the Clerks hand and red, containing many preguant reasons for provyding their kirks—as that Ed<sup>r</sup> was most exposed to the tryell of the corruptions that are imposed upon this Church—that they were the eenture of this kingdome—that they were the learnedest audiorie in the kingdome—that much dependit upon their example of yielding or not yielding to the corruptions of the tyme—and that her example prevailed with many others, as appeared at this tyme bypast—that her Presbytries was ever esteemed the most pryme in this Church ; and for that eanse, the indiction of the dyet of Assemblies hes bein committed to it :—That she is first subject to all temptations, as hes appeared by urning the Service Booke first upon her—the resorting of Noblemen, Ministers, &c., and their continowall meetings is there. By all thir, and many moc reasones, neidlesse to be related heir, did they urge the transportation of Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone from Lewchars to Edin<sup>r</sup>.

Moderatour said—I will never goe to answer any of these arguments used heir with such multiplication, and a great deall of rhetorick, for provydeing the tonn of Edin<sup>r</sup>—for it is verie reasonable it be weill provydit ; but for my ounne parte, all these reasons doe deswade me from granting their desyre ; and since there is such great thinges requyred of a minister that is there, snrelie my insufficiencie makes me thinke everie argument militat againes my going there, howsoever they be strong for provyding the toune of Edin<sup>r</sup>.

Then there was some brethren appoynted for hearing of Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone his reasons, that they might present them to the Assembly the next day.

Sess. 23. [December 16, 1638.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

Moderatour said—We were yesterday about some Complaints ; and it is expedient that they should be considered in Provincial Assemblies whether they might be heard ; and where they might not be heard, that they should be considered by Commissions appoynted be the Generall Assembly. And I think it will be hard to get Provincial Assemblies constitut as eould be wisched ; therefore it feares me there must be both—that is, Commissions for dispatching thir great matters in hand, and lykewayes Provincial Assemblies, which is to be thought upon by the Assemblie when they shall be had. Only I would heare the judgement of the Assemblie—it being a universall thing for the good of the whole Church, and likewise a redding of us of the burdings of many particulars.

My Lord Cassiles said—We looke for a Generall Assemblie so shortlie, that it would seeme no neid of Provincial Assemblies before the Parliament, becaus ministers who have attendit heir so long cannot spend all their tyme in going to Provincieall Assemblies ; and in the meane tyme, let Commissions be despatching matters.

Then the Commissions were appoynted as follows :—

Item, ane Commission for Complaints about Ed<sup>r</sup>, Dec. 26.

Ane nther Commission to be used at Jedburgh, Ja<sup>rii</sup> 2. [1639.]

Ane uther Commission to sitt at Irwing, Jath 15.

Ane uther Commission to sitt at Dundie, Febth 5.

Ane uther Commission to sitt at Chanrie and Forres, March 19.

Ane uther Commission to sitt at Kirkcudbright, April 6.

Ane Commission for visitation of the Colledge of Aberdein.

Ane uther Commission for visitation of the Colledge of Glasgow.

Then Mr David Lindsey, Mr John Robertsons, and uther aged men in the ministerie, were appoynted to take inspektion of the Bookes of the Assemblie, and to try wher thir provincieall Assemblies hes bein holden, which accordinglie they did, and gave in a roll the next day.

The Commissioner of Kinghorne gave in a complaint in name of that Burgh, in respect of the great prejudice they sustained by the Episcopall tyrannie in removing of a faithfull minister, Mr John Skinner, and him whom they now have being ane old man. They crave of the Assemblie ane helper.—Fiat ut petitur.

The Commissioners from the Presbitrie of Turrey gave in a Supplication, declairing, That whereas Alex<sup>r</sup> Andersone and Robert Davidsons, in Turrey, having fallen in ane delinquencie at a mereat in Aberdeine, and for that were conveyed before the Bishop, and payed 522 merks of penaltie, which should have been bestowed in mending the high wayes betwixt Turrey and Aberdeine, notwithstanding they delivered it to the Bishop, whilk he detaines, and the parties are not called for to make their repentance.

The Assemblie ordaines the delinquents to make their repentance in Turrey and Aberdeine, and the penaltie to be restored.

Then there was a Supplication presentit in name of the Kirk of Corspairne, which church lyes in a very desolat wildernes, containing 500 communicants. It was builded by some gentlemen to their great expenses, only out of love to the salvation of soules of a number of barbarous ignorant people, who heirtofor hes lived without the knowledge of God, their children unbaptized, their deid unburied, and could no way for getting maintainance to a minister but to betake them to the sympathizing of zealousness, as the Assembly would think expedient.

My Lord Cassiles said—Their case is verie considerable, and deserves helpe. The cace of their soules is verie dangerous, being 15 or 16 myles from a church; and now, since God hes given them the benefite of a kirk, I think verilie a verie little helpe of the Presbitries of the kingdom would give them a competent meanes for a minister, especiallie seeing they have alreadie provydit something themselves.

This matter was committed to my Lord Lindsey, Earle of Cassiles, Shirreff of Teviotdaile, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Dalgleische, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse, and Mr John Home, to consider upon till Monday.

Then the Moderatour asked Mr David Lindsey, who had the charge of the Billes, if there were any moe to be presented; who answered, none but two, which they hoped to discusse themselves.

Moderatour said—God be thanked! We have now neir endit all the billes; and as we began with important bussines, so we must end with great bussines; lykewayes; and therefore ye must have patience, and I hope with speid we shall goe through them all, and so returne to our places. Therefore, if there be any in this Assembly that have any overture to give in concerning Ruleing Elders, let them come to my Lord Balmerinochs house at 4 o'clock.

The Clerke desyred these that had given in their billes to the committie, and who were referred to the Commissions up and downe the countray, let them goe to Mr David Lindsey and get their billes, that they may raise summands upon them to comper before the Commissions.

The houre of meiting upon Monday is 10 houres.

Sess. 24.—[December 17, 1638.]

After in calling upon the name of God, those who were appoynted to meit about the Kirk of Carsfairne, declared that they had mett and taken consideration of the estate of the kirk; and, finding that the pairties that posseses the teynds cannot be moved to give provision, we thinke it expedient they be helped ane uther way; and becaus we thinke it expedient that the whole kingdome be not troubled with it; therefore we thinke the bounds of this syde of Tay, including Fyfe and Forthe, will be sufficient.

Then Mr John Bell, elder, minister of Glasgow, presented a supplication to the Moderatour; and, after he had red it, Moderatour said—There is heir a reverend and aged brother, whom we should all honour—for gray haire, for a crowne of glorie—that hath approven himselfe to God in his Church, and to the people of this eittie in a speciall maner; and now, finding his natural weaknes increasing, though he hath vigour of mynd as yet, and fearing and apprehending his dissolution drawes near, he hes represented to yow heir a supplication for a helper in the ministerie, and desyres it may be heard with the first.

Then the Clerke red his supplication, containing a earnest desyre, for many reasons, that his brother, Mr David Dick, minister at Irwing, might be admitted to joyne with him in the ministerie.

My Lord Eglintonn said—Albeit Edinburgh have power to transport ministers, I understand not how Glasgow hes.

Moderatour said—They have power to supplicat.

Eglintonn said—Let the question be, whether Mr John Bell may have a helper or not?

And the Provost of Glasgow said—Not only the generall doe we supplicat but for the particular also.

Mr David Dick said—This was motioned to me yesternight, and I have bein laying the matter before God, as it becomes me to doe; and I desyre that my particular reasons why I should not be transported be considered by the brethren of the place where I live, be reason of my long acquaintance and tryed affection betwixt me and my flocke and my brethren of the Presbitrie. I have ane open doore of doing good above any pairt elsewhere. 2. In the tyme of my trouble by the Bishop, my Lord of Eglintonn, and the brethren of our Presbitrie, was put to much trouble to have me restored to my ministerie there; and, therefore, I am tyed to his Lordship and to them all. 3. Be reason of my professed intention of a particular exposition of Scripture, I cannot be for such a learned audiorie; and before ever I can take roote in any uther soyle where I may be fruitfulle, the tyme of dissolution will draw on.

Lowdown said—Beside these reasons given in be Mr David, ye shall consider, that albeit some men have had but particular flockes, yet they have both done als much good, and holden off evils as if they had bein in more eminent places.

The Moderatour said—This is certaine—churches must be planted; and, for that end, there is a neces-sitie of transportation of some to Edin<sup>r</sup>, St Andrewes, Glasgow, Dundie, [which] cannot be provydit with expectants.

Argyle said—Though I have not ane voit heir, yet I crave libertie to speake my judgment. Truelie the bussines is both grave and weightie; for the question is now betwixt the countrie and the townes, whether there be a necessitie of transplanting ministers from corners of the kingdome to townes, or let them rest where they are? And I thinke it deserves this consideration: let everie ane that pretends interest why it should not be, produce their reasons in write, that the Assembly may consider of them.

The Moderatour said—Let it be referred to a committie.

Eglintoun said—He would not consent: for, said he, if I submitt my cloake to a committie, it may be they take a newke of it.

Then there was a Committie nomiut:—

Argyle,	Mr Andro Ramsay,
Moutrois,	Mr David Lindsey,
Lindsey,	Mr Andro Cant.
Sinclare,	Mr John Livingston,
Eglintoun,	Mr Hew M <sup>c</sup> Kell.
Lowdown,
Laird of Blair.

A Complaint auent the Kirk of Airth was referred to the Presbitrie of Stirling.

Moderatour said—When we are thinking upon such old fruitfull tries as reverend Mr John Bell, we should also be thinking upon some young plants also, that we may know our oune strenth; therefore it is necessar that a number of expectants be taken up, both these that hath beine out of the ministerie for not conforme to Perthes Articles, and these that wer holden out and were forced to take them to ane uther sort of life, waiting for better dayes, and these that are now sprung up and are hopeful youthes, whom we trust who shall supplie our places who are old.

Then the Commissioners of Dundie gave in a Supplication for the transportation of Mr David Lindsey, Parson of Belhelvie, to Dundie.

The Moderatour desyred the Provost of Glasgow, with some uther of the burrowes, to conveye this night, and thinke upon some overture for the change of the mercat dayes in Burghes from the Monday and Satnrday, becaus they be great profanation of the Sabbath, and wer occasioned, that their consideration might be recommendit to the consideration of burrowes, which the Provost of Glasgow promised to doe.

There was given in the testimonie of the diligence of some of these to whom the Answer of the Bishops Declinatour was given in, which is insert before the Decliatour.

Sess. 25. [December 18, 1638.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour said—There is ane particular heir would be considered before we went forward, and this is about the forme of repentance of the pretendit Prelats, Dunkell and uthers, subscryvit already, and uthers have not yet subscryvit: therefore I will tell my oune judgment and the judgment of uther members of the Assembly who have conferred with me. For the Bishop of Murray, let the Presbitrie of Edin<sup>r</sup> have power to cite him to compeir before them, and receive his injunctions the tyme of the Provinciaill Assembly, where he shall receive the maner of his repentance; and if he compeir not, they shall proceed against him with the censure of the Kirk. As for the Bishop of Orkney, let him receive the matter of his repentance of the Presbitrie of Orkney, and let them appoynt some of thir members to receive it. For the Bishop of Argyll, that he be cited to compeir in Edin<sup>r</sup> at the Provinciaill Assembly, to receive direction for the maner of his repentance there. For the Bishop of the Isles, that he be cited before the Commission in Irwing to make his repentance. And in case they obey not the Presbitries where they dwell, proceed against them to the sentence of excommunication.

My Lord Lindsey said—If any of these who are excommunicat be content to make their repentance, shall they not thereupon be presentlie received?

Moderatour said—They may weill wait upon the next Generall Assembly; or if any of them be neir the poynt of death, and apprehending the terrors of God, let the Presbitrie lowse them from the sentence, if they be readie to cry out with Bishop Adamson—“Lowse them, lowse them!”

Mr John Home said—In that case, it wer weill done to receive them; but let them leave a testimonie in write of their repentance, as Bishop Adamson did.

Moderatour said—There are divers seeking transportations, and, among others, Mr David Dalgleishe, Minister of Cowpar, who truelie hes great reason, if we will consider and compare his gifts with his meanes. He desyrit the benefite of it be transportation.

The Assembly allowes this transportation.

Moderatour said—Auent our cariadge toward excommunicat persones, I thinke civill affaires may be done with them—a naturall duetie done to them, but civill dueties verie sparinglie.

Moderatour said—We left about the Bishops declinator and protestation, and we appoynted some to make answer. Now, consider whether ye will heare a litle tast of their auswer till the rest be ryper for the presse, and let it be remitted to some brether to be perfyted before the Commission close in Ediu<sup>r</sup>, and put to the presse. Withal, ye know there would be a consideration had of the declaration that it hath pleased the Kings Majesties Commissioner to publishe and print, that ane answer may be had to it, and such lyke, that ane answer be made to the protestation given in be him.

There is a great Booke fund to be authentick, containing many Acts of Assemblies, belonging to Mr W<sup>m</sup> Scott, in Cowpar. I thinke the Assembly will joync together to make him rander the same to the Assembly, and that a Letter be written to him, subscryved be the Clerk of the Assembly, to send the book heir.

The Shirreff of Teviotdaile said—There is a fould scandall in our countrie—a fellow that hes lived in iucest with his wifes sister; and when Mr Thomas Abernethie was proceeding against him, he was prohibited by the Bishops.

The Assemblie referris this to the Presbitrie.

The witnesses against Mr Thomas M<sup>c</sup>Gill was examined, and their probationes ordained to goe to the Commissions at Edin<sup>r</sup>.

A supplication was presented from the Paroche of Cardonald, becaus of their distance from their paroche kirk, to witt, 12 myles. They desyred a visitation, to the end that a kirk might be planted.

The Assemblie referris it to the Presbitrie, taking the help of the Provinciaill Assembly.

Mr George Black, in the Presbitrie of Dumfreis, his Bill referred to the Commission at Kirkeudbright.

Mr Robert Wilkie declaired that he had spoken with Mr Robert Hamilton, minister at Lismahago, and that he was resolved to give satisfaction to the Assembly in many things, and therefore intreated that he may have libertie to advyse him till the morne.

Then the Commissioner of Edin<sup>r</sup> urgit againe the reading of their supplication, and cravit the voites of the Assembly.

The Commissioner of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes desyrit that becaus his supplication was first given in, it might first have an answer.

The Moderatour said—I am sorie that this Assemblie, conveyed about so great affaires, should spend any tyme about any thing wherein my name is named; for it is knowne to many of yow how small my portion is, and I pray God their earnestnes for me make it not lesse. I humbly intreat this Assemblie to judge according to knowledge, and not according to the sollicitation of any, and I have already submitted myselve to the judgment of this Assemblie, and not onlie so, but I acknowledge they may command me to goe where they will: therefore I will remove myselve out of the Assemblie, and let ane uther Moderatour supplie: onlie this, I certifie the Assemblie—if ye goe not on unanimouslie—if the ane half be ane way and ane uther half ane uther way, I will neither consent nor take it as a calling from God to remove.

Then Mr James Bonar, who was chosen Vice-Moderatour, said—I hope it be the unfeingzied desyre of all our hearts, whom God hes called together in this Assemblie, to seik the honour of God and the advancement of the kingdome of his Sone Jesus Christ in this land; and I hope it is not onlie the desyre of the Assemblie in generall, but also the mynd and meaning of these Commissioners from Edin<sup>r</sup> and Sanct Andrewes, who now doe supplicat, and if it can be qualified that the transportation of Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henderson, our Moderatour to Edin<sup>r</sup>, will serve more for the advancement of the kingdome of Jesus and good of the common earand, I hope yee from S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes will applaud; or if the contrare be qualified, I hope these from Edinburgh will also rest satisfied.

Then the Commissioner from S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes gave in a great number of reasons, both in respect of the toune, the paroehe, the Presbitrie, and Universities, why the said Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> should be transported, which were all answered at large by Mr Andro Ramsay, neidless to insert heir.

The Laird of Erlishall made protestation that he should not be transported at all from Lewehars, for many reasons.

Lowdoun said—Since we are to prosesse ane end, let the publick head be so prevalent with us, that no predominant affection cary us away.

Then the Supplications from the toune of Edin<sup>r</sup>, and all their multitude of reasons, were againe read. Then the Moderatour desyred those who were appoynted to heare the said Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> his reasons, and to declair what they had done.

Mr David Diek answered—It pleased our Mod<sup>r</sup> to lay furth his reasons before us, wherefore he should not be transported from Lewehars, and by them we were made sensible how great a burthen he tooke of any other motion; alwayes, after in calling upon the name of God, and hearing of all his reasons at leasure, our resolution ran on this—that the present necessitie requyred his presence at Edinburgh.

Moderatour said—Ye have heard many considerable reasons on all hands; therefore now, the question is, whither Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone shall be transported to Edin<sup>r</sup> or S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes?

Then the rolles were called, and there were 75 moe voites for Edin<sup>r</sup> nor S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes. Then Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> being come in, Mr James Bonar declaired to him that the Assemblie had ordained him to be minister at Edin<sup>r</sup>.

Moderatour said—Becaus I know what a fearfull sin it was for a man either to obtrude himselve upon a place or to resist Gods calling to it, this made me to cast myselve in the hands of the Assembly: and now for ane externall calling, I have followed, you voited; and if ye have had any thing before your eyes in voiting but the glorie of God and good of the Church, to yourselve be it said; and I will intreat you to joyne with me in your desyres to God for a blessing upon my labours that are weake, there, and withall, I beg of the Assembly that if weaknes of bodie or mynd shall come on me shortly, I may have libertie to reture to some private place: which the Assemblie granted.

A Complaint given in against the Minister of Cambusnethen, and referred to the Commission of Edin<sup>r</sup>.

Mr John Bellis Supplication anent the transportation of Mr David Diek to Glasgow, referred to the Commission at Edin<sup>r</sup>.

Mr James Scharpe, minister of Govan, and Mr John Hamilton, minister of Innerkip, were transported to Paisley, upon the toun of Paisley their supplication.

Doctor W<sup>m</sup> Guild presented a supplication to the Assembly—That, whereas there was great fisehing of salmond neir Aberdene upon the Sabbath, which occasioned great profanation of that holy day, by peoples continually resorting to see that fisehing, even in tyme of divine service; and likeways declaired how he had prevailed much, throw the blessing of God upon his labours, to restrane that abuse, so that divers worthie religious persones who have speeiall interest in that fisehing, had bein moved to draw up a bond and covenant among them to forbear that sinfull practiee in all tyme comeing; therefore supplicats that the Assembly may be pleased to make ane Act against the said profanation, that upon that ground he might proceed against them, after his returne from the Assembly.

The Assembly, after much disputation of this question too and fro, in respect they could find no Act of Assembly against salmond fisehing for the present, and not willing to make ane new Act, they appoynted Doctor Guild, Mr John Robertstone, with some others, to thinke upon some overture for it against the morrow.

The Provost of Glasgow declaired that he had mett with some uther of the burrowes, and they had condescendit upon the change of Mondayes mercat to Wednesday, and desyred reference might be made of it to the Convention of Burrowes.

The Assembly appoynted the Earle of Montrois, my Lord Lowdoun, Burley, Sir W<sup>m</sup> Dundas, Mr John Ker, Mr Robert Blair, Mr Thomas Mitchell, to thinke upon some overtures to be proponed in Parliament, and the Commissioners to it, against the morne.

Sess. 26. [December 19, 1638.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

The Moderatour said—Ye know, as we must rander ane aceount to God for our proceedings, and be comptable to our owne consciences, so it is meit, for the peace and quyetnes of this Church, that, as God hes disposed our hearts to carry ourselves reverentlie in all our proceedings, and be comptable to our owne consciences; so it is meit, for the peace and quyetnes of this Church, that, as God hes disposed our hearts, to carry ourselves reverentlie in all our proceedings towards the Kings Majestie, so that he be acquainted with our proceedings, and that some humble supplications be directed by this Assemblie to his Majestie, that it may please him to approve, by his auctoritie, what we have concludit. I thinke there be more heir but they will thinke it very necessar. There is heir drawn up a little tast of the frame of it; and at more lenth ye may alter and change it at your pleasure.

Moderatour said—Ye know there was a matter of verie great importance committed to some, concerning these that should be commissioners in tyme of Parliament.

Lowdown answered—We, according to the knowledge we had of men, have made a list of the names of some commissioners and gentlemen. There is somewhat heir concerning them that shall heirafter subsryve the Confession of Faith, as ye know some hes come in to this Assemblie, young noblemen and gentlemen, and offered themselves willing to subsryve the Covenant, becaus now it was a kynd of nonsense to subsryve to suspend the practice of novations, till they be tryed and allowed in a free Assemblie, since now the Assemblie hes determined it; therefore, it is necessar that two or thrie lynes be prefixed before their subscription, who heirafter shall subsryve as followes:—

“The Article of the Covenant, which was, at the first subscription, referred to the determination of the Generall Assembly, being now determined at Glasgow, No<sup>r</sup> 21, 1638, and thereby the Five Articles of Perth, and Governement of the Kirke by Bishops, is now abjured and removed, the civil places and power of Kirkmen being declared to be unlawfull, I subsryve according to the determination of this lawfull Generall Assemblie.”

And becaus the Marqueis [of Hamilton] hes caused print a declaration, that it was neither his Majesties meaning nor his owne, in urging the late Covenant, to abjure Episcopacie; therefore he desyred the brethren to think upon it till the morne.

Lowdown said—The honourable Counsel, they have made an Act, wherein they declair in what sense they subsryvit to the doctrine of faith, religion, and discipline of the Kirk of Scotland—to witt, as it was professed in anno 1580. This is major propositio. This Assembly hes sett doune clearlie, according to the Acts of the Kirk, how the doctrine, religion, and discipline was then professed. This is the minor. The conclusion will follow:—That they have subsryvit according to the determination of the Generall Assembly; for, at that tyme, it is cleare there was no Bishop. The major is the Counsellis Act; the minor is the Assemblies explanation; and the conclusion any bodie knowes.

My Lord Lowthian presented ane supplication to the Assemblie, anent the transportation of Mr Androw Cant from Pitsligo to Newbotle, in the Presbitrie of Dalkeith.

Moderatour said—It would seeme reasonable your Lordship should get a favourable answer, considering your diligence and zeale in this cause above many uthers, and I know this not to be a new motion, but to be concludit by the Patron, Presbitrie, and Paroche.

The Commissioner of Edin<sup>r</sup> alleadged that they had made an election of him 24 yeares since.

Then the mater was put to voiting—Whither Mr Andro Cant should be transported from Pitsligo to Edinburgh? And the most part of the Assembly voited to his transplantation to Newbotle; and so the Moderatour declaired him to be Minister at Newbotle.

Mr Robert Blair was called on, who answered—I confesse I am in the hands of this Assembly; but I protest heir, in Gods presence, that I had rather lay downe my life nor be separat from my flock at Air.

Then Mr Robert Hamilton at Lesmahago compired; and

The Moderatour declaired that he had laboured to delay the discussing of this proces very lang, of purpose to gaine him from his faults, and therefore desyrit him now to declair frielie whither or not he would passe from his declinatour which he had subsryvit? who answered, that he was not weill advysed as yet. Efter much reasoning to and fro, the Assembly suspends him presentlie; declaires him worthie of deposition; ordaines him to compeir before the Presbitrie of Lauerk, and give them full satisfaction, and then to compeir before the Commission at Edin<sup>r</sup>: And, in case he have not given the Presbitrie satisfaction, ordaines them to proceed against him. Because it was impossible for everie Presbitrie to get a full copie of all the Acts of the Assemblie, Therefore, the Assemblie ordaines them to get an index of the principall under the Clerks hand to take home with them.

The Moderatour said—There is a poynt in our Confession of Faith not yet cleared, and therefore it were well done to declair your judgment concerning that ye know. There was a reference in the Confession of Faith to the Generall Assembly. 1, It comends [condemns] the novations already introduced; 2, Concerning the corruptions of the publict governement of the Kirk; and the 3 was concerning the civile places and power of Kirkmen. The two former are already determined. It rests now ye declair your judgment concerning the third; and for the effect, it will be expedient that ye heare some few things red to yow—as, namely, the Conference at Falkland, 1599, when the Kings Majestie was first craving to the Ministrie, voit in Parliament, he appoynted a conference for that effect, for clearing of the mater; and, lykewayes, that ye heare red to yow, the protestation and reason thereof, given in to the Parliament 1606, by Commissioners from Provinciall Assemblies and Presbitries. We deny not but it is requisit that Ministers be not far from the Parliament, that, if any ease of conscience fall in Parliament, they may give their advyce from the word of God. But the question is—Whether the Ministers should voit or ryde in Parliament, as Lords and Nobles? Their pretence, at first, was to vindicat the Kirk and Kirkmen from contempt and poverty; but we neid not to doubt but our Lord will see us get honour and respect enough, if we keep ourselves within the bounds of our calling; and, I am persuadit, there is not a faithfull Minister but he will have more joy when he comes from catechising a number of landwart people, nor a Bishop hes when he comes from ryding in Parliament. And they thought to vindicat themselves from contempt and povertie; but, it is lyke, now both will come upon them.

Mr Andro Cant said—The Apostle sayeth—Who is sufficient for these thinges? And yet they will take on two offices, and jumble the civill and ecclesiasticall function throw uther, which is very incomptible.

Mr Andro Ramsay said—I have spent many sermons and treatises against it; and, therefore, with my heart, I condemn it.

Mr David Dick said—The first thing that ever brought me in disgust with the estate, was when I considerit what was the reason that Christ dischargit his disciples to be rulers of the Gentiles; and the satisfaction that I got from this, that Christ would not have his kingdome ane eyesore to the world; so my heart could never be to that course.

Moderatour said—When it was first instantlie urgit by auctoritie, there were some of the ministers had the sagacitie as a foirmell, what could come of it, which made many to protest against; and when, by so doing, they could not hinder it, to put cautions upon it. But since these caunons could not keepe them within their bounds, but they with their voit in Parliament did prejudice the Kirk, whither should not the Church be red of that which hath wrought her so great prejudice? And I thinke there is no more hetrogenius from the matter of a ministers calling, nothing settis him worse, nor nothing more contrarie to his Masters cariage, nor to be a Lord in Parliament. The question is twofold. The first is, Whither a minister of Jesus Christ, separat to the Gospell, should breuke civill place as is usit in a Couceell bench or Session? And the uther is, Whether he should voit in Parliament or not? In a word, Whither their exercising in civill offices be lawfull or unlawfull?

The rolles being called, the whole Assembly most unanimously, all in ane voit, with the hesitation of two, allanerlie declaired, that its both inexpedient and unlawfull in this Kirk, for ministers, separat to the Gospell, to brique any civill place or office qwhatsomever.

Moderatour said—We have reason to blesse the Lord for this harmonie—that we sing all ane song, and are led by ane spirit. I auswer, where mens myndis are put to a poynt in their worldlie ambition and covetousness, they will, for their aine parte, be content to want these dignities. Thir must either belong to ministers in respect of their ministerie, or in respect they are prelates, and so are called Lords; and if as they are ministers this be unlawfull, as they are prelates it hes double unlawfulness.

Moderatour said—There would be some considerations had concerning Ruleing Elders. It hes pleased God so to dispence with the hearts of our nobilitie, gentry, and burrowes, that they have by concurrene helped forward the caus of religion, or, as the Scripture phrase is, they have helped God; and, therefore, it becomes me, with all thankfulness, humbly to acknowledge it; and although we have gone far on in our ecclesiasticall determinations, we must not thinko the mater endit yet; but the Kirk of Christ in this land is yet wrestling with many difficulties. Neither can we thinke ourselves secure in peace and quyetnes, till civill auctoritie ratific what is heir done by ecclesiasticall constitutions. Therefore it were meit that these elders should still give us their assistence, especiallie in extraordinary occasions. Only ye have to consider whither or not there may be a motion made anent the restoiring of them to the integritie of their places that they had, at the first subseryving of the Confession of Faith?

Mr Robert Murray said—Truelie, when I consider the case of our Kirk as it hath beine a long tyme bygone, and the benefite it had by ruleing elders, I thinke we should be verie glad to agrie to the restoiring of them againe; for I find, ever since the reformatione, in all sorts of Assemblies where ruleing elders hath bein, that they have done great good; and I find that there hath bein many complaints for the want of them; not, never for the having of them, either in Presbitries and uther judicatories. For my pairt, if we looke simple to the good of the common cause, which we all pretend to doe, we will be glad of their assistence at all our Assemblies; for it would be a strengthening of our weake hands.

Lowdoun said—I understand that in all Parliaments where any thing hes bein done concerning the Kirk, it hath ay bein the first act that the privilege and libertie of the Kirk be ratified; and now the evils that troubled Kirk and state, being, by the Confession of Faith in this Kirk, and by the discipline of it removed, I thinke are, upon you, but a parte of that which is requyred to be ratified in the generale article which yee red first. But there is a policie and government sett doune in this Kirk, not to be contraverted in it selfe; and if, because of the long disswetude of it, or suppressing of it, any hath feares for any thing that may be in it, I think that may be adverted to; but, for the thing itselfe, it is so condeuceable for the strengthening of the Kirk and her friedome and liberties, that there is no way comparable to it; for it goes doune at the upmost, and goes doune from the representative Kirke to Provinciall Assemblies; from them to Presbyteriall; from prebyteriall to paroches and sessions; and so, what is done heirby, this Kirk obliesses everie congregation to stand to it, as a thing that concerns them all; and this it is sworne, because it is the discipline of the Kirk, and the grounds of it are in the bookes of policie; and, if it were not for the good of the Kirk, (what can anything?) doeth it concerne ruleing elders, albeit many hes feares of a predominant way. It is rather to be feared that we will be slack and remisse upon the uther extremite.

Moderatour said—I hope that God, who hes led us hitherto by a spirit of wonderfull unanimitie, shall so regulat the hearts of everie member that hes had place in this Assemblie, that all their designes shall conduce to the weil of the Kirk. It is objected against us, that we would not be content of 14 bishops, but now we have many hundrethis overruleing us. But let us take this for a suggestion of Sathan, and hold our eye upon the great Bishop of all, through whose blessing this will be a meane to keep his work in unitie and peace.

Mr Andro Ramsay said—I think it no sort expedient to call it in question, which I am able to cleare against all the world.

Mr Andro Cant said—We have sien such a great blessing of God upon the constitution of this Assembly, that certaulie we have great caus to rejoyce; and, next unto the presence of our God, I attribute a great parte of this harmony to the good disposition of Rubing Elders; and it is a very uncharitable prejudice to judge amisse of such a divine institution before we have experience of the evil of it.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse said—There are two termes that are not scriptural termes as they are used, or rather abused—to witt, the Clergie and [laitie]. The Popishe Kirk appropriates the ane to kirkmen, and in a maner excludes the people of God as not of the Lords inheritance, and, in a sort, have put the people of God from their station and place that they have right unto by the law of God, that they will not suffer them to humane consultative or decesive voit in any sort.

The rolles being called, the whole Assemblie most unanimously declaired the approbation of that old order of Ruling Elders.

Concerning Mr John Bellis supplication for a helper, the Assemblie referris it to the consideration of the Commission at Edinburgh.

Sess. ultima. [December 20, 1638.]

After in calling upon the name of God,

Doctor Guild said—There is a motion made, as ye all hard the other day, concerning salmond fisehing, and proffanation of the Sabbath thereby, and it was not thought expedient to make new Acts, but to search for old ones, and to revive them. In Gods providence, there is heir found ane Act, in the year 1562, of the Assembly holden at Holyrudhouse, 12 Nov. 5 Session, where salmond fisehing is expresslie inhibitit and ordained to be punished by the censures of the Kirk; and I requyre that the Clerk may read it; which accordinglie was done, and the whole Assembly, in ane voit, renewed the same.

The names of the Commissioners for the Parliament being red, and the Artieles which they behoove to present to it, they were desyrit to represent them to the Clerk of Register some dayes before the Parliament.

Moderatour said—There will be some directions from the Assembly to Ministers what to doe first when they goe home. For this end, Presbitries must have ane extract of some Acts shortlie; and becaus there is a declaration of the Confession of Faith to be red, it wer good it wer intimat in all pulpits, as lykewayes thir things that are concludit in Assemblie concerning Episcopacie, the 5 Artieles of Perth, the Service Booke, Booke of Cannons, Booke of Ordination, High Commission, and the Sentence against the Prelats, to intimat, that people may ken who are excommunicat, and who not.

Then there was red two Acts, which wer put in forme: the ane commanding the Covenant to be subscryvit be all Masters of Universities, Colledges, and Schools, and all uthers who have not already subscryvit the same, with these words prefixed before their subscription; ane uther Act, discharging all subscription to the Covenant lately urged by his Majesties Commissioner.

After the calling the rolles, the whole Assemblie most unanimously allowed both these Acts.

Moderatour said—There is a motion made concerning thanksgiving to be kept when ye goe home to your partieular congregations; and truelie, considering our evil deservings, and what the Lord hes done to us for meir favour, we have no lesse nor great reason to aeknowledge it, both publictly in our congregations, and privatelie in our families, and to delyte in the honour of God, and make frequent commemoration of it at the first convenient occasion after ye returne to your Presbitries and paroches; and I trust it shall be acceptable unto God, and give no just occasion of offence.

The Assemblie allows this Artiele, and ordaines Ministers to make intimation in their pulpits of the conclusion of this Assemblie, the first Sabbath efter their returne home; and desyre their people to prepare themselves against the next Sabbath thereafter, not for carnall festivitie, but for a humble thanksgiving.

The Assemblie ordaines the Presbitries to proceed against those who subscryvit the declinatour, and all uthers who will not aeknowledge the Assembly, with the censures of the Kirk; and becaus there are some of this sort about Aberdein that their voits will be moe in Presbitries, the Assembly ordaines them to be called before the Commission at Aberdein.

Lykewayes the Assembly ordaines the Moderatour and Clerk to give out summouds upon relevant complaints of parties before the next Generall Assembly, becaus the tyme could not be weil condiseendit upon. The rolles were called, and most parte of the Assembly voited that the third Wednesday of Jullii, the next Generall Assemblie should sitt at Edinburgh; and if the Kings Majestie be pleased to indict a Generall Assemblie, either before or efter this tyme, the Assemblie declaires that it was good reason his Majesties tyme wer waited on.

Then the Commissioners of St Andrewes presented their supplication for the transportation of Mr Robert Blair from Air to St Andrewes; and, efter many contestations betwixt the Commissioners of St Andrewes, my Lord Lindsey, Provost of Air, and uthers, the mater was put to voiting, and there was no great differenee amongst the voites, except only 4 or 5 moe that voited for St Andrewes uor for Air: quharefore,

The Moderatour, in name of the Assemblie, ordained him to goe to St Andrewes.

Lykewayes, the Commissioner of Aberdein did supplicat for the transportation of Mr Samuel Rutherford from Anweh, in Galloway, to be Professor of Divinitie in the new Colledge of Aberdene.

Mr Samuel said—My ministrie and the exercise of it is subject in the Lord to this Honourable Assemblie. But I trust in God this Assemblie will never take from me my pastorall echarge; for there is a woe unto me if I preach not the Gospell, and I know not who can goe betwixt me and that woe. If I doe not preach the Gospell, I verilie thinke the High Commission did not nor could not doe no worse nor that unto me; and therefore, he desyrit if there were any such thing as that in their mynd, they would not intertaine such thoughts; for he said he would be content to suffer prisonment, banishment, &c., but never lay downe his ministrie.

The Moderatour answered—He was glad that his reasons were so weake; and after much reasoning to and fro, it was referred to the Commission at Edin.

The Moderatour asked of the Assembly if there were any other partieular to be remembered, or if any man had any motion to propone, or any further to say, since this was the last Session, and they were now this night to ryse and goe home to their churches? The Assemblie being silent, and all matters considerable being now discussed, the Moderatour uttered these speaches as follows:—

The Moderatour, his last speach, directed to, the Assembly, immediallie, before the dissolution thereof.

I think there be none heir that expects any discourse of me worthie the taking up the tyme appointed for so great effaires as hes bein heir, or of such Noble, prudent, learned, and wise eares as heares me. Only I will say two things concerning my selfe—one is, that the evil that I would have sehunned is come upon me; for I did not apprehend it, neither can I call it absolutelie an evil, becaus there are good in it, and; I am sure, God hes done good by it. But this I say—I would have sehunned it, partlie becaus of that bashfulnes which I fand in my selfe, and partlie becaus of my unwillingnes to make my weaknes and infirmitie knowne to the world; but ye see, contrarie to my disposition and resolution, I have bein chargit to take on this charge, quihich I have borne thir dayes bygone, and I doe crave pardon of the God of Heaven and of this honourable Assembly, of the faults that hes escaped me siuce I tooke it on, quihich I know are manyfold.

This is ane thing concerning myselfe: the uthler concerning myselfe is this—That I observe the beginnings and closeings of the worke of God to be very answerable. The beginnings were very weake—by very weake instruments—and so hes the conclusions beene, by reason of my weaknes, who have beiu imployd in it; and this is, that the Lord may get the glorie that belongs to him of his own power.

But what shall I say? That I have bein ane Instrument, may ye yourselves have bein instruments raised by God. By your pietie, prudence, and paines, the Lord hes brought this worke to passe; and I cannot say but all sortes have bein verie diligent and faithfull, zealous, and stranglie assisted by God in every poynt committed to them—in trueth to my admiration.

Ye must not rest upon yourselves, but ascend higher, and looke to these worthie Noblemen who have bein cheefe instruments in this work, and how it has pleased the Lord to move their hearts, contrare to their place—being subject to many temptations—and contrare to the age of some of them, to attend thir affaires quherin is not much worldlie bewtie or contentment; yea ye know what paines and hazard they have undergone—yea, what charges—altho' I will not mention so fecklesse a mater, for if I should, I would wrong their pious resolution.

Yet ye must not stint your myndes heir; for, if ye doe, ye wrong them by giving them more nor due, and so doe prejudice to the honour of the Majesty of our God; and therefore to ascend higher, I pray, from the meauest instruments that is heir, of Nobles, of Barons, of Ministers, of Elders—goe forward and consider of the Kings Majesties goodnes toward us; for ye know this Assembly was indicted be his Majesties auctoritie, and that his Majesties High Commissioner was heir till it was fullie constitut; and let us take this as a great favour from the Kings Majestie and his Commissiouer; and let us stirre up our hearts to pray to God for his Majesties long prosperous reigne over us.

But we must not rest upon the King, but ascend yet higher unto God himselfe, and give him his owne praise; and surelie the name of our God is worthie of all praise; for he has raised us out of the deipes of the earth; he has raised us from the dead, and exalted us very far. The yondest of our wishes was to have bein at our first reformation; and now, in his graceous dispensation, their measures are restored to us; and, if it be not so, let us blame ourselves; for yee see how the Lord, in his providence, hes given us the occasioun and opportunitie, that all things may be done in the hous of God, according to our former integritie, and which, I trust, I am assured, is according to the will of God. What shall I intreat yow, honorable, reverend, and weill-beloved, to doe, but, first, to consider the great and singular kyndnes—the inestimable favour and love of our Lord Jesus Christ, towards us all, the children of men, redeemed by his blood—that he so loved us, from all Eternitie, that he gave himself to so painfull sufferings, and shameful sufferings, to purchase the Holy Spirit unto us? And truelie poore Scotland, but rich in respect of the Gospell, may say, that the Lord hes loved us; yea there was never such a love heard tell of as he has borne to us.

Next I would have yow to consider—and I put no question but ye have considerit it—the goodnes of the Lord our God, and his great bountie toward us in this great worke, which now, ecclesiasticallie, is brought to a kynd of conelusion. Remember ye not that our adversaries were at a verie great height of pride? Remember ye not that they prydit themselves in auctoritie, and in their prudence and policie; and if there were any name of learning in the land, they would faine have had it appearing on their syde to be a terrour to ws, whom they thought sillie, poore, ignorant saules, besyde them? And how our sun was almost sett at noone—and we would surelie have died in darknes—except the Lord had appeared and made his light to shyne?

Next, beloved, I would have yow to consider how small the beginnings were, yea, both small, weake, and obscure; and so soone as the Lord touched the hearts of men of all ranks, from the highest to the lowest of the countrey, and how sensible the Lord wrought with many a saule, what light filled their myndes, and what heat filled their hearts! For many old men who wer friezing for cold for want of devotion, they found yet their hearts glowing with the heat that was breaking upon them, at the renewing of that Covenant, and we found the documents of his presence at all our Meetings; for howbeit there were thousands mett together many tymes, there were nothing but quyetnes and peace: and surelie our adversaries themselves have contributed to our conclusions, (thanks be to the Lord that rules all the actiones of men!) for they have wrought more for our ends nor our owne prudence hes done. When our courses failed us, their courses promoted our intentions; and this is the extraordinarie Providence that workes, not only by meanes, but without meanes, and contrare to meanes—contrare to their malicious intentions and purposes that are against ws. And should not we, beloved, remember with thankfulnes the beginnings—these glorious beginings of reformation in this land—greater pietie—more religious exercises—greater sobrietie, chastitie, and care to keep the bodie from uneleanes—greater care to perform the dewties of righteousnes—not so much craft, cruelitie, oppression, falsehood in the land, as was before this work began? And, if it be prosequit, it will appeare to be the worke of God.

But shall we not acknowledge His hand that would have this Assemblie indicted by auctoritie, and his Majesties Commissioner staying till it was fullie constitut; and that the Lord should have keiped ws heir against all sortes of feares quhatsoever; and, being heir, has keiped us in such a wonderfull unitie, and, I trust, also the light of veritie? Surelie this should make ws wonder at the goodnes of God; but especiallie when we consider the comfortable conclusions this Assemblie hes brought to passe. And now, we are quyte of the Service Booke, which was a booke of Slaverie and Service indeed; the Booke of Cannons, which tyed us in spirituall bondage; the Booke of Ordination, which was a yocke put upon the necks of faithfull Ministers; and the High Commission, which was a guard to keip us all under that slaverie. All these evils God hes red us of, and lykewayes of the civill places of Kirkmen, quihich was the splendour of all these evils; and the Lord hes led captivitie captive, and made Lords slaves. What should we doe less, then resolve, first, since the Lord hes granted ws libertie to labour, to be sensible of it, and take notice of it; for we are like to a man newlie awaked out of a dreame, or lyke a man that hes lyen lang in the irons, who, after they are tane off, and he redeemed, he feilles not his libertie, but thinkes the irons are on him still. So it is with us. We doe not feill our libertie; therefore it were good for us to studie to ken the bounds of our liberty wherewith Christ hath sett vs free, and then again to labour earnestlie that we be not more intangled with the yoke of bondage; for, ye know, in logicks, a privatione ad habitum non datur regressus. [It is] true—in politick plaeces: these that are great in Court, if once depryved, seareclie wones to their credit; but espeeciallie we know it is true in spirituall things, and yet the Lord, miraeulouslie and extraordinarilie, can give eyes to the blind, give eares to the deafe, raise the dead; and we find, among ourselves, that once being, in a manner, depryved, at least run on far in a course of defection, the Lord hes been pleased to turn to us, and make us turne to him; but take heid of the second privation—that which depryves our saules of libertie, and rather endure the greatest extremitie utherwayes before we be intangled. I grant the Crosse is hard to looke upon; bot if we get strenth from our Lord, it shall be an easie yoke and burden. Remember the plague of Laodieea for lukewarmnes, and bewar of it; for, ye know, the Lord threatens to spew them out of his mouth, which imports, 1. That he will take delyte in executing judgement upon us, as a man hes delyte when he empties his oppressed stomaek. 2. It shall have reproach as a man goes with his vomiting to a backsyde. 3. It imports, that he shall never returne, as a man returnes not to his vomite. Therefore, 1, let us know our libertie; 2, the esteeme of it reverentlie; 3, to use it diligentlie.

Then for our thankfulness—I say it becomes us to be thankfull to the Kings Majestie, under whose peacable protection we have had this libertie to con-vine together; and, truelie, I would recommend to yow, with your permission, two things—the one is, we would not cease for any thing is come or can come, or is feared to come, to pray most ferventlie, and to indure in prayer for our graceous Sovereigne and King, whom God hes ordained to be our supreme Magistrat, and to pour out our hearts on his behalfe, that it would please God to blesse him with all royall blessings. In all our preachings we would be carefull to recommend his Majestie to the People. We ought, indeed, so to doe; for it is the Lords will that we doe it; and next unto Christ let him have the highest place; for howsoever the fifth command be a precept of the second table, yet it is next unto the first, teaching us, that next unto our dewtie to God we owe dew reverence to these that are in plaeces above us: Therefore, when ye heare evils reported, attribute them not to his Majestie, but to misinformation. Ye that are acquainted with that storie, Numbers 22, of Balaam and Balack, ye will find that God spak to Balaam. Balaam minsched it, and what Balaam spak to Balacks servands they minched it lyke-wayes; for Balaam said—“The Lord will not give lieve to goe,” and the servands said, “Balack.” Balaam said—“He will not come.” So it comes to pas many tymes with true Prophets, that God will not give us lieve to doe this or that.

But it is said to the King—“This rebellious People will not doe this or that,” and he cannot understand but what he heares; therefore we should pray to Him who hes the hearts of Kings into his hand, and the keyes of all his senses, that he would convey knowledge to his Majesties royall heart, that he may understand matters aright; and we put no question but when he understands our proceedings, which hes been with respect to religion and loyal-tie to him, he will think so weil of them, that he will vouchsafe his approbation and royall ratification to them in his owne tyme, which God grant.

Then, for these Nobles, Barrons, Burgesses, and others who have attendit heir, this I may say confidentlie, and from the warrand of the Word—“These that honour God, God will honour them.” Your Lordships, and these worthie Gentlemen and Burgesses, who have bein honouring God, and giving testimony ample of your love to religion this time bygane, (though I will not excuse your former backslydings,) that, if ye will goe on, the Lord shall protect you, blesse you, honour you; and your faith shall be found in the day of the revelation of Jesus Christ, unto praise, honour, and glorie—that is to say, these that speake evill of you shall praise you; these that thinkes you foolish now, at that day shall confesse you were zealous; these that dishonoured you shall honour you; or, as the word ‘glorie’ imports, that they shall have a reverend opinion of you; nay, even in this world, your faith, devotion, and zeale shall be found unto praise, honour, and glorie; and the Lord shall returne you ane hundreth fold more in this lyfe, and, in the world to come, lyfe everlasting.

And I must say one word of these Nobles whom Jesus Christ hath nobilitat indeed, and declaired sensible to be worthie of that title of nobilitie. Ye kuow they were lyke the tops of the mountaines that were first discovered in the deludge, which made the litle valleyes hope to be delyvered from it also; and so it came to passe. I remember, in the eastern countrie, where they worship the sun, a number being assembled earlie in the morning to that effect, all stryving who shall sie the sun first, a servand turned his faee to the west, and waited on. The rest thought him a foolish man, and yet he got the first sight of the sun schyning on the tops of the westeru mountaines. So, truelie, he would have bein thought a foolish man that would have looked for such thinges of our nobilitie; yet the Sun of righteousnesse hes beine pleased to shyne first upon these mountaines; and long, long may he shyne upon them, for the comfort of the hilles and refreshing of the valleyes; and the blessing of God be upon them and their families; and, we trust, it shall be seene to the generations following.

As for us of the ministry, we have caus to praise the Lord that hes had such a peacable meeting heir, and that the Lord hes led us on in peace and truth; that there hes beine no difference worthie of consideration amongst us. It is a rare thing to sie such a harmonie; scarce hes the lyke beene seene in any nationall Assembly.

Last, I must give a word of thanksgiving to this Cittie, wherein we have had such a comfortable residence, and to the principall Magistrats of it, who hes heir attendit our meeting, and hes had due cair to provyde extraordinary commodious seats for us, and we have received very good intertainment in this cittie. The best reompence we can give to them is, to pray for the blessing of God upon them, and to give them a tast of our labours by visiting their colledge, and any other thing that consists in our power, without prejudice to the Kirk of God, that so the kingdome of Christ may be established among them, and glorie may dwell in this land.

After which the Moderatour desyred some of the brethren to speak a word of exhortation.

Mr David Dick said—We know not how shortlie the Lord may call us to trouble and sufferings for his trueth; for his Majestie hath kepted us still in suspence all this tyme, and, as he has mingled all our former steppes with fear, so now he keepes us in the same temper, to the end our rejoyeing might be as it should. But if we will continue to doe as we have begun, in supplicating our God and our King, and sett our face toward our Lord, and hold the rule of his Word before our eyes, and make himselfe our fear and our dread, we need not to think any thing els, and acknowledge his soveraigntie over all creatures. This is the short eutt and perfect rule by which our goings must be ordered; and if, in this path we meet with harsh troubles, when they are disgeasted a while, sweet and solide comfort will be the upshott of them all, provyding we could wait for patience on our Lord; and because, out of all doubt, the proceedings of the Assembly will be tryed, let us arme ourselves with the strength of our Lord to defend all our laudable constitutions, and, withall, bear with pitie the misconstructions of the world, making use of our liberty, and labouring to walke in a pure-pointed-out light; wondering at all the passages of our Lords providence, and admiring the large measure of reformation granted to this land; rejoycing to see seahame and confusion routed on the fall of Sions adversaries, and sevenfold rendered into their bosome who slandered our Reformers as not learned and wyse with their zeale: the contrare quhereof their laudable aets and constitutions makes manifest. And if this we doe, having now gotten a reformation sett on foot againe, if we goe on prudentlie, advaneing our Lord Jesus, keeping ourselves from a lordlie denomination; both Ministers and Ruling Elders knowing their duties; and everie one seiking the helpe and assistanee of one uther; that as the hands cannot say to the feete, nor the feete to the hauds, "we have no need of yow," so we may all, as members of one bodie, studie to advance our Lord and his honour; and, if we will studie to repent for the wronges God hes gotten in this land, and studie for a thorough reformation of ourselves, our people, and our families; then it shall come to passe, that the blessing of God shall be upon ourselves, our callings, and laboures, and our posteritie, and we shall be hid in the day of the Lords anger.

Then Mr Andro Ramsay, being called on to speake next, said—Among all the pairts of Gods worship, I acknowledge none more acceptable to God than thanksgiving; and it becomes us verie weill to be thankfull, if we regard, first, the beginning; secondly, the progresse; thirdlie, the happie conelusion of this great worke. First, if we regard the beginning which was (1) wonderfull, (2) unexpected, and (3) powerfull. First it was wonderfull, in respect that, by a few number of the basest offseourings in the land, God did begin this worke, that the glorie might be given to him alone. Secondlie, As it was wonderfull, so it was unexpected; for searse one in all Scotland could have any hope to see this dayes worke. Thirdlie, It was powerfull; for, before it begane, religion was dieing, and the breath of it expyreing. But now it is reviving; the winter is over and gone; the floures appear in the earth; and the tyme of singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.

Again, if we will looke to the progresse of this worke, we will see great matter of thankfulness; for whatever any intendit for our hurt, he made it to turne for our good. Third, for the conelusion, 1, If we respect this frequent meeting we have had; 2, this powerfull and gracious assistanee we have felt; 3, this wonderfull harmone and unanimitie that we have had; 4, the happie conelusion that we see now with our eyes: In all thir respects we have great reason to praise God.

First, for the frequencie of this meeting, there was never such a meeting at such a worke sein in Christendome. 2, So powerfull assistanee, both of the spirit of our God for which we glorified him, and of these worthlie nobles and uthers heir present, on whom we wish all earthlie blessings—blessings heir, and eternall happinesse in the lyfe to come. 3, For our harmonie; there was never such a harmonie; that, all in one voice, we have rejected and condemned that Service Booke—a booke of slaverie and servitude indeed—that superstitious Booke of Ordination, and that Booke of Canons, which was a bulwarke and defenee for all the rest. 4, For the happie conelusion, we have great reason to thanke God that these bookes are now condemned. The 5 Artieles that rent our Chureh are now condemned; Episcopacie now abjured, and all uther matters introductorie to Popperie—the Lord hes fried us from them; for which I say we have great reason to thank God. Now let us not sing a requiem to ourselves, nor yet be insolent in our earriage, but behave ourselves wiselie and prudentlie towards our superiours; and, though the Bishops be east out, let us not be eairlesse of auctoritie, but let our earriage be modest and our speach seasoned with grace. 3, Let us be vigilant and not secure; for, a great and good worke such as this is, it was never brought to ane end without opposition. 4, Let us be courageous in the strenth of our God; and, lastlie, thankfull to his great name for that wonderfull unanimitie that hes beine amongst us, and happie conelusion that God hes granted unto us.

The Moderatour said—Truelie it becomes us not to be insolent; for the Lord hes bein pleased so to dispose of us as we have not eaus to be wantoun, for if, as we had divine auctoritie to warrand us, so we had humane, I feir it should be hard for us to keip ourselves within bounds. But the Lord, knowing our weaknes, keipes us in this temper; and if we eary ourselves worthlie of that God hes bestowed upon us, who knowes but he will graceouslie grant us all our desyres, and turn the countenance of our King toward this Kirk? There rests one circumstance which I should have remembered. I am assured it will be acceptable to this Assembly, that some of these Noblemen who hes bein ane ornament to this Assembly should speake one word before it dissolve, espeeciallie my noble Lord Argyle, whom we could have wished, if it had pleased his Lordship, to have come in sooner: but the Lord hes reserved him for the fittest tyme, and I trust the Lord shall honour him with all blessings, both heir and heirefter.

My Lord Argyle said—Since it pleases you, Moderatour, to name my name, yow give me occasion to thanke yow for putting so favourable a construction upon my cariage, whereas ye wishe me that I had come in sooner. Truelie, I tell yow it was not want of affection to the good of religion and my countrie, and I desyre that favourable construction of yow still, that my intention was to have done more good wherein I was not inlaiking before; and, when I saw I could be no more usefull, except I had bein a knave, I thought good to doe as I have done. Ane thing I would remember yow of who hath bein purging the Kirk of evill instrumens, that ye would labour to learn a lesson upon their expenses: felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum. I remember, upon one occasion, I told some of them to their faee, that there was two faults which had brought meikle evill in this Chureh—to witt, pride and avariee, which I cannot deny but to be grievous faults in any man, but espeeciallie in Churehmen. But I hope everie man shall walke by the square and rule which is now before him—keeping duetie first to superiors; secondly, to equals; and, thirdlie, to inferiours. For superiours, their needs nothing to be farder said nor hes bein already by the Moderatour. Only this; let us all labour, since we are frid of many yockes of bondage, not to abuse our Christian libertie, which may make our profession to be evil spokeu of. Secondlie, for our duetie to our equals—there is a caus much spoken of in this Church, betwixt ruleing elders and ministers. Some miuisters feares that it be a corbing of them; but, if any of these elders stryve to make use of that power for any eud but for the good of the Kirk, they may be sure of their oune judgment. Truelic, it may be, that some ruleing elders in some places be not so wise as neid wer; but let not that, if it fall out, breid a distemper in the peace of this Church; but let unitie be all our rules; and, if anything of this kind fall out in Presbytries or Parochines, let neighbour Preshytries and Parochines joyne together for settling thereof, that no dissension be of this kind, for it may doe much evill. Thirdlie, for inferiours—I hope ministers will studie to know their duetie towards their flocke and people; lyke-wayes, will have due regard to these whom God hes sett over them; for we must not thinke that becaus we want Bishops, therefore we may live as we will. Aud, if this we doe, though our gracious Master doe not everie thing at first as we would wishe, yet tyme may worke many things, if we goe on constantlie in the defence of our religion and of the auctoritie of our gracious Sovereigne, whom, we pray, may long and prosperously reigne over us.

After that the Moderatour had given thankes to my Lord Argyle for his speach, and craved pardon of his Lordship for expressing his name, he said—As for that which my Lord hes beime wiselie speaking, concerning our duetie to the Kings Majestie, we have good reason to advert unto it; for this reason, addit to many—becaus our adversaries gave it out as a calunnie against us, that his government which we are about, established by Christ in this Church, cannot stand with monarchicall government, but Episcopall only; but let us resolve to give a proove of the contrare—that the government which Christ hes appoynted, may weill stand with monarchicall government; and, we trust, that we are not to be suspected of our loyaltie toward his Majestie; and this certainlie will make his Majestie perceave that we have done nothing but what we have done moved by God, and drawn be necessitie to doe. And for this end let us—to conclude this great worke—beseech Him who hes the hearts of Kings in his hands, to inelyne our Kings heart, and let us magnifie, from our hearts, our graccous Lord for this peaceable meeting and happie conclusion we have had; for the which we are obliessed all the dayes of our life to be thankfull to our God and King, and to rander unto the Father, Soune, and blisshed Spirit of Grace, all praise, endless honour, and glorie, for now and ever.—AMEN.*

FINIS.

* Mr Stevenson, in his "History of the Church and State of Scotland," (1753, et ann. sequen.) after giving the closing speeches of Henderson and Argyle, concludes his account of the Assembly, 1638, in these terms:—"The Assembly being thus happily concluded. Mr Henderson said—We have now cast down the walls of Jericho: let him that rebuildeth them beware of the curse of Hiel the Bethelite." As Mr Stevenson does not state on what authority this is given, and as it is not mentioned in any other work that we have chanced to see, we merely add it in a note, (the expression being frequently referred to,) without having before us any contemporary voucher for its accuracy.

THE

AT EDINBURGH, 1639.

BEFORE proceeding with a detail of the Acts and discussions of the Assembly of 1639, it is fitting, in conformity with the general plan of this work, to state briefly the occurrences which resulted from that of the preceding year—events, the character of which must, in some measure, have been anticipated in the perusal of the numerous documents which we have already concentrated in the foregoing pages.

It is evident, from many indications in the correspondence and public documents of the period, that, from the first movements of the Covenanters against the Service Book and Prelacy, both the King and the Scotch Leaders contemplated the contingency of an appeal to arms, although both parties disguised, as much as possible, their mutual anticipations and arrangements. The rupture which ensued on the Comuissioner's dissolution of the Assembly on the 29th of November 1638; the continuance of the Assembly in defiance of the King's authority, (apart altogether from the nature of its subsequent proceedings;) and the proclamations by Hamilton, after his retirement from the Assembly—in which all who continued in it were denounced as liable to the penalties of treason—amounted, in substance and effect, to a declaration of war, on the part of Charles, against the great body of his Scottish subjects, as rebels. Nor, in the circumstances, could aught else be expected; for, with the Sovereign's notions of the royal prerogative, and influenced by the spirit disclosed in all his letters and instructions to the Commissiouer, nothing, save consciousness of utter want of power, was likely to deter him from enforcing full and unlimited authority over all his subjects; while, on the other hand, the bold, numerous, and influential representatives of national feeling that composed the Glasgow Assembly of 1638, must have been prepared, from the first hour of its meeting, to raise the standard of revolt in the field, unless the objects at which they aimed with such intense enthusiasm, were otherwise attained. In fact, even before the meeting of that Assembly, both the King and the Covenanters had secretly prepared for a conflict; and, after its dissolution, and the scornful rejection of its supplication for a sanction to its Acts, the exertions of both parties were commensurate to their means and their relative positions.

The chief Acts of the Assembly of 1638—some of which have been made subjects of controversy—were, 1st, The election of their Moderator and Clerk, and their constituting the Court before receiving the Declinature tendered by the Prelates; 2d, The Acts approving of the Registers; 3d, The continuing to sit after the Commissioner ordered it to dissolve; 4th, The Act condemning the spurious Assemblies from 1606 to 1613, inclusive; 5th, The Act condemning the Service Book, and other Books forced on the country and Church, by the royal prerogative, without the sanction of Parliament or of the Church; 6th, The deposition and excommunication of the Prelates and others; 7th, The prohibition, by its own authority, of Episcopacy and the practice of the Five Articles of Perth, under the pains of censure and excommunication; 8th, The Act against the Press.

Of these, the first five, and some other relative Acts, reviving former laws of the Church, appear to be quite unexceptionable, and fully within the competency of a free General Assembly, according to the laws of the land, and the consuetudes of the Reformed Church, from the time of the Reformation; and these were all Acts, legitimately within the range of spiritual and ecclesiastical jurisdiction. We know not on what ground it can be contended that it was bound to dissolve itself on the mandato of the King or his Commissioner. It was confessedly convened by the royal proclamation; but we know of no authority by which the executive power was at that time warranted to dissolve a General Assembly, by its mere fiat, after being so assembled, upon an anticipation that it was about to act ultra vires and illegally.

The 6th, 7th, and 8th classes of Acts to which we have alluded, were of a different character, and imported an assumption of civil power and jurisdiction. Had that Assembly, upon the points referred to, confined itself to an expression of opinion in the first instance, or taken cognizance only, and in an orderly manner, of the moral and ministerial delinquencies of the prelates and ministers, there does not appear to be any good ground for challenging its procedure; and, having exhausted its proper spiritual jurisdiction, it could then have applied to the supreme legislature for a ratification of its ecclesiastical conclusions, and thus avoided the rock on which it split, and, for many "evil days," made shipwreck of the genuine and legitimate Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

It would be disingenuous, as well as absurd, to disguise the fact, that several of the Acts of the Assembly of 1638 were violations of, and irreconcilable with, the existing law of the land, and imported an assumption of authority identical with that of the State. In fact, that Assembly was a Political Convention, as much, at least, as an Ecclesiastical Synod—having fully a hundred Members of Parliament in its composition; and, in many of its enactments and decrees, it directly rescinded and superseded a great number of Acts of Parliament. Without entering at all on controversial ground, we may remark, as a matter of fact and of notoriety, established on the face of the Statute Book, and by the tenor of the Assembly's Acts, that that Assembly, virtually and explicitly, abrogated a series of Acts of Parliament, by which Prelacy was fully and distinctly settled as the Established Church of Scotland, for a period of above thirty years preceding, under which the greater number of the Clergy in that Assembly had received ordination and benefices, and in which the lay members had acquiesced without any visible opposition.* In addition to the assumption of civil authority, in practically repealing Acts of Parliament, the Assembly sustained Complaints against the Prelates and others, at the instance of miscellaneous and self-constituted public prosecutors—a practice never recognised as competent in the law of Scotland at any period.† It deposed the Prelates, not solely for erroneous doctrine or immoralities, which was quite competent to the spiritual jurisdiction of the Assembly, but chiefly because they held offices conferred on them under the existing law of the country. It superseded the uniform and settled law, both of the Church and State, from the time of the Reformation, on the point of ecclesiastical presentations to benefices, and transported * Although Lowdown and Johnston, as we have seen (vide their Speeches, Report, p. 167), attempted to explain away the effect of the several Acts of Parliament to which we refer, yet it is due to the truth of history to say, that there is no mistaking the tenor and effect of those Acts. By the 1st Act of King James VI., 18th Parliament (9th July, 1606), the power and prerogative of the King are declared "over all estates, persons, and causes whatsoever, within the said Kingdom." And by the very next Act (2d), he is declared to be "Sovereign Monarch, absolute Prince, Judge, and Governour over all persons, estates, and causes, both spiritual and temporal;" and, further, the previous Acts by which Bishops had been ousted or denuded of their titles, privileges, and benefices, are rescinded, and the order "restored and reintegrated," to all intents and purposes. Again, in 1612 (23d Oct.), there is another Act, ratifying the ecclesiastical arrangements made by the packed and bribed Assembly at Glasgow in 1610, which were out-and-out Episcopalian. Furthermore, there was an Act, 28th June 1617, anent the election of Archbishops and Bishops; and, finally, on the 4th of August 1621, there was another Act of Parliament ratifying the 5 Articles of Perth, adopted by another packed Assembly in August 1618. All these statutes, and the surreptitious and corrupt Acts of Assemblies which they ratified, were doubtless infamous encroachments on the liberties of the subject and the legitimate laws of the Church; but still they were the law of the land, emanating from the supreme authority of Parliament, and which Parliament alone could rescind. Johnston (the Clerk of Assembly) said—"I know certainlie that this office of Bishop was never established by any Act of Parliament in Scotland;" and Lowdown averred that "the Act 1612 does not ratifie that which is concludit in Glasgow Assembly which now is condemned; that ground being taken away, the ratification also falls." Johnston's statement is contradicted by the statute-book; Lowdown's statement and his inference are equally contradicted, and inconsistent with themselves; for, if the Act 1612 had not ratified the Acts of the Assembly 1610, how could the condemnation of these by the Assembly 1638, infer that the ratification thereby fell? There is reason to apprehend, that the Assembly of 1638 was mystified by such statements—the Acts of Parliament and Assembly not being then, as now, accessible to the community generally—and hence we may ascribe some of the stretches of ecclesiastical authority at that Assembly, to malinformation as well as to passion.

ministers from place to place, regardless of the rights of patrons and the wishes of incumbents. It imposed an absolute veto on the liberty of the press; and, above all, it issued an edict for coercing the whole people into an adoption of the Covenant or Confession, and, in obedience to its decrees, under the terrors of excommunication, (a penalty which, at that time, was tantamount to outlawry, confiscation of property, and proscription,) in each and all of these particulars deviating from the spiritual into the civil track of jurisprudence and legislation. Of this, indeed, that sagacious and gifted man, Henderson, the Moderator, was fully aware; for he says explicitly—"Neither can we think ourselves secure in peace and quietness, till civill auctoritie ratifie what is heir done by ecclesiasticall constitution."

One of the most unaccountable characteristics of the Reformation in this country, is the intolerance and coercive courses adopted by the Protestants, from their Popish predecessors, for compelling uniformity to the new doctrines and worship. This appears to be inconsistent, and indeed irreconcilable with the great first principle of the Reformation—the right of private judgment in matters of religion, and in interpreting the Scriptures according to the conclusions of that judgment. It was the assertion of this right which shook the Papal domination; and nothing contributed more largely to the overthrow of Popery in Scotland, than the civil persecutions which ushered in the dawn of the Reformation, and which excited the sympathy and indignation of the people; yet no sooner were our first Reformers disenthralled from that bloody yoke, than they resorted to similar methods of compelling assent to their principles, and obedience to the authority of the Kirk. From 1449, in the reign of James II., "cursing" or "excommunication" by the Church, both Catholic and Protestant, for non-conformity or other kindred offences, inferred imprisonment and forfeiture of property in the recusant; and the unhappy victim of ecclesiastical censure was doomed to exclusion from society and all its charities, to destitution, to imprisonment, to exile from his native country, and even to death. Self-preservation may, perhaps, have prompted this course at first, when the Reformers were struggling to secure that religious liberty which was the great object of their zeal; and "The Booke of the Universall Kirk" affords numberless examples of the eagerness betrayed for constraining, by civil penalties, all persons to profess the reformed doctrine, and submit themselves to ecclesiastical authority. During the space of 140 years after, the spirit of intolerance continued to govern every party that was dominant for the time, in the reigns of Mary, James VI., and his son Charles, and his grandsons Charles II. and James VII. The triumph of the Covenanters was not more distinguished than any other portion of the period referred to, for greater relaxation in this respect, than either the Popish or Episcopal Churches; and, during all the vicissitudes of their fortune, as already in some measure disclosed, and to be further illustrated, we cannot find even a trace of any proposal to give freedom of conscience to others, even when they were waging war against Popery and Prelacy in the name of religious liberty. This strikes us as an anomaly in the moral history of our country, of which we have never seen any satisfactory solution; but the rigorous enforcement of the Covenant and submission to the Presbyterian Kirk, and the excommunications which were directed against the Prelates and others at the time to which our attention is more immediately directed, perhaps paved the way, in some degree, as a precedent, for the interdicts, intercommunings, and diversified persecutions, which have rendered the reigns of the two last monarchs of the Stuart dynasty, a byword and a reproach to the land in which these horrors were perpetrated. It was not till the year 1690 that the civil penalties on religious nonconformity were blotted from our statute-book, after the settlement of William and Mary on the throne of Britain.

Greatly as we admire the talents, the courage, and the piety of many individuals in the Assembly of 1638, we do not deem it necessary to canonize their errors, or to ascribe a sort of plenary inspiration to all their proceedings. That in their great objects, they were right, and that much good resulted from their stern and intrepid course, we most willingly admit; but (if we may be permitted to express any opinion of our own) we should say, that the true and only justification of some Acts, which were ultra vires of a church assembly, is, that in fact they were partly a political as well as an ecclesiastical body, constrained, by the necessity of the case, to resist and to resent the assumption of arbitrary power, which by its stretches had virtually broken up the fabric of society in Scotland, and reduced it nearly to its primary elements. The Covenanters had but too much reason to apprehend that their civil as well as their religious liberties were in the utmost jeopardy; and, therefore, it is by no means surprising if, in the tumult of emotions by which the nation was at that time convulsed, they in some points passed beyond the strict line of demarcation which separates the spiritual from the civil authorities in peaceful and well-ordered states—Inter arma silent leges.

Such was the position of the parties—the King and the Kingdom of Scotland—in the beginning of the year 1639, after the Assembly of 1638 had terminated its labours.

Immediately after the dissolution of the Assembly, the several Commissions which it had appointed proceeded to "purge out" all persons who, either by adherence to Prelacy, or for other causes, were obnoxious to the now ruling power; and Baillie informs us that "many ministers who remained obstinate in scandals were deposed at Edin<sup>r</sup>, St Andrews, Dundee, Irvine, and elsewhere."* We learn, however, from the Acts of 1639 that these depositions were to be relaxed, (except in the case of gross faults,) upon submission to the new order of things.* The members of the late Assembly, according to its injunctions, had made known to their several parishes the nature of its proceedings; but at Aberdeen, where there was a stiff opposition to its authority, Dr Guild was deterred from doing so; and Luddie, the Commissioner from King's College, was summoned before the Senatus Academicus, and threatened with deprivation for having continued in the Assembly after it was dissolved by the Commissioner.†

But the attention of the Covenanters was called from such matters to others of more serious importance. Hamilton had, on the 17th of December preceding, put forth a full proclamation, containing his reasons for dissolving the Assembly. His health had suffered much from mental anxiety and the exertions which he had been called on to make; and it was not until the 23th of that month that he proceeded on his journey to London.‡ Previously to his final departure from Scotland, however, the chiefs of the Covenanters waited on him, to solicit his good offices at Court; but we are told that he replied to them—“You must not think to use your Kings now as you did formerly, when they were only Kings of rebels: the King has now another royal and warlike nation at his command, and you shall soon feel it to your cost.”§ Hamilton reached Whitehall on the 5th of January, when he found the King highly exasperated, and resolved, by force of arms, to subdue his obstreperous subjects, the Covenanters of Scotland.

The plan of operations designed for carrying this object into effect was, that an English army of 30,000 horse and foot, under the immediate command of Charles, should invade Scotland on the eastern borders—that Carlisle and Berwick should be strongly garrisoned—that 5000 men should be landed in the north, to co-operate with Huntly and his followers—that the Earl of Antrim should land in Argyleshire—that Strafford, with such forces as he could withdraw from Ireland, should enter the Clyde—that another fleet should enter the Forth, and scour the eastern coast—and thus, by a simultaneous attack on all sides, distract and overwhelm the Covenanters. And had this well-devised plan of operations been fully and promptly carried into effect, there can be but little doubt that it would have been attended with at least temporary success.

The King, though hampered by increasing discontents among his English subjects, and weakened by many errors in policy, both foreign and domestic, roused “the might of England.” He had effected a saving of £200,000 in his Exchequer; he obtained loans from the Episcopal Clergy of England, and from the Papists by means of the Queen and the priests; he had ample stores of arms, and a formidable train of artillery; and he summoned the English nobility to assemble, with their followers, at York, on the 1st of April.||

Of these designs on the part of the King, the Covenanters did not long remain ignorant; and, indeed, they had anticipated them so far that they had previously procured arms and munitions secretly from the Continent, and had secured the services of Alexander Lesly, and other veteran soldiers, trained to war in the army of the celebrated Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden. The King's summons to the English nobility was promulgated on the 26th of January, and the ground on which it proceeded was a statement that the Scotch intended to invade England. Even before this public document appeared, the Covenanters were made aware of the King's hostile intentions, from the circumstance of all Scotchmen at Court being required upon oath to renounce the Assembly, and to promise assistance when required against the Covenanters. Being anxious to propitiate the good opinion of the English people, and thereby to weaken the King's hands, they had circulated extensively “a printed sheet or two” of information to the people of England, “for vindicating their intentions and actions from the unjust calumnies of their enemies.” It was dated 4th February, and, on the 27th of that month, Charles issued “A proclamation and declaration to inform the kingdom of England of the seditious practices of some in Scotland, seeking to overthrow his regal power under the false pretence of religion.”*

The deputies of the Covenanters, who assembled in Edinburgh about the middle of February, resolved to make a reply to this proclamation, which was drawn up by Henderson, and entitled, “The Remonstrance of the Nobility, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons, within the Kingdom of Scotland, vindicating them and their proceedings from the crimes wherewith they are charged by the late proclamation in England,” &c. “These three or four most dainty sheets of paper of Mr Henderson,” says Baillie, “made such an impression, that we, over all England, began to be much more pitied than before, and our enraged party, [antagonists,] the Bishops, to be more detested.” These, and various other tracts by Henderson, Baillie, and others, on the “lawfulness of our defence in arms,”† and which were distributed extensively through England by pedlers and otherwise, had a powerful moral influence in that kingdom; in which, besides, there was a growing discontent, occasioned by the King's arbitrary disuse of Parliaments, and other grievances peculiar to themselves.

“When we had done diligence,” says Baillie, “to inform our neighbours of England, and make sure the courage of all our friends at home, in the third place we took course for a real opposition to our enemies.” On the 7th of March, a full meeting of the deputies and leaders of the Covenant was held, at which, resolving not to depend on any foreign auxiliaries, a general committee of the nobles, barons, and burgesses, and two senators of the College of Justice, being twenty-six in number, was appointed, (thirteen being a quorum,) to give out orders, receive intelligence, levy troops, raise money, &c. ; and, exercising all the functions of a supreme, legislative, and executive body, this "Committee of Estates" issued an edict that every fourth man should be armed and trained : local committees of war were appointed, and a complete plan of military organization was established in every burgh and county in Scotland ; and we have Bishop Burnet's authority for stating, that " these committees found small resistance, and no difficulty, of levying men—greater numbers being offered than could be either armed or maintained."* Thus, the chimera of royal and indefeasible prerogative was reduced in Scotland to a nonentity ; and the nice metaphysical problem of the lawfulness of resistance by subjects, was practically solved by the entire Kingdom appearing in arms, to resist the undefined and unlimited claims of the first Charles Stuart, to absolute power over all estates in the realm, when about to be enforced by foreign invasion.

While these transactions were in progress, the Court of Session, it appears, had remonstrated strongly with their Sovereign against his belligerent purposes. Their earlier communications on the subject appear to have been intercepted, probably by the incendiary courtiers ; but, in the month of March, their Lordships sent another remonstrance to his Majesty by the Lord Justice-Clerk, which we have not observed in any of the common histories or printed collections, and which we, therefore, subjoin among the documents hereto appended, being a piece of evidence entitled to great weight, as emanating from the supreme civil judicatory of Scotland.†

Their Lordships state that, " when your Majesty was pleased to indict a General Assembly, we, and most parte of all your good subjects of this kingdom, wer overjoyed, in expectation that the doubts in religious worship and kirk government, quhillk was tossed to and fro this whyle bygone, should have then beine cleerlie settled ; and altho' the greater part of your people be weill pleased with the constitutions therein concluded, yet your Majesties displeasure against that Assembly, and the proceedings thereof, and your expresse dislike of those who adheres to the same, and the fearfull consequences therefra like to ensue, hes turned all the hopes of comfort which we expected, in sorrowes and teares." —" Your Majesty may be pleased to pardon us to avere, that in this, they are but badd counsellours, and no better patriots, who will advis your Majesty to adde oyle and fewall to the fire." And among their " Instructions," (advices,) their Lordships inform his Majesty, " that, if our neighbour nation doe invaid this countrie, it will assuredlie be taken be all Scotsmen, albeit not affected the present way, for a national quarrel ; and all will strive as one man, to defend themselves, as for their lives, estates, and liberties of the countrie." This salutary advice, however, was slighted by King Charles.

We shall not pause to notice all the deliberations and preparations on either side which ensued, but hasten on to the main points of our narrative.

On the 21st of March, Leslie, and other officers, commanding about 1000 men, took Edinburgh Castle—having forced the outer gate—securing twenty-five field-pieces, and other munitions. The day following, Rothies, Lowdown, Home, and Lothian, with a similar force, invested Dalkeith House, which was surrendered, without resistance, by Traquair, the keeper : and they seized the Regalia of Scotland, forty-eight barrels of gunpowder, twenty-four of balls, and six cart-loads of muskets, which they deposited in Edinburgh Castle. On the 23d of March, (being a Sunday,) Dumbarton Castle was secured by a stratagem ; and, besides these chief forts, (Stirling was in the hands of Mar, one of their own party,) Strathaven Castle and Douglas Castle, in Lanarkshire, and Tantallan Castle, in East Lothian, Dairsy, in Fife,* and Broderick Castle, in Arran were seized ; the only enterprise of this kind which failed, being in the case of Karlaverock Castle, in the south, which it would have been hazardous to attack, and difficult to maintain. Dumfries, however, was taken possession of by a body of Covenanters.

In the north, the Earl of Montrose, with a well-appointed force, of seven or eight thousand men, (" the most were brave, resolute, and well-armed gentlemen,") levied in Angus and Mearns, moved to Aberdeen, appalled Huntly and his adherents, who fled ; and Montrose took possession of Aberdeen, where he levied contributions, though very generously. There was a subsequent rallying of the Royalists, headed by Aboyne, Huntly's son, and Ogilvy of Banff, who gained some petty advantages ; but they were worsted in a skirmish at Turreff ; and Montrose kept all the north country in awe and subjection—Huntly being seized and conveyed to Edinburgh Castle, as the only security his opponents could get for his neutrality. In the Western Highlands, Argyle was on the alert, with a sufficient force. The enthusiasm was so high, that nobility, gentry, ladies, and persons of all ranks, joined in the humblest labours for self-defence. " Leith fortifications went on speedily—above 1000 hands daily employed ; plat up towards the sea, sundry perfect and strong bastions, well garnished, with a number of double cannon, that we feared not much any lauding of ships on that quarter. The towns of Fife, all along the shore, made up such sconces and fosses, and planted such a number of ship-cannon upon batteries, that they were all in the case of a tolerable defence. Thus, in a short time, by Gods extraordinary help, we cut the main sinews of our adversaries hopes ; all the strength of our land came in our hands ; no man among us but those who swore they were stout friends. All otherwise disposed, both Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Ministers, were got away to our professed enemies, and the whole country put in such an order and magnanimity, that we found sensibly in every thing, the hand of God going before us; so all fear of human force was clean banished away.”*

Such were the energetic and successful movements, which, in the course of a few days, put the Covenanters in possession of all the strongholds of Scotland, and inspired them with assured confidence. Let us now turn to the preparations of King Charles for his enterprise against them.

About the middle of March, the King published a declaration of the reasons for his expedition against Scotland, and soon after issued the “Large Declaration,” or Manifesto, containing a more minute statement of the grounds of his projected invasion. The latter of these, as has been already noticed, was written by Balcanquel, Dean of Durham; and, although we have had occasion to select public documents from it, which could not be materially falsified, it is to be regarded merely as a varnished and partial statement on behalf of the King’s policy, on which no reliance can be placed, except when his testimony operates against the cause which he advocated. His Majesty thereafter took his departure from London, on the 27th of March, and, on the 1st of April, arrived at York, where he remained till the beginning of May, when he moved on to Newcastle-upon-Tyne. He marched thence to Berwick-upon-Tweed, in the vicinity of which he arrived about the beginning of the month, and continued there till the negotiations and treaty, betwixt him and the Covenanters, put a stop to the impending hostilities, on the 18th of June following.

The movements of the two armies, however, during that interval, form too prominent a picture of the times to be passed over without a brief notice—referring to the Royal Letters, and other documents of the day, which will be found annexed, as embodying the most authentic accounts, not merely of what was visible to the common eye, but of what was passing behind the scenes, in the secret councils of the antagonist courts and camps.

Charles, with a well-appointed army, which had preceded and accompanied him from London to York, was there joined by the English nobility; and, from the splendour of the national chivalry who there joined his standard, the march, from thence to Berwick, of betwixt 20,000 and 30,000 infantry, cavalry, and artillery, is described as resembling a military triumph. The English host was under the nominal command of the Earls of Arundel and Essex, but having its monarch and his standard in the midst. It finally encamped at the Birks, a few miles above Berwick, on the southern bank of the Tweed. The long inaction, however, which ensued—the peculiar nature of the service, in which the sympathies of the officers, as well as of the common soldiers, were, to a great extent, with the Scotch—and the unpopularity of Charles’ Government in England, created by his arbitrary dissolutions and discontinuance of Parliaments, paralysed the energies of this showy army; and Charles ere long discovered symptoms that there was peril in relying on a force the military prowess of which was unnerved by these inherent moral affections.

During the progress of this prolonged and hesitating advance towards the boundary which divided the kingdoms, the Marquis of Hamilton, who had remained in London at the King’s departure, to superintend the outfit of the naval expedition, had only reached Yarmouth Roads on the 15th of April, and being there detained by adverse winds, it was not till the 29th of that month that he reached Holy Island with his squadron, on board of which there were about 5000 raw levies, so inefficient that the greater part of them, including even the non-commissioned officers, did not even know how to fire a musket. On the 1st of May, he entered the Frith of Forth; and his squadron, consisting of about twenty vessels, cast anchor in Leith Roads.

The Covenanters were not unprepared for the threatened invasion. Whenever the fleet appeared in the offing, the beacon fires blazed along the summits of the mountains, awakening the land to a sense of its dangers and its duties. From all quarters, the stout peasantry and burgesses of Scotland followed, with ardour, the Nobles and gentry, and veteran officers, as their “Crowners” and commanders, to the point of danger; and, ere Hamilton could refresh his sickly troops, by landing them on Inchkeith and Incheolm, or issue the King’s proclamations, the shores of the Forth, on both sides of his fleet, gleamed with twenty thousand Scottish spears and broadswords—the well-known symbols of ancient renown and national victory—and stood, “a wall of fire,” in defence of their native land, against what every man deemed an invasion by a foreign foe. Whatever we may now think of the circumstances of a political nature which led to this unhappy difference betwixt the King and his Scottish subjects, and however clearly we may trace, as it appears to us, through the backward vista of two hundred years, the errors and the failings of our fathers—there is not a true Scotchman, of these times, or in any future generations, who can look back on the records of such a scene, without a throb of pride and of patriotism swelling in his heart, that he is descended of a race who thus gathered themselves around the altar of their country and their God, in the hour of peril—in defence of what they deemed the highest and the holiest privileges of their fathers, of themselves, and of their children.

This splendid demonstration of national spirit and power, seems to have warned Hamilton that his purposes of attack were effectually frustrated, even if he was not paralyzed by the feelings inseparable from a generous nature in such a position. He lingered on in a fruitless series of negotiations with the leaders of the Covenanters, (of which the particulars are too minute for recapitulation here)—his strength frittered away by detaching a portion of his troops, and by the ravages of disease; and he continued in a state of listless distraction and impotence for many weeks, neither attempting anything hostile, nor receiving any aggression from his sagacious antagonists, until he was recalled by his royal master to headquarters, in the camp near Berwick.

It will be recollected that, by the proclamations of 9th and 22d September 1638, the General Assembly was indicted for the 21st of November that year, and the Scottish Parliament to meet on the 15th of May following.* The time had now arrived for the assembling of Parliament, to which, in compliance with the proclamation, the Nobles, Barons, and others liable or entitled to serve in the Supreme Legislature convened at Edinburgh, while public affairs were in the attitude of which we have thus given a brief outline—the King's Commissioner on board a naval armament in Leith Roads, for the subjection of Scotland by force, and the nation mustered in arms to resist him; the Sovereign himself being at the head of a foreign army, (for, as regarded Scotland then, it was a foreign army,) on the eve of invading her territories, and issuing proclamations against the whole nation, as guilty of treason and rebellion. It was under these extraordinary circumstances that Parliament assembled on the 15th of June 1639; and it is necessary to advert to the proceedings which the Estates, thus convoked by royal authority, adopted.

It was surmised by the royalist partisans that the Covenanters would hold a Parliament according to the indictment, and proceed, without either the King or a Commissioner being present, and establish some form of government, more or less anti-monarchical; in this, however, they were mistaken. When his Majesty sent orders to prorogue the Parliament, all agreed that it should be prorogued, after being fenced, to any period his Majesty thought fit; and it was prorogued accordingly, and by subsequent adjournment, till September following. Before separating, however, the Members concurred in granting a very ample commission to General Leslie, as Commander-in-Chief, and appointed Balmerino Governor of Edinburgh Castle. Meanwhile, the Covenanting chiefs omitted no opportunity of appealing to the justice and patriotism of the King, by supplications to himself, and communications to others whom they thought likely to have influence in his councils.

We now turn our attention to that quarter where it appeared probable the main battle would be fought, had not the consciousness of danger in the battle-field, and a sinister and double policy, induced the King to listen to the proposals of peace from his subjects; and it is one of the most honourable traits in the character of the Covenanters, that, however mistaken they might be in some of their views and actions, they ever manifested a desire to avoid the calamities of war, and ever cherished feelings of loyalty to the King, and of submission to his constitutional authority.

As the plans of the King began to be developed by his own march to the Eastern Border, and Hamilton's expedition to the Forth, the Covenanters concentrated their forces to meet the threatened invasion at all points. On the 18th of May, peremptory orders were given by the Committee of War for general and energetic exertions. The forces which had been organized and disciplined on the Western Borders, under Monro, advanced from Dumfries through Nithsdale, Annandale, Liddisdale, and Teviotdale, towards the Merse, and took up cantonments at Kelso; while the main army (after leaving sufficient force to keep Hamilton in check) marched toward the royal camp, under the command of Alexander Leslie as Generalissimo, and pitched their tents in an entrenched camp at Dungle, on the confines of East Lothian and Berwickshire—each body being so placed as to interpose an opposing force if the King's army should attempt to enter Scotland through Berwick or further up the Tweed—and so posted that either portion of the army could presently coalesce with the other at any point of attack by the English. While the opposing armies were thus situated, the King was busied in issuing proclamations, one of which was more mild in its tone than those which preceded it, offering amnesty to all who should relinquish hostilities, but denouncing all who should not do so, and holding out an insidious temptation to the tenantry of Scotland that the estates of their landlords would be forfeited and partitioned among them, but withal forbidding them to come within ten miles of the royal camp, &c. Early in June these proclamations were published along the Border—at Dunse by Arundel, having an armed force along with him, without opposition; but not so at Kelso. Holland was dispatched, on the 3d of June, with 1000 horse and 3000 foot, to Kelso, professedly for a similar purpose, but evidently with the view of attacking and dispersing Monro's corps of the Covenanters. He "advanced towards them with the horse (leaving the foot three miles behind) to a place called Maxwell-heugh, a height above Kelso; which, when the rebels discovered, they instantly marched out with 150 horse, and (as my Lord Holland says) eight or ten thousand foot—five or six thousand there might have been. He thereupon sent a trumpet, commanding them to retreat, according to what they had promised by the proclamation. They asked whose trumpet he was: he said—my Lord Holland's. Their answer was—he was best to be gone; and so my Lord Holland made his retreat, and waited on his Majesty this night, to give him this account."* We learn, from the same authority, that this untoward result operated strongly on the royal mind. "This morning," says Vane, in his Letter, "advertisement is brought his Majesty that Lesley, with 12,000 men, is at Coekburnspath—that 5000 will be this night or tomorrow at Dunce—6000 at Kelso; so his Majesty's opinion is, with many of his Couueil, to keep himself upon a defensive, and make himself here as fast as he can." He therefore instructed Hamilton not to act on the offensive, but to leave his fleet in the Forth in as good a posture as he could, and go in person to the royal camp.

Baillie gives an account of this same affair, varying but little from Lord Holland's. After stating that the Scotch troops willingly stood at the required distance from the King's encampment, in order to shew that they did not meditate any invasion of England, and mentioning the proclamation at Dunse, he adds:—"The like was intended at Kelso; but there Monro, Fleming, and Erskine, presenting themselves in battle array, made Holland, with some thousand foot and horse, with their show alone, to retire in haste in a shameful disorder. It is thought Holland's commission was to cut off all he met in opposition to him; but his soldiers that day was a great deal more nimble in their legs than arms, except their cavilliers, whose right arms were no less weary in whipping, than their heels in jading their horses. We were informed that, to repair that disgrace, Holland was commanded to return with far more forces to execute his former commission; whereupon our General raises his camp from Dunglass, advertises his troops at Kelso to march towards him. Both of them met together that night at Dunse, and there they sat down on the head of their fair Law."* He continues—"This our march did much affray the English camp. Dunse Law was in their sight within six or seven miles; for they lay in pavilions some two miles above Berwick, on the other side of the Tweed, in a fair plain along the river. The King himself, beholding us through a prospect, conjectured us to be about 16,000 or 18,000 men. We were, indeed, above twelve; but at once we were above twenty-four. We might have doubled that number, but we had none there from the oue full half of Scotland—not a man beyond Tay—few from Lothian, Fife, Edinburgh, the Merse; for they were waiting on the ships or employed in carriages; the south behoved to observe the border about Carlisle; and the west, the Irish shore; albeit that was needless."

Baillie states the English army at that time to have been only about 16,000, "and these not of the stoutest." "One night," says he, "a false alarm being in our camp, when our drums began to beat, and our matches on the hill to shine through the darkness, there arose such a fray in the English camp, that very many betook them to their heels, expecting from us a present invasion; yea, had not our wise and valorous Prince, with his General

Arundel, done diligenece to encourage and to find out the grundless vanity of the fray, there had been a greater flight than with honour could have been gotten stayed."

Although anxious to compress, as much as possible, these illustrative historical details, we cannot resist gratifying ourselves, and, we trust, our readers, by giving Baillie's most graphical, though quaint, description of the Scottish camp on Dunse Law. It affords a more lively impression of the character, the manners, and the spirit of those times, than any modern description could possibly convey; and as this was, perhaps, the last great national demonstration of "Scotland's might and Scotland's right" which her annals afford, we must be forgiven for recording it in these pages, in connection with the history of the Presbyterian Church.

"It would have done you good," says the reverend patriot, "to have cast your eyes athort our brave and rich hills, as oft as I did, with greater contentment and joy; for I was there among the rest, being chosen preacher by the gentlemen of our shire, who came late with Lord Eglinton. I furnished to half a dozeu of good fellows, muskets and pikes, and to my boy a broad sword. I carried myself, as the fashion was, a sword, and a couple of Dutch pistols at my saddle; but I promise, for the offence of no man except a robber in the way; for it was our part alone to pray and preach for the encouragement of our countrymen, which I did to my power most chearfully.

"Our hill was garnished on the top, towards the south and east, with our mounted cannon, well near to the number of forty, great and small. Our regiment lay on the sides of the hill, almost round about. The place was not ample in circle; a pretty round, rising in a declivity, without steepness, to the height of a bow-shot; on the top somewhat plain; about a quarter of a mile in length, and as much in breadth, as I remember, capable of tents for 40,000 men. The Crowners lay in canvas lodges, high and wide; their captains about them in lesser ones; the soldiers about, all in huts of timber, covered with divot or straw. Our Crowners for the most part were noblemeu; Rothies, Lindsay, Sinclair, had among them two full regiments at least from Fife; Balearras a horse-troop; Loudon, Montgomery, Erskine, Boyd, Fleming, Kireudbright, Dalhousie, Yester, Eglinton, Cassils, and others, either with a whole or half regiments. Montrose's regiment was above 1500 men in the castle of Edinburgh: himself was expected; but what detained him ye shall hear at once.

"Argyle was sent for to the treaty of peace; for without him none would mint to treat. He came, and set up his tent in the hill; but few of his people with him. It was thought meet that he and his should lie about Stirling, in the heart of the country, to be always ready in subsidies for unexpected accidents; to be a terror to our neutralists or but masked friends; to make all, without din, march forward, lest his uncauny trewsmen should light on to call them up in their rear; always to have an eye what either the north, or the shires, or the west, or our stail host should mister of help. It was thought the country of England was more afraid of the barbarity of his Highlanders, than of any other terror. Those of the English that came to visit our camp, did gaze much with admiration upon these supple fellows, with their plaids, targes, and dirlachs. There were some compauies of them under Captain Buchanan, and others in Erskine's regiment; our captains, for the most part barons or gentlemen of good note; our lieutenants, most of old soldiers, who had served over sea in good charges. Every company had, fleeing at the captain's tent-door, a brave new colour, stamped with the Scottish arms, and this motto, 'FOR CHRIST'S CROWN AND COVENANT,' in golden letters.

"Our General had a brave royal teut; but it was not set up. His constaut guard was some hundreds of our lawycers, musquetiers, under Durie and Hope's command, all the good way standing in arms, with locked matches, before his high gate, well apparelled. He lay at the foot of the hill, with Baillie his sergeant-major or lieutenant-general. That place was destined for Almond, in whose wisdom and valour we had but too much confidence; yet in the time of our most need, the greatness of his gravel, or the pretence of it, made him go to France to be cut. Always, when he came there, it was found he needed no incision, so he passed to his charge in Holland, where to us he was as dead in all our dangers.

"The councils of war were kept daily in the castle; the ecclesiastick meetings in Rothes's large tent. The General, with Baillie, came nightly for the setting of the watch on their horses. Our soldiers were all lusty and full of courage; the most of them, stout young plowmen; great chearfulness in the face of all: the only difficulty was, to get them dollars or two the man, for that voyage from home, and the time they eutered in pay; for among our yeoman, money at any time, let be then, uses to be very searee; but once having entered on the common pay, their sixpence a-day, they were galliard. None of our gentlemen were any thing worse of lying some weeks together in their cloaks and boots on the ground, or standing all night in arms in the greatest storm. Whiles, through storm of weather, and neglect of the commissaries, our bread would be too long a-coming, which made some of the eastland soldiers half-mutiny; but at once, order being taken for our victuals at Edinburgh, East Lothian, and the country about us, we were auswered better than we could have been at home. Our meanest soldiers were always served in wheat-bread, and a groat would have gotten them a lamb-leg, which was a dainty world to the most of them. There had been an extraordinary crop in that country the former year, beside abundance that was stolen away to the English camp for great prices. We would have feared no inlack for little money for some months to come. Merse and Teviotlande are the best mixt and most plentiful shires, both for grass and corn, for flesh and bread, in all our land. We were much obliged to the town of Edinburgh for money. Mr Harry Pollock, by his sermons, moved them to shake out their purses; the garnerers of non-covenanters, especially of James Maxwell and Lord Winton, gave us plenty of wheat. One of our ordinances was, to seize on the rents of non-covenanters; for we thought it but reasonable, since they sided with these who put our lives and our lands for ever to sale, for the defence of our church and country, to employ for that cause, wherein their interest was as great as ours if they would be Scotsmen, a part of their rent for one year; but, for all that, few of them did incur any loss by that our decree, for the peace prevented the execution.

"Our soldiers grew in experience of arms, in courage, in favour daily. Every one encouraged another. The sight of the nobles, and their beloved pastors, daily raised their hearts. The good sermons and prayers, morning and evening, under the roof of heaven, to which their drums did call them for bells; the remonstrances very frequent, of the goodness of their cause; of their conduct hitherto, by a hand clearlie divine; also Lesly's skill, and prudence, and fortune, made them as resolute for battle as could be wished. We were feared that emulation among our nobles might have done harm, when they should be met in the field; but such was the wisdom and authority of that old, little, crooked soldier, that all, with an incredible submission, from the beginning to the end, gave over themselves to be guided by him, as if he had been great Solyman. Certainly the obedience of our noblemen to that man's advice was as great as their forebeers wont to be to their King's commands: yet that was the man's understanding of our Scots humours, that gave out, not only to the nobles, but to very mean gentlemen, his directions in a very homely and simple form, as if they had been but the advices of their neighbour and companion: for, as he rightly observed, a difference would be used in commanding soldiers of fortune, and of soldiers volunteers, of which kind the most part of our camp did stand. He kept daily in the castle of Dunse an honourable table for the nobles and strangers with himself; for gentlemen-waiters thereafter, at a long side-table. I had the honour, by accident, one day to be his chaplain at table, on his left hand. The fare was as became a General in time of war: not so curious by far as Arundel's to our nobles; but ye know that the English fare sumptuously, both in war and peace."

"It seems our General's table was on his own charge; for, so far as yet I know, neither he, nor any noble or gentleman of considerable rent, got any thing for their charge. Well I know, that Englington our Crowner entertained all the gentlemen of note that were with him, at his own table, all the time of our abode; and his son, Montgomery, kept with him very oft the chief officers of his regiments: for this was a voyage wherein we were glad to bestow our lives, let be our estates.

“Had you lent your ear in the morning, or especially at even, and heard in the tents of some, the sound of singing psalms, some praying, and some reading scripture, ye would have been refreshed. True, there was swearing, and cursing, and brawling, in some quarters, whereat we were grieved; but we hoped, if our camp had been a little settled, to have gotten some way for these misorders; for all of any fashion did regret, and all promised to do their best endeavours for helping all abuses. For myself, I never found my mind in better temper than it was all that time since I came from home, till my head was again homeward; for I was as a man who had taken my leave from the world, and was resolved to die in that service, without return. I found the favour of God shining upon me, and a sweet, meek, humble, yet strong and vehement spirit leading me all along; but I was no sooner on my way westward, after the conclusion of the peace, than my old security returned.

“It was not our General’s intention to sit long at Dunse; only till our army had grown to a considerable number: he thought meet to lie on that strength which was in the midst betwixt the two ways to Edinburgh, that if the English had moved either towards Haddington or Soutra, he might have been on their backs; for we knew not then well either of the estate or designs of the enemy: but after we were above 20,000 men, he gave out not obscurely his purpose to approach the English camp. Their fear of this, made them cast up some trenches on our side of Tweed, and work at them both on Sunday and Saturday. They had no will we should come so near them; therefore occasion was sought with all diligence of the treaty. The way of the procedure was this: Robin Lesly, one of the old pages, being come over to Dunse Castle, made, as it were of his own head, an overture, that we would be pleased yet to supplicate, or else the English forces did so multiply, that at once we would be overflowed with them. Our fear daily diminished of their violence; we knew at once the great advantages we had of the King: yet such was our tenderness to his honour, that with our hearts we were ever willing to supplicate his offcoming; yea, had we been ten times victorious in set battles, it was our conclusion to have laid down our army at his feet, and on our knees presented nought but our first supplications. We had no other end of our wars; we sought no crowns; we aimed at no lands and honours as our party; we desired but to keep our own in the service of our Prince, as our ancestors had done; we loved no new masters. Had our throne been void, and our voices sought for the filling of Fergus’s chair, we would have died ere any other had sat down on that fatal marble but Charles alone.”

While the two armies were in the position thus described by an eye-witness—the Royal army, on the one hand, weak, wavering, and almost panic-struck, the Royal coffers nearly exhausted, and the spirit of the English troops and followers sunk to the most abject state; the Scotch, on the other hand, outnumbering their adversary, bold, eager for the fight, and full of high enthusiasm and confidence in superhuman support, yet with limited means for a protracted campaign, and anxious to avoid acts of deadly hostility against their native King—overtures for pacification were made; and in a very short space agreed to. In consequence of the hints given by Robert Leslie, which the Scotch leaders interpreted as an indication of his Master’s wishes, the Earl of Dunfermling was despatched to the Royal camp (on the 7th or 8th of June) with a short Supplication to his Majesty, and Letters to the English Council; and this mission terminated on the 18th of June, after various conferences and negotiations, in a Declaration by the King, and Articles of Pacification, signed by the Commissioners on both sides, which, for a season, put an end to the further progress of hostilities.

It would swell these notes beyond the compass that is suitable to this work, were we to give even a meagre abstract of the substance of the proposals and objections which formed the subject-matter of these negotiations; but we deem the whole correspondence, proclamations, and negotiations which took place during the period which intervened betwixt the Assembly of 1638 and that of 1639, to be of so much importance to the full understanding of the history of those times, that, as formerly, we intend to supply our readers with all these documents themselves. This is the more requisite, as they are nowhere to be found entire, and without mutilation or the suppression of many of them, in any single history or collection relative to those transactions; and, indeed, a number of the most curious and valuable—as unveiling the secret history of Charles’ policy and his motives—were not disclosed to the world for more than thirty years afterwards, when Burnet, after the restoration of Charles II., published his Memoirs of the Duke of Hamilton, in which these are embodied. Referring to these documents, therefore, as containing the only true history of the period referred to, (that has fallen under our observation,) and leaving every one to draw his own inferences from these monuments, we shall here only state the leading features of the Treaty, in so far as that is necessary to explain the circumstances in which the General Assembly of 1639 convened.

By his Royal Declaration, of date the 18th of June 1639, his Majesty, referring to the various supplications, &c. of his Scotch subjects, was “pleased to declare and assure that, according to the Petitioners’ humble desires, all matters ecclesiastical shall be determined by an Assembly of the Kirk, and matters civil in the Parliament, and other inferior judicatories established by law; and Assemblies, accordingly, shall be kept once a year, or as shall be agreed upon at the next General Assembly.

“And for settling the general distractions of that our antient Kingdom, our will and pleasure is, that a Free General Assembly be kept at Edin<sup>r</sup> the 6th day of August next ensuing, where we intend (God willing) to be personally present, and for the legal indiction thereof, we have given orders and command to our Council; and thereafter a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the 20th day of August next ensuing, for ratifying of what shall be concluded in the said Assembly," &c.*

To this declaration seven articles were annexed, the chief of which were—the immediate disbanding of the forces of Scotland—the surrendering to the King all the castles, forts, regalia, &c.—all fortifications; and meetings not sanctioned by Act of Parliament, to be desisted from: and, on the other part, his Majesty to withdraw all his ships, &c. on delivery of the fortresses.

On considering this Declaration and the Articles, the Scotch Commissioners, (viz., Rothes, Dunfermline, Lowdon, W. Douglas, Alexander Henderson, and Archibald Johnston,) on the part of the Covenanters, subscribed the following document, which completed the pacification:—

“In obedience to his Majestys Royal commands, we shall, upon Thursday next, the 20 of this June, dismiss our forces, and immediately thereafter deliver his Majesties Castles; and shall ever, in all things, carry ourselves like humble, loyal, and obedient subjects.”

And thus, to the great joy and rejoicing of both armies, this pacification was consummated, without bloodshed; and the several hosts dispersed themselves and retired to their homes. The Covenanters, with perfect good faith, surrendered the fortresses, Regalia, and all that they had seized as sureties for their safety; but they were too well aware of the craft with which they had to cope, to omit all needful precautions against the perfidy of their adversaries. It was his necessity, and not his will, that induced the King really to yield (though his apologists call it concede) to the Scotch army, the terms recorded in his Declaration; and, reluctant as we are to think harshly of that misguided Monarch, or to anticipate the judgment which our readers may form, on examination of the evidence which we have gleaned, or to obtrude our own humble reflections on the occurrences which we record—we cannot stifle an expression of our full conviction, that, in entering into that treaty of pacification, Charles I. did it with a settled purpose to violate his faith as a man and a King; and that, with regard to it and its fulfilment, he was guided by principles the most jesuitical, dishonourable, and immoral. The documents which follow, contain the most conclusive proofs of a paltry, pettifogging dissimulation, such as is scarcely to be paralleled in the whole range of authentic history.†

* Vide Documents.

† Bishop Burnet, in allusion to this treaty, remarks on it, (p. 143,) that “some made another observation, though of less moment, yet not unpleasant, upon Mr Henderson—that it was strange to see a Churchman, who had acted so vigorously against Bishops for their meddling in civil affairs, made a Commissioner for this treaty, and sign a paper so purely civil.” In making this paltry observation, the courtly prelate seems to have overlooked what he had recorded not two pages before, that this was not a treaty “purely

But we leave this painful topic, and pass on to the incidents more immediately introductory to the meeting of Assembly.

In reference to this, one of the ticklish points connected with it was, that, in the negotiations, the King would not recognise the Assembly of the preceding year as a lawful Assembly, while the Scotch Commissioners would not relinquish its character of legality; and, therefore, it was understood, that, without assuming anything on that point, the Assembly of 1639 should proceed de novo to consider all affairs ecclesiastic. The policy of the King and his councillors—Hamilton, Traquair, and certainly Caunterbury and the Scotch Prelates—was, if possible, to prevent a recognition of its lawfulness or its Acts, and to mould the proceedings of the next Assembly and Parliament so as to defeat the Presbyterian polity, and pave the way for the resumption of high regal prerogative, (“the Kingly way,” as Hamilton termed it,) and the restoration of Episcopacy. It is necessary thus far to anticipate what will be found more fully developed in the King’s Instructions and other documents, in order that the reader may be prepared, as he advances, to perceive the bearing of the proceedings which ensued.

The King, if ever he seriously purposed to attend the Assembly in person, speedily relinquished the idea; and, indeed, his personal attendance would have been very inconvenient, considering the crooked policy by which, at the time, he was guided. He might have felt very serious embarrassment in managing personally, the refined duplicity of his schemes; and having, as is fully proved, a purpose of putting his veto upon anything that might be concluded either in the Assembly or Parliament, which was not in entire accordance with his own notions, (and he could not reasonably expect that they should be so,) it was more expedient to act by a Commissioner—whose acts he might disavow and repudiate—than to compromise himself by a personal appearance and a collision with the Scottish Covenanters on their own ground. He wished Hamilton to be his Commissioner once more; but that nobleman was too wary, after his former experiences, to attempt it; and Traquair was selected for this important office. His Lordship waited on the King at Whitehall in the beginning of August; and, on the 6th, his Commission was signed, and he set out for Scotland.

Without farther prefatory explanation, therefore, we now proceed to give the Acts and proceedings of the Assembly which convened at Edinburgh on the 12th of August 1639, adhering to the same arrangement as in the former part of this work.

civil.” Its first and leading condition related to religion, and pledged the King to call a free General Assembly, in which all ecclesiastical matters were to be settled, and afterwards to be ratified in Parliament. This was, in fact, the foundation and essence of the treaty; and it was fitting that the chosen representatives of the Church should be parties to so important a treaty. This was very different, indeed, from being a “Lord of Privy Council,” or a “member of the High Commission.”

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS

OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY HOLDEN AT EDINBURGH,
IN THE YEAR 1639.

Sess. VII. August 17, 1639.

The which day was given in to the Assembly, direct from Master George Grahame, sometimes pretended Bishop of Orknay, an abjuration of Episcopacie, subscribed with his hand, which was publickly read in audience of the Assembly; and thereafter they ordained the same to be registrat in the Assembly Books, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, whereof the tenor follows.

TO all and sundry whom it effeirs, to whose knowledge these presents shall come, specially to the reverend and honourable Members of the future Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh, the twelfth day of August 1639 years: Me, Master George Grahame, sometime pretended Bishop of Orknay, being sorry and grieved at my heart that I should ever, for any worldly respect, have embraced the order of Episcopacie, the same having no warrant from the Word of God, and being such an order as hath had sensibly many fearful and evill consequences in many parts of Christendome, and particularly within the Kirk of Scotland, as by doleful and deplorable experience this day is manifest, to have disclaimed, like as I, by the tenor hereof, doe altogether disclaime and abjure, all Episcopal power and jurisdiction, with the whole corruptions thereof, condemned by lawful Assemblies within the said Kirk of Scotland, in regard the same is such an order as is also abjured within the said Kirk, by vertue of that National Oath which was made in the years 1580 and 1581; promising and swearing by the great Name of the Lord our God, That I shall never, whiles I live, directly or indirectly, exercise any such power within the Kirk, neither yet shall I ever approve or allow the same, not so much as in my private or publike discourse: but, on the contrary, shall stand and adhere to all the Acts and Constitutions of the late Assembly holden at Glasgow, the 21 of Novemb. 1638 last by-past, and shall concurre, to the uttermost of my power, sincerely and faithfully, as occasion shall offer, in executing the said Acts, and in advancing the Work of Reformation within this land, to the glory of God, the peace of the Countrey, and the comfort and contentment of all good Christians, as God shall be my help. In testimony of the which premisses, I have subscribed thir presents with my hand at Brecknes in Stromness, the cleventh day of February, the year of God 1639 years, before thir witnesses, Master Walter Stuart, Minister at Southronnaldsay, Master James Heynd, Minister at Kirkwall, Master Robert Peirson, Minister at Firth, and Master Patrick Grahame, Minister at Holme, my Son.

Sess. VIII. 17 Aug. 1639.

THE Kings Majestie having graciously declared, That it is His Royal will and pleasure, that all questions about Religion, and matters Ecclesiasticall, be determined by Assemblies of the Kirk; having also, by publike Proclamation, indicted this free national Assembly, for settling the present distraction of this Kirk, and for establishing a perfect peace against such divisions and disorders as have been sore displeasing to his Majestic, and grievous to all his good Subjects. And uow his Majesties Commissioner, John Earle of Traquair, instructed and authorized with a full Commission, being present and sitting in this Assembly, now fully convened, and orderly constitute in all the members thereof, according to the order of this Kirk, having, at large, declared His Majesties zeal to the reformed Religion, and His Royal care and tender affection to this Kirk, where His Majestic had both His Birth and Baptisme, His great displeasure at the manifold distractions and divisions of this Kirk and Kingdome, and His desires to have all our wounds perfectly cured, with a fair and fatherly hand: And, although in the way approved by this Kirk, tryal hath been taken in former Assemblies before from the Kirk registers, to our full satisfaction, yet the Commissioners Grace, making particular enquiry from the members of the Assembly, now solemnly couvened, concerning the real and true causes of so many and great evils as this time past had so sore troubled the peace of this Kirk and Kingdome, It was represented to His Majesties Commissioner by this Assembly, That, beside many other, the maine and most materiall causes were, First, The pressing of this Kirk, by the Prelates, with a Service Book, or Book of Common Prayer, without warrant or direction from the Kirk, and containing, beside the Popish frame thereof, diverse Popish errors and ceremonies, and the seeds of manifold grosse Superstitions and Idolatry, with a Book of Canons, without warrant or direction from the Generall Assembly, establishing tyraunical power over the Kirk, in the person of Bishops, and overthrowing the whole discipline and government of the Kirk by Assemblies, with a Book of Consecration and Ordination, without warrant of Authoritie, Civill or Ecclesiasticall, appointing offices in the house of God, which are not warranted by the word of God, and repugnant to the discipline and Acts of our Kirk, and with the High Commission, erected without the consent of the Kirk, subverting the jurisdiction and ordinary judicatories of this Kirk, and giving to persons meere Ecclesiasticall, the power of both swords, and to persons meere Civill, the power of the Keys and Kirk censures. A second cause was the Articles of Perth—viz., the observation of Festivall dayes, kneeling at the Communion, Confirmation, Administration of the Sacraments in private places, which are brought in by a null Assembly, and are contrary to the Confession of Faith, as it was meant and subscribed Anno 1580 and divers times since, and to the order and constitutions of this Kirk. Thirdly, the changing of the government of the Kirk, from the Assemblies of the Kirk, to the persons of some Kirk-men, usurping prioritic and power over their Brethren, by the way, and under the name of Episcopall government against the Confession of Faith, 1580, against the order set down in the Book of Policy, and against the intention & constitution of this Kirk from the beginning. Fourthly, the Civill places and power of Kirkmen, their sitting in Session, Councill, and Exchequer; their Riding, Sitting, and Voiting in Parliament, and their sitting in the Bench as Justices of peace, which, according to the constitutions of this Kirk, are incompatible with their spiritual fuunction, lifting them up above their Brethren in worldly pompe, and do tend to the hinderance of the Ministrie. Fifthly, the keeping and authorizing corrupt Assemblies—at Linlithgow, 1606 and 1608; At Glasgow, 1610; At Aberdene, 1616; At S. Andrews, 1617; at Perth, 1618—which are null and unlawfull, as being ealled and constitute quite contrary to the order and coustitutions of this Kirk, received and practised ever since the reformation of Religion, and, withall, labouring to introduce novations into this Kirk, against the order and religion established. A sixth cause is, the want of lawfull and free Generall Assemblies, rightly constitute of Pastors, Docters, and Elders, yearly or oftner, pro re nata, according to the libertie of this Kirk, expressed in the Book of Policy, and acknowledged in the Act of Parliament, 1592. After which the whole Assembly, in one heart and voyce, did declare, that these and such other, proceeding from the neglect and breach of the Nationall Covenant of this Kirk and Kingdome, made in Anno 1580, have been, indeed, the true and maine causes of all our evils and distractions. And, therefore, ordaine, according to the coustitutions of the Generall Assemblies of this Kirk, and upon the grounds respective above specified, That the foresaid Service-Book, Books of Canons, and Ordination, and the high Commission, be still rejected: That the Arteiles of Perth be no more practised; That Episcopall Government, and the Civill places and power of Kirk-men, be holden still as unlawfull in this Kirk; That the above named pretended Assemblies—At Linlithgow, 1606 and 1608; At Glasgow, 1610: At Aberdene, 1616; At S. Andrews, 1617; At Perth, 1618—be hereafter accompted as null, and of none effect. And that, for preservation of Religion, and preventing all such evils in time coming, Generall Assemblies, rightly constitute, as the proper and competent judge of all matters Eeclasiasticall, hereafter be kept, yearly and oftner, pro re nata, as occasion and necessity shall require; The necessity of these occasional Assemblies being first remonstrate to His Majestie, by humble supplication: As also that Kirk Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synodall Assemblies, be constitute and observed, according to the order of this Kirk.

After the voycing of the Act, (ancnt the causes of our by-gone evils,) His Majesties Commissioner consented, verbally, to the said Act, and promised to give into the Clerk in writ, the Declaration of His consent, and that he should ratifie this Act in the ensuing Parliameut.

Sess. XVIII. 26 Aug. 1639.

Act approving an old Register of the Generall Assembly.

The whole Assembly, (upon the report made to them anent the old Register of the Assembly, gotten from Master John Rig,) all in one voyce, approved the said Register, and ordained the same to make faith in judgement, and outwith in all time coming, as a true and authentick Register of the Kirk of Scotland, conforme to the testimonie subscribed by the Committee, to be inscrt in the Books of Assembly; whereof the tenor followeth:—

WE under subscribers, Forsameikle as the late Generall Assembly, holden at Glasgow, gave power and Commission to us, To peruse, examine, and cognosee upon the validitie, faith, and strength of the Books and Registers of the Assembly, particularly set down in the Commission given to us thereanent. According whereunto, we did carefully view, peruse, and consider the saids Registers, and gave our testimony thereof under our hands, of the validitie and sufficieucie of the samine, to the said Generall Assembly. And now, having a new Commission given to us from the Generall Assembly now presently convened and sitting at Ediuburgh, To peruse, examine, and eognosee upon the validitie, faith, and strength of another Register of the Assembly, which was not set down and recommended to us by the said former Commission, which Register begineth at the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the sixth day of March 1572, and endeth at the Assembly likewise holden at Edinburgh 1573, we have carefully viewed, perused, and considered the said Register: And being deeply and maturely advised, as in a matter of greatest weight and consequence, doe attest before God, and upon our consciences declare to the world and this present Assembly, That the said Register above exprest, is a famous, authentiek, and good Register, which ought to be so reputed, and have publik faith in judgement and outwith, as a valid and true Reecord in all things, And findis the same to be of the same hand-writ, and subscribed by the same Clerk of the Generall Assembly, as divers of the said other Registers (formerlie porused by us) are. And, in testimonie of our solemne affirmation, we have subscribed these presents with our hands, at Edinburgh, the day of August, 1639.

Act Sess. XIX. Aug. 27, 1639.

THE Assembly, after the receeiving of the whole reports from the Committees, appointed for revising of the processses and sentences, led, deduced, and pronounced before, and by the severall Commissions granted by the Assembly at Glasgow, All in one voice approved the saids whole Proecesses as orderly proceeded, and the whole sentenees pronounced thereintill, as just and lawfull decrees, without prejudice of any favour that can be showne to any person or persons, against whom the said sentences are pronounced upon their supplications, or of Justicee to such as eomplaine of their processe, and offers to reduce the same upon whatsoever reason competent, by the Constitutions of this Kirk and Kingdome, before the Generall Assembly and the Commissioners thereof, they being appointed for that effect.

Act Sess. XX. 28 Aug. 1639.

THE which day, the Generall Assembly, upon the report of the Committees anent these who are deposed by Synods, Doe make this Generall Act, recommeuding to the Synods all these who are deposed before them for subscribing of the Declinator, and reading of the Service-book, and for no other grosse cause, That, upon their true repentance, and submission to the Constitutions of this Kirk, and upon their purgation and clearnesse from any grosse Faults laid to their charge in any new processe against them, they may be found by the Synods eapable of the Ministerie, when God grants them an ordinary and lawfull calling by admission from the Presbyterie, either in the Church they served in before, or in any other Church.

Act Sess. XXI. 29 August 1639.

The Generall Assembly reecomendeth to the severall Presbyteries the execution of the old Acts of Assembly against the breach of the Sabbath Day, by going of Mylnes, Salt-Pannes, Salmond-fishing, or any such like labour; and, to this end, revives and renews the Act of the Assembly holden at Haly-rude-honse, 1602, Sess. 5, whereof the tenor follows:—

THE Assembly considering that the conventions of the People, specially on the Sabbath Day, are very raro in many places, by distraction of labour, not onely in harvest and seed-time, but also every Sabbath, by fishing both of white fish and Salmond-fishing, and in going of Mylnes. Therefore the Assembly dischargeth and inhibiteth all such labour of fishing, as well white fish and Salmond-fish, and going of Mylnes of all sorts upon the Sabbath, under the pain of incurring the censures of the Kirk: And ordaines the Commissioners of this Assembly to mean the same to His Majestie, and to desire that a pecuniall paine may be joynd upon the contraveeners of this present Act.

Act Sess. XXII. 29 Aug. 1639. à meridie.

Articles and Overtures approved by the Assemblée.

THAT some Commissioners be appointed to visit and peruse the whole Acts of Generall Assemblies, and to mark such Acts as are for the use of the Kirk in Generall, To extract the same out of the Registers, to the effect that after they be tryed, they may be printed according to the old Acts of the Assembly at Edinburgh, March 7, 1574, Sess. 9.

The Assemblée appoints the Presbyterie of Edinburgh to have a care of this article, and to report their diligence to the next Assembly.

That course may be taken for restraining of people from passing to England to marry, which is the occasion of great inconveniences.

The Assembly alloweth this article, and recommends to the Parliament that they would appoint a pecuniall summo to be payed by the contraveeners.

That the Acts for furnishing expences to Commissioners, sent by the Presbyteries to the Generall Assembly, and sent in Commission by Generall Assemblies, may be explained; And it be declared that all such Commissioners whatsoever, by their stipends, may be furnished by the Kirks of the Presbyterie, according to the order set down in the Act of the last Assembly, since the errand is common, and the benefit concerneth all; and that order may be taken, how that an expedient voluntarie course, thought fit by the Assembly, shall, by advise of Parliament, have the force of a law, for compelling these to pay who are stented, both for the last and this Assembly, and in time to come.

The Assembly allows this article, and referres the same to the Parliament.

That the Session-books of every Paroche be presented once a year to the Presbyteries, that they may be tryed by them.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That the Act of the 38 Assembly at Edinburgh, October 24, 1578, Sess. 8, ordaining Ministers who are deposed, to be charged, under the pain of excommunication, to dimit their places, that they may be unquestionably vacand, may now be renewed.

The Assembly alloweth this article, and remits the same to the Parliament.

The Assembly would revive or renew all former Acts of Assembly against Papists and excommunicate persons, against hannters with them, and receivers of them.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That an uniforme Catechisme may be appointed to be used throughout this whole Kingdome, in the examinations before the Communion.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That all Ministers or Intrants presented to Kirks, be tryed before their admission, if they be qualified for the places to which they are presented, besides the ordinary tryalls of Expectants before their entrie to the Ministerie.

The Assembly alloweth this Article.

Sess. XXIII. 30 Aug. 1639.

The Supplication of the Generall Assembly to the Kings Majesties Commissioner, concerning the Book, called "The Large Declaration."

WE, the Members of this present Assembly, for our selves, and in name of the severall Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities for which we are Commissioners, resenting the great dishonour done to God, our King, this Kirk, and whole Kingdome, by the Book called "A Large Declaration," have here represented the same to your Grace, and have collected some, amongst many, of false, grosse, and absurd passages; That, from the consideration thereof, your Grace, perceiving the intolerable evils foresaids contained therein, may be pleased to represent the same to our gracious Sovereigne, and in our behalfs humbly to beseech his Majestie, so much wronged by the many foul and false relations, suggested and perswaded to him as trueths, and by stealing the protection of His Royall Name and Authoritie to the patrocine of such a Book: To be pleased first to call in the said Book, and thereby to shew his dislike thereof: Next, to give Commission and warrant to eite all such parties as are either knowne or suspect to have had hand in it, and to appoint such as His Majestie knowes to be either authors, informers, or any wayes accessarie, being Natives of this Kingdome, To be sent hither to abide their tryall and censure before the Judge Ordinary, and in speciall Master Walter Balcanquell, now Deane of Durhame, who is known and hath professed to be the author, at least avower and maintainer of a great part thereof; that by their exemplar punishment, others may be deterred from such dangerous courses, as in such a way to raise sedition betwixt the King and His Subjects, Gods honour may be vindicate from so high contempt, His Majesties justice may appear, not only in cutting away such Malefactors, but in discouraging all such under-miners of His throne, His loyall and loving Subjects shall be infinitely contented to be cleared before the world of so false and unjust impntations, and will live hereafter in the greater securitie, when so dangerous a course of sedition is prevented, and so will have the greater and greater cause to pray for his Majesties long and prosperous Reigne.

His Majesties Commissioner in Councill having received the said Supplication, promised to impart the same to His Majesty, and to report his diligence therein.

*The Supplication of the Assembly to His Majesties High Commissioner, and the Lords of Secret Councill.**

WE, the Generall Assembly, considering, with all humble and thankfull acknowledgement, the manie recent favors bestowed on us by His Majestie, and that there rested nothing for crowning his Majesties incomparable goodnes toward us, bot that all the members of this Kirk and Kingdom might be joynd in one and the same Confession of Faith with God, with the Kings Majestie, and among ourselves: And conceiving the main lett and impediment to this so good a worke, and so much wished be all, to have bene the Informations made to his Majestie, of our intentions to shaike off Civill and dutiful obedience dew to Sovereignty, and to diminish the Kings greatnes and authoritie, and being most willing and desyrous to remove this and all suche impediments, whiche may hinder and impeded so full and perfyte an Union, and for cleiring of our loyaltie, WEE, in our names, and in name of all the rest of the Subjects and Congregations whome wee represent, doe now, in all humilitie, represent to your Grace, His Majesties Commissioner, and to the Lords of His Majesties most honourable Privie Councill, and declare before God and the World, that we never had, nor have anie thought of with-drawing our selves from that humble and dutiful subjection and obedience to His Majestie and to his Government, which, by the descent and under the reign of 107 Kings, is most cheirfullie acknowledged be us and our predecessors: And that we never had, nor have any intention or desire to attempt anie thing that may tend to the dishonour of God, or the diminution of the Kings greatnes and authoritie; But, on the contrary, acknowledging our quietnes, stabilitie, and happines to depend upon the safetie of the Kings Majesties Person, and maintenance of His greatnes and Royal authority, as Gods Vice-gerent set over us, for maintenance of Religion and ministration of Justice, We have solemnilie sworn and doe swear, not onlie our mutual concurrence and assistance for the caus of Religion, and to the uttermost of our power, with our meanes and lyves, to stand to the defence of our dread Sovereaine, his Person and authoritie, in the preservation and defence of the said true Religion, Liberties, and Lawes of this Kirk and Kingdome, bot also in everie thing which may concerne His Majesties honor, sall, according to the Lawes of this Kingdome and dutie of good subjects, concurre with our friends and followers in quiet manner, or in armes, as wee sall be requyred of His Majestie, His Councill, or anie having his Authority. And, therefore, being most desyrous to cleir our selves of all imputation of this kynd, following the laudable example of our predecessors, in anno 1589, doe most humble supplicat your Grace, His Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of His Majesties most honourable privie Counsel, to enjoyne be Act of Councill, that the Confession and Covenant, which, as a testimonie of our fidelitie to God, and loyaltie to our King, wee have subscribed, be subscribed be all His Majesties Subjects, of what ranke and quality soever.

The Act of the Lords of Councill at Edinburgh, August 30, 1639, containing the Answer of the preceding Supplication.

THE which day, in presence of the Lord Commissioner and the Lords of Privie Councill, compeired personally John Earle of Rothes; James Earle of Montrose; John Lord Lowdown; Sir George Stirling of Keir, Knight; Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Knight; Sir Henry Wood of Bonytoun, Knight; John Smyth, Burgesse of Edinburgh; Mr Robert Barclay, Provost of Irwing; Mr Alexander Henderson, Minister at Edinburgh; and Mr Archbald Johnstoun, Clerk to the Generall Assembly; and, in the name of the present sitting Generall Assembly, gave in to the Lord Commissioner, and Lords of Privie Councill, the Petition above written; Quhilk being red, heard, and considerit be the said Lord Commissioner and Lords of Privie Councill, they have ordainit, and ordains the samen to be insert and registrat in the books of Privie Councill, and, according to the desyre thereof, ordains the said Confession and Covenant to be subscribed in tyme comeing, be all His Majesties Subjects of this Kingdome, of what ranke and qualitie soever.

The Kings Majesties Commissioners Declarations.

THE which day His Majesties Commissioner and Lords of Councill, after the receiving of the Supplication of the Generall Assembly, aneut the subscribing of the Covenant, having returned to the Assembly, His Majesties Commissioner, in name of the Councill, declared: That he had received the Supplication of the Assembly, desiring that the Covenant might receive the force of an Act of Councill, to be subscribed by all his Majesties Subjects, that they had found the desire so fair and reasonable, that they conceived themselves bound in duety to grant the same, and thereupon have made an Act of Councill to that effect, and that there rested now the Act of Assembly; and that he himself was so fully satisfied, that he came now, as his Majesty's Commissioner, to consent fully unto it; and that he was most willing that it should be enacted here in this Assembly, to oblige all his Majesties Subjects to subscribe the said Covenant, with the Assemblies explanation. And because there was a third thing desired, His subscription, as the Kings Commissioner, unto the Covenant, which he behoved to do, with a Declaration in writ; and he declared, as a Subject, he should subscribe the Covenant as strictly as any, with the Assemblies Declaration; but as His Majesties Commissioner in his name he behoved to prefix to his subscription the Declaration following, which no Scots Subjects should subscribe or have the benefit of, no, not himself as Earle of Traquair. The tenor whereof follows:—

Seeing this Assembly, according to the laudable forme and custome heretofore kept in the like cases, have, in a humble and dutiful way, supplicate to us His Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of His Majesties most honourable Privie Councill, That the Covenant, with the explanation of this Assembly, might be subscribed: And to that effect that all the subjects of this Kingdome, by act of Councell, be required to doe the same: And that therein, for vindicating themselves from all suspitions of disloyaltie, or derogating from the greatnesse and authoritie of our dread Sovereigne, have therewith added a Clause, whereby this Covenant is declared one in substance with that which was subscribed by His Majesties Father of blessed memory, 1580, 1581, 1590, and oftner since renewed. Therefore I, as His Majesties Commissioner, for the full satisfaction of the Subjects, and for settling a perfect Peace in Church and Kingdome, doe, according to my foresaid Declaration and Subscription, subjoynd to the Act of this Assembly, of the date the 17 of this instant, allow and consent that the Covenant be subscribed throughout all this Kingdome. In witness whereof I have subscribed the premisses.

* This petition and deliverance are given from the Register of Privy Council, as the most authentic source. It varies in a few particulars, as well as in the orthography, from the copy authenticated and printed by the Clerk of Assembly.—Ed.

Likeas his Majesties Commissioner, read and gave in the Declaration following, of his consent to the Act of the Assembly, 17 August, anent the causes of our by gone evils.

I John Earle of Traquair, His Majesties Commissioner in this present Assembly, doe, in His Majesties Name, declare, that, notwithstanding of His Majesties own inclination, and many other grave and weightie considerations, yet such is His Majesties incomparable goodnesse, that, for settling the present distractions, and giving full satisfaction to the Subject, He doth allow, like as I, His Majesties Commissioner, doe consent to the foresaid Act, and have subscribed the premisses.

Likeas His Majesties Commissioner read and gave in the Declaration following:—

IT is alwayes hereby declared by me, His Majesties Commissioner, That the practise of the premisses, prohibited within this Kirk and Kingdome, outwith the Kingdome of Scotland, shall never bind nor inferre censure against the practises outwith the Kingdome; which, when the Commissioner required to be insert in the Register of the Kirk, and the Moderator, in name of the Assembly, refused to give warrant for such practise, as not agreeable with a good conscience, His Grace urged that it should be recorded, at least that he made such a Declaration, whatsoever was the Assemblies Judgement in the contrair: And so it is to be understood to be insert here onely vocative.

THE Generall Assembly, considering the great happinesse which may flow from a full and perfect Union of this Kirk and Kingdome, by joyning of all in one and the same Covenant with God, with the Kings Majestie, and amongst our selves, having, by our great Oath, declared the uprightnesse and loyaltie of our intentions in all our proceedings, and having withall supplicated His Majesties high Commissioner, and the Lords of His Majesties honorable Privie Councell, to injoyne, by Act of Councell, all the Lieges in time coming to subscribe the Confession of Faith and Covenant, which, as a testimony of our fidelity to God and loyaltie to our King, we have subscribed: And seeing His Majesties high Commissioner, and the Lords of His Majesties honorable Privie Coun-cell, have granted the desire of our Supplication, ordaining, by evill authority, all His Majesties Lieges, in time coming, to subscribe the foresaid Covenant, that our Union may be the more full and perfect, We, by our Act and Constitution Ecclesiasticall, doe approve the foresaid Covenant in all the Heads and Clauses thereof, and ordaines of new, under all Ecclesiasticall censure, that all the Masters of Universities, Colledges, and Schooles, all Schollers at the passing of their degrees, all persons suspect of Papistry, or any other errour, and, finally, all the members of this Kirk & Kingdome, subscribe the same with these words prefixed to their subscription: "The Article of this Covenant, which was, at the first subscription, referred to the determination of the Generall Assembly, being determined, and thereby the five Articles of Perth; the government of the Kirk by Bishops; the civill places and power of Kirkmen, upon the reasons and grounds contained in the Acts of the Generall Assembly, declared to be unlawfull within this Kirk: we subscribe according to the determination foresaid." And ordaines the Covenant, with this Declaration, to be insert in the Registers of the Assemblies of this Kirk, Generall, Provinciaill, and Presbyteriall, ad perpetuam rei memoriam; and, in all humility, supplicates His Majesties high Commissioner, and the honourable Estates of Parliament, by their authoritie to ratifie and injoyne the same, under all civill paines, which will tend to the glory of God, preservation of Religion, the Kings Majesties honour, and perfect peace of this Kirk and Kingdome.

Aug. 30. 1639.

THE Assembly appointed, that, in all time hereafter, no Appellations should be, leaping over either Presbyterie or Synod, but to ascend by degrees as from the Kirk Session to the Presbytry, or from the Presbyterie to the Synod, and from the Synod to the Generall Assembly, except it be after the Synod be past, and immediatly before the Generall Assembly, or in the time thereof, and renewes all former Acts made to this effect.

Act anent advising with Synods and Presbyteries before determination in Novations.

THE Generall Assembly, considering that the intended Reformation being recovered, may be established, Ordaines, that no Novation which may disturb the peace of the Church, and make division, be suddenly proponed and enacted: But so as the motion be first communicate to the severall Synods, Presbyteries, and Kirks, that the matter may be approved by all at home, and Commissioners may come well prepared, unanimously to conelude a solide deliberation upon these points in the Generall Assembly.

Act anent Ministers Catechising, and Familie Exercises.

THE Assembly, considering that the long-awaited for fruits of the Gospel, so mercifully planted and preserved in this Land, and the Reformation of our selves and Families, so solemnly vowed to God of late in our Covenant, cannot take effect, except the knowledge and worship of God be carried from the Pulpit to every family within each Parish, hath therefore appointed, that every Minister, besides his paines on the Lords day, shall have weekly catechising of some part of the Paroch, and not altogether cast over the examination of the people till a little before the Communion. Also, that in every Familie the worship of God be erected, where it is uot, both Morning and Evening, and that the Children and Servants be catechised at home, by the Masters of the Families, whereof accompt shall be taken by the Minister, and Elders assisting him in the visitation of every Family: And, lest they fail, that visitation of the severall Kirks be seriously followed by every Presbyterie, for this end among others. The execution and successe whereof, being tryed by the Synods, let it be represented to the next Generall Assembly.

Sess. XXIV. 30. Aug. à meridie.

The Assemblies Supplication to the Kings Majestie.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVERAIGNE,

WEE, Your Majesties most humble and loyall Subjects, the Commissioners from all the parts of this your Majesties ancient and native Kingdome, and members of the Nationall Assembly, couvened at Edinburgh by your Majesties speciall indiction, and honoured with the presence of Your Majesties High Commissioner, have been waiting for a day of rejoycing, and of solemne Thanksgiving to be rendred to God by this whole Kirk and Kingdome, for giving us a King so just and religious, that it is not only lawfull for us to be Christians under Your Majesties government, which souetime hath been the greatest praise of great Princes, but also that it hath pleased Your gracious Majestie to make known that it is Your Royall will and pleasure, that all matters Ecclesiasticall be determined in free Nationall Assemblies, and matters civill in Parliaments; which is a most noble and ample expression of Your Majesties justice, and we trust shall be a powerfull meane of our common happinesse under your Majesties most blessed Raigne. In the mean while we doe most humbly, upou the knees of our hearts, besse your Majestie for that happinesse already begun in the late Assembly at Edinburgh, in the proceedings whereof, next under God, we have laboured to approve our selves unto Your Majesties Vice-gerent, as if Your Majesties eyes had been upon us, which was the desire of our soules, and would have beene the matter of our full rejoycing, and doe still continue Your Majesties most humble supplicants for Your Majesties civill sanction and ratification of the constitutions of the Assembly in Parliament: That your Majesties Princely power, and the Ecclesiasticall Authority, joyning in one, the mutual embracements of religion and justice, of truth and peace, may be scene in this Land, which shall be to us as a resurrection from the dead, and shall make us, being not only so farre recovered, but also revived, to fill Heaven and Earth with our praises, and to pray that King CHARLES may be more and more blessed, and His throne established before the Lord for ever.

THE Assembly appoints the next Generall Assembly to sit at Aberdeene the last Tuesday of July next, 1640 years. And warneth all parties, Universities, and Burrows, to send their Commissioners, for keeping the samine. And thereafter the Assembly was concluded by giving of thanks by the Moderator, and singing of a Psalme, according to the custome.

2. *Letter from the King to the Nobility of England.**

CHARLES REX,

Right Trusty and Right Welbeloved Cousin, We greet you well. The late Disorders in Our Realm of Scotland, began upon pretence of Religion, but now appearing to have been raised by Faetious spirits, and fomented by some few ill and traiterously affected partieular Persons, whose aim hath been, by troubling the Peace of that our Kingdom, to work their own private ends, and indeed to shake off all Monarchieall Government, though We have often assured them, that We resolved to maintain constantly the Religion established by the Laws of that Kingdom, is now growen to that height and dangerous consequence, that under those sinister pretenees, they have so far seduced many of our People there, as great and considerable Forces are raised and assembled in such sort, as we have reason to take into consideration the Defence and Safety of this Realm of England; and therefore upon due and mature consultation with the Lords of our Council, We have resolved to repair in our Roial Person to the Northern parts of this our Realm, there (by the help of Almighty God, and the assistance of our good Subjects) to make resistance against any invasion that may happen.

And to the end that this Expedition may be as effectual as we design, to the Glory of God, the Honour and safety of Us, and of this our said Kingdom of England, We have directed that a considerable Army both of Horse and Foot, should be forthwith levied out of all the Shires to attend Us in this Action, wherein we nothing doubt, but the Affection, Fidelity, and Courage of our People shall well appear.

In the mean time, we have thought fit, hereby to give you notice of this our Resolution, and of the state of our Affairs, and withall hereby to require You to attend Our Royal Person and Standard at Our City of York, by the first day of April next ensuing, in such Equipage, and such Forces of Horse, as your Birth, Honour, and your Interest in the publique Safety do oblige you unto, And as we do and have reason to expect from you. And this our Letter shall be as sufficient and as effectual a Warrant and Discharge unto you for the putting of your selfe, and such as shall attend you, into Arms, and Order as aforesaid, as if you were authorised thereunto by our Great Seal of England. And we do require you to eertifie Us under your hand within fifteen days next after the receipt hereof, what Assistance we shall expect from you herein, and to direct the same to one of our Principle Secretaries of State. Given under our Signet at our Palae of Westminster the 26th day of January in the fourteenth Year of our Raign.

as a proof of the Kings settled purpose in regard to the expedition. It is, therefore, omitted as superflous.]

4. *Extract from the King's Proclamation.**

This proclamation sets forth "How traiterously some of the Seottish Nation had praetieed to pervert his Loyal Subjects of this Realm, by scattering abroad their Libellous and Seditious Pamphlets, mingling themselves at their publique meetings, and reproaching both his Person and Government; That he had never any intention to alter their Religion or Laws, but had condescended unto more for defence thereof than they had reason to expect; That they had rejected the Band and Covenant which themselves had prest upon the people, because it was commended to them by his Authority; and having made a Covenant against God and him, and made such Hostile preparations, as if he were their sworn Enemy, and not their King; That many of them were men of broken Fortunes, who because they could not well be worse, hoped by engaging in this War to make themselves better; That they had assumed unto themselves the power of the Press, one of the chief markes of the Regal Authority, prohibiting to Print what he commanded, and commanding to Print what he prohibited, and dismissing the Printer whom he had established in that Kingdom; That they had raised Arms, blockt up and besieged his Castles, laid Impositions and Taxes upon his people, threatned such as continued under Loyalty, with force and violence; That they had contemned the Authority of the Council-Table, and set up Tables of their own, from which they send their Ediets throughout all parts of the Kingdom, contrary to the Laws therein established, pretending in the mean time that the Laws were violated by himself; That the question was not now, whether the Service-Book should be received or not, or whether Episeopaey should continue or not, but whether he were King or not? That many of them had denied the Oaths of Supremaey and Allegiance (for which some of them had been committed) as inconsistent and inoemtable with their holy Covenant; That being brought under a necessity of taking Arms, he had been tradueed in some of their writings for committing the Arms he had then raised, into the hands of professed Papists, a thing not only dishonourable to himself, and the said noble persons, but false and odious in it self; That some of power in the Hierarehy had been defamed for being the cause of his taking Arms to invade that Kingdom, who on the contrary had been only Councillors of peace, and the chief perswaders (as much as in them lay) of the undeserved moderation wherewith he had hitherto proceeded toward so great Offenders; That he had no intent by commending the Service-Book unto them to innovate any thing at all in their Religion, but only to create a conformity between the Churches of both Kingdoms, and not to infringe any of their Liberties which were according to the Laws; That therefore he required all his loving Subjects not to receive any more of the said seditious Pamphlets, but to deliver such of them as they had received, into the hands of the next Justiee of the Peace, by him to be sent to one of his Majesties principle Secretaries; And finally, That this his Proclamation and Declaration be

MOST SACRED SOVERANE,

By your Majesties Letter, the 18 of Januar, your Majestie wes graciouslie pleased, not onlie to lett us know your Majesties resolution to come to Yorke to be so much nearer this kingdome for accommodating your Majesties affaires heere in a faire manner, which course your Majestie graciouslie expresseth, you still affect, but also requires us, that if there be anie thing wherein we would advyse your Majestie, that we sould acquaint your Majestie therewith. Wherefore, least we sould be wanting in that dewtie which your Majestie may justlie expect frome us as humble and faithfull Counsellors, or seeme unworthie of the place and rowme whiche, by your Majesties speeciall favour, we injoy in the kingdome, We cannot but acquaint your Majestie with ane Supplication given in to us by ane great many Noblemen, Barrons, Burgesses, and others of this Kingdome, which, for your Majesties better information, we presume to send yow herewith. And, withall, we canuot but let your Majestie know that, for farther cleiring thair innocencie thair of, they have offered publicklye, at Counsell table, by thair oaths and subscriptions, to justifie thameselves and thair intentions heerin. And least upon this, or some suche informations, your Majestie might be the more easilie moved to thinke upon harder courses then your Majestie heirtofore hath bene pleased to keepe with this your antient and native kingdome and subjects therein, we deame ourselves bound in dewtie, and in obedience to your Royall commandments, to represent to your Majesties wise and grave consideration this thair Petition. And, seing the peace of your Majesties Government, wherein consisteth our earthlie happenes, and wealfare of the kingdome dependeth upon your Majesties resolutions, and the course yow sall be graceouslie pleased to keepe in the prosecution of thir maters now in hand, We humble supplicat your Majestie, in your accustomed fatherlie care of the good and preservation of this your antient kiugdome, and of your faithfull subjects therein, to resolve upon sume suche course as, without force of armes or showing of your princelie power, the deplorable estate of this kingdome may be settled, whereby your Majestie may receive contentment, and we, your humble and faithfull subjects, may injoy the wounted blinkes of your Majes-

CHARLES R.—Right trusty, &c., We greit you well. We have perceaved by your Letter, wherein yow make mention of that which we expressed in a letter formerlie, of our repairing to Yorke, to be the more neere to that kingdome for accommodating our affaires there in a faire maner; and withall yow expresse your desire how the deplorable estate of that kingdome might be settled without force of armes, or showing of our princelie power. We have shewne our care hitherto by our actions for that effect: nather ar we yitt averse frome continuing in that course. But if, in the meane tyme, anie of our good subjects sall suffer for thair affection to our service, in obedience to our commands, we will be verie sensible thereof, and have a speciall care to see thame fullie repaired. And so, expecting that yow of our Counsell, as yow are honoured by us to be first in place, will stryve to goe before others by your good example in advancing of our service, we bid yow heartilie farewell, from our Court at Whitehall, the 15 of Marche 1639.

7. A Letter by the Lords of the Session to the Kings Majestie, sent with my Lord Justice Clerk, in March 1639.†

MOST SACRED SOVERAIGNE,

The danger of the tymes wherein we live threatening dreadfull desolation of this our ancient and native kingdome, and the conscience of our humble duetie which we owe to your Majestie, our dear and dread Sovereigne, and to this realme, whereof we are feeling members, honoured be your Majestie to be Counsellours and Judges therein, hes constrained us in this case, so important and pressing, to be-moane to your sacred selfe, the present calamitie and apparent insueing of more. God, who hes established in your sacred persone the just and lawfull right of regall inheritance, hes also filled your Majestie with all other iudgements necessar to the Royall calling; your Majestie, under God, may sollie allay the terroures of the menassing stormes; and without the sunschine of your graccous and calme countenance, this land, and the inhabitants thereof, must become quiecklie miserable. The causes are better knowen to your Majestie then that they neid relation. When your Majestie was pleased to iudiet a Generall Assembly, we and most parte of all your good subjects of this Kingdome, wer overjoyed in expectation that the doubts in religious worship and Kirk Government, whilk was tossed to and fro this whyle bygone, should have then beine elcirlie settled; and although the greater part of your people be weill pleased with the constitutions therein concluded, yet your Majesties displeasure against that Assembly, and the proceedings thereof, and your expresse dislyke of these who adheres to the same, and the fearfull consequences therefra like to ensue, hes turned all the hopes of comfort which we expected, in sorrowes and teares. When Princes stand in doubt of their people, and their subjects stand in doubt of their Prince, if not tymelic remeaded, prove difficill remeadeable. To goe on at anee with deliberation, your Majestie may be pleased to pardon us to averre, that in this they are but badd Counsellours, and no better patriots, who will advise your Majestie to add oyle and fewall to the fire. Violence and armes are pleased amongst desperat remeadies, proving oftner worse then the disease. To speake trueth ingenuoslie becomes all men, and us mainlie more then others, speaking to our King, and in a matter importing no lesse nor the universall fall or standing of this nation, and apprehended by most parte of the leidges to reflect on religioue and conscience, which seldome are forced with successe. Who does insinuat to your Majestie that the opposers to the proceedings of Glasgow doe surpass in number, and in nther considerable respects, such as adheres to the same, we veritable avow, in our alledgance, that they vent unwarrantable suggestions, which may provoeck the Princes wrath against his people, and does foment meanes for the overthrow of the peace of this Kirk and Kingdome. It is over brittle a fondation whereupon to gadge the honour and safetie of your sacred persone, and to build conclusions of warre; and we should not hold ourselves for loyall subjects, if we should not say these informations wer contrarie to trueth. Yet your Majestie is knowne to the world to be ane Prince prudent and moderat, who will not be drawn from that laudable forme of raining which was ever familiar to your Majesties selfe, and to your royall Father of blessed memorie, who worthilie gloried in the title of ane pacifick King; for the throne of Kings (says that wise King) is established by Justice and righteousness; and therefore we must, on the knies of our hearts, supplicat your sacred Majestie, in the bowels and mereies of our blessed Saviour, to be pleased to forbear all purpose of warre, and so to prevent the evils of dispaire and necessitie; and for that effect, that your Majestie may be pleased to close your ears against all contrarie enduements. Your Majestie is Vicegerent to Almichtie God, whose mereies and compassions, although immtable, are proponed as characters of imitation to Princes, so far as mortall man may joy therein, and resemble the immortall God.

These our grave and submisse supplications, we begg, in all humilitie, that your Majestie may be pleased graccouslie [to receive], which we have sent to your Majestie by this bearer the Justice-

Clerk, who is ane of our number, to whom we have committed our Instructions with trust: And we shall never cease to offer up our fervent prayers to Him by quhom Kings reigne, for preservation of your sacred persone, and the continowing felicitie of your long and happie reigning over us, and thereafter of your royall posteritie, so long as the world shall endure.

The Instructions are—

1. To represent to His Majestie that latelie we have presumed, in all humilitie, to write to His Majestie to the same sence of the letter now sent, but we are informed the Letter hes never come to His Majesties hands, but hes bein miscarried, and hath bein withdrawen, by what meanes we know not.

2. To shew His Majestie that, for any thing can appeare to us, these thinges that are now in question are urged by all as moved thereto, that are by the persuasion of their conseiences, they esteeming them poyntes of their faith; and if force be used, all are persuaded, and so proves, that it is not for these poynts now in question only, but for eueroaching upon religion in ane higher degrie then is pretendit.

3. That His Majestie, in this ease, may be pleased to take it to his royall consideration, what successe persute of armes hes had in all uther Kingdomes against men for matters of conscience, trucelie, or taken by them to be such; and that bloodie warres have ever bein to harden the spirits of men to opposition in matters of conscience, and to increase their number.

4. That, if our neighbour nation doe invaid this countrie, it will assnredlie be taken be all Scotsmen, albeit not affected the present way, for a nationall quarrell; and all will strive as ane man to defend themselves as for their lives, estates, and liberties of the countrie.

5. That the countrie is also joynd together, now that few or none of them most reserved, can be drawn together to oppone the countrie in this cause.

6. To represent to His Majestie the proffer made by the bodie of the Kingdome to imploy their readiest services, lives, lauds, honours, and quhatsoever is dearest to them in this world, for His Majesties service, and lay the same in at his Royall feete, to be disposed at his pleasure—they being satisfied in matters of religion and conscience, in which was performed in our presence by the great asseverations of many considerable persons amongst them, and which we are persuaded fullie to be true.

1639.—March.

8. *The Oath that they urged upon the Scotts Men at London.**

I doe faithfullie swear and promise that I doo honour and obey my Sovereigne Lord, King Charles, and will bear faith and true alleadgance to him, and defend and mentaine him and his royall power and auctoritie; and that I will not bear armes, or doe any rebellion or hostile aet against his Majestie, or protest against any of His Majesties Royall Commands, but submitting myselfe in all due obedience therunto; and that I will not enter into any Covenant, oath, or band, for mutuall defence and assistaunce of any persone or persones whatsoever, contraire to what I have herein sworne, professed, and promised: So help me God in Christ Jesns.

9. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I received yours but this morning, to which before I answer, I must tell you News: First, that Jacob Ashly has possessed Berwick with 1000 Foot and 60 Horse, and Carlisle is likewise possessed by My Lord Clifford with 300 men; Secondly, I have commanded Traquair to keep his Chamber, until he give me an account how he left Dalkeith, without striking one stroke, and before any Cannon was brought before it, having left the Ammunition (not destroyed) to their reverence, and likewise the Regalia: of this more by the next. Now for Answer, I have given the Proclamation to be written over by the Clerk-Register, with the General Oath, both which you shall have with all speed: for your Military Oath, I like it extreme well, as likewise your opinion for detaining the Patents of Honours until the Country be settled; for your Brother, certainly if you had forgotten him I should not, but have remembered my old Engagement; and for Dalziel, indeed he deserves well; yet methinks a Viscounty may serve at this time, that I may have something more to give upon further occasion: and so I rest

10. Letter from the King to Hamilton.†

HAMILTON,

According to my promise yesterday I have sent you back the Proclamation and Oath, but with very few Additions. As touching Traquair I can say little more than I did, because I have not yet seen his Defence; only if I had not taken this rude notice of his base Action, I am sure I should have disheartened a number of honest men than ever he was, or will be. This morning I have News of the safe Landing of the 500 Irish, which are by this time in Carlisle, there to attend until further Directions. I have no more at this time to say, but to know if Col. Gun be not one that you have entertained, for it is said that he is going back again to Germany. One thing I had almost forgot; they say for certain that Aberdeen holds out still, and is not likely to yield in haste; if it be so, you know what to do. And so I rest

11. Letter from the King to Hamilton.‡

HAMILTON,

This is to tell you, that the News of the rendring of Aberdeen came immediately after the dispatch of the last Post, and that though Huntley be retired, yet he is neither beaten nor over-run: but the chief cause of my writing at this time is, that since I have shown the Proclamation to Orbiston and Sir Lewis Stewart, they have both been very instant with me to change something in it: which (though my Judgment goes with them in the most, and therefore I will not be wilful; yet) I think I shall alter, or (but rather) palliate one point, to wit, not to set Priees upon the declared Rebels Heads, until they have stood out some little time; which time is to be expressed in this same Declaration. Another thing is, whither and when to send you Deviek; and lastly, whether I shall see you before you put to Sea, which I should be glad of, if it should not retard the Service: and so I rest

Your assured constant Friend,

12. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

I send you with this my Proclamation, as I have now made it upon debate with Sir Lewis Stewart, wherein I have altered nothing from the first, but what I wrote you by my last; only I have added some things of favour to those that shall repent, which nevertheless are of so little moment, that although this should not come to your hands time enough, the other might pass very well. As for the publishing of it, I shall do my best to get it proclaimed both in Edinburgh, and in the rest of the Kingdom: nevertheless you must not leave to do your best for the publishing of it. So wishing good success as well to your Person as Cause, I rest

14. Letter from the King to Hamilton.‡

HAMILTON,

I have spoken with Henry Vane at full, of all those things that were concerted betwixt you, and agree in all things but one, which is, that he thinks your going into the Frith, will make the Rebels enter into England the sooner; whereas on the contrary, I think that my possessing of Carlisle and Berwick hath made them so mad, that they will enter in as soon as they can persuade an Army together, except they be hindered by some awful Diversion; wherefore I could wish that you were even now in the Frith, though the Borders might be quiet till my Army be brought together, which they say will hardly be yet these ten days. Yet I am not out of hope to be at Newcastle within these fourteen days, and so to Berwick as soon as I may with either Honour or Safety; wherefore my Conclusion is, go on a Gods Name in your former Intentions, except

HAMILTON,

According to my Promise on Thursday last, I send you herewith the Proclamation altered as I then wrote; and that you may not think that these Alterations are grounded upon new Counsels, I shall desire you to observe, that I do not so much as seem to adde the least thing to my former Promises. It is true, that I neither mention the late pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, nor the Covenant, at this time: my reason is, that if for the present I could get Civil Obedience, and my Forts restored, I might then talk of the other things upon better terms. As for excepting some out of the General Pardon, almost every one now thinks that it would be a means to unite them the faster together; whereas there is no fear, but that those who are fit to be excepted, will doe it themselves by not accepting of Pardon, of which number I pray God there be not too many: So that you are now to go on according to your former Directions, onely proclaiming this instead of my former signed Proclamation; and so to proceed with Fire and Sword against all those that shall disobey the same. So praying to God to prosper you in all things, I rest

17. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

It is true that I was content to hear your Advice concerning your going into the Frith, it being chiefly to shew Henry Vane that your Judgement went along as well as your Obedience: though I had a care ever to take off from you the envy of seeking this particular Employment, taking it, as it is just, upon my own absolute Command; yet I will not say, but that you might have cause to wonder, because neither of us expressed ourselves so clearly as we might. But my chief errand to you at this time is, that upon serious Debate upon your long Letter to Henry Vane, only with him and Arundel, (for I dare trust no other) we found no reason to alter my former Commands, but were more confirmed in the fitness of them; only we have thought requisit to alter some things in the Proclamation, which you shall receive by the next Dispatch, at furthest within a day or two of this: so that you are not to (indeed I think you cannot) publish any, until the New one come to you, (for I believe it will be at the Holy-Island before you:) the Alterations of which you will only find to be, that I do not say all I think; but in no ways slack my Resolution, much less seem to yield to any new thing. So referring you to Henry Vane for the relating of our Proceedings here, I rest

18. A Letter from the Nobilitie of Scotland to the Earle of Essex, lying in Berwick, sent with Mr William Cuninghame.†

OUR MOST NOBLE LORD,

As in all these great affairs which have been so much noysed abroad, of our Church and State, our chiefest care hes beene to walke warrantable, according to the Laws that were sett in force for that effect; so we are certainly persuaded that amongst ourselves there is none that can justlie complaine of what hes passed; and for these our Countrie Men who are now in England, if they be of that number, as they are evill subjects to our gracious King, and worse compatriots to us; so, of all the worst guests amongst yow, while they endeavour to make the remedie of their evils, and the escape of their deserved punishment, the beginning of ane incurable disease betwixt two nations, to whom this quarrell should nowayes extend, if the informations and protestations made by us for this end, and the bond of our Covenant sworne to God and man, hes not cleered all scruples in the mynd of our gracious Sovereigne hitherto; and, of all good subjects with yow, it is not our fault, but rather our joynt misfortune with yow, that there are too too many amongst yow, also in great place and credite, whose privat byasse runnes quyte voyd and contrare to the publict good, and who are, these wicked ones, rysing earlie to poysons the publict fountaine, and to sow the unhappie teares of jealousies and discords betwixt yow and us, before the good seed of our love and respect to our neighbour nation can take place in your hearts. Amongst all the evils of this kynd which daylie overtakes us, next to the present undeserved displeasure of our Prince against us, (which God in mercie will take off in his aune tyme,) there could nothing have been fallen so strange and unexpected to us as the drawing of your forces together upon your borders, which, whether to defend yourselves, or to annoy us, and so to prepare and gather those clouds which threathens a sore tempest to bothe, we for our parte wishe they may first perishe in the shipwrack who beginsse to dashe the ane nation against the other.

As for yow, my Lord, although your place, person, and qualitie, the honour and reputation of your former life, may give us some assurance that your Lordship will bewar to beginne the quarrell, wherent the enemies of both the nations will rejoyce and catch the advantage; yet give us live to admire the ground of these needlesse feares that makes you thus strengthen your borders, or rather suspect these pregnant presumptions of a farther project intendit against this nation by your power, which needs must make us bestirre ourselves betymes at all hands for our safetie; God is our witness that we desire no nationall quarrell to arise betwixt us, or to tast of that bitter fruit that may sett both your children and our children's teeth on edge, but rather hold ourselves obliged, in conscience of our duetie to God, our Prince, and all our nation, our brethren, to try all just and lawfull meanes for the removall of all causes of discord betwixt two nations who are yet locked together, and should be still in all the strongest bonds of affection and common interest, and to be alwayes readie to offer that occasion of greater satisfaction in this kynd for clearing our loyall intentions towards our Prince, to all whom it may concerne, and, uamely, to your Lordship, in regard of your place and command at this tyme, by any mids whatsoever should be thought expedient on both sydes. This farr we thought good to represent to your Lordship, being occasionallie together, so few of us as are in this place, for ourselves, and in name of the rest of our number, who, together with us, shall expect your Lordships answer, and rests your Lordships affectionat friends to serve you.

LOVING FRIENDS,

Such is and haith bein his Majesties tender fatherlie caire of this his native Kingdome, that he haith bein graciouslie pleased to indevore, by manie faire and calme wayes, to reclaizme his disobedient subjects within the same, but hitherto all in vaine. So haffing productit no better effects in divers of theme bot the daylie incressing of insolences; and to such ane hicht it is growne, that nothing can be justlie expected from his Majestie bot to use his royall power and force: zitt still, such is his guidnes and clemencie, as that will be the last way he will trite, and then to the gritt grieff. Qulhairfore he hes bein pleased to send me, his High Commisssiouer, unto these pairts againe, with full powar and authoritie to accommodat these effaires (if it be possible) in ane peaceable way, and to treat and use his guid and deutifull subjects with all favour and kindnes, qwhereof I thought fitt to give yow notice, yow being the cheiff and principall citie of this his Kingdome; zitt I may say with sorrow, that none hes shewing themselfis more proanc to riot and disobedience to his Majesties commands than yow. Bott zitt ther is tyme for repentance—such is his Majesties clemencie. These are thairfor to desyre yow, that not onlic your selfis, bot that yow lykewayes prepair the hairts of the Commouns, that both yow and yai may be readyr to repaire his Majesties gratious pleasure which sal be signified unto yow, with that humble and thankfull obedience, as becommeth loyall, deutifull, and guid subjects, so that, by your guid example, the rest of this Kingdome may doe the lyke, which will be ane meanes for yow to redeme His Majesties favour which yow have iustlie lost, and saive the schedding of much innocent blood, which both His Majestic and all iust men call Heaveu and earth to witness, yow ar the principall causers thereof, as haffing cheiffie countenancced the beginners of these trubles, and which one day most lyc heavilie upone yowr consciences, and call for iust vengeance from God and the King, with the curses of manie innocents which, by yowre meanes, will be destroydc. PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

We, his Majesties humble and loyall subjectes, doe, with all thankfulnes, acknowledge that His Majesties caire to this his native Kingdome hes bein more tender, and His Majesties proceedings more calme, then our enraged enemies, who have bein, by all meanes, seeking His Majesties dishonour, and owre utter ruine could have wyched. So are we heartilie sorie that the suggestiounes and informatiounes of our enemyes sould have prevailed so far with His Majestie, as that ourselfs or anie uther of His Majesties guid subjects should be compted so refractorie and disobedient as to have deservit that His Majestie sould make use of any powar or forces against us, who have bein seeking nothing bot the libertie of oure religion against novatiounes, and that all questiounes might be determined by a Nationall Assemblie and Parliament, both which were graciouslie indicted be His Majestie, and have bein doing nothing bot using preparatiounes for our lawfull and necessar defence against threatened invasion and hostilities. We are glaid that your Grace is come hither as His Majesties Commissioner, to accomodatt effaires in a peaceabill way, which is the desyres of oure hearts, and seemes to ws not onlie possibill bot easie. Bot we are heavie greived that your Grace sould come against this your native countrey in such ane hostile way as may rather provoke then pacifie, and does pretend that the Kingdome will be moved to doe more for feir of violence, then frome trew loyalitie and conscience of that dewtie we ow to our dread Sovereigne under God. Nothing can be requyred of us for ourselfis, who have the honour to be the chieffe cittie of this His Majesties Kingdome, or for the Communes, so far as our creddeitt and powar can reache, or for giving good exemple to uthers in receaving His Majesties gracious pleasure and iust commandments, with all humble and thankfull obedience, which sall not be to the full and most cheirfullie performit. Bot when we have doone the dewtie of gud and loyall subjects which (nixt unto oure dewtie to God Almighty) hath bene our cheifest caire, and whairof we have given all proofes and exemplarie evidences if it sall come to pas (which the Lord of his mercye prevent) that innocent blood salbe shed, then hath y<sup>e</sup> curse cum on them, and the burdein wherof, the consciences of those who haith bein either the principall causers, or the beginners, or the fomenters, of those present troubles; for, as we have, in this cause, a guid conscience before God, and nevir meant evil to any man, far les to our King, which is oure gritt confidence and comfort, so we ar assent to be approven of all just and good men, who ar not ignorant of our proceidings, and of the necessarie causes of our intendit defence. The length of Henry Vane's Dispatch will shorten this, not being willing to trouble my self with writing, nor you with reading of Repetitions. This I must observe to you, that whatsoever either he or I writes at this time is, no absolute Command, but merely Advices to help your Knowledge, that you may the easier judge what is best for my Service: Upon this ground I send you here a Discourse of Mr Thomas Hamilton's, wherein many things to my seeming are very well said, but how far practicable, or when, I leave you to judge; as likewise upon the whole matter I give you my Opinion, that if you find it not fit to land all our 5000 men upon Lothian-side, then it may be counsellable to send most of your Land-men to the North, to strengthen my Party there. As for your landing in the South, I shall onely name two Places besides Tentallon, to wit, Sterlin, (if that be not too far off to be relieved) and Dumbar: as for Tentallon, I shall command the Marquis of Douglass to send one to agree that business with you. MOST SACRED SOVERAIGNE,

Be graceouslie pleased to hearken unto the humble Supplication of the Subjects of your ancient and native Kingdome of Scotland, still prostrat at the feete of your Majesties clemencie and myldnes; shewing that, as there is nothing so greevous unto us and everie ane of us as your Majesties heavie displeasure, conceaved against us this tyme past, which maketh us, in the trueth of our hearts and in all humilitie, to deprecat your Majesties wrath; so nothing under heaven can revive and refresh us so much as that the sweet rayes of the light and love of your Majesties countenance should, in the wonted comfortable maner, schyne upon us and this whole kingdome. In this we are most unhappie, that we want the comfort of your Majesties personall presence, and that your graecious accesse, which the meanest of your subjects find there. Lett us humble begg that your Majestie may suffer your graceous favour to triumph over the severitie of your indignation; and if it may be your Majesties good pleasure to keepe the Parliament, graceouslie indicted by your Majestie, for putting a finall determination to all our troubles, whither in your owne royall persone, which is the earnest desire of our hearts, or by your Majesties High Commissioner,

25. *Letter from Lords and Gentlemen of the Covenant to Hamilton.**

PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

As we were here met to attend the Parliament indicted by His Majesty, there was shewed to us by the Provost of Edinburgh a Letter from your Grace to himself, and the Bailiffs, and Council of this City, with the Copy of theirs returned to your Grace, deferring the more full Answer till our Meeting. And withall there was presented from your Grace His Majesties Proclamation, which having perused, we find it doth contain divers points not onely contrary to our National Oath to God, but also to the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom: for it carries a demneiation of the high crime of Treason against all such as do not accept the Offer therein contained; albeit it be onely a Writing put in Print without the Kingdom, and not warranted by Act and Authority of the Council, lawfully convened within this Kingdom. And your Grace in your Wisdom may consider, whether it can stand with the Laws, Liberties, and Customs of this Kingdom, that a Proclamation of so great and dangerous Consequence, wanting the necessary Solemnities, should be published at the Mereat-cross of this City. Whereas your Grace knows well, that by the Laws of this Kingdom, Treason and Forfeiture of the Lands, Life, and Estate of the meanest Subject within the same, cannot be declared but either in Parliament, or in a Supreme Justice-Court, after Citation and lawful Probation, how much less of the whole Peers and Body of the Kingdom, without either Court, Proof, or Trial. And albeit we do heartily and humbly acknowledge and profess all dutiful and evil Obedience to His Majesty as our Dread and Gracious Sovereign: yet since this Proclamation does import in effect the renouncing of our Covenant made with God, and of the necessary means of our lawful Defence, we cannot give Obedience thereto, without bringing a Curse upon this Kirk and Kingdom, and Ruine upon our selves and our Posterity; whereby we are persuaded, that it did never proceed from His Majesty, but that it is a deep Plot contrived by the Policy of the Devilish Malice of the known and cursed Enemies of this Church and State; by which they have intended so to disjoyn us from His Majesty, and among our selves, as the Rupture, Rent, and Confusion of both, might be irreparable, wherein we hope the Lord (in whom we trust) shall disappoint them. And seeing we have left no means possible unessayed, since His Majesties coming to York, (as before,) whereby His Majesties Ear might be made patent to our just Informations, but have used the help (to our last Remonstrance) of the Lord Gray, the Justice-Clerk, the Treasurer, and the Lord Daliell, as the Bearer can inform your Grace, and yet have never had the happiness to attain any hopes of our end, but have altogether been frustrate and disappointed thereof; and now understanding by the sight of your Graeces Letter, that your Grace as His Majestys High Commissioner is returned with full Power and Authority to accommodate Affairs in a peaceable way, we will not cease to have recourse to your Grace, as one who hath chief interest in this Kirk and Kingdom, desiring your Grace to consider, (as in our Judgments we are persuaded,) that there is no way so ready and assured, to settle and compose all Affairs, as by holding of the Parliament according to His Majesties Indiction, either by His Sacred Majesty in Person, which is our chiefest desire, or by your Grace as His Majesties Commissioner, at the time appointed, wherein your Grace shall find our Carriage most Humble, Loyal, and Dutiful to our Sovereign, or to your Grace as representing His Majesties Person: and in the mean time that your Grace would open a safe way, whereby our Supplications and Informations may have access to His Majesties Ears. And we are fully persuaded, that we shall be able to clear the Lawfulness and Integrity of Our Intentions and Proceedings to His Majesty, and make it evident to His Majesty, and to the World, that our Enemies are Traitors to the King, to the Church and State; and that we are and ever have been His Majesties Loyal and Obedient Subjects. 26. *Answer to the above, addressed to Rothcs.**

MY LORD,

I Received a Letter yesterday morning signed by your Lordship, and divers Noblemen, and others, wherein you alledge you are come to attend the Parliament; but considering your Preparation and Equipage, it appears rather to fight a Battel, than to hold a Civil Convocation for the good of the Church and Commonwealth. You may perceive by His Majesties Gracious Proclamation, that he intended in His Own Sacred Person to be present at the Parliament, so soon as with Honour and Safety he might doe it, and for that end exprest therein what was fit to be done. But these Courses which you take, and your Disobedience to his Just Commands, daily more and more shewed, will necessitate him to have them put in execution another way.

It is true that His Majesty sent me hither to accommodate these Affairs in a peaceable manner, if it were possible, which I have laboured to doe; and accordingly my Department hath been, which hath been met with that Retribtion, as if I had met with the greatest Enemy: but your refusing to publish His Majesties Grace to his People, signified in his Proclamation, hath taken away that Power which otherwise I had; that being a Liberty taken to your selves, which never any Loyal Subjects assumed in any Monarchy. You alledge many Reasons for your selves, of the Illegality of that Proclamation; but you cannot be ignorant, that your Carriage hath forced many of these principal Councellours for safeguard of their Lives to forsake the Kingdom, out of which they remain yet for the same cause. You have suppressed the Printing of all Writings, but what is warranted by Mr Alexander Heuderson, and one Mr Archibald Johnstown; neither was the Clerk of the Council, whom I sent for twice to give him Directions concerning this Business, permitted to come aboard to me, upon conference with whom (for any thing you know) I might have resolved to come ashore my self, and convened a Council for the Publication thereof in the ordinary way. But your extraordinary Proceedings in all things must needs force from His Majesty some things, which perhaps you may think not ordinary. Whereas you desire me to be a means that your Supplications may have free access to His Majesties Ears, it is a work of no difficulty; for His Majesty hath never stopt his Ears, to the Supplications of any of his Subjects, when they have been presented to him in that humble and fitting way which became dutiful Subjects: nor did I ever refuse any all the time I was among you, or conceal any part of them from His Majesty. So that your Allegation of not being heard, is grounded upon the same false Foundations that your other Actions are; and serves onely for a means to delude the simple People, that by making them believe what you have a mind to possess them with, they may become backers of your unwarranted Actions; which as it is generally lamented by all His Majesties good Subjects, so it is more particularly by me, who have had the Honour to be employed in this Business with so bad Success. My Lord, Your humble Servant, sitie of our proceedings, from the verie beginning to this present tyme, yett hath the successe beene so badd, that all our dealing hath bein misconstrued and perverted quyte contrare to our meaning and desires, not only to the iincreasing of prejudices betwixt the Prince and his people here, but also to the raising of a quarrell betwixt the two nations, which was als farr from our expectation, as from our intentions and deserving. This hath made us at last to wearie of the mediation and meddling of our owne countrie men in these effaires; and as we did beginne with the Earle of Essex, then being at Berwick, so doe we now coutinow with your Lordship in clearing our loyall thoughts to our Prince, and our duetifull respects to our neighbour nation; and to tistifie how readie we are to stoupe to the smallest ocaasions serving for that end, the bearer D<sup>r</sup> Johne Moiesley as a witness, who, although he became hither rather by tolleration then any command or commission, (as he declares,) yet his zeale and good affections to the publiet peace of both uations we doe commend, and his privat endeavour to employ himselfo in so good a worke shall not want from us the oure encouragement, the rather that he hath made honourable mention to us of your Lordships particular affectiouns to the continowance of your commoun peace; of whose disposition in the generall we were fullie assured before. We would, therefore, make knowen to your Lordship, and all others of the like noble disposition, and, if it were possible, to all the good subjects of England, that, as we have beene, we are still verie farre from wearying of Monarchical Government—from the thoughts of laying aside that of obedience, which we owe to our King and dread Sovereigie—from any intention to invaid England, quihich are so foule faults and haynous transgressiouns, as that we would not once have mentioned them, but that they have beene the false imputations of evill men against us, labouring thereby for their owne base ends, to worke our hinderance in obtaining our just desyres, which have beene and are no other but that we may peaceable injoy our religion and the liberties of our countrey, according to the lawes; and that all questiones aryseing from these may be determined by Parliaments and Nationall Assemblies. That is it for which we have petitioned, covenanted, and consecrated our lives, and what in this world be dearest unto us, which we trust your Lordship, and all others noble, wise, and just men will judge to be most equitable, and for which no nationall quarrell can justlie arise—the Kirk Constitutions, and civill lawes in divers Kingdomes being different, and we being also farr from impugning the religion and liberties of other nations, as we are carefull to maintaine our owne; and knowing that the common rule of equitie hath place with your Lordship—"quhatsoever ye would that others did to yow, doe yow even so to them."

We have also sent with the bearer a double of that Supplicatiou, which we are to send aboard to the Marqueis of Hamilton, that if it be possible by the Moderation of your Lordship, and of other Noble Lords, to whom we have written in lyke maner, presenting the same, His Majestie may be pleased to heare us at last and graut us our desires, which shall tend to his Majesties great glory, bring ane end to all our questions to our mutuall rejoicing, make the blessed Instruments of so good a worke to be thankfullie remembered by the Posteritie when they enjoy the fruites thereof, is the earnest request of Having been some days since I wrote to you, I could not let my Lord Aboyne go without these Lines, though it be rather to confirm than to addo to my two former: onely I shall desire you to take heed how you engage me in Money-expeuce. As for what Assistance you can spare him out of the Forces that are with you, I leave you to judge, and I shall be glad of it if you find it may doe good. The trnth is, that I find my state of Moneys to be such, that I shall be able (by the Grace of God) to maintain all the Men I have afoot for this Summer; but for doing any more I dare not promise: therefore if with the Countenance and Assistance of what Force you have, you may uphold my Party in the North, and the rest of those Noblemen I have sent to you, I shall esteem it a very great Service; but I shall not advise you to engage me in further Charge, except it may be the Pay of some few Officers. 31. Letter from Rothes to Hamilton.†

PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

I should have been far better contented to have seen you here at the Parliament with His Majesty, or holding that indicted, as His Majesties Commissioner, thau with a Navy and Army to constrain us beyond these just limits of Religion and lawful Obedience, which we were always willing to perform. It was far by my Expectation, and your Graces Oath and Promise, that you should ever come in any chief Command against your Native Country. Whereas your Grace doth challenge our coming in such numbers to attend this Parliament, I hope you conceive that this Navy and Army upon the Borders, and the Invasion threatened in the West, do suffieiently warrant our Preparations to defend these places, and divert such dangers. That Proclamatiou that is said to carry so much Grace and Goodness, is as destitute of that, as your Invasion is of a good Warrant; which persuades me, that neither of the two proceeds from His Majesties own Gracious Disposition. I cannot staud here to answer all these misconceived particulars, contained in your Graces Letter; but if I had the Honour to see your Grace, before any more mischief be done, I dare engage my Honour and my Life, to clear all these Imputations laid on our Proceedings; and I can demonstrate how hardly we have been used without any just reason. I dare not be answerable to God Almighty, and to that Duty I owe my Prince and Country, if I do not shew your Grace, that your going a little further in this violent and unjust way will put all from the hopes of Reeovery, for which both a great deal of Blame from Men, and Judgment from above shall attend you, as the special Instrument, which I wish you labour to evite. If our Destruction be intended, we are confident in that Majesty who owns this Cause, and is able to defend it: and if onely Terrours to fright, and prepare us to accept of any Conditions will be offered, that Intention is already as far disappointed as any of these many former. But as we are ready to defend, so ever to insist in supplicating, and using all humble and lawful means, as becomes us. Mr Borthwick will deliver to your Grace our Supplication to His Majesty, and both his and my mind, till I shall have the occasion to disburden my self surcharged with grief at your Proceedings; being most desirous (as I have been formerly) to have all these occasions removed that may divert me from being still

CHARLES, be the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland. To our loving Subjects, whom it shall or may concerne, greeting. Whereas we are thus farr advanced in our Royall persone with our army, at the attendance of our Nobilitie and Gentry of this Kingdome; and intends shortlie to be at our good Toune of Berwick, with purpose to give our people of Scotland all just satisfaction in Parliament, as soone as the present disorders and tumultuous proceedings of some are there quyeted, and will have a fair way of comeing, like a graceous King, to declaire our good meaning to them; but finding some caires of impediment, and that this nation doth apprehend that (contrare to our professions) there is ane intention to invade this our Kingdome of Scotland: We doe, therefore, to elcare all doubts that may breed scruples in the myndes of our good subjects of either Kingdomes, reiterat this our just and reall protestation, That if all civill and temporall obedience be effectualle and tymelie given and shoven unto us, we doe not intend to invade them with any hostilitie. But if they shall, without our speciall auctoritie and command, raise any armes, troupes, and draw them downe within ten myles of our Borders in England; and in that caice, doe expresslie command the Generall of our Army, and our Superior Officers of the same respectively, to proceed against them as rebelles and invaders of this our Kingdome of England, and to the uttermost of their power destroy them, in which they shall doe ane singular service both to our honour and saiftie. PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

As we have assayed this tyme past, by divers supplications and many other meanes, to give our graceous Sovereigne all lawfull satisfaction, so doe we most especiallie esteeme ourselves obliged at this tyme to eudeavour the same, and most earnestlie to deprecat his Majesties indignation, even to prove these preparations we have now readie, for our lawfull and necessar defence, to be for no other end. And we doe now expresse—not moved with fear, but with the sense of duetic—that our hearts have been and are free of all disloyaltie and disobedience quhatsoever to our graceous Sovereigne, and least our hope of a happie, peaccable, and contented conclusion, be interrupted by the mischeefe that may arise from the stoppe of trade, and injuries done by the fleete lying here, or by the armies that will ly so near upon the Borders, we earnestlie beseech your Grace to medeat with His Majestie, and that so seriouslie and speedilie, as all thir threatened evils may be prevented; and, in the meane tyme, the country may be secured from all such dangers as we have entrusted the bearer more particularlie to relate to your Grace; and herein we wishe your Grace that successe which may tend to the glorie of God, the honour of His Majestic, the good of this Kingdome, the remembrance of your Grace in after ages, as ane happie instrument, and the present oblidgement to a thankfull remembrance by us, who humbly crave your Graces answer.

HAMILTON,

I have kept this honest Bearer the longer, that I may with the more assurance give you my Directions what to doe, consisting of two points, Fighting and Treating: for the first, we are still of the same Opinion, that it is not fit that you should give on untill I be on the Borders, which will be (by the

In that case you are to fall on them immediately, and in my Opinion as far up in the Frith as you think probably may doe good, thereby to make a Diversion. In the mean time I like well, that you go on upon that ground of Treaty you sent a Note of to Master Treasurer, (which you will find I have underwritten,) no body else being acquainted with it.

36. *Answer by Hamilton to Rothes.**

MY LORD,

I have received your Lordships Letter signed by you, but I cannot conceive it of your Lordships ending; for I believe you would not have sent such an one to me, if you had not had some malignant spirits busied in the framing of it; for you cannot but remember that my words were never other, than that I would die at my Masters feet, and that I would prove an Enemy to the uttermost of my Power to this Kingdom, if my Countrymen continued in their Obstinaey: and here I set it under my Hand, that I will (by Gods Grace) make it good. It is true, knowing my own inability, I neither desired, nor indeed willingly did accept, the Conduct of an Army against this Nation: but my backwardness proceeded not out of a desire not to be employed against such in this Country as were disobedient, but that His Majesty might have found many more able to have served him: but since he hath been pleased to trust me, I will not deceive him.

You pass by many particulars in your Answer to my Letter untouched, saying, you cannot stand here to answer them. It is most true, they are not to be answered, and so I take it. As for your own Justification, it is the same which you have ever used, and so continue: but the best is, none that ever were truly informed of your Proceedings, doth or can give any approbation of them.

You say, If I go any further in a violent course, it will be past all hope of Remedy. If I doe, none can blame my Master, for that can never be called Violence which is onely to suppress Rebellion: and if I proceed to execute his Commands therein, you are the causers of it. As Mr Borthwick told me, I expected to have heard further from you before now: but nothing coming, I would forbear no longer to give you this Answer under my Hand, that both you and all the world may take notice what my Inclinations are, which notwithstanding I do infinitely desire they may be stopt by your speedy and real Submission to His Majesties just Commands. And this is the prayer of him who wisheth it may be still lawful for him to call himself

As it hath bene my fortune to receive great expression from you of your disposition of your loyaltie and duetie to his Majestie, so it is now to give your Lordships ane occasion to shew it, by obedience to his Majesties proclamation; which, asking but civile and temporall obedience from his naturall Kingdome, having bene borne in the bowells thereof, I must beleive, by the most earnest professions of love and duetie to him, and lykewise by the enemie of your great tyds, that so much ought to serve that created him Monarche, your Lordships will most joyfullie and readilie submitt to that which in his sacred and powerfull way, as thus demanded from yow. By which meanes ye may not onlie avoide that name ye professe so litle to deserve, but also shune in all your particulars the inconveniences of it, with these of the publict, threatened in the destruction of these Kingdomes, which are so interested in the saiftie and prosperitie of each other, as their differences will appeare as unnaturall towards ourselves, as it may prove unfortunate. 40. *A Letter from Scottish Nobles sent to the Noblemen and Counsellours in England.**

MOST NOBLE LORDS,

Although we have bein labouring this long tyme past by our Supplications, Informations, and Missives to some of your Lordships, to make knowen to his Majestie and the whole Kingdome of England, the loyaltie and peaceableness of our intentions and desires, and that we never meant to deny to his Majestie, our Sovereigne and native King, anypoynt of temporall and civile obedience, yet, contrarie to our expectation and hopes, matters to this day growing worse and worse, both Kingdomes are brought to the dangerous and deplorable condition wherein they now stand in the sight of the world. In this extremite we have sent to his Majestie our humble supplication, (besides which know none other meanes of pacification,) and doe most earnestlie intreat that it may be assisted by your Lordships, that, if it be possible, by a meeting, in some convenient place, of some pryme and well-affected men to the reformed religion, and our common peace, matters may be accommodat in a fair and peaceable way, and that so speedilie, and with such expedition, as, through farder delays, which we see not how they can be longer indured, our evils become not incurable. We take God and the world to witnes, that we have left no meanes unassayed to give his Majestie and the whole Kingdome of England, all just satisfaction, and that we desire nothing but the preservation of our Religion and Lawes. If the fearfull consequents shall ensue, which must be verie neare, except they be wiselie and speedilie prevented, we trust they shall not be imputed unto us, who, till this tyme, have been following after peace, and who doe, in everie duetie, most ardentlie desire to shew ourselves his Majesties faithfull Subjects, and

41. The Marquis of Hamiltons Letter to the Earle of Rothes.†

MY LORD,

I have received a letter, signed by my Lord Lindsey, not of many lynes, yet full of injuries; and sure it was in such a straine as is not fitt for a Subject to write to the Kings Commissioner, and deserves no other cause but this, that his follie hath transported him beyond his duetie. The article which he mentions, I find to be none other than unjust complaiuts underwritten by your Lordship, and some other, written to no other end, as I conceive, but to justifie disloyall proceedings, and to accuse us of things quihich are notoriouslie false, quihich, to confute, I hold it altogither unnecessar, though verie easie to be done; and so much the more since ane answer is so premtourilie required. This is not the way to bring the bussinesse to that peaceable conclusion which yow seeme to desire; wherefore, leaving these wayes, if peace it be ye would have, and comeing in that maner as becomes subjects to come to their Sovereigne his Commissioner, I shall then not only receive your petitions, but willinglie contribute my best endeavours with my Master, so farre as may stand with his honour and my duetie, for his graceous receaving yow into his favour, and establishing a future peace in the land, which, if it be also heartilie desired of yow as it shall be reallie laboured for by me, I have no doubt of the good successe. So I rest, desirous yet to continow.

We propounded to His Majestie according to the desires we had from yow, that yow might be admitted to come to His Majestie, to shew to his Majestie the trueth of things, and withall deprecate His Majesties wrath; quihilk motion of yours is not thought fitt, at this tyme, to be hearkened unto; yet His Majestie is so tender of the good of that his antient kingdome, that if yow come warranted from them by whom his auctoritie hath, in so high a measure, many wayes suffered, with such a submission as becomes duetifull subjects, he is most graceouslie pleased that yow come, and he will not barre his cares from any reasonable sute of any his good subjects, in such a way. And, therefore, yow are to consider with yourselves whither yow can bring any propositions that are worthie of his hearing, quherby they may shew themselves duetifull subjects, as, upon good grounds, may make show himself a graceous Prince, quihich, if it can be deserved, he is verie desirous to doe. VERSES UPON THE RAINBOW.

By Mr Patrick Hamilton, Minister of Cambuslang.

The Rainbow was to man a signe of peace:
This doth portend much blood—no sign of grace.
God's Rainbow stayd the floods—O greatest wonder!
This threatens to burn us all with fyric thnnder.
What greife!—that He was hop't to grace our land,
Should, to destroy it, in his Rainbow stand!
Lord, either make his Rainbow like to the,
Or, under Thyne, let us sure shaddowed be.
Thyne reaches so long owre heaven, air, earth, sea—
This but a blast, and bounded is by The:
Tyme rotts the ane: Thyne doeth remain for ay,
Proclaiming peace unto thy saints alway.
Man's Rainbowe's collar's red, and full of fyre;
Thine whyte, blew, red—signes of thy quenched ire.

satisfaction unto us and all his good people, so shall we ever be willing, with all due respect, to remember and to honour all such as shall be so happie as be mediators to procure the same, which we acknowledge to be yours at this tyme; and, for our parte, shall, to the uttermost of our power, render all civile and temporall obedience to his Majestie, als tyme and effectuallie as may be, with the safetie of our lives and safetie of the countrie. And, therefore, as we doe humbly intreat, and certainlie expect, that his Majestie is willing to cleare all doubts that may breid scruples in the myndes of his good subjects of either Kingdome, will, in his justie, recall all his forces by sea, which are here lying within our bosome, to our great hindrance—will recall our arreasted schippes in his Majesties uther dominions—will remove his armies from the Borders, for our securitie—and will be graciously pleased to give farder signification of his Majesties will for accomodation of affaires in such a peaceable way, whether by the confarence of some pryve and well-affected men of both nations, or any other meanes, (which we presume not to preseryve,) as may prove more powerfull then any thereof, already assayed, hath done: So doe we presently resolve, in all humilitie, to doe his Majesties will, in keeping our armies within the bounds of his Majesties limitation, and to performe all things we can conceave may condee for our owne common peace.

The speedie effectuating of this on both sydes, as your Lordship knowes, to be his Majesties honour. So doe we knowe it to be the will of his Majesties Kingdome now in armes, whose present condition is such, that it cannot longer delay; and all men who looke upon us will pereeave to be the scattering of that dark cloud which lings over the two Kingdomes. This blessed worke, if your Lordship, who hath begun so happilie, shall bring to passe, which, from the knowledge of his Majesties justice and goodnes, we suppose to be faseable be your Lordship and others who have access; and therefore intrust this Gentleman, Sir John Home of Blackader, Kny<sup>t</sup>, with farder information; then shall we yet be farder oblidged to prove

Lochend, the 25 Maij 1639.

Instructions.

Yon shall shew to my Lord Holland—

1. The true estate of the question—Whether we shall be governed by Generall Assemblies in matters of eeclesiasticall, and by Parliament in matters civill, unto whose decision we have ever submitted ourselves, our persons, our cause, and proceedings; and albeit Proclamations be wrapt up in generalls of Religion and Lawes, the ground of both are condemned in particulers, as our Covenant with God and the Generall Assembly, whereof we cannot obtaine our ratification in Parliament?

2. That we never had intention, either to diminishe his Majesties auctoritie and monarchie, or to invade our neighbour Kingdome, but only to defend ourselves in the mentainance of religion and our liberties.

3. That we have hitherto used all meanes possible, by supplications and informations, to cleare our intentions to his Majestie and our neighbour nation.

4. That, to shew our greatest testimonie of our willing obedience, after by proclamation we were declaied rebellis and tratours, we most humbly renewed our Supplications, wrote to sundrie Noblemen of England, and most heartillie consented to the prorogation of the Parliament.

5. That the English nation hes now lyen this fourtnight in our Firth, stopping all tredd and comers betwixt this and any uther nation, takeing our schippes, boattes, and barkes, their goods and vietualls, and moneyes, deteining the men, both mariniers and passengers, or forcing them to swear oathes contrare to our Religion and Lawes.

6. That many fastations and relations of our foull conspiracies (as they call them) are published to the world against us, and yet never ane of them suffered to come home to lett us know our aecusations; that our estates be disposed to our tennents, and our lives subjected to all that would be rewarded for the takeing of them.

7. That, albeit it be strange that any forraigne army, after threatening our destructions, shall marche to our Borders, readie to come in upon us at their pleasure, and we, who intend and professe not to offend, but to defend ourselves, should be discharged from the bounds so lyable to barre invasion, yet, to give full satisfaction in everie poynnt, are content to stay our armies upon assurance of the present removing of the Navie from our Frith, and armies from our Borders.

8. It is likelie that matters of so great importance as is now to be intreated upon, cannot so shortlie be brought to ane conclusion as necessitie requires, by interehanging of Letters and intercourse of messingers. It doth, therefore, seeme convenient that a conference were appoynted betwixt some of the Nobilitie of England and some of our Nobilitie in some convenient place upon the Border March, so speedilie as may be, which, doubtlesse, will prove the most comodious way to accomodat bussinesse shortlie.

46. *Heads of Conference betwixt Hamilton and some Covenanters.**

The whole Discourse (so far as I can remember of it) may be reduced to these Heads.

Their Invitation of your Excellence to go in person to His Majesty, to present their Desires, and to mediate for an Accommodation.

To this your Excellence answered,

First, that having full power from His Majesty to treat and conclude of all things concerning that Business, you held it unnecessary to go to him.

Secondly, your Excellence thought it unfit, you having so great a Charge here, which required your presence, and they having propounded nothing that could give sufficient occasion to such a Voyage to undertake it.

Thirdly, that if the distance from His Majesty were thought by them to be a hindrance to the Treaty, they might address themselves to His Majesty by such of the Nobility as were about him, who was not distant above threescore and twelve miles from the Leaguer.

They replied, that things would be more facilitated by your Excellence's being there, wishing, that as you had a part in the beginning of these Affairs, you might have the Honour to put an end to them.

Your Excellence returned, that the Lords Traquair and Roxburgh, who were now with His Majesty, were employed in them before you; which they acknowledged, but wished it had never been, confessing that they were spoiled before you had the managing of them.

Concerning a Cessation of Acts of Hostility, both by Sea and upon the Frontiers, where they complained of divers Insolencies committed by the Horse-troops of His Majesty; your Excellence answered, That in what concerned the first, you had committed none since your coming hither: true it was, you had stayed and taken many Barques and Boats, but some of them you had dismissed without touching any thing that they had in them; and these from whom you did take to supply your uses, you had paid them for it: that this day you had sent to Burnt-Island, and would doe so to other Places, to offer them full permission of Trade, provided they would swear not to carry Arms against His Majesty, and take the Oath of Fidelity; and for the Fishermen you required no Oath.

As for the other, namely some pretended Insolencies upon the Frontiers, you knew of none, and believed not any; and if there was any it was their fault, by their deferring to return to their Obedience to His Majesty: and when they made Instance in some particulars, your Excellence did cut them short, and said, That it was an unfit thing, and nothing conducive to make an end of Business, for them to stand upon those Puntilios with their Sovereign; and for your particular, you would never be an Instrument of any dishonourable Act to His Majesty, such as would be the engaging him not to correct the Misdemeanours of his Subjects: that you had made a like Answer when you was demanded for Pass-ports to those that should come to you; which you had rejected, as judging it dishonourable for His Majesty to grant, or any of his Subjects to ask or capitulate with His Majesty for.

They pressed to know what His Majesty required of them, and what would be the extent of his condescending to their Desires in point of Conscience, namely touching Bishops, and the Acts of the last General Assembly; wherein they said if they might have satisfaction, they would cast at His Majesties feet their Bodies and Fortunes, to be disposed of at his Pleasure.

In answer to this your Excellence caused me read His Majesties Proclamation, wherein desiring to be cleared of His Majesties Intentions, in the particular of the Civil Obedience, your Excellence said, it was the retiring with their Troops, laying down their Arms, and the Nobilities waiting on him with their swords onely upon the Frontier, the restoring of his Majesties Castles unto such as His Majesty should appoint, and the demolishing of their own Fortifications unlawfully erected, and the like.

As for the enjoying of Liberty of Religion, wherein likewise they did press to know how far His Majesty would condescend to their humble Supplications, as likewise in the point of the Acts of the last pretended General Assembly, your Excellence answered, It would be so far as the Laws of the Kingdom did permit.

They asked who should judge of these Laws, and of their intention, and if it might be decided by a General Assembly: your Excellence answered, Yes, and that either His Majesty would call one, or your self, as His Majesties High Commissioner.

They desired to know if His Majesty would stand to the Award of such an Assembly, especially in what concerned the Acts of the later.

Your Excellence answered, His Majesty was not bound to it, as having his Negative Voice; which they not acknowledging, your Excellence added, that notwithstanding you were confident, that whatsoever should be agreed on by such an Assembly, called by His Majesties Command, and where the Members should be legally chosen, His Majesty would not onely consent unto them, but have them ratified in Parliament.

They desired your Excellence would limit them a time wherein to return, and treat further with you, with full power to conclude all things wherein they desired not to be pressed with scantiness of time, in regard of the Nobilities being dispersed in several places of the Country.

Your Excellence answered, it should be when themselves would, were it to morrow or a moneth hence; for you assured them, they would find you so long in these quarters.

Lastly, they desired to know, what they might report of what your Excellence had assured them of His Majesties Intentions concerning Religion and the General Assembly.

Your Excellence answered, that as they brought no Commission to treat of all these particulars, but kept themselves within the limits of the Contents in their Letters, you would doe accordingly in your Answer, and that in writing they should receive something to-morrow.

47. *Letter from the King to Hamilton.**

HAMILTON,

This day I received yours by the Lord Seaton, and find your Opinion therein very good, if I might spare so many men; but every one, (that I dare consult with about this) protesteth against the diminishing of one man from my Army: besides, I have no mind to stay here upon a meer Defensive, which I must do, if I send you that Strength you mention. Likewise I think that I have my Lord Hume sure, and am reasonably confident of my Lord Johnstown; I have good hopes too of Queensberry, and the Scots; therefore, all these things considered, it were a shame if I should be idle. Wherefore now I set you loose, to doe what mischief you can doe upon the Rebels for my Service, with those men you have; for you cannot have one man from hence. Leaving the rest to the relation of this honest Bearer, I rest

48. Letter from Sir Harry Vane to Hamilton, and P.S. by the King.†

MY LORD,

By the Dispatch Sir James Hamilton brought * Burnet, p. 138. Hamilton's Letter, to which this is the answer, suppressed by Burnet.

† Burnet, p. 139.—This letter affords sufficient evidence of the King's apprehensions as to the increasing power of the Covenanters, which made him resolve "to keep himself on a defensive;" and it is confirmed by the King's postscript. And Burnet (p. 140) tell us that Hamilton had warned his Majesty in the Gallery of Whitehall, "that few of the English would engage in an offensive war with Scotland." This apologist of Hamilton states farther that, on reaching the English camp early in June, "the Marquis did shew the King that, while the fire-edge was upon the Scottish spirits, it would not prove an easie task to tame them, but would be a work of some years, and cost much money and many men: he therefore desired the King would consider if it were not fit to consent to the abolishing of Episcopacy and giving way to their Covenant till better times; and that, as the chief leaders had entered upon that course, being provoked by some irritations and neglects they had met with, so it might be fit to regain them by cajolery and other favours. And to persuade the King to this course was easier, that both his reason and his affection to his subjects did co-operate with it—a great strengthening coming to it by my Lord Canterbury's opinion, who saw a pacification absolutely necessary for the King's service, and did advise it." And Hamilton got a warrant under the King's hand, to "deal with" the Scotch leaders in the way thus suggested. It was at this time that Montrose was induced, by what motives still remains unexplained, to forsake the Covenant and join the King's party; and previously to the treaty, Home, Buccleugh, and some others also forsook the national banner.

It is curious to contrast these disclosures of the real state of facts at the time referred to, with a piece of gasconade in Heylyn's Life of Laud, (p. 365,) which, in its leading points, is contradicted by letters under the King's hand to Hamilton. "These preparations (for negotiation, says this Doctor of divinity) being made, they had an easier business of it than they had any reason to expect, to bring his Majesty to meet them in the middle way. It was not his in- your Lordship from His Majesties Sacred Pen, you were left at your liberty to commit any act of Hostility upon the Rebels, when your Lordship should find it most opportune: since which my Lord Holland with 1000 Horse and 3000 Foot marched towards Kelso, himself advanced towards them with the Horse (leaving the Foot three miles behind) to a Place called Maxwel-heugh, a height above Kelso; which when the Rebels discovered, they instantly marched out with 150 Horse, and (as my Lord Holland says) eight or ten thousand Foot; five or six thousand there might have been. He thereupon sent a Trumpet commanding them to retreat, according to what they had promised by the Proclamation. They asked whose Trumpet he was, he said my Lord Holland's; their answer was, he were best to be gone. And so my Lord Holland made his Retreat, and waited on His Majesty this night, to give him this account.

This morning Advertisement is brought His Majesty, that Lesley with 12,000 men is at Cockburnspath, that 5000 men will be this night or to morrow at Duncce, 6000 at Kelso; so His Majesty's opinion is, with many of his Council, to keep himself upon a Defensive, and make himself here as fast as he can: for His Majesty doth now clearly see, and is fully satisfied in his own Judgement, that what passed in the Gallery, betwixt His Majesty, your Lordship, and my Self, hath been but too much verified on this occasion. And therefore His Majesty would not have you to begin with them, but to settle things with you in a safe and good posture; and yourself to come hither in person, to consult what Counsels are fit to be taken, as the Affairs now hold. And so wishing your Lordship a speedy passage, I rest and faithful Friend,

Your Lordships most humble Servant,

H. VANE.

49. *Supplication by the People of Scotland to the King.**

TO THE KINGS MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTIE,
The Supplication of His Majesties Subjects of Scotland,
Humbly sheweth,

That where the former meanes used by us have not bene effectual for recovering your Majesties favour, and the peace of this your Majesties native Kingdome, we fall doune againe at your Majesties feete, most humbly supplicating that your Majestie tent to fight them, as I have heard from a person of great trust and honour; but only by the terrour of so great an army to draw the Scots to do him reason. And this I am the more apt to credit, because when a Noble and well experienced commander offered him (then being in camp near Berwick) that with two thousand horse, (which the King might very well have spared,) he would so waste and spoil the country, that the Scots should creep upon their bellies to implore his mercy,—he would by no means hearken to the proposition."

would be graceouslie pleased to appoynt some few of the many worthie men of your Majesties Kingdome of England, who are well affected to the true religion, and to our common peace, heareby some of us of the same disposition, our humble desires, and to make known to us your Majesties graceous pleasure; that, as by the providence of God we are joynd in one Island under one King, so, by your Majesties great wisdom and tender care, all mistakeing may be speedilie removed, and the two Kingdomes may be kept in peace and happinesse under your Majesties long and prosperous reigue; for which we shall never cease to pray, as becometh your Majesties most humble Subjects.

50. *The Answer sent from the King by Sir Edmond Verney.**

The Kings Majestie having read and considered the humble supplication presented unto him by the Earle of Dumfermling, hath commaunded me to returne this answer—That whereas his Majestie hath published a graceous Proclamation to all his subjects of Scotland, whereby he hath given them full assurance of the free enjoying both of Religion and Lawes of that Kingdome, and likewise a free pardon, upon their humble and dutifull obedience; which Proclamation hath been hitherto hindred to be published to most of his said subjects: Therefore, his Majestie requires, for the full information and satisfaction of them, that the said Proclamation be publictly read. That being done, his Majestie will be graceouslie pleased to heare any supplication of his subjects.

1639.—June 8.

51. Sir Edmond Verney, his Memento of the Answer from the Scotts Noblemen.†

His Majesties Proclamation which I desired, in his Majesties name, to be published, wes called for * Folio MS., f. 74-75.—The looseness of Burnet and others who treat of this pacification, and the lack of dates to several of the documents, referable to the period of the negotiations, is apt to create uncertainty and indistinctness as to the several steps and stages in its progress; and it is somewhat difficult to fix the precise days on which some of the notes, &c. were written and communicated. Minute exactness in this respect is perhaps now but of small importance, (though historical truth depends much on chronological accuracy;) but attention to the following particulars enables us, with considerable certainty, to assign to the several documents their proper place.

The repulse of the King's troops at Kelso took place on the 3d of June; and in the interval betwixt that day and the 7th, the Earl of Dunfermline was despatched from the Scotch to the King's camp, with renewed supplications for opening negotiations. On the 7th, Sir E. Verney brought a message from the King, requiring his proclamation to be published; and it was read at General Leslie's table on the 7th, when, accompanied by Dunfermline, Verney returned to the King's camp with a favourable report. On the 8th, the King agreed to negotiate, and wrote a letter to that effect. On the 10th, (Burnet says the 11th,) the first meeting took place, and three more afterwards—viz., on the 12th, 15th and 18th—at the last of which the King's Declaration was adjusted, and the articles of pacification agreed to.—Vide Baillie, vol. i. p. 179-183.

by the Noblemen and others conveyen to heare his Majesties graceous desire, and, with all due reverence, was read and heard; unto which these Answers were made:—

That they are most willing, in all humilitie, to receive his Majesties just commandment, as becometh loyall subjects: That the Estates being convenen for holding the Parliament called by his Majestie, had received, from the Magistrats of the towne of Edinburgh, a copie of this Proclamation, which his Majesties High Commissioner had commanded them to publish; and the said Estates, considering thereof seriouslie, did returne thir reasons to his Majesties Commissioner, why it could not be published, which they doe conceave were represented to your Majestie by your Commissioner, and thereunto they still adhere.

1. And one of the reasons which I did heare from them was, that this Proclamation did not come in the ordinary and legall way—by his Majesties Counsell—which both is the law, and hath been the perpetuall custome of this Kingdome, and was acknowledged by the whole Counsell, ever since the beginning of this Commotion. In the presenee of his Majesties Commissioner it was remembered also, that both his Majesties Counsell and Senatours of the Colledge of Justice, being divers tymes since conveyen, did testifie their dislyke thereof.

2. Another reason was, that they found it to be most prejudiciall to his Majesties honour, who is desirous to govern according to law.

3. A third was, that it was destructive of all their former proceedings, as traterous and rebellious, which, notwithstanding, they mentaine to be religious and loyall.

4. A fourth was, that whereas the meanest subject cannot be declaired a tratour by proclamation, nor his estate forfeit but after citation and conviction in Parliament, or the Supreme Justice-Court, yet herein the whole bodie of the Kingdome, without any citation or conviction, are declaired rebellious and tratours, and their estates dispond to their vassells and tennents.

A last was, that they were persuaded this did not flow from his Majesties royall disposition, but from men evill affected to the peace of the Kingdome; and that this was so farre from giving satisfaction to his Majesties subjects, that it so dissolved all the bonds of union betwixt his Majestie and his native Kingdome, that there could be no hope of accommodation of effaires thereafter in a peaceable way, which hath ever been their desire; and that they were confident that his Majestie would take in his royall consideration how illegall in maners, and prejudiciall in matters, this is, both to his Majesties honour, and the weill of his Kingdome, and especi-ally to the intendit pacification; and that his Majestie will be well pleased to send a graceous answer to their humble Supplication sent by my Lord Dumfermling.

1639.—June 8.

52. *The King's Answer.**

At the Kings Campe, the 8 of Junii 1639.

His Majestie having understood of the obedience of the Petitioners in reading his Proclamation as was commanded, is graceouslie [pleased] so farr to condescend to their Petition, as to admit some of them to repaire to his Majesties campe upon Munday next, at 8 a clock in the morning, at the Lord Gen-eralls tent, where they shall find six persones of honour and trust, appoynted by his Majestie, to heare their humble desires. JOHN COOK.

53. The Scotts Desire and Draught of a Safe Conduct.*

Whereas the Subjects of our Kingdome of Scotland, have humbly supplicated that we may be graceouslie pleased to appoynt some of this our kingdome to heare, by such as shall be sent from them, their humble desires, and to make knowne to them our grave pleasure; unto which Supplication we condescend so farre as to admitt some of them to repaire to our campe, upon Munday, at 8 of the clock in the morning; and, becaus they may apprehend danger in their comeing abroad, or returning, we doe offer them, upon the word of a Prince, that the persones sent from them shall be safe and free from all trouble and restraint, whereof these shall be a sufficient warrant.

We trust His Majestie will favourable construct this our humble requyreing of a safe conduct, since, when our confidence is in his graceous Majestie, we desire no further but assurance under his royall hand—albeit, by statuts of England which were before cited to my Lord Dalryell—all assurance and conducts are declared to be null, if they have not passed the Great Seale of England.

The Proclamations published throughout the parochie churches of England, and these later sent to be published in Scotland, declairing us His Majesties subjects to be Rebellis, and our proceedings to be treacherous, forfeiting our estates, and threatening to destroy us, lay a necessitie upon us who desire to cleare ourselves, to crave a safe conduct to His Majestie.

The former refusall of a safe conduct to His Majesties Councell and Session, when they craved libertie to goe up and informe His Majestie of the true estate of our bussinesse, and to ourselves, when we desired libertie to cleare our proceedings and intentions to His Majestie, shoves the greater necessitie of our craving the same for to give a full and free information of our affaires.

This refusing of a safe conduct being knowne to the Army, makes them more unwilling then before, that any should goe there.

Hereupon the former warrant of a safe conduct, subserved be John Cook, was also subserved be the King.

54. The Humble Desires of His Majesties Subjects of Scotland, at the first going of the Scotts Commissioners.†

1. First, It is our humble desire that His Majestie would be graceouslie pleased to assure us that the Acts of the late Assembly at Glasgow, indicted by His Majestie, shall be ratified in the ensuing Parliament, to be holden at Edinburgh the 23 of Julii, since the peace of the Kirk and Kingdome cannot indure farther prorogation.

2. That His Majestie, from his tender care of the preservation of our religion and lawes, will be graceouslie pleased to declare and assure that it is his royall will, that all matters Ecclesiasticall be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and matters civill by Parliament, which are for His Majesties honour, and keeping peace and order amongst the subjects in the tyme of His Majesties personall presence.

3. That a blessed pacification may be speedilie brought about, and His Majesties subjects may be secured, our humble desire is, that His Majesties schippes and forces by land may be recalled; that all persons goods and schippes arreasted, may be restored; the losses which we have sustained by the stoping of our trade and negotiating, be repaired, and we made safe from violence and invasion; and that all excommunicat persons, all incendiaries and misinformation against the kingdome, who hes, out of malice, caused these commotions for their owne privat ends, may be returned to suffer their deserved punishment, and the Proclamations sent abroad by them under His Majesties name, to the dishonouring of the Kiug and defameing of the kingdome, may be suppressed; as these are our humble desires, so it is our griefe that His Majestie should have been provoked to wrath against us His Majesties most humble and loyall subjects, and shall be our delight, upon his Majesties assurance, of the preservation of our religion and lawes, to give example to uthers of all civill and temporall obedience which be required or expected of loyall subjects.

That our desires are only the injoying of our religion and liberties, according to the ecclesiasticall and civile lawes of his Majesties kingdome, to cleare by sufficient grounds that the particulars which we humbly crave are such, and shall not insist to crave any pairt which is not so warranted, and that we humbly offer all civill and temporall obedience to his Majestie which can be required or expected by loyall subjects.

Reasons and grounds of our humble desires.

I. We did first desire a ratification of the late General Assembly in the insuing Parliament.

First, Becaus the civill power is keeper of both Tables; and, wherever the Kirk and Kingdome are ane bodie, consisting of the same members, there can be no firme peace nor stabilitie of order, except the ministers of the Kirk, in their way, presse obedience of the civill law, and magistrats and their civill power, and their sanction and auctoritie of the constitutions of this Kirk.

2. Secondlie, Becaus the late General Assemblie, indicted by his Majestie, was lawfullie constitut in all the members, according to the institution and orders preseryved by the Acts of former Assemblies.

3. Thirdlie, Becaus no particular is inacted in the late Assemblie which is not grounded upon the Acts of preceding Assemblies, and is either expressly contained in them, or, by necessarie consequent, may be deduced from them: That the Parliameut be kepted without prorogation, his Majestie knowes how necessar it is, since the peace of the Kirk and Kingdome call for it without longer delay.

II. We did secondlie desire that his Majestie would be pleased to declare and assure, that it is his royall will that all matters ecclesiasticall be determinied by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and matters civile by the Parliament, and other inferior judicatories established by law; becaus we know no other way of preservation of our religion and lawes, and becaus matters so different in nature ought to be treated respectie in their owne propper judicatories. It was also desired that Parliaments might be holden at sett tymes, as once in two or thrie years, by reason of his Majesties personall absence, which hindereth his subjects in their complaints and grievances to have immediat accesse to his Majesties presuce.

* Folio MS., f. 75.

† Folio MS., f. 75.

And whereas his Majestie requires us to limite our desires to the injoying of our religion and liberties, according to ecclesiasticall and civile lawes respective, that we never intend further then the injoying of our religion and liberties, and that all this tyme past it was far from our thoughts to diminish the auctoritie of our native King and dread Sovereigne, or to make any invasion upon the kingdome of England, which are the calumnies forged and spread against us by the malice of our adversaries, and for which we humbly desire that in his Majesties justice they may have their owne censure and punishment.

III. Thirdlie, we desired a blessed pacification, and did expresse the most readie and powerfull means which we could conceive for bringing the same speedilie to passe, leaving other meanes serving for that end to his Majesties royall consideration and grave wisdom.

Answer to the Queeres propounded by his Majestie.

The queeres propounded by his Majestie, are—
First, Whither his Majestie hath the power of the sole indiction of the Generall Assembly?

Secondlie, Whither his Majestie hath a negative voice in Assemblies?

Thirdlie, Whither the Assembly may sitt, after his Majestie, by his auctoritie, hes discharged them to sitt?

I. Unto all which we answer, First, That it is proper for the Generall Assembly, by itselfe, to determine questions of this kinde; and it is no lesse than usurpation in us, which might bring upon us the just censure of the Generall Assembly, to give out determination.

II. Secondlie, The answering of one of these three demands is the answering of all; for if the sole indiction of the Generall Assembly doe belong to his Majestie, there needs no question about the negative voice and dissolving of Assemblies. Next, if his Majestie hes a negative voice, there needeth no question concerning the indiction and discharging. Thirdlie, If his Majestie may discharge the Assembly, there needeth no question about the other two.

For our partes, we doe humbly acknowledge that the Kings Majestie hath power to indiet the Assemblies of the Church, and whensoever in his wisdom he thinketh convenient he may use his auctoritie in couveining Assemblies of all sorts, whether generall or particular. We doe acknowledge also that the solemn and publick indiction, by way of proclamation and compulsion, doth belong properlie to the Magistrat, and can neither be given to the Pope nor to any forrigne power, nor can it, without usurpation, be claimed by any of his Majesties subjects; but we will never thinke but that in case of urgent and extreme necessitie, the Church may, be her selfe, convene, continow, and give out her owne constitutions for the preservation of religion.

1. God hath given power to the Church to conveene; the love of God hath promised his assistance to them being conveened; and the Christian Churches hes, in all ages, used this as the ordinary and necessarie meanes for establishing of religion and pietie, and for removeing of the evils of heresie, scandalles, and uther things of that kind, which must be, and would bring the Church to be in miserie, if by this powerfull remeadie they will not be cured and prevented.

2. Secondlie, According to this divine right, the Church of Scotland hath kept her Generall Assemblies with a blessing from heaven; for whill our Assembly hath continowed in their strength, in the doctrine, in the worship and discipline, the unities and peace of the Church continowed in vigour, pietie and learning wer advanced, and profanenes and idlenes wer censured.

3. The Church of Scotland hath declaired, that all ecclesiasticall Assemblies hath power to conveene lawfullie for treating of things concerning the Church and pertaining to their charge, and to appoynt tymes and places for that effect.

4. The liberties of this Church for holding Assemblies is aeknowledged by Parliament, and ratified anno 1593 [1592] and that upon the ground of perpetuall reason.

5. Becaus there is no ground, either by Act of Assembly or Parliament, or any preceding practice, neither in the Christian Church of old, nor yet in our owne Church since the Reformation, whereby the Kings Majestie may dissolve the Generall Assembly, or assume unto himselfe a negative voice; but, upon the contrare, his Majesties prerogative hes [is] declared by Act of Parliament to be no wayes prejudiciall to the priviledges and liberties which God hath granted to the spirituall officbearers of his Church, which are most frequentlie ratified in Parliament, and especially in the last Parliament holden by his Majestie.

6. By this meanes, the whole frame of religion and Church Jurisdiction shall depend absolutelie upon the pleasure of the Prince; whereas his Majestie hath publickly declared, by publick proclamation in England, that the Jurisdiction of the Churchmen, in their meetings and Courts holden by them, doe not flow from his Majesties auctoritie, notwithstanding any Act of Parliaments which hath bene made to the contrare, but from themselves, in their owne power; and that they hold their courts and meeting in their owne name.

7. That whereas His Majestie, upon the 12 of June, received a paper of the schort generall grounds and limits of their humble desires, his Majestie was graceouslie pleased to make this answer, viz., that if their desires be only the enjoying of religion and liberties, according to the ecclesiasticall and civill lawes of his Majesties Kingdome of Scotland, his Majestie doth not onlie agrie to the same, but shall also protect them to the uttermost of his power; and if they shall not insist upon any thing but that which is warranted, his Majestie most willinglie and readilie [will] condescend thereto; so that, in the mean tyme, they pay unto him that civill and temporall obedience which can be justlie required and expected of Loyall Subjects.

1639.—June 18.

55. *Declaration by the King, and Terms of the Treaty.**

CHARLES R.

We having considered the Papers and humble Petitions presented to Us, by those of Our Subjects of Scotland who were admitted to attend Our Pleasure in the Camp, and after a full hearing by Our Self, of all that they could say or alledge thereupon, having commuicated the same to Our Council of both Kingdoms, upon mature Deliberation, with their unanimous Advice, have thought fit to give them this Just and Gracious Answer; That though We cannot condescend to ratifie and approve the Acts of the pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, for many grave and weighty Considerations which have happened, both before and since, much importing the Honour and Security of that true Monarchical Government lineally descended upon Us from so many of Our Ancestours; yet such is Our Gracious Pleasure, that, notwithstanding the many Disorders committed of late, We are pleased not only to confirm and make good whatsoever Our Commissioner hath granted and promised in Our Name; but also, We are further Graciously pleased to declare and assure, that, according to the Petitioners humble Desires, all matters Ecclesiastical shall be determined by the Assembly of the Kirk, and matters Civil by the Parliament, and other inferiour Judicatories established by Law; and Assemblies, accordingly, shall be kept once a year, or as shall be agreed upon at the next General Assembly.

And for settling the general Distractions of that Our Aucient Kingdom, Our Will and Pleasure is, that a Free General Assembly be kept at Edinburgh the sixth day of August next ensuing, where We intend (God willing) to be personally present, and for the Legal Indiction whereof, We have given Orders and Command to Our Council; and thereafter a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the twentieth day of August next ensuing, for ratifying of what shall be concluded in the said Assembly, and settling such other things as may conduce to the Peace and Good of Our Native Kingdom, and therein an Act of Oblivion to be passed.

And whereas We are further desired, that Our Ships and Forces by Land be recalled, and all Persons, Goods, and Ships be restored, and they made safe from Invasion, We are Graciously pleased to declare, That upon their disarming and disbanding of their Forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring unto Us all our Castles, Forts, and Ammunitions of all sorts, as likewise Our Royal Honours; and to every one of Our good Subjects their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained from them since the late pretended General Assembly, We will presently thereafter recall Our Fleet and retire Our Land-Forces, and cause Restitution to be made to all persons, of their Ships and Goods detained or arrested since the aforesaid time: whereby it may appear, that Our Intention in taking up of Arms was no ways for invading Our Own Native Kingdom, or to innovate the Religion and Laws, but mainly for the maintaining and vindicating of Our Royal Authority.

And since that hereby it doth clearly appear, that We neither have, nor do intend any Alteration in Religion and Laws, but that both shall be maintained by Us in their full Integrity, We expect the performance of that humble and dutiful Obedience, which becometh loyal and dutiful Subjects, and as in their several Petitions they have often professed.

And as We have Just Reason to believe, that to Our peaceable and well-affected Subjects this will be satisfactory; so We take God and the World to witness, that whatsoever Calamities shall ensue by Our necessitated suppressing of the Insolencies of such as shall continue in their Disobedient Courses, is not occasioned by Us, but by their own procurement.

[After this the following Articles were signed:]

I. The Forces of Scotland to be disbanded and dissolved within eight-and-fourty hours, after the Publication of His Majesties Declaration being agreed upon.

II. His Majesties Castles, Forts, Ammunition of all sorts, and Royal Honours, to be delivered after the Publication, so soon as His Majesty can send to receive them.

III. His Majesties Ships to depart presently after the delivery of the Castles, with the first fair Wind, and, in the mean time, no interruption of Trade or Fishing.

IV. His Majesty is Graciously pleased to cause to restore all Persous, Goods, and Ships, detained and arrested since the first of November last.

V. There shall be no Meetings, Treatings, Consultations, or Convocations of His Majesties Lieges, but such as are warrantable by Act of Parliament.

VI. All Fortifications to desist, and no further Work therein, and they to be remitted to His Majesties Pleasure.

VII. To restore to every one of His Majesties Subjects their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained from them, by whatsoever Means, since the aforesaid time.

[Next, the Commissioners signed the following Note: *]

In the Campe, 18 Junii 1639.

In obedience to His Majesties Royal Commaud, we shall, upon Thursday next, the 20th of this June, dismisse our Forces, and immediatlie thereafter deliver His Majesties Castles, and shall ever, in all things, carry ourselves like Humble, Loyal, and Obedient Subjects.

56. The Scottish Armies Declaration concerning the Acceptation of the Kings Majesties Answers.†

Least his Majesties Declaration, of the date Junii 18, concerning ane answer to our humble desire, presented by our Commissioners, should either be mistaken by our well-affected, or wilfullie misconstrued by the malicious, whereby his Majesties justice and goodnes may be concealed, or his Majesties good subjects may appear to have done or admitted any poynt contrare to our oath of Covenant; the Generall, Noblemen, Barrons, Burgesges, Ministers, and Officers conveyed before the dissolving of the Army, have thought it necessary to put in write what was related to them by their Commissioners from his Majestic—To witt, That, as his Majestic declared that he would not acknowledge nor approve of the late Generall Assembly holden at Glasgow, for which cause it is called in his Majesties Declaration “a pretendit Assembly;” so was it not his Majesties mynd that any of the Petitioners, by their acceptance of the said Declaration, should be thought to disapprove or parte from the samen, or condemne their owne proceedings as disorders and disobedient courses; and, therefore, as they doe intreat all his Majesties good subjects, with submisse and heartie thanksgiving, to acknowledge and confesse his Majesties favour, in indicting a free Assembly, to be kept the 6 of August, and Parliament 20, for ratifieing of what shall be concluded in the Assembly as the proper and most powerfull meanes to settle this Church and Kingdome: so would they have all his Majesties good subjects to know, that, by accepting the said Declaration and Articles of Pacification joyned therewith, they doe not, in any sort or degrie, disclaime or disallow the said Assemblie, but that they still stand obleidged to adhere thereto, and obey and mentaine the same; and for preventing and mistaking all misconstructions, let this be made knowne to all persons, and in all places where his Majesties declarations shall be published, which, as it is his Majesties oune mynd, expressed diverse tymes to our Commissioners, so are we assured that it will serve much for his Majesties honour, for the satisfaction of the godlie, and for the promoting of this blessed pacification for which all of us ought earnestlie to pray unto God, to remember also our late Oath and Coveuaut, and to walk worthis of it, and to beseech the Lord that, by the approaching Assembly and Parliament, religion and righteousness may be established in the land.

57. *Some Heads of His Majesties Treatie with his Subjects in Scotland before the English Nobilitie, and sett downe here for remembrance.**

1. For the preface and conclusion of his Majesties last Declaration, although it contained hard expression of the Subjects in Scotland, his Majestic declared that he had no such opinion of them, but requyred the paper to stand for his credit, and for ane point of honour with forraigne nations, and required they should not stand with him for words and expressions. So they obtained the matter.

2. For calling of the late Assembly "pretended"—seeing the Subjects of Scotland professed they would never passe from the said Assembly and deeries thereof, his Majestic declares he did not acknowledge that Assembly farder then as it had registrat his Declaration. So would he not desire the subjects to passe from the samen.

3. Anent the Constitution of the Assembly, it was shawen his Majestic that none could be Members of the Assembly but such as had a Commission, viz., 2 or 3 Ministers from each Presbetrie, with a Rewling Elder, ane from each Burgh, and his Majestic or his Commissioner. His Majestic concluded that his assessour had vote; and upon ane expression in his Majesties declaration, referred that to some reasons contained in former proclamations, which wer utterlie against the lawfulness of Ruleing Elders, was desired, according to the custome of this Kirk, all controversies arising should be remitted to the Assembly itselfe. His Majestic had some expressions craving these to be remitted to himselfe; but seeing that it was against the Constitution of the Kirk to have any other judge but the voters in the Assembly, where his Majestic or his Commissioner was present, and gave the first vote, "Free Assemblie," in his Majesties Declaration, did import the freedome in judging all questions arising there anent Constitutions, Members, or matters.

4. Anent the restitution of the Castles; as the subjects did it freelie, so did they expresse that which might eoucerne the safetie of the countrie. They referred that to the tyme of the Parliament, at which tyme they would signifie their desires by petition to his Majestic; as also, they told it had cost much charges in fortifieing and keeping thereof—the representation whereof to his Majestic they referred to that tyme.

5. Concerning the restitution of persons, houses, goods, &c., required by his Majesty, it was promised, provyding that the great soumes of money contracted for the publick were payed in ane equall way by all, which behoved to be done either by Commission from his Majestic or from the Parliament; and when it was objected that much good was spent that was taken, the King answered, that as for goods or ammunition that was already spent, they could not be restored, but these that are extant must be.

6. His Majestic not allowing of the late Assemblie, for the reasons contained in his severall proclamations, being excepted against as presupposing and importing a declaration of His Majesties Judgment against ruling elders, which prejudged the right constitution of a free Assembly; His Majestic, after a full hearing, deleited that clause.

7. That parte of his Majesties declaration, which beares that no [other] oath be exacted of entrants than that which is contained in the Acts of Parliament, as also that clause bearing that the present Bischops, &c., shall be sensurable by a Generall Assembly—being excepted against as presupposing and importing the contiouwance of Episcopacie, which we could not acknowledge, as being incompatible with the Confession of Faith and Constitutions of the Church;—his Majesty was pleased to deleite both these clauses.

And being, with all constancie and humilitie, pressed upon Saturday, Junii 15, that his Majestic would satisfie that maine desyre of his subjects, by declaring that his Majestic would quyte Episcopacie, he did answer that it was not sought in our desires: and when it was replied that our first desires to have the Acts of the Generall Assembly ratified, [it] imported the same, his Majestic acknowledged it to be so, and averred that he did not refuse it, but would advise till Munday the 17, at which tyme his Majestic being pressed to give some specification of quyteing Episcopacie,—and it being plainly showed that, if his Majesty should labour to mentaine Episcopacie, it would breid a miserable shisme in this Church, and make such a rupture and divisione in this Kingdome as would prove incurable; and if his Majestic would let the Kirk and Countrie be freed of them, his Majestic would receive as heartie and duetifull obedience as ever Priuce receaved of a people;—his Majestic answered, he would not preliuite and forstall his voice; but he had appoynted a free Assemblie, which might judge of ecclesiasticall matters, the constitutions whereof he should ratifie in the ensuing Parliament.

59. *A Protestation at the Mercat Croce of Edinburgh, 1 of Julii 1639.**

We Noblemen, Barons, Burrowes, Ministers, his Majesties most humble ductifull Subjects, who hes beene his Majesties Supplieants this tyme past, doe, in all humilitie acknowledge, and with most heartie affection reeeave, that his Majesties most gracieous and royall favour in calling againe a free Assembly and Parliament for the finall settling of this Kirk and Kingdome in a firme Peace, so happily begune, which we earnestlie desire that may be perfyted; desireing also, as becometh his Majesties good Subjects, to joyne in our most earnest endeavours with his Sacred Majestic for the preservation of the liberties and Constitutions of the Kirk in this his Majesties Kingdome, against the Usurpatione who have proven enemies to religion, to his Majesties honour, and which may import the violation of the oath of God which tyeth us to maintaine the lawfull Assembly holden at Glasgow, wherein it was found, by the Constitutions of this Kirk, that the offic of Bishops and Archbishops [who] are now cited to assist (by his Majesties indiction) the esuing Assemblie; and the Government of the Kirk by them, is abjured and ought to be removed out of this Kirk, and by the publict auctoritie thereof, they themselves is, for their high usurpations, their novations in the worship of God, and uther haynous crymes, joyned with their obstinacie in stopping their eares against the voice of the Kirk, and declyning hir auctoritie, were most solemnlie excommunicat therefor. Least this forme of indiction should interfere against us, the smallest acknowledgement of that pretendit office or government, or any right in the persones to sitt or voice in the Assemblies of the

Kirk or derogation to the Sentence of the Kirk, pronounced against them, or to the former protestations made by us; or least it should import the least prejudice to the said full, lawfull, and frie Generall Assembly, which his Majestic, by his Royall word, and holden by us most sure and inviolable, did openly declair to our Commissioners that he would not bidd us disapprove, or pass fra; and was gracieuslie pleased, at their humble desires, to cause delait such clauscs of his Majesties Declaration as might inferre the acknowledgement of Bishops to their Government: WE, therefore, in our own names, and in name of all who adheres to the Covenant and Generall Assembly, DECLAIR, before God and Man, and PROTEST—

1. That we adhere, and stand oblidged by our former oathes and protestations, to mentaine the late Generall Assembly holden at Glasgow, being undoubtedtie and most lawfull and free Generall Assemblie; and that all Acts, Sentences, Constitutions, Censures and Proceedings of a full and free Generall Assembly of this Kirk of Scotland, and so have already [had] execution under the ecclesiasticall paines therein mentioned, and conforme thereto in all poynts; and in speciall these sentences of deprivation and excommunication of the some tyme pretended Bishops and Archbishops of this Kingdome.

2. We PROTEST that we doe still continuwallie adhere to our Solemne Covenant with God, according to the Declaration of the Assembly, whereby the office of Bishops and Archbishops is declaired to have beene abjured.

3. We PROTEST that these pretended Bishops and Archbishops who yet usurpes that title and office, abjured by this kirk, are contemners of the sentences of this Kirk, and hes beine malicious incendiaries of his Majestic against this kingdome by their wicked calumies, that if they returne to this kingdome, they be esteemed and used, accursed and delivered over to the Divell, and cutt off from Christs bodie as ethinicks and publicans; and that this present citation import no acknowledgement of them as Members of the Assembly, nor any wayes prejudice the lawfull Acts of the said free Generall Assembly.

4. We PROTEST that all misinformations of the Kings Majestic against his good subjects, and all givers of counsell against the will of the realme, be accuseable and censurable at the next Parliament, according to our former protestations, according to the Act of Parliament King James 4, there mentioned; and that all the subjects of this Kingdome, entertainers and mentainers of excommunicat persons, be orderlie proceeded against with excommunication, conforme to the Acts and Constitutions of this Kirk.

And seeing the Session is now appoynted to sitt doune which tendeth to the prejudie of his Majesties good subjects, and who hath beene so latelie busied in the preparations for the defence of the religion and countrie, that they are now necessarlie reteired to their owne dwellings for settleing their privat affaires, that they cannot be tymouslie advertised to attend any lawfull bussines without greater prejudice than benefite, and that the most parte of the leidges have so secured their evidents that the same cannot be in readines in so short tyme of Session; Therefore, and in respect the downe sitting of the Session cannot be utherwayes legallic intimat to them but upon 40 dayes, whereof there are but 20 dayes to run of the appoynted tyme of this meeting, We protest that all the Members of the Colledge of Justice and all his Majesties Leidges are in bona fide not to attend this Session; but that all Acts, * Folio, MS., f. 79.

Sentences, Decrets, and Interloquitours to be given and pronounced against them, (if any shall be), are in the selfe null and ineffectuall, sicklyke as the same had not bene given nor pronounced; and protests for remeade of law against the same and everie ane of them.

Lastlie, we PROTEST that we may have libertie to amplifie and enlarge this our Protestation, and reasons thereof; whereupon the Earle of Dalhousie in name of the Noblemen, Sir W<sup>m</sup> Ross in name of the Burrows, Mr Andrew Ramsay in name of the Ministers, took Instruments in the hands of the Notars present in the Croce of Edinburgh.

60. *Advice by Hamilton to the King.**

To leave all that is past, the Question is briefly; Whether the Assembly and Parliament now indicted is fittest to be held or discharged?

If held, the Success of the Assembly will be the Ratifying of what was done at Glasgow; or if that point be gained, yet certainly most of the Acts that were made there will of new [be] enacted: nor is there any hope to prevent their finding Episcopacy to be abjured by their Covenant, and the Function against the Constitution of their Church.

This will be by the Members of Parliament ratified, and pnt to the Kings Negative Voice, and if it be not condescended to by him, it is more than probable, that his Power even in that Court, and in that Place, will be questioned.

If it be discharged, nevertheless the Assembly will be kept by the Rebels, and the same things done in it by them, and thereafter maintained by the generality of the Kingdom: this consequently will bring alongst with it the certain loss of Civil Authority, and so necessitate the re-establishing the same by Force, or otherwise the desertion of that Kingdom.

So it is to be resolved on, whether it be fit to give way to the Madness of the People, or of new to intend a Kingly Way?

If way be given to what is mentioned, it is to be considered in that case, if the King shall be personally present or not; if not present, who shall be employed, and how instructed?

If the Kingly Way be taken, what shall be the means to effectuate the intended end; particularly how Money may be levied for the waging of this War, and if that be feisible without a Parliament?

If a Parliament, what the Consequence may prove? So all may be summed up in this; Whether to permit the Abolishing of Episcopacy, the lessening of Kingly Power in Ecclesiastick Affairs, the Establishing Civil Authority in such manner as the Iniquity of the Times will suffer, and to expect better; and what will be the Consequence of this if way be given thereto: or to call a Parliament in England, and leave the event thereof to hazard and their discretions, and in the interim Scotland to the government of the Covenanters?

These are, therefore, to assure you, and, if need be, hereafter to testify to others, that whatsoever you shall say to them to discover their intentions in these particulars, you shall never be called in question for the same, nor yet it prove anyways prejudicial to you; nay, though you should be accused by any thereupon.

62. *Instructions by the King to Traquair as Commissioner.**

CHARLES R.

At the first Meeting of the Assembly, before it be brought in dispute who shall preside, you shall appoint him who was Moderator in the last Assembly, to preside in this till a new Moderator be chosen.

We allow that Lay-elders shall be admitted Members of this Assembly; but in case of the Election of Commissioners for Presbyteries the Lay-elders have had Voice, you shall declare against the informality thereof, as also against Lay-elders having voice in Fundamental Points of Religion.

At the first opening of the Assembly, you shall strive to make the Assembly sensible of Our Goodness, that, notwithstanding all that is past, whereby We might justly have been moved not to hearken to their Pctitions, yet We have been Gracionsly pleased to grant a Free General Assembly, and for great and weightic Considerations have commanded the Archbishops and Bishops not to appear at this Assembly.

You shall not make use of the Assessors in publick, except you find you shall be able to carry their having Vote in Assembly.

You shall labour to your uttermost that there be no question made about the last Assembly; and, in case it come to the worst, whatever shall be done in Ratification, or with relation to the former Assembly, Our Will is, that you declare the same to be done as an Act of this Assembly, and that you consent thereunto onely upon these terms, and no ways as having any relation to the former Assembly.

You shall by all means shun the Dispute about Our Power in Assemblies; and if it shall be urged mentioned, though in an inaccurate way, this extraordinary warrant, it is thought not improper to publish it exactly from the original."—Burnet's statement thus referred to is to the following effect (p. 148:)—"But, before they came to Berwick, the King ordered the Marquis, by a warrant in writing, yet extant under His Majesties hand, to try what way he could gain upon them, and discover the bottom of their intentions, how the estate of Bishops should be supplied in Parliament, and how far they intended to lessen the King's Authority. The King also allowed him to use what means he pleased, and speak to them what he thought fit; not onely authorizing, but requiring him to it, and warranting him, if he were ever questioned or accused for it by any. Bearing date at Berwick the 17th of July 1639."

or offered to be disputed whether We have the Negative Voice or the sole power of Indicting, and consequently of Dissolving, except you see clearly that you can carry the same in Our Favours, stop the Dispute; and rather than it be decided against Us, stop the course of the Assembly until We be advertised.

For the better facilitating of Our other Services, and the more peaceable and plausible progress in all Businesses recommended to you, We allow you at any time you shall find most convenient, after the opening of the Assembly, to declare, That, notwithstanding Our Own Inclination, or any other Considerations, We are contented, for Our People's full satisfaction, to remit Episcopacy and the Estate of Bishops to the Freedom of the Assembly, but so as no respect be had to the Determination of the Point in the last Assembly.

But in giving way to the abolishing of Episcopacy, be careful that it be done without the appearing of any Warrant from the Bishops; and if any offer to appear for them, you are to inquire for their Warrant, and carry the Dispute so, as the Conclusion seem not to be made in prejudice of Episcopacy as unlawful, but onely in satisfaction to the People, for settling the present Disorders, and such other Reasons of State; but herein you must be careful that Our Intentions appear not to any.

You shall labour that Ministers deposed by the last Assembly, or Commissions flowing from them, for no other cause but the subscribing of the Petition or Declinator against the last Assembly, be, upon their Submission to the Determinations of this Assembly, reponed in their own Places; and such other Ministers as are deposed for no other faults, that they be tried of new; and if that cannot be, strive that Commissions may be directed from this Assembly for Trying and Censuring them according to the nature of their Process.

That immediately upon the Conclusion of this Assembly, you indiet another at some convenient time, as near the expiring of the Year as you can; and if you find that Aberdeen be not a Place agreeable, let Glasgow be the Place, and if that cannot give content, let it be elsewhere.

The General Assembly is not to meddle with any thing that is Civil, or which formerly hath been established by Act of Parliament, but upon His Majesties special Command or Warrant.

We will not allow of any Commissioners from the Assembly, nor no such Act as may give ground for the continuing of the Tables or Conventicles.

In case Episcopacy be abolished at this Assembly, you are to labour that We may have the power of chusing of so many Ministers as may represent the 14 Bishops in Parliament; or if that cannot be, that 14 others, whom we shall present, be agreed to, with a Power to chuse the Lords of the Articles for the Nobility for this time, untill the Business be further considered upon.

We allow that Episcopacy be abolished, for the Reasons contained in the Articles, and the Covenant 1580, for satisfaction of Our People, be subscribed, provided it be so conceived that thereby Our Subjects be not forced to abjure Episcopacy as a point of Popery, or contrary to God's Law or the Protestant Religion; but if they require it to be abjured as contrary to the Constitution of the Kirk of Scotland, you are to give way to it rather than to make a Breach.

After all Assembly-business is ended, immediately before Prayers you shall, in the fairest way you can, protest that, in respect of His Majesties Resolution of not coming in Person, and that His Instructions to you were upon short advertisement, whereupon many things may have occurred wherein you have not had His Majesties Pleasure, therefore and for such other Reasons as occasion may furnish, you are to protest that, in case any thing hath escaped you, or hath been condescended upon in this present Assembly, prejudicial to His Majesties Service, that His Majesty may be heard for redress thereof in his own time and place.

We will not allow that, either by the Commissions already granted, nor upon no other Bill or Petition, any part of the burden of the Charges of the last Business be laid upon any of Our good Subjects, who have stood by Us, and have refused to subscribe their Bonds and Covenants.

That you stop the Signatures of the Rights of Kintyre, Abbaey of Dear, Abbaey of Scoon, and generally all Aets in favours of Covenanters, so far as you can, without stopping the ordinary course of Justice; and you are to consider withall how His Majesties Right to any of the aforesaid may be put on foot without making interruption to the present Business in hand.

You shall take a course whereby the Rents of all such Bishopricks as are vacant be detained, and either by Warrant of the Incumbent, or by Demission may be collected; and when any person shall be provided to these Benefices so vacant, Our Will is, that you take the same course with the Rents of these, as by these We do command you to doe with the rest of the Rents of the Bishopricks of Scotland, which is this, to cause draw up a formal Assignation to the whole Rents, Fruits, Customs, &c., belonging to the Bishopricks, whereof they are Bishop, to be subscribed by them to and in Our Favour; upon return whereof to you, you shall give Power and Commission to such Persons as you shall receive, under every one of their Hands, to collect and intromet with the aforesaid Rents of the several Bishopricks, and to deliver and be accountable to you for the same; and, upon your receipt thereof, you are to issue them out immediately again to the aforesaid Bishops, or any having their Warrant to that effect.

You shall hear the Complaints or Petitions of any of Our Subjects, or against any of Our Subjects, but such as you know to be Sufferers for refusing to joyn with the Covenanters in the Covenanting way; and you shall protect all such Persons by all the fair ways you can, and particularly Sir John Hay and Sir Robert Spottiswood.

If any thing occur either in Civil or Ecclesiastical Judicatory, wherein you have not Our express Will and Pleasure signified unto you, wherein you see clearly Our Royal and Princely Power and Authority prejudiced, We will you to acquaint Us therewith before any Proceeding be made.

You shall pay weekly for defence of Our Castle of Edinburgh an hundred Souldiers at eight pence per diem, besides the English Gunners and Artificers, at the Rates set down by the Marquis of Hamilton. And as for Ruthwen himself, you shall assign him the Rents of the Castle; and you shall likewise keep a competent number of Workmen for completing the Fortifications already begun, and shall withall provide the Castle with 6 moneths Victuals for the foresaid number of Souldiers and other Officers.

And as for Dumbrton, you shall pay for the Defence thereof Souldiers at eight pence per diem, to the number of 40; allowing the Rents and other Customs thereof for paying the Captain and other Officers.

At Berwick, the 27th of July 1639.

63. *Letter from the King to the Archbishop of St Andrews.**

CHARLES R.

Right Trusty and Well-beloved Councillour, and Reverend Father in God, We greet you well.

Your Letter, and the rest of the Bishops, (sent by the Elect of Caithnes) to my Lord of Caunterbury, hath been shown by him to Us; and after serious Consideration of the Contents thereof, We have thought fit Our Self to return this Answer to you, for Direction according to Our Promise, which you are to communicate to the rest of your Brethren.

We do in part approve of what you have advised concerning the Prorogating of the Assembly and Parliament, and must acknowledge it to be grounded upon Reason enough, were Reason only to be thought on in this Business; but considering the present state of Our Affairs, and what We have promised in the Articles of Pacification, We may not (as We conceive) without great prejudice to Our Self and Service, condescend thereunto; wherefore We are resolved, nay, rather necessitated, to hold the Assembly and Parliament at the time and place appointed. And, for that end, We have nominated the Earl of Traquair Our Commissioner, to whom We have given Instructions, not only how to carry himself at the same, but a Charge also to have a special care of your Lordships, and those of the inferiour Clergy, who have suffered for their Duty to God and Obedience to Our Commauds. And We doe hereby assure you, that it shall be still one of Our chiefest Studies, how to rectifie and establish the Government of that Church aright, and to repair your losses, which We desire you to be most confident of.

As for your Meeting to treat of the Affairs of the Church, We do not see at this time how that can be done; for within Our Kingdom of Scotland, We cannot promise you any place of Safety, and in any other of Our Dominions We cannot hold it convenient, all things considered: wherefore We conceive that the best way will be for your Lordships to give in, by way of Protestation or Remonstrance, your Exceptions against this Assembly and Parliament to Our Commissioner, which may be sent by any mean man, so he be Trusty, and deliver it at his entering into the Church; but We would not have it to be either read or argued in this Meeting, where nothing but Partiality is to be expected, but to be represented to Us by him, which We promise to take so in consideration, as becometh a Prince sensible of His Own Interest and Honour, joined with the equity of your Desires; and you may rest secure, that, though perhaps We may give way for the present to that which will be prejudicial both to the Church and Our Own Government, yet We shall not leave thinking, in time, how to remedy both.

We must likewise intimate unto you, that We are so far from conceiving it expedient for you, or any of my Lords of the Clergy, to be present at this Meeting, as We doe absolutely discharge your going thither, and, for your absence, this shall be to you and every one of you a sufficient Warrant. In the interim, your best Course will be to remain in Our Kingdom of England, till such time as you receive Our further Order, where We shall provide for your Subsistence, though not in that measure as We could wish, yet in such a way as you shall not be in want.

Thus you have Our Pleasure briefly signified unto you, which We doubt not but you will take in good part; you cannot but know, that what We doe in this We are necessitated to. So We bid you farewell.

64. *Declinator by the Scotch Prelates, in obedience to the King's Letter.**

Whereas His Majesty, out of His surpassing Goodness, was pleased to indict another National Assembly for rectifying the present Disorders in the Church, and repealing the Acts concluded in the late pretended Assembly at Glasgow, against all right and reason, charging and commanding us the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Scotland, and others that have place therein, to meet at Edinburgh the 12th of August iustant, in hopes that, by a peaceable Treaty and Conference, matters should have been brought to a wished Peace and Unity; and that now we perceive all these Hopes disappointed, the Authors of the present Schism and Division proceeding in their wonted courses of Wrong and Violence, as hath appeared in their presumptuous Protestation against the said Indiction, and in the bussiness they have made throughout the Country for electing Ministers and Laicks of their Faction to make up the said Assembly; whereby it is evident that the same or worse effects must needs ensue upon the present Meeting, than were seen to follow the former.

We, therefore, the Under-subscribers, for discharge of our Duties to God and to the Church, committed to our Government, under our Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesty, Protest, as in our former Declinatour, as well for our Selves as in name of the Church of Scotland, and so many as shall adhere to this our Protestation, That the present pretended Assembly be holden and reputed null in Law, as consisting and made up partly of Laical persons that have no Office in the Church of God, partly of refractory, schismatical, and perjured Ministers, that, contrary to their Oaths and Subscriptions, from which no Humane power could absolve them, have filthily resiled, and so made themselves to the present and future Ages most infamous; and that no Churchman be bound to appear before them, nor any Citation, Admonition, Certification, or Act whatsoever, proceeding from the said pretended Meeting, be prejudicial to the Jurisdiction, Liberties, Priviledges, Rents, Possessions, and Benefices belonging to the Church, nor to any Acts of former General Assemblies, Acts of Council, or Parliament made in favours thereof; but to the contrary, That all such Acts and Deeds, and every one of them, are and shall be reputed unjust, partial, and illegal, with all that may follow thereupon. And this our Protestation we humbly desire may be presented to His Majesty, whom we do humbly supplicate, according to the Practice of Christian Emperours in Ancient times, to convene the Clergy of His whole Domiuions, for remedying the present Schism and Division, unto whose Judgement and Determination we promise to submit our Selves, and all our Proceedings.

65. Letter from the King to Traquair.

CHARLES R.

Right Trusty,

We have hitherto commanded Hamilton to answer several of your Letters; but that of the 16th of August being of more weight than any of your former, We have thought fit to answer it Our Self.

And whereas you say, that nothing will satisfie them, except in terminis the last Assembly be named and ratified, or that way be given to the discharging Episcopacy as abjured in that Church, as contrary to the Confession of Faith 1580, and the Constitutions of the same, you being yet in some hope, that the word Abjured may be got changed, and that in drawing up the words of the Act it be onely condemned, as contrary to the Constitution of that Church; We in this point leave you to your Instructions, they being full, if you consider what We have said concerning Episcopacy, and subscribing the Confession of Faith 1580: We thinking it fit to declare hereupon unto you, that let their Madness be what it will, further than We have declared in Our Instructions in these points, We will not go.

For the Service-book and Book of the Canons, though We have been and are content it be discharged; yet We will never give Our Voice nor Assent, that they be condemned as containing divers Heads of Popery and Superstition. In like manner, though We have been and are content, that the High Commission be discharged; yet We will never acknowledge that it is without Law, or destructive to the Civil and Ecclesiastical Judicatories of that Our Kingdom, nor that the Five Articles of Perth, though discharged with Our Approbation, be condemned as contrary to the foresaid Confession. As concerning the late Assemblies, We cannot give Our Consent to have them declared null, since they were so notoriously Our Father (of Happy Memory) His Acts: It seeming strange, that We having condescended to the taking away all these things that they complained of, which were done in those Assemblies, they will not be content therewith, without laying an Apersion on Our Fathers Actions. Wherefore if the Assembly will in despite of your Endeavours conclude contrary to this, you are to protest against their Proceedings in these points, and be sure not to ratifie them in Parliament.

Concerning the yearly indicting of General Assemblies, and the Confession of Faith, We commanded Hamilton in his of the 16th to answer that point to this effect: That We think it infinitely to Our Prejudice, that We should consent to tie Our Self for the keeping yearly of their Assemblies, not needing to repeat the Reasons, they being well enough known to you; seeing at Berwick it was conceived upon debate of that Point, that your having Power to indict a New one within the Year, would save that dispute, which you are by all means to eschew. But if this will not give satisfaction, you are by no means to give your assent to any such Act, nor to ratifie the same in Parliament.

The Article in your Instructions, which is onely,

That the Covenant 1580 shall be subscribed, you must have an especial care of, and how you proceed therein: That the Bond be the same which was in Our Fathers time, mutatis mutandis; and that you give your Assent no other ways to the Interpretations thereof then may stand with Our future Intentions, well-known to you: nor is the same otherways to be ratified in Parliament.

Thus you have Our Pleasure fully signified in every particular of your Letter, which you will find no ways contrary to Our Resolution taken at Berwick, and Our Instructions given to you there. But if the Madness of Our Subjects be such, that they will not rest satisfied with what We have given you Power and Authority to condescend to, which notwithstanding all their Insolencies We shall allow you to make good to them, We take God to witness, that what Misery soever shall fall to that Country hereafter, it is no fault of Ours, but their own procurement. And hereupon We do command you, that if you cannot compose this Business according to Our Instructions, and what We have now written, that you prorogue the Parliament till the next Spring; and that you think upon some course how you may make publickly known to all Our Subjects, what We had given you Power to condescend to. And because it is not improbable that this way may produce a present Rupture, you are to warn and assist Ruthven for the defence of the Castle of Edinburgh, and to take in general the like care of all Our Houses and Forts in that Kingdom; and likewise to advertise all such who are affected to Our Service, that timously they may secure themselves. And so We bid you heartily farewell.

66. *Declarations by Traquair as Commissioner.**

At a Sederunt of the Privy Council, on 10th August 1639, a Letter from the King (dated 6th) was produced and recorded, intimating the appointment of Traquair as Commissioner to the Assembly and Parliament, in which his Majesty required their Lordships "not onlie to attend at the said Assemblies and Parliament, but to concurre and assist our said Commissioner in ewerie thing may concerne our service, as he sall requyre yow, or communicat with yow frome time to time;" and they, "in all humble obedience, promist to attend at the said Assemblies and Parliament, and to concurre with the said Lord Commissioners Grace in ewerie thing conforme to his Majesties said Letter." On the 12th of August, his Lordship appeared at another Sederunt of Council, and produced his commission. And, on the 30th of that month, at another sederunt, the Earl of Rothes, and others, as commissioners, appeared in the Council, and gave in a petition and declaration relative to the subscription of the Confession and Covenant, and bearing that the Council would interpone its authority, which was done accordingly. Immediately after, of the same date, there is the following Minute, which we transcribe from the register as important, inasmuch as there is a marginal note adjoined to it in the following terms:—"Decimo tertio Augusti, 1641. Delatt at Command, and in presence of the Estaittis of Parliament." These minutes are essential to the full understanding of the position in which all parties stood at the close of this Assembly, previously to the meeting of Parliament, after various prorogations, in the autumn of 1639.

And sicklyke the forsaid day, the Lord Commissioner desyred of the Lords of Privie Counsell, that the severall declarations made and emitted be him, in the Generall Assemblie, might be insert and registrat in the Books of Privie Counsell, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam; quhilk desyre the saidis Lordis fand reasonable, and have ordaint and ordainis the saids declarations to be insert and registrat in the Books of Privie Couosell, quherof the tenor followis :—

I, Johne Earle of Traquaire, His Majesties Commissioner in this present Assemblie, Doe, in his Majesties name, Declare, That notwithstanding of his Majesties owne inclination, and manie other grave and weightie reasons moveing him, zit suche is his incomparable goodnes towards his subjectis of this Kingdome, that for giveing satisfaction to his people, and for queting of the present distractions, He doth consent that the Five Articles of Perth, the Government of the Kirk by Bishops, Civill Places and power of Kirkmen, be declared unlawfull withiu this Kirk, as contrare to the constitutions thereof.

And I doe alwayes hereby declare, that the practice of the premiss, prohibit within this Kirk and Kingdome, sall neither bind nor inferre censure agains the practisers outwith the Kingdome. And farder, declare that the word occasional, in the end of the Act of the date the 17th of this iustant, wes not in the draught agreed upon with me in presence of the Counsell, but was thereafter addit in the Assemblie, without my knowledge or consent. Farther, I declare, whatever is allowed be me in this Assemblie, is ueirlic and onelic as ane Act of this Assemblie, without anie respect or relation to the last pretendit Assemblie at Glasgow.

And because that manie things have occurred in the present Assemblie which may concerne Patronages belonging either to the Crowne, Bishopricks, or others his Majesties good subjects, as also by finding Civill Places and power of Kirkmen unlawfull, his Majestie may be prejudgit in Parliament, and least heirby or by anie otheract, civill power and auctoritie may be wronged by my weaknes, or not tymelic animadverting thereto, I declare and protest that his Majestie may be hard for redresse in its owne tyme and place.

And I declare lykewayes, that whatever Commission and Commissions are direct frome the Assemblie, whiche may import or occasion anie other meetings or conventions of the subjects then the ordinarie meetings of Kirk Sessions, Presbyteries, Synods, and suche as are allowed be the Lawis of this Kingdome, that the same is null and of no effect, and altogether disassented to by me.

67. *Letter from the King to Traquair.**

CHARLES R.

Right Trusty, &c.

Your Letter of September the 27th to Hamilton We have seen, and think fit to return Answer thereunto Our Self; and the rather because We find by yours, that some Points in the former Letter were not so fully expressed, but that you desire more clear Answers. First you say, that in all your Directions it is condescended, that by Act of Assembly Episcopacy should be declared unlawful in this Kirk; and that by all the Capitulations of Agreement, and Instructions given to you, that same is allowed to be ratified in Parliament upon the foresaid terms agreed upon in the Assembly. In this Point We must tell you, that you are much mistaken: for though you have Power for giving way to the Abolition of Episcopacy, as contrary to the Coustitutions of the Church of Scotland; yet you will not find either in your Instructions, or any other Direction since sent you, that We have consented to declare the same Unlawful: We making a great difference therein, for many things may be contrary to the Constitutions of a Church, which of themselves are not simply unlawful; for whatsoever is absolutely unlawful in one Church, cannot be lawful in the other of the same Profession of Religion, but there may be many several Constitutions, and yet they all lawful. Therefore if I do acknowledge or consent, That Episcopacy is unlawful in the Church of Scotland, though as you have set it down in your consenting to the Act, the word Unlawful may seem onely to have a relation to the Constitutions of that Kirk; yet the Construction thereof doth run so doubtfully, that it may be probably inferred, That the same Function is acknowledged by Us to be unlawful in any other Churches in Our Dominions. Therefore as we totally disapprove of your consenting to the word Unlawful, as well to the Function, as Civil Places and Power of Churchmen, in the Act of the General Assembly: so We absolutely command you not to ratifie the same in these terms in the Parliament, but onely as contrary to the Constitutions of that Kirk; and to declare, that We ratifie this Act meerly for the Peace of the Land, though otherwise in Our Own Judgment We neither hold it convenient nor fitting; which you are to declare at the Ratifying of the same. And for the rest of your Declaration in the Assembly, to be registered in the Books of Council, for brevities sake We send you herewith a Copy of the same, as likewise that of the Covenant, interlined in those places which We disapprove of, and conceive to be the contrary to your Instructions, and some other Directions.

As We have formerly written to you, We cannot consent to the rescinding any Acts of Parliament made in favour of Episcopacy; nor do We conceive that Our refusal to abolish those Acts is contradictory to what We have consented to, or to that we was obliged to: there is less danger in discovering any future Intentions of Ours, or at the best letting them guess at the same, than if We should permit the rescinding those Acts of Parliament, which Our Father with so much expence of Time and Industry established, and which may hereafter be of so great use to Us. And though it should perhaps cast all loose, (as you express;) yet We take God to witness, We have permitted them to doe many things in this Assembly, for establishing of Peace, contrary to Our Own Judgment. And if on this point a Rupture happen, We cannot help it; the fault is ou their own part, which one day they may smart for. So you have in this Point Our full Resolution.

We likewise wrote formerly to you, that We thought it not fit at this time, that the Power of the Lords of the Articles should be defined, and that you are to avoid the same, and to be sure not to consent thereunto. Now your last Letter gives Us ground to repeat the same again, and to declare to you, that We remain in Our former Opinion.

And whereas you say, that it is to no purpose to vex Us with all the indiscreet and mad Propositions that are made, since they go about not onely to reform all pretended Abuses, of what nature soever, but to constitute and define the Power of all Judicatories from the highest to the lowest, and that you are like to agree in few or none of the General Acts: If you find, that what We have commanded you to doe is likely to cause a Rupture, their impertinent Motions give you a fair occasion to make it appear to the World, that We have condescended to all matters which can be pretended to concern Conscience and Religion; and that now they aim at nothing but the Overthrow of Royal Authority, contrary to all their Professions, which We can neither with Honour nor Safety suffer. And therefore We hope and expect, that if a Rupture happen, you will make this appear to be the cause thereof, and not Religion, which you know not onely to be true, but must see it will be of great advantage to Us, and therefore must be seriously intended by you.

We have no Directions of new to give you, concerning the Marquis of Huntley, Sir Donald Mackdonald, or any others to whom Malice is carried for their Zeal for Our Service, but again recommend them to your care.

What hath past betwixt your self and the Earl of Argyle, We have heard nothing of; but We are easily induced to believe, that what you wrote of his undutiful Carriage is true, and that you will easily make it appear, to which We will give no unwilling Ear.

Thus you have your last Letter answered, with what for the present and on such a sudden hath come into Our thoughts: and so We bid you Farewell.

Report of the Proceedings OF #### THE LATE GENERALL ASSEMBLY,

Indicted by the Kings Majestie, and Holden at Edinburgh, the 12 of August, 1639. THE EARLE OF TRAUQUAIR, Commissioner for the Kings Majestic, 1639.*

A Sermon preached by the Reverend Mr Alex. Hender-sonne, before the sitting doune of the Gen. Assembly begun the 12 of August, 1639.

THE PREFACE.

We have now found an accesse to a Throne of Grace, and I pray God that these that are assembled here together to get this worke crowned, may first labour to get these two thinges removed:—first, the conscience of our guiltinesse; apace, there are none that decernes or considers their sinnes! One thing should move our hearts—that the commons of the land are so ignorant that they know not God, and from that proceeds such wickednes. If pastors had bene more diligent in instructing, this Church had had a better face ere now: 2, Our weaknesse staves as a mountaine, and we cannot climbe unles we be helped. There is no remcadie but the bright-

* Folio MS., from f. 169 to f. 211.

nes of His mercie, that he would discipat this cloud ; and no remeadie for our weaknes but the power of his might. Let us therefore begg the same in the name of Jesus.

The text, Acts 5, 33 verse, to the end.

Now when they heard it, they burst for anger and consulted to slay them.

Then stood there up in the Councell a certaine Pharisie named Gamaliel, a Doctour of the Law, honoured of all the people, and commanded to put the Apostles furth for a little space, and said—Men of Israell, take head to yourselves, what ye intend to do touching these men, &c.

The words that were spoken by Peter and the other Apostles, could give no just cause of provocation to the adversaries ; for in their doctrine they insisted upon two innocent points : ane was faith in Christ—that since the Lord whom they crucified was now exalted to be a prince, that therefore they might believe in him and get remission of sinnes ; and the other was obedience—they ought to obey God rather than man. Yet they resolved to kill them ; and had done so, if the Lord had not raised up a man to save them, and he prevailed, that their furie was layed, wherein the Apostles rejoiced and doubled their zeale.

There is four particulars in the text very considerable : 1, The bad effects the Apostles preaching had in the peoples hearts. 2, The meane that God did use in saving of his servands. 3, The unjust proceedings of the adversaries. 4, The disposition and diligence of the Apostles, that ceased not ; whereby you learne that oftentimes it comes to passe, that men in authoritie are provoked against religion. Whether in obedience to God, or in the tryell of their faith, yet the Lord hes many wayes to serve his aune children ; and the end shall be joy to the Saints and advancement to the Gospell.

Let us returne to the first, [which] was the bad effects of the preaching, and that was twofold : ane in their hearts, another in their heads. They were cutt to the heart. The word is borrowed fra the cutting of a sword or saw. In the 7 Acts it is said, “ they gnashed with their teethe ; ” and in the 2 Acts, 37, its said, “ they were pricked in their hearts. ” We find another effect, but its different. The ane and the other are verie like. 11 Rom. 8 v., he calles the spirit of slumber, the spirit of compunction. The godly have a pricking, and the wicked have a pricking, as in the place 2 Acts, 37, they were pricked and took councell ; but they goe to them that wounded them, but they do not so here, but would slay them. The word of God hes very different effects in the godlie and the wicked. 1 Rev. 16, its like a two-edged sword ; and 4 Heb., lyvelie and mighty in operation. It either pricks or cutts ; its either a word to cure thee or to kill thee.

The Ministers of Christ, although they be other wayes of no reputation, yet if they could handle his sword aright, it should wound. The children of God, when they are wounded, should beare it patientlie : they are wounded because of their sin—the other because they cannot committ sin. So the ane prepares for Christ, the other for destruction. The ane shall end in health, the other in woe. And it may seeme very strange, that all this tyme we should never have heard of a Letter from our Prelats that have bene wounded with the sworde.

Men and brethren, I will not insist in their guiltinesse ; but we can say no more of them but what the text sayeth—which is, “ they tooke councell to kill us. ” And now we come to the councell they resolved to slay them. Counsell is good and excellent ; neither hath it bene derogatorie to authori-tie ; for, as Solomon sayeth, “ in councell there is stabilitie. ” These matters that are not agitat by councell are tossed upon fantacy. As Solomon felt the benefite of using it, so Rehoboam found the evill of not using it ; first, because it was young ; secondlie, because it was violent. Consider the councell of our adversaries. It was very violent ; but it had not the other, for the men wanted not their yeares ; yet they had this violence. They had another bad qualitic to supplie that, and this yow may learne from the 17 v. Many of them were Sadduces and so unneit to be counsellors ; for in the 23 Acts, yow see they beleve not the resurrection ; and where such unbelievers and counsellours are, their sentence will be, “ cutt the throat of Church and Commonwealth. ” They care not what violence they use to get preferment—but especially Kirkmen that are Sadduces ; what crueltie shall be exercised by them—but especiallie when they are given over to the divell. Ministers, when they fall, are like angells that are divells. No men in Scripture are called divells but ministers ; so they become incarnat divells. Give God thanks and his Majestie that hes given us this day to meet together ; and no thanks to them, that either yow are hearing or I am preaching to yow.

Followes the meane—the second thing—which was the man that spocke, and his speache. The man was a Pharisie. Next, he was learned, and a Doctour of Divinitie ; for his good pairts of reputation, naturallie and politicallie wise ; and upon such grounds, that he convinces them all. And further, he seemes to be a peaceable man, and does what he can to save innocent blood. But there was ane thing wanting—that was in Christ, and love to the word. 22 Acts, it is said, Paul was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel. As was the schollar, so was his master. He was ignorant, and so a persecutour. There is more requyred for the accomplishment of a man than the gifts of the mynd, which this man seemes to have. A mans natural pairts are like a vesture of gold ; and the gifts of grace, are like the precious stones ; but this faith is like a precious diamond in the middle—incomparably greater in worth. Judge of kings according to their qualitie. The best of these, beside the great jewall, are given to the wicked and to the godlie, and are bestowed on them for other mens good, and not for their owne : but this propper to thyselfe and for thyselfe, and this jewall shall make thee rich, and it concernes none more then ministers. It is requyred of ministers that they should be learned, and in reputation with the people ; wise, peaceable disposed, and learned—διδασκτικοι ; although they cannot come to eminent, yet competent knowledge—1 Titus 5—to exhort, and comfort, and convince the enemy ; not like these men that hes instruments—sheares and tubbes to cutt off the wool and to carry their milk away ; but no care to feede them. I say they should be furnished with all thinges, both outwardlie and inwardlie ; and it is a pittie that we have not a Lebanon for tries to grow in—a professour here and a professour there. All the planting will soone be destroyed, and there be not a place for them. We are all crying for good ministers to have a care of the good plants. That is not learning to read a sermon, or to spoil it in the telling. It is a pittie those that boasts so should be so vaine, and as great a pittie that we have not sound divinitie. Many gets other mens preachings, and these that are learned should be given to such alterculatiouns ; yet and although thow were als learned as Gamaliel, and thow have no more, thow art not to be a minister of Christ. Yow know what entertainment the Apostles gott at Athens: they moeked them. A man that hes a learned head and a graeeles heart, he is unmeit for Christs worke. Let us joyne both together. Of all men that ever I was acquainted with, I saw none so prophane as ministers. What was good in this man let us stryve to outmatch it; and what he wanted, let us labour to have our soules filled with the love of Christ, and thinke more of grace then learning.

Before I come to his speach, see not onlie Gods mereies, but also Gods providence. He uses his providence which his wisdome had designed; and there is two peeces of his providence here scene: one was first, the Lord brought them back from the doores of death when their soul was, as it were, in their hand; secondlie, by such a meane as they could not dreame of; and these two are very ordinarie with the Lord. When yow are in extremitie, he shewes himselfe and in such wayes, and we may truelie say, he hes done so with us—that when Episeopacie was deeplie rooted, even then God would eutt it downe. Wherefore doeth the Lord so? Answer, For three reasons—first, that when the Lord comes in extremitie, that his hand may be declaired, and he get the greater glorie—33 Isai 9. Lebanon is ashamed and entt downe; secondlie, for the further confusion of the enemies—Obadiah 3, whose habitation is in the high roekes, who sayes in their hearts, who shall bring me down to the ground? thirdly, for our encouragement and our posteritie after us, that we should onlie put our confidence in Him who is only able to helpe us.

Now we come to the speach itselfe; wherin, first, take notice of his intention—restraine! He was a wise man, and knew no good would follow if they were harmed. He knew the Romans would be angrie, and that the people had a good likeing to them. This was a good and peaceable intention, though not a pure and pious; if he had any ayme to Gods glorie and to the gospell of Christ, it had been good. I make no question there is enough among us that have peaceable desires and laudable intentions; but more is requyred. Let us labour to have pious intentions, not only to have the present troubles settled. If it shall soone breake foorth againe, see what is agriciable to his will, iste est malus qui suae causae bonus, that is, good only for himselfe. Let us beseeche the Lord that we may have hearts to seeke his honour and the enlargement of Christs kingdome.

Now for his argument. I would have yow reframe from these men. If it be of God, it will come to passe. This argument had its owne weaknes. If it be of men it should be hindred; of God it should be furthered.—Thes. 3—should have putt them to tryall. We will not passe what is commendable in him. He proceedes on a good ground—if of men to be rejected; if of God, to be received. 25 Matth. 25.—The baptism of John, was it from Heaven or of men? 4 Ephes.—Try the spirits whether they be of men or God. It was the perpetuall doctrine of the Prophets—“Thus saith the Lord:” and Paul saith, “That which I receaved doe I delyver.” Those that are disciples must be believers—not what man saith; first, that it is true in matters internall, but not in matters externall. Moses, when he is appoynted to build the tabernacle, he gets his directions. Solomon, when he built the temple, had his warrant from David; and least they thinke Solomons warrant not to be sufficient, Ezechia had his warrand according to the commandement of David. O, but you will say, its not so in the New Testament: there is not so many ceremonies. Its a pitifull thing we will not acknowledge that which we are not ignorant of, distinguishe betweene multitude and number of ceremonies. They had many: we have fewer. Shall we thinke we have not so great light as they that were to put ane aspersion on Christ? Let us stryve to learne what Gods will is. When it is of God, receive it; but when of men, reject it. Many ceremonies have exercised the Church of God many tymes, and especially that of the government of the Kirk: and there is twa causes that hinders the decyding of it—first, the hudge judgement of God upon the congregations, and so puts Gods servands to tryell. The second cause is the avariee of Churehmen. So long as their avariee lasts there is no end of Episeopacie. Thirdly, becaus we doe not examine what kynd of government Christ gave. The question of government is not juris but facti. Why? Is that agreeable with reason and civill government? No. But, de facto, what government Christ hath established. An office that is jure divino, should be established; but if it be ane office of man, it ought to be rejected. This great Doctor teacheth us that when God fights against man, he shall prevaile; but when man fights against God, they shall be found fighting against him. 11 Gen.—The builders of Babel—the Lord made every ane of them that they knew not what another said. This was an easie thing to the Lord: and so the worke was interrupted in building. The Lord is wonderfull in building and bringing downe Babel. Great opposition was made against Joseph by his brethren, and great opposition against David; yet Gods counsell behoved to stand. What opposition was made against Joseph by his brethren, and great opposition against David; yet Gods counsell behoved to stand. What opposition was made against Gods people in Egypt, in bringing them out of Egypt; yet they behoved to come foorth; and yow know great opposition hes beene used against this worke be the wicked. But yet, blessed be God, it hath proclaimed itself through the land.

He brought in two instances to prove that the worke of man will come to nought—ane of Thewdas—he was ane that conceaved himselfe to be a prophet, but a false ane; and Judas, he would have desuded the people from giving that duetie to the civile magistrat that they ought to have done; and there were seets that followed them. The errours of religion commonlie springes either from the spirit of Thewdas, which is a spirit of fantasie; the other is the spirit of rebellion; and that's not of God neither.

Consider, although they be the manie, yet there is more lykewayes, as there are spirits contrare to the spirit of Thewdas, and this is the spirit of Pharoah—who said, “who is the Lord that I should serve him?” and that is Atheisme. The other is contrare to Judas, and that is Herods, that runnes to flattery, and gives man that that appertaines to God.

As Atheisme is ane abomination before God, so is rebellion and flattery. The true reformed religion abhorres disobedience, and gives to Cæsars that which is Cæsars: and sure we professe a harmles religion. I would exhort you to it, 2 Kings, 1, To the course of faith which abhorres godlesnes and vaine conceipts of men. I am now pleading for the innoencie of religion. Ye know what our adversaries have printed against us; that we are guiltie of many crymes and triekes, and that we have made people to fayne themselves inspired with the spirit of divination, which is against Gods trueth. The second thing is the course of obedience. There was never a greater friend to Kings then Christ. There is no question now about Juda of Gallilees part, whether we should pay tax or not; neither of that inward reverence to princes, or that respect we carry to him. I wish his owne prayers were never heard that doeth not heartillie pray for his Majestic. But the questioun is, What is his part in religion and matters ecclesiasticall? It is both said and printed, that I should have spooken much that my fellow-brethren and the rest of the Covenanters would not allow of. First, I said and say, that Royall inspection belongs to Kings over Kirk matters, and that the King was supreme Bishop of all this Kingdome. Now, my adversarie thinkes I made him a Kirkman. I am ignorant, but uot so. As for the head of the Kirk we acknowledge none but Christ; and for the other, Episcopus is a name that is als weill propper to a civile magistrat as spiritual: Therefore Constantine saith, vos estis Episcopi intra, ego extra. Nixt, that he is custos utriusque tabule. Vindication belongs unto him who carries the sword of sanetion and ecretion and convocation of Synods, as now this present Generall Assembly is conveined; and as he conveines, soe its said, examines them. If he find anything against the word of God, he should rejeit it. Thus I speake not of a negative voice his Majestic hath. And now I have shewen yow the particulers I have beine taxed upon, hoping this honourable Assembly will further consider of it; and now I come to speake ane word to your Commissioners Grace who represents his Majestic.

(The speache to the Commissioners Grace, which is the conelusion of the sermon.)

As for your Graee his Majesties Commissioner, we beseech yow to see that Cæsar have his owne; but let not Cæsar have what is due to God and belongs to him. God hes exalted your Graee to many high places within these few yeares, and more especiallie now. Be thankfull, and labour to exalt Christs throne. Some are exalted like Haman—some like Mordicai. And I pray God these good pairs the Lord hes endued yow withall, yow may use them aright, as the Israelites, when they came out of Egypt, did give all their silver and gold for building of the tabernaele. I tell your Graee yow must be eomptable for all your actions, espeiallie in these publiet bussinesses. And to yow, right honourable and right worshipfull members of this Assembly, goe on in your zeale eonstantlie. Surelie it shall be refreshment to yow and your children, that yow should have lived when the light of the Gospell was almost extinguished, and now to see it quiekened againe.

After all these troubles, with a holy moderation, goe on; for zeale is a good servant but ane ill master; like a schippe that hes a full sail and wants a ruther.

We have need of Christian prudence; for ye know what ill speeches our adversaries have made upon us. Let it be seene to his Majestic, that this governement can very weill stand with a monarchieal governement. Hereby we shall gaine his Majesties favour, and God shall get the glorie; to whom be praise for ever and ever.—AMEN.

FINIS.

Surely so many of us as consider any thing of the wayes of God toward us, and the conscience of our owne guiltinesse, may verily say, its of the mereies of God that we are not consumed: ffor we deserve no lesse than that. The Lord had mercie on us, and brought us anee together before, after many detections and grosse backslydings, and vouchsafed the testimony of his divine presenee very sensible upon us, which should never be forgotten of us whilst we live. This is another mereie that the Lord hath been pleased, after so many troubles and tempests, hazarding all ehureh and kingdome, familie, persone, and estates, that he should grant us this calme and comfortable day to meete in, and that we have his libertie, under the protection of our sacred Sovereigne, the Kings Majestic. And now when we are assembled together, and hath all things externall in libertie and freedome, without any apparent danger for ought that we know, is there no more adoe? Yea truelie: though all the worthiest of this kingdome were here assembled, (as I thinke a great pairt of them be,) yet if the Lord do not vouchsafe his presence upon us, our meeting shall be in vaine, and better it had beene for us not to have mett. Therefore let us request the Lord to remove these illes farre from us, that hath deserved he should desert us; and that he may looke eomfortable upon us, and that our soules may rejoyce in his presenee, we may have matter of praise to render to him, and matter of eomfort to our soules and the establishment of peace to this kirk and kingdome.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour desyred these that were authorized with commissions from Presbyteries, Universities, and other incorporations, to produce the same.

John, Earle of Traquair, Commissioner for the Kings Majestic.

The name of the Commissioners from Presbitries, Burghes, and Universities, as followes, &c. [Not inserted in M.S.]

After the production of the several commissions, the Kings Commissioner desyred that the tyme of their meeting might be eondisendit upon; and whether it were convenient to have two sessions a day or not?

It was thought expedient to meete tomorrow at ten o'eloeke, and that tomorrow there should be but one sessione, and thereafter to be taken to the Assemblies consideration, if convenientlie two sessions could be kept.

Mr John Robertsons, and Mr Robert Murray appoynted to nominat some ministers to preache all the weake, and to give their names tomorrow.

Sess. 2.—Hora Decima.

August 13, 1639.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Kings Majesties Commissioner produced the Commission, which being red in face of the Assembly, the Commissioner his Graee desyred it might be insert in the Bookes of the Assembly, the tenor whereof followeth—"Carolus, Dei Gratia," &c.

The Commissioners Graee declaired, that howsoever there was in him great weaknes and insuffienciencie for so weightie a charge, yet he hoped that he should make known unto the Assembly his Majesties graee and goodnes in that ingenuous way as should give satisfacione to all, and that not in a superficial and complimentary way; but since his Master had honoured him so farre, he desyred that (though his weaknes, for want of experience, might make him sometymes silent wheu it was fitting to speake, and other tymes to speake out of purpos,) the goodnes and wisdome of the reverend members might supplie his inlakes.

The Moderatour answered—There is none of us can bragg of our experience, becaus of the want of Assemblies this long tyme agoe ; but we hope within twenty yeares our experience shall be greater.

Moderatour said—Please your Grace, the antient and laudable custome of Assemblies hath beene, that he that was Moderatour of the last Assemblie should propose a list of names, of the which number a new Moderatour may be chosen.

The Commissioner answered—I perceive no prejudice in that forme, since ye allow that if my Master have anything to say against these or to add to them.

The Moderatour craved libertie before the list was red to preface thus much—that since it was not possible to put all the worthies that were present on a list, therefore no man would take any offence.

The List of the Names for a Moderatour.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Livingstoun, Mr Andro Cant,
Mr David Dick,* Mr Alexander Somervell.
Mr James Bonar,

The Moderatour asked the Commissioner, if his Grace had any thing to except against these, or if his Grace had any other whom he would adde to them ?

The Commissioner answered—I have so charitable, yea, so Christian an opinion, that I believe none can come heir but with the intention and resolution that yow have so often expressed, looking to nothing but to Gods glorie and next to the Kings honour. Not that I have prejudice against any that are here—surely none—but considering my Masters directions are so faire and so plaine, that I believe, as he intends nothing but settling of truth and freeing us of feares that we might be possessed with, either for novation in religion or lawes : so I believe, yea I expect and am confident, that everie man that comes heir resolves to carry himselfe with that integritie as in the eyes of God, to whom they must make answer ; and as standing to doe that duetie which in the second parte belongs to our graceous Sovereigne : for myselve, I may know some men by acquaintance, and thereupon may have opinion ; but I attest God I have no prejudice against these on the list, nor any that are here ; yet I desire that yow yourselve Moderatour may be both added to the list and may be Moderatour still ; and this I desire for no other end but because I believe it may contribute much to the worke in hand. Howsoever, I submitt myselve to the judgement of the rest.

The Moderatour answered—If your Grace had continowed in the last Assemblie, your Grace might have seene as much of my weaknes made manifest at that tyme as should have beene a sufficient prevention of listing me at this tyme. I trust I shall not need to speake much. I have enough if I be prest with it, whereby I shall make it manifest to this whole meeting, that I cannot be continowed in this place.

The Commissioner said—I doe insist in this for no other end truelie but that I have already said. Since I am requyred to delyver my opinion, I may doe it upon my knowledge ; and I doubt nothing but if the gifts and worthe of many reverend men who are here were knowen unto me, but it might be I should voice with them ; but truly, by my insisting for this, I feir I wrang the end I goe about, and I know not weill how to expresse myselve in it, and safe myselve from seeming to give ground of feires of that I seeke to eschue, to witt, that I am free of prejudice. Alwayes I name the Moderatour for no other end (as God shall save me) but becaus I thinke him both ane honest man and ane able man, and I thinke this doeth nather establische a constancie of Moderatours nor open a doore to it ; for though our Judgments doe now find yow to be the man whom we inelyne to, yet since it is not the freedome of voicing, I thinke yow have no more interest in it then any upon the list ; and if I now urging this as a priviledge due to my Master, or if I were urging that my nominating of ane should make the Moderatour, it were much ; but let everie Member of the Assemblie consider of it, and of everie readie way to facilitat this matter in hand ; for if I knew any man so able to supplie that roume as the Moderatour, certainlie I should name him.

* It may be proper to explain that Mr David Dick, whose name is so often introduced as taking a part in the proceedings of these Assemblies, is the same person as Mr David Dickson, minister of Irvine. This abbreviation of his name appears throughout all the MS. reports we have seen, although, in the list of members, 1638, and other documents, it is given at full length. This abbreviation, we presume, has arisen from some colloquial and conventional usage at the time ; but it is right to note the circumstance, in order to prevent mistakes.

The Moderatour answered—By your Graces Speache, some may take great advantage to thinke that your Grace doeth contradict his Majesties late Declaration ;* becaus its said there, yow may verie well judge what could be wiselie done in that Assembly when they had such an ignorant Moderatour : and now your Grace giving me such a large testimonie, doeth directlie contradict his Majesties printed Declaration. But I correct myselve. I trust it shall be found not to be his Majesties Declaration.

The Commissioner answered this with silence.

The Moderatour after added—We have great reason to blesse our God and to give humble and heartie thanks to the Kings Majestie for this peaceable and free Assemblie ; but we have so many jealousies upon the Usurpation of the Prelats in tyme past, that in trueth at the very first we scarre and are so affrayed, that we darre not meddle with any thing of that kynd. It savours of a constant Moderatour—the first step of Episcopacie ; and, in trueth, I have not a mynd to be a Bishop.

Ye might have bein ane.

It was questioned if the former Moderatour could be ane in the new list ?

Mr John Row said he had seene Assemblies this 50 yeares, and, to his judgement, he never saw it that the Moderatour of the former Assemblie was put on the list with these that were to be Moderatour the next Assemblie ; nevertheless, it was instanced out of the Assemblie Bookes, that the same Moderatour have been sometymes continued Moderatour of the next Assemblie.

It was condescendit upon that Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henderson should be added to the list. The list was read and the rolles called, and Mr David Dick was chosen Moderatour by the farr greatest part of the voices, who after the acknowledgement of his owne weaknes imbraced the office ; and having a calling from God and the honourable Assembly. Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henrysone, randerung most heartie thanks to the Assemblie for their charitable construction of his weaknes, and wishing that no man should faygne any abilitie unto himselfe, dimitted his place.

The Moderatour, at his first entrie to the place, had

this preface. This is more than we durst have craved of God, if we had looked to our owne deserving; but since it hath beene His Majesties pleasure who rules heaven and earth, to looke upon our Gracious King, and move his heart to grant this freedome, we have reasone all of us to aeknowledge Gods mercie to his Majestic and to us, and to aeknowledge his Majesties goodnes, and to make verie welcome your Grace who is to represent his Majestic; and I trust this Assembly will allow me verie weill to give thanks to the Moderatour who served in this rounge last, who, whatsoever you thought or said, God magnified himselfe in yow, and made your honestie and the caus in your hand cleare to many; and to those to whom ye were most calumniat, so that both the Kings Commissioner and Councell have seene that yow have beene seeking God onlie, and no other thing—and the Lord bless yow! Now, as the Commissioner spacke verie fitlie that jealousies and suspitions would be farr away, becaus they are contrare to the designes professed by His Majestic, and whereof we have this evidence; and contrare to the designes of ws ministers, who ought to be ministers of peace, ayming at nothing but Gods glorie and the weill of his Church: Therefore let us labour by all meanes to get ovr hearts single; becaus in so doing ovr God will helpe us. And first, to thinke of overtures, how we may extirpat all grounds of suspition and jealousie which might be in brethrens hearts, becaus of the differences of judgments about the discipline of the Church, and that ceremonies that she has beene troubled with, may be turned in perpetuall oblivion. And seeing there is in usane mynd and heart toward God and peace, let us think upon some overtures, how we may open the bosome of this Kirk to all these who are penitent, or in any measure sensible of their misdeservings, (no these who deserves most expected, if the Lord gives them repentance), seeing we are these who professed ourselves to be men seeking God, trueth, and peace. Yea thirdlie, let us give evidence that we are single hearted toward these that are of a contrare religion, and that we have no mynd to insuare them, or handle them so as their owne consciences, upon their owne grounds could say, considering our rules, but rather how we shall get them informed of their scruples, heard, attendit, and waited upon, and by all meanes their mynd brought to this poynt of convietion that they know nothing but God and their owne salvation, and all in a verie moderat maner.

The Tryell of the Commissions.

After this the Assembly proceedit to the tryell and examination of the Commissions; and the Moderatour desyred that if the Commissioner his Grace, or any Member of the Assembly had anything to object against the validitie or formalitie of the Commissions, that they would make declaration of the same.

[Commissioner] answered—I believe I shall be glad that there shall be few contrare opinions—yea, few contests anent the election of Commissioners at this tyme, and such is my gracious Masters desyre to have everie thing caried in a fair, ealm, and peaceable way at this Assembly; for all his commands runnes thus, that in anything that should concerne him, I should give good example and begin, so that though I might object severall informalities, yet so desyrous is our Master of peace, that I only remonstrat it to yow to take it to your consideration. And for me, surely it shall be a very great informalitie which shall make me interrupt so good a worke.

The Moderatour said—We are glad to heare from your Grace expressions of peaceable intentions; yet becaus something of that kinde may reflex upon our proeeding, therefore we should be glad to heare your Graace name these exceptions; for we desyre not to be pardoned in a thing wherein we may be mended; if there be reason to approve them, let them be approved; and if there be reason to cast them, let them be casten.

The Commissioner said—I conceave there are grounds to cast elections—as, for example, I conceave that, in the choosing of Commissioners from Presbitries or Presbitric, if it appeare that there have been moe Lay Elders then Ministers, I should not think it formall. Secondlie, if there be a Commissioner chosen where he never had his residence, and, consequentlie, where he is not ane Elder, I thinke it not formall. Thirdly, if any man be chosen Lay Elder, and yet not chosen Commissioner from that place where he is Elder, I think it not formall. Fourthlie, if a man be chosen laick Elder in ane place, and after reside in another place and be chosen there, I thinke that not formall. Fiftilie, if a man be a rebell and at the Kings horne, I cannot thinke his electione formall. These and many other of this kynde doe I represent unto your consideratione.

The Moderatour answered—Please your Grace: It wer a spending of lang tyme to dispute the questiou in generall. But if it please your Graace, either by yourselfe or by any other, to nominat these Commissioners against whom the exception is, and in their persone to dispute the question, and so either admit them upou reason or reject them upon reason; ffor we professe we will tollerat no man against whom there is a just exception wherefore he should not heare be a Commissioner: therefore, when it comes to the particular, let the exception be nominat, and it shall be purged some way or els the man removed: therefore, if there be any within this house who hes any thing to object against the formalitie of the election of Commissioners, let them declair the same; utherwayes we will hold our silence for ane approbation of all.

After the Commissioners wer approved by the whole Assembly,

The Moderatour said—The Assemblie is now constitut and the Members found perfyte: The Lord give a blessing unto it! Therefore, if your Graace have any thing to say, it is now a fullie constitut Assembly, and the Judicatorie sett.

The Commissioner answered—I did not expect so great expedition; but I am glad that yow take to your wise consideration all meanes that may facilitat so good a worke; and since, as I was saying, in generall I am to communicat his Majesties mynd to this Assembly, which I hope shall give satisfactioun to all, I must first communicat to some in privat, that so it may be the better digested for publiet audience; therefore I desire that any thing materiall may be forborne this day, and that if there be any matter of lesse importanee, they may now be dispatched. To the which the Assembly acquiesced.

The Moderatour craved, that, in respect he was put upon the toppe of the bussinesse, and made the mouthe of the Assembly, that whatsoever might contribute to the good of the worke, they would not only all be willing in generall but in speeiall, to communicat to his assistance as a servant of the house, and, for that end, that libertie might be granted to him to joyne some assessours to himselfe, as, namely, the Earles Argyle, Rothes, Eglington, Montrois, my Lord Lowdown: Ministers—

This was refused to be past in Act: but the Assembly granted to the Moderatour to crave their assistance in privat, with the Commissioner his Graces consent.

The Assembly, for the greater facilitating of bussines, did appoynt a Commission for receaving of Billes that were to be given in to the Assembly, namely: Ministers—Masters David Lindsay, Robert Douglas, Andro Fleck, William Jamesone, Frederick Carmichell, David Monro, George Leslie: Elders—the Earle of Cassilles, my Lord Burlie, my Lord Johustoun, Lairds of Fentrie, Keir, Dundas, Provost of Dumbartoun.

Item, another Commission for reportes of referenes from the last Assembly: Ministers—Mr John Robertstone, Robert Murrey, James Edmestoune, Alex<sup>r</sup> Petric, Thomas Mitchell, &c.

The Assembly, with consent of the Commissioners Grace, did condescend, becaus of the shortnes of tyme betwixt and the ensuing Parliament, that there should be two Sessions a day—the first at 9 a clock—the second at 3 a clock in the afternoon, and the sermon to goe in at 7 a clock in the morning.

Sessio 3.—August 14, 1639.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour asked the Commissioner if his Grace had any thing to say to this Assembly?

The Commissioner answered—I am sory to say any thing that may breed jealousie—farre lesse discontent in any mans mynd: yet I must say that agane which I said yesterday in generall; and I desire that everie bodie that heares me, and in particular the honourable and reverend Members of this Assembly, may believe that what I doe in this kinde, is not out of a intention to delay or protract tyme; but surelie the great and weightie charge I am entrusted with,—secondlie, the short tyme I have had to consider of the instructiones given to me of my Master,—thirdly, the sense of my oune weaknes; and I may adde a fourth—some distemper of my bodie—that I must begg the allowance of this day—not for any delay or protracting of tyme, but that, after mature consideration on all hands, we may all sing ane sang before this Assemblie end; and, having obtained this short tyme for consideration of my instructions, I must then begg a second favour, that the Moderatour, and some other with him, may spend some tyme with me this afternoon, that so thinges may be the better digested, and I more able to give satisfaction in everie thing that can be expected.

The Moderatour said—My Lord Commissioners Grace gives us to understand that the Kings mynd is peace toward this Church, and least we should speake and not understand one another, and stumble in the entrie of this bussines, his Grace requyres that this day may be given for consideration of the instructions receaved from His Majestie, and that some of this number that ye thinke good, with me may attend his Grace, that one of us mistake not anothers language; and it shall be our pairt to deall with God to show ws a right way, that fra there is ane ayme at peace we may follow the best way for attaining of it, and for preservation of it heirafter: for if our way be good as weell as our matter, it can bring no discontent: but if we marr in either, we may breid much. Therefore, let us suspend our judgments in every thing our mynd might have thoughts about; for this is a tender bussinesse; and it shall be our wisdome to suspend our judgments till every particular speake for itselfe; and since on all hands we professe peace, so let every mans particular cariage declair the same: so shall trueth and peace and every mans particular cariage get the oune true approbation.

The Commissioner said—I believe it is scairse expected from me that I should adde to or confirme that which ye have said, seeing its propper for yow to speake. Your place carries yow to it, and your gifts gives yow abilitie for it. The place I am in is to heare and doe that ductie which is to be expected from a gracious Prince. Yet I may say thus much without wronging any trust my Master hath put upon me, to second that yow have said—to witt—if men come without prejudicat myndes—if men come impartiall, with a mynd to acquiesce to reason when reason shall be offered, and to imbrace trueth when the way of trueth is layd open with the soundnes of mynd, and with that reverence and respect which may be expected from good Christians and good subjects, and which their oune place will beare to soveraigntie and lesse then which can never be expected from good subjects: I say if men come so, I hope the conclusion may be beyond the expectation of us all, and beyond the desyre of some that all shall tend to peace, and such a peace as hes trueth for the companion of it, against to-morrow.

The Moderatour asked the opinion of some of the Members of the Assemblie, whether the Commissioner his Grace his desire was most reasonable?

My Lord Argyle said—I know that it is the profession and desire of us all to have all this bussines settled in a fair way; and since the Commissioner his Grace hath given ws good hopes of it, I thinke it were ane ill interruption of it to refuse to his Grace any thing of this kynd.

The Moderatour desired that, if any of the Assembly thought otherwayes, they would tell their mynd—for we think verilie (said he) that one dayes good advyement may save us many dayes paines, and the spending of this day in thinking upon the best meanes how we may wind to our good ends, may be like money lent out for double annuell. To the which the Assembly willinglie assented.

Added to the Commission for the Billes—Mr W<sup>m</sup> Douglas, Mathow Brisbane, &c., to meet at the Parliament House at 6 in the morning and 6 at night: and so the Assemblie dismissed for this dyet.

Sess. 4.

After prayer, the Moderatour asked if the Commissioner, his Grace, had anything to say to the Assembly.

The Commissioner answered—I was desirous yesterday of a short delay, that I might the better consider of my Masters instructions; and, withall, I was desirous that the Moderatour, and some of this reverent company, might come doune to me, that to yow I might communicat some of my thoughts, that they may the more plausiblie be conveyed to the rest of this number. This ye were pleased to doe. Some short tyme we spent together yesterday, and this morning too; and I doubt not, Moderatour, but since your comming up yow have communicat to some of the rest, and so I hope this shall facilitat the matter greatlie; and I shall begg libertie to repeat somewhat in generall of what hes past in privat. The deploire to the divisions and differences that hath beene in this Church and Commonwealth are both so weill known to ws all that I need spend no tyme in it. The bad and dangerous consequents that hes beene likelie to iusue—yea I may say, the ruine that hes bein so imminent, is yet so fresche in your memories that I spair it. It hath pleased God so to dispose our effaires, and so to prepaire our Masters heart to hearken to our just desyres, that he hes bein pleased to grant and to indict this free Assemblie, as the readie meanes to obviat all such evils in tyme comeing, and to prepaire thinges that there may not be the like mistake among us heirafter. If I be not mistaken, this was the occasion of our petitions: the sense we had of bygone illes, and the fear we had of the consequentes of these illes, and the desire we had that these feares should be removed, and that, by removing of the evils and causes thereof. In privat, to these few of this number that came to me, I was desirous that they would condescend to me what they conceaved to be the causes of all the divisions of this Church, that accordingly we might take to our consideration the readiest wayes to expunge the same, if any such appeared, and to remove them by wholesome constitutions. Ye were pleased to condescend upon some, and it may be others doe thinke upon some that ye have not thought upon. I doe not take upon me to determine what are the causes; but as my memorie serves me, and so farr as I can gather out of the Petitions to the Counsell, the Commissioner, or to His Majestie himselfe, I shall collect my owne thoughts, and, if possible I passe by some circumstances, if I touche what is most materiall, I desire yow to heape it.

The first occasion that made a sense of the subjects, at least a expression of the sense to appear to the King or Counsell, was a Service Booke, lately introduced and pressed, furst upon the Clergie, and, I thinke, by them to be prest upon the whole subjects. Upon this there comes petitions from diverse corners of the countrie, and the numbers of them grew daylie. This was so taken to heart by the Counsell, that they did acquaint their Master with it; but it may be not in that powerfull way as to make our Master conceave of the bussinesse as God hath given him grace to consider since, for which cause, the satisfactorie answer was not given at first which was expected; and so your desires grew; and, if I be not mistaue, the Booke of Cannons was joynd with it. Yet it ceased not here. We went a litle further, and, I believe, in generall, there was innovations complained upon—innovations alledged to be introduced contraire to the constitutions of this Kirk. The Five Articles and High Commission were complained upon; and, I believe that it was complained that, even in the governement of the Kirk, something was introduced that was not according to the laudable constitution of this Kirk; yea, I believe, first we came to complaine personallie of the faults of Bishops—as of the hard usage of Ministers—the unlawfull oathes exacted of intrants, and, I believe, in end it came to that, that it was presented as a grievance to the King, and as an occasion of the destruction of the Kirk, that Episcopacie itselfe was so farre contraire to the constitutions of this Kirk and Reformation thereof, and, therefore, that not only their office behooved to be reformed and rectified, but totallie abolished, and the Kirk restoiored to that governement she had at the Reformation, by free and lawfull Generall Assemblies, or the subjects could not be satisfied.

It may be my expression hes not bein methodicall and cleare; yet, bluntlie and orderlie, I thinke

I expresse the most materiall thinges that the Kings Majestie hath conceaved to be the grievances and desires of his subjects, by their petitions, papers, and by the Commissioners Grace; or, urtherwayes, I cannot, nor darr not say, if I answer that trust that my Master hath put upon me, or, if I discharge that ductie, that in reason he shall expect from me. But his goodnes is such, and so farr he hath condescendit to satisfie the desires of his good subjects, as he hath indicted this Generall Assembly, to take to their consideration the true cause of these illis which he expects they will doe, and doe it without partial respects or by ends; so, on the other part, not only to heare of it be evident trueth, and grounded upon good reason, as the petitions of the subjects seemes to say, he hath commanded me, not only to heare, but to consent and to concurre with yow, in everie thing ye shall agrie upon; yea I may say more; for the more I look upon my instructions they give me warrant to say the more. That my Master doeth expect, although I came not here to say that there is another way in ecclesiastic bussinesse then that way which ye have propounded to him, and of which he hath given satisfaction to others by mouthe, that he conceives no other way—that we of this Assembly will, notwithstanding, consider of the distractions of the Kirk, so far as our auctoritie can doe. For the Service Booke and Cannons, they are discharged. For the Five Articles and High Commission, in this his grace and goodness appears very great—for they were established in his fathers tyme, and continued in his owne tyme—yet, without so much as disputing his owne right, he hes bein pleased to discharge all these; and, likewayes, for what seemed grievous to ministers at their entrie, and complained of, not only be ministers but by laicks, the Kings majestie hes beine pleased to declair, that no oaths shall be exacted of intrants; not that I am commanded to say that ye should desist here, or take it for a command not to meddle with any more; but to this end that ye may see his Majesties grace and goodnes, and how willing he is when reason ruleth, to doe all that can be expected from a graceous and good King, and requires that this Assembly shall take to their consideration what is further fitting for freeing us of our feares and preventing the lyke in tyme to come. And, farther, we have complained of the personall faults of men, and I am persuadit my Master will protect no man further nor the Word of God, and order of law doth allow. Yea, he hath ane care open to all complaints, and hath commanded me to receive all billes, and heare them according to the order of justice, which I hope shall give satisfacione to all men, that is, for the persons of men. The very calling of itselfe Episcopacie hath beene represented to his Majestie as a grievance—as ane occasion of thir evils—as a thing so farr contrare to the institutions of this Kirk, so many tymes abjured, as that the subjects would not find themselves quyet in conscience, except the King should be graceouslie pleased to see it utterlie abolished: and I am commanded to tell you so much, that his Majestie expects that ye will take this as he meanes it, and as I now expresse it.

It hath ever beine thought that no mans judgement can be satisfied without reason. The Kings breeding hath been in a Church where, ye know, Episcopacie is allowed as a warrantable governement; but without more discourse, least possible I involve myselfe in greater difficulties than I can easilie be redd of, I am commanded to tell you that I have represented the grievances and occasions of those great evils.

The Kings Majestic is graceouslie pleased to give directions, that this Generall Assemblie shall consider whether so be or not; and what yee shall determine in it, I hope ye sall give me no cause but with that same heartinesse, to expresse my Masters willingness to joyne his assent and approbation thereto, I shall desire, and truelie I desire in a verie serious way, that no man carp at my words, (for God knowes I must come here without premeditation,) further than this, that if in my expressions of what I conceive to be my Masters meaning, any man find not himselfe to be satisfied either in the generall way of it, or in any particular, they would, in that modestie that becomes good subjects, testifying their tender respect to the honour of our graceous Master, represent their doubts; and I hope I shall be able to give them satisfaction.

Next, becaus we are not all of one disposition nor temper of mynd, give me leave to represent unto yow, that if any of thir particulars, either last or first—I name none of them—if there be anything more to be expected or wished then I have said, I should humblie, I say, represent to your consideration, that before ye fall upon any poynt that should be unsavourie to so good a King, they may be first communicat to some of yourselves, and well digested before they come to all our eares in publict, least ye force me to make answer in that way which will be unsavourie unto yow, and no less unto myselve. But this course being keiped, though I have bluntlie and rudelie exprest my Masters meaning; yet going in this way, I may expect retribution of respect to auctoritie, which ye all professe to vindicat his honour before the eyes of all the worlde; and to vindicat his owne thoughts and privat judgment, your owne goodnes and ductifulnes I am confident will give me satisfaction. I may say, whatever my Master hath done in this, it is done to a good and thankfull people, in doing whereof he will establishe a place in Kirk and Commonwealth, the fruites thereof will redound to himselfe in receaving all ductifull obedience; and seeing nothing amongst us but consent and harmony, and no contest at all, except it be who should be foremost—first, in their dueitie to God, and next to the King.

The Moderatour answered—We have very great reason to blesse our Lord, that hath brought fourth this fruite of his favour by such graceous and honorable meanes to our comfort; and we acknowledge heir, heartilie, that there is no small expression of our Kings Majesties gentlenes and goodnes and love to his subjects, that he hath done of his owne accord so much, and is readie to doe yet further, and to cast into our hands what God, reason, and law doth allow of, which his Majestic cannot be particularlie informed of, except from us. We have to thanke God and his Majestic for that pointe. As for your Grace his Commissioner, yow have followed the order indeed that is very pertinent, and hath asked of us in privat, and hath place to ask us in publict, the causes of disturbance that hath bene amongst us; and as we are bound to give ane account of our proceedings to all men, so especiallie to his Majestic, or any in his name, and to your Grace in particular. And as in privat we have dilated some, not takeing upon us to comprize them all, so are we heir in publict, readie to give satisfaction to his Majestic, and that by satisfieing of your Grace in this place, concerning all these illes, takeing them in their owne order as they come in mynd, so farr as memorie can serve; and for our pairt we have been about to remead them according to the order of the Kirk, so farr as we could, and will doe what we can farther, as becomes the Assembly of the Kirk, to goe in that same course; and we have to crave not only that his Majestic may be satisfied concerning our proceedings, but that he would confirme by the civile sanction, that His Majestic and your Grace shall find to be according to the rule of religion and the word of God, and nothing else purpose we to crave, nor have we intendit, but are perswaded in our consciences such, and for which we are readie to give reasons when we are requyred. In particular, the causes of the grievances that we have had, and which we have bene about to repair, according to the constitution and ordinances of the Kirk, are—

First, the want of Generall Assemblies yearlie and oftener, pro re nata, as the necessitie of the Kirk did requyre, which, when we had, was a verie fair benefite both from God and from the State; for therein all disorders were freilie spooken of, and when they were withholdeu, its knowne by whose procurement, even these that wrought ws much more grieffe, that they might worke the rest contrare to the constitutions of this Kirk and order of the Booke of Policie and Act of Parliament 1592. That is one of our grievances.

Secondlic, Another is, that there has bene keiped and authorized some other Assemblies, that [were] both of wrong constitutions, and did bring innovations contrare to the order established in this Church and Kingdome—namelic, Assemblies at Linlithgow, Glasgow, Aberdeine, St Andrewes, Perth: and

The third cause, as I remember, is, that the Kirk hes bein prest with the Five Articles of Perth, and no small grieffe brought these to the subjects which their consciences was thralld to doc. These things they knew, and we have found to be contrare to the Confession of our Faith: and

The fourth is, that we have beine prest (which also your Grace will remember) with a Service Booke, Booke of Cannons, and High Commission—the Service Booke, not only for the frame of it being Popishe, drawing us away from the spiritual maner of serving our Lord, wherein everie man should speake to God according to his present neid and seuse, and not to be tyed and speake he wotes not what, but, besides, the containing many seids of idolatrie and grosse superstition: the Booke of Cannons, appoynting offices that God never ordained to be thrust into the house of God, contrare to this State, and raising up a tirranie in Prelats that is unsupportable either by reason or any other way: and the High Commission, confounding judicatories, and putting the keyes of the Kingdome of Heaven in their hands, who had no power, nor any ecclesiastick office, and againe putting the civile sword in the hands of Ministers that had no interest thereunto; God having so distinguisht judicatories, giving everie man his oune employment and gifts for it, that his Kingdome should be no prejudice to the Commonwealth, and hes furnisht the Nobles, and everie member of the State, so weill, as they need not begg a Kirkman from his booke to helpe them. Beside this ill, there is the breach of our Nationall Covenant with God, and not walking holilie and tenderlie according to the same, and did not see the consequence of what, for the present, seemed little: the not taking head unto it tymouslie hes put us in this bussinesse, which is now weill enough knowne.

Sixthlic, In partiular, there is this Episcopall Governement crupten in silie, and erected without order of law, besides the Word of God, contrare the Confession of Faith and Constitutions of this Kirk, from the beginning, and the intention and meaning of the Kirk from the Reformation, who went about alwayes stryving that Kirkmen should be kept at their booke and their Masters serviee, and not stryving who should be first and highest up in Court, but who should be most godlie, most honest, and gaine moniest soules unto God, and so keip their reward till they and their Master meit.

A seventh is, The civile places of the Kirkmen—their usurpation in Assemblies as they were Lords, whereas all kynd of Lordshippis is cutt off from Ministers of his house; for he hes appoynted in his house to be only a ministrie, for that is the difference betweene his Spirituall Kingdome in the subordination of the Temporall. In the ane, all the officers are Ministers; in the other, the officers are Kings, Lords, &c.

These are the Spirituall evils which, being contrare to the Word of God, the Constitutions of this Kirk, and the Confession of Faith, what wonder they greive all honest men who hes no consolation in this world, but the hope of another? And, therefore, are they readie to expose themselves to any trouble under heaven before they quyte a poynt of their Masters honour. These are the maine causes and reasons of our setting ourselves against them; and, for our proceeding against them, we are here readie to give satisfaction to your Graee, as it shall be your Graces pleasour to ehoppe at particulars. And, as concerning the last poynt, touching His Majesties honour, recommended to ws by your Grace, we may speake tenderlie of as becomes us. It is our duetic, and we professe it, and take God to witnesse, that we make conseience in our secrete thoughts, to honour His Majestie; for we know our religion cannot endure civile Magistrats to get any wrong; for in wronging of him we wrong Him that sent him, and cledd him with power, and sett him on his throne; and so we are so farre from not following of that, that in privat and secrete we professe that we darre not but make conseience of it. No, no; religion gives them their owne but ours, for Popperie toppes them over: but doe one thing to ws. Let us give Christ the highest rounce, and nothing that may honour or pleasure Kings, but we shall altogither doune at their feete with it.

The Commissioner answered—I told yow, Sir, that I did so speake as that it might suffer corrections, and did remember very shortly the causes of our distractions, and I should wishe them never to be remembered without great thankfulnes to God and the King for freeing us of them; yea, I wishe everie thing that hes brought thinges to that height of divisions amongst ourselves might be forgotten. Neither yet, in my last speach, did I give my opinion and adviee, out of doubting of the performance of what I wishe; for I am confident, when we rightlie consider the cariage of this bussines, and his Majesties goodnes beyond our expectation, it shall be ane argument to move us to repay the same with thanksgiving. I told yow, as I remember, that the Kings Majestie, upon the frequent Petitions of his Subjects, conceived such and such thinges to be the occasion of the illes, and of all that had followed on them; and, therefore, upon our desires, concluded that this Assembly should be kept at this tyme, to the end it might be rightlie considered whether or not these illes were the occasions of these thinges that have fallen furth, as was pretended by the Supplications of the Subjects.

The Moderatour answered—Please your Grace: We have considered, and maturelie considered, and done our youe most for clearing [that] thir our grievances were justlie against all these, and nothing els; and here we are readie to give satisfaction to all who doubts it.

The Commissioner answered—Truelie, I should be desyrous to be satisfied in some particulars, if it might not possiblie breid ane opinion in some that I should take upon me to dispute or argue with such learned men as I know would appeare if I should take upon mo so to doe, as if I desire Episcopacie, so oft alleadged to be against the constitutions of this Kirk, to be eleired to be so. I believe ye shall not thinke me so presumptuous as to take upon me to dispute the matter; but to the end I may represent to my Master the reasons of it, and receive satisfaction my selfe.

The Moderatour answered—Your Graces abilitie to dispute in all such subjects is knowne sufficientlie; but it shall be verie acceptable unto us that your Grace, and espeeciallie as his Majesties Commissioner, shall propone all your doubts to us, that we may solve them: for we have said or done nothing but what may well byde the light, and we are able to convince, in reason, a reasonable man, such as your Grace is; and here, in a manner, are verie confident that the more we be put to give our reasons, the clearer our cause shall be, and we shall be able to give the more satisfaction.

The Commissioner answered—Yow have heard, and I believe your conceptions may be more particular then myne; but I believe myne differs not much from yours—first, in that it is supponed by the subjects to be the occasion of thir divisions and distractions; secondlie, neither doe we differ much about the cause of indietion of this Assemblie, which is to remove these evilles; and since yow and I agree in thir two, I would represent to your consideration, in the third place, what shall be the readiest way to give my Master satisfaction, whose desire is that these thinges being represented unto him, ye shall either find that these are the true causes, and so ought to be removed, or uther wayes a mistake, and so ought to remaine. If the true causes, and so ought to be removed, he expects a reason of all—as, for example, if ye find Episcopacie to be a true greevance and cause of offence, and therefore to be removed—if ye conclude this, ye will give a reason of all, and make it appeare to my Master to be the constitutions of this Kirk.

The Moderatour said—For removing of all thir evils, whereof ye have spoeken, there is a necessitie of the concurrence of our Lord Jesus Christ in the Kirk, and of his Vicegerent in the State; and when thir two concures, our evils shall be perfectlie cured; and if not, there will remaine a jarre now—the ane pairt being done so farre as we weak churehmen could do ministeriallie. That your Graee, as his Majesties Commissioner, may concurre with us, will be unto us verie comfortable; and for that end we are willing to give satisfaction to your Graee, and to shew that, from the first constitution of this Church, her ayme hes alwayes bein to hold out that wicked weed of Episcopacie, knowing that it was the ground of all Popperie; and in it did sitt, as in a nest, all the evils that hes overspread the face of this Kirk; and as ill weeds waxes verie weel, so from this root hes growen up many poysonable branches that hes troubled the Chureh of God, becaus Christ Jesus, being King of this Kirke, and having the statelie appointment of the government thereof, if anything be out of frame in that, it troubles the whole estate. For this cause, the Church, from the beginning hes laboured still to cutt it downo; and becaus I have rudelic exprest my rude conception, it will please some reverend brother to speake somewhat further.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone said—I conceive it not neidfull to adde to your Grace's speache, which the Moderatour hes seconded verie pertinentlie; for it seemes to be incumbent, that the supreme magistrat, when, in the churches of his dominions, any questions shall arise in matters of religion, whither it hath bein determinat before, that those that have power in Assemblies, are bound not onlie to take the same to their consideration, but also to receive in reverence his Majesties doubts, and give him satisfaction, that they and auctoritie may joyne together, the one directing and the other confirming. I thinke it out of question in the judgement of all that are acquainted with the gouvernement of the Church, that there be two sortes of church government. One is Christian and Apostolic by the Assemblies of the Church; the other is Episcopal government. And I verilie thinke so farre as ever I learned, that our Church, from the beginning, had a intention to establishe the government by Assemblies, and did proseeute it with great zeale; yet it is also evident by the ecclesiasticall historie, that the Church hath been still vexed with Episcopacie; for some Popish Bishops, renouncing Poperie, would have bein Bishops still; and I think it was more out of a desire to brooke the livings than to advance that office. First, they wer Superintendents, who got commission for visitation; and its knowne that Superintendents were no Bishops, and what reall difference was betweene them. And it is also knowne that they did neglect their function, and not good with it. Another sort of Prelats that were, or rather supposed Bishops, who brooked the benefice, but not the office, and these were called Tulchan Bishops. A third sort came in afterwards by being Commissioners to Parliament, and voters, and then ascended to that height that ye yourselves are witnesses unto. They entered as foxes, raigne as lions, and I wish they may die as Christians. Now for the warrands of this Church against this Episcopall function. I hope these that are acquainted with the registers of the Church will find them cleare; and if your Grace doubt of the auctoritie of them, we thanke God that we have this occasion to give your Grace satisfaction.

The Moderatour craved libertie to expone what was meant by Tulchan Bishops. It was a Scotts word, used in their commoun language. When a kow will not let doune her milk, they stappe the calves skin full of strae, and setts doune before the kow, and that was called a Tulchan. So these Bishops brookeing the title and the benefice without the office, they wist not what name to give them, and so they called them Tulchan Bishops—(at which the Assembly laughing heartilie)—The Moderatour said—Their follies were worthie to be laughen at in this Generall Assembly.

Mr Andro Ramsay being desired to speake, said—That which hath the beginning of it from man and is of humane institution—that which hath beene destructive of the discipline of the Kirk—that which hath beene introductorie of Poperie, superstition, and idolatrie, and antichristianisme, and the barr of all good reformation,—justlie for thir reasons ought to be cast out of this Church; but I am able to qualifie that Episcopacie is such: therefore, for these reasons, it ought to be cast out of the Church, and can never come in againe.

The Commissioner declaired that he was not desirous that they should fall upon any scholastic dispute. It was only to represent to their consideration how farre these that have gone before us in the reformation, hath found it contrare to the constitution of this Church, that hath ever beine the ground of all your Petitions.

In reading of the Acts, it was questioned whither the Clerk should begin at the year 1560 or at the year 1580.

The Commissioner said—It seemes that this worke have had its beginning from the 1560 year of God, and hath had a continuall progresse ane way or other ever since; and I believe Mr Archbald [Johnston the Clerk] is not so ill versed, but without much looking on his booke he could deduce all the Acts either the one way or the other.

The Earle of Argyle urged that, becaus the Confession of Faith was at first subscribed 1580, they would begin at that tyme.

My Lord Lowdown said—It is true that Act in 1580 is the maine Act against Episcopacie, yet becaus there is a word in it, "as it was then used," &c. : therefore the case of it as it was then used, would be made cleare in the preceeding years 1560, 1575, 1576, 1577, 1578, &c. ; for in all these yeares, Episcopacie came still under consideration: first, before they came to the office itselfe, they came to the corruptions of it, ane whereof was—they assumed to themselves titles and dignities: secondlie, they meddled with civile places: thirdlie, they usurped power and præ-eminencie over their brethren: fourthlie, they confounded offices civill and ecclesiasticall: fifthlie, that they had more rents then was competent to churehmen, and was only employed for their owne pompe and grandour. All thir at that tyme were corruptions; whatever was above a pastor over a particular flock—so that being condemned in the 1580, the compairing of it with the anterior Acts makes it cleare, and so it is follie for men to object that that Act against Episcopacie was but only against that dependencie that it had from the Pope: for its cleare that they call aue Protestant Bishope above a pastor of a particular flocke was chapped at: and take this from them and let them sie what remaines of that office? Then when it was condemned out of the Church of Scotland as having nothing adoe there—as wanting warrand from the Word of God, in place of it, with consent of auctoritie, Presbyteriall government was sett doune; and [in one] of the last Acts of ane and the same Assembly 1581—"whither there was a totall abolition of Bishops in the Assembly at Dundee, 1580"—the Assembly answered, that both the name and office was totallie abolished, and then the Presbyteriall government put in the place of it, and the discipline sworne unto, wherein is clearlie sett doune what offices was esteemed lawfull; whereof Episcopacie is none, but immediatelic before condemned: so that the connexion between 1574, 1581, is so cleare, when the ane is put out as wanting warrand from the Word, and the other put in as having warrand, and that discipline sworne unto—that I thinke there is many here would be glad of ane occasion to cleare the matter by dispute to your Graces satisfaction. And becaus his Majestie was not pleased, at our last happie meeting with him, to approve some of our proceedings, it is very good reasou these grounds be cleared againe, that we may be that happie as to have the civile sanction added unto it; and, on the other hand, that it be all our cares, with that loyaltie and ductie that becomes us, and all tender respect to our Kings Majesties honour, but to maintaine the same as farre as the cheefest of these parasites that speakes his Majestie so fair.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henrysone read a testimony out of ane Epistle of Bezaes, written to Mr Lennox, dated July 12, 1572, testifying that not only was Episcopacie put out of this Kirk, but knowene to all the world to be soe.

The Commissioner said—I intend not to presse any thing but in that way that shall be satisfactorie to all; yet there are some rockes and difficulties wherein possible our Masters name is ingaged, and I wishe we may take notice of these, and stryve to come by them.

The Moderatour answered—Your Graces expression is verie good; but becaus they that know not these rockes well, cannot saill by them; if your Grace should be pleased to specifie these rockes, we should endeavour to hold off them.

The Commissioner answered—I desire so much charitie of them that heares me, as to believe that I may heare, and possibly have heard, some thinges of that consequence that they touch my instructions verie farre—not for what may concerne the bussines; therefore, I should wishe we should rather seeme to misken some thinges, rather then touching them, to make unnecessary disputes. I conceive we desire nothing but peace and trueth: therefore let us take a course to establishe these two, and whatever may hinder these, I take to be the rockes. I have so good and charitable opinion of some men, that I would yet wishe thinges were prepared by them in privat, for [fear of] mistakes; for some thinges may very possible escape some men here that I cannot sit heir but make answer in a way that I have not as yet. I desired yesterday to speake with the Moderatour, and I believe he understands me and I him better then we did; and, therefore, I say over againe, for feare of mistakes, I should wishe that everie thing [be] now prepared and consulted betwixt me and the Moderatour, with some other wise and honourable Members of the Assembly, and not proponed in publiet till it were thus prepared.

The Moderatour answered—If it might please your Grace, so farr as I conceive, there needed no preparation, but only the expression of it by a mouth that well can, such as your Grace is.

The Commissioner answered—I shall but represent to your consideration, if God may blesse this meeting with so happie a conclusion—and I thinke there is no Christian but they will thiuk it happie to see King and People goe all one way—that the Kings Commissioner, by the warrand he hath from his Master, sitt here to the end of this meeting, and consent to everie thing shall be done in it; and in the Parliament, to adde the civile sanction unto it. I take it to be granted as all our desires; if, then, we can light upon the way how to make it evident by reason, that these particulars which I have bluntlie and rudelie expressed, our Master hath conceived, the Moderatour farre better expressed to be the true causes of all our greevances; if, I say, we can light upon such Aets and Constitutions as may serve us in this, I thinke there is no more to be done. I desire and hopes it shall offend none, that I conjure yow, everie one in your stations, Nobles, Peires, and worthies of the land, and yow of the Ministrie—if it be lawful to conjure such a reverend company—to take to heart, that the King will doe all that may secure us of our feares. Only let us be tender of his Majesties honour, and not make unnecessarie breakes, nor marre that thanks that is due to him. Lett us not put him to it in shaddowes, for we shall have the substance.

Argyle said—For the affection and desire of this honourable Assembly, to give his Majestie all satisfaction, your Graee needs not to call in question; and for eschewing any rocke in clearing the Constitutions of the Kirk, lett the clerk be charged upon his fidelitie to his Master, that he read nothing but what is contained in the Acts, and in the Confession of Faith.

The Commissioner urged that all further meddling with it might onlie be delayed till 4 a clocke in the afternoone.

Lowdown said—Delayes are verie unpleasant; and, in suspitious mynds, breeds many jealousies; yet becaus it is ane cause of the meeting of this full and free Assemblie, to give full satisfaction to our Kings Majestie, it seems very reasonable that we take some tyme to agrie upon the best way it may be done, that both his Majestie may be best contented, and in such a way as it derogat nothing from the liberties of the Kirk.

The Commissioner said—The gravitie of this bussines we are about, should not, I thinke, stand upon dayes, farre lesse houres.

It was condescended by the members of the Assembly, that till 4 a clocke in the afternoone should be spent in consultation in the great Kirk among the Commissioners, of the best meanes how the Kings Majestie should get best satisfaction of all their proceedings, and with all the liberties of the Kirk preserved.

The Clerk produced ane of the bookes of the Assembly, which he had gotten from Mr John Rigg, and desired that it might be cognosed upon, whether it wer authentick. The Kings Advocat declairaed that he had perused the booke, and knew it to be Grayes hand writt, becaus that same subscription is at divers of his extracts.

To meet at 4 a clocke.

Sess. 5.—At 4 a cloeke in the afternooue.

Episcopacie proced unlawfull, with the Service Booke, Booke of Cannons, &c.

After prayer the Moderatour said—Please your Grace, I was using diligence in searching out wayes how to behave ourselves, and finds all peaceable and modestlie disposed; and when we had thought upon all mids, we could sie nane, but that way onlie of his Majesties justice and goodnes, which pleaseth his Majestie to walk in. It is knowne that his Majestie refused to authorize our contraverted Assembly at Glasgow, neither can we urge the same, seeing his Majestie hes not gotten cleernes, and is not here personallie present to receave satisfaction, we can urge no farther. Againe his Majestie, out of that justice, did not urge his subjects to passe from that Assembly, becaus he knew they were tyed by so many bands; and soe we resolve to walke through betweene thir two rockes as circumspectlie as we can, and not touching any of them, but keepe our distance betwixt both; and, therefore, I expect that this whole Assembly to walke verie tenderlie in so great a bussines that coucernes the great honour of our great and graceous King Jesus, and the tender honour of our good and graceous King Charles.

The Commissioner said—These roekes that I have feared, yow have discovered, and yow are best able to go by them.

The Moderatour answered—I hope we are neare by the straites of them.

The Clerk proceeded to the reading of the Constitutions of the Kirk, beginning at the year 1575 and so furth.

The Clerk said—Please your Grace, thir two goes on still together; some Acts against Episcopacie, and other Acts, establishing the Booke of Policie, wherein not only Episcopacie is abjured, but the government of the Kirk by four office-bearers, Pastors, Doctors, Elders, and Deacons, sworn unto; and so furth continuallie, from the 1575 to the 1579. And the Booke of Policie is established. There are about 9 or 10 Assemblies conveened, onlie for the treating of the policie of the Kirk; and when they conveened they appoynted that the articles that were to be dispute at the next Assembly, should be dispute in every Presbyterie and Kirk-Session, that when they came to the next Assembly they might come with the better advysement. And, as he was proceeding in reading,

The Commissioners Grace said he was satisfied to the full, and, therefore, he needit not proceed any further.

The Moderatour said—Your Grace sees how undeservedlie we are calumniat, and what good grounds we had for all our proceedings at Glasgow.

The Commissioner said—I wishe we may proceed weill now, and that all our actions be such as may anwer for themselves.

The Clerk proceeded on in the reading.

The Commissioner desired that all these evils that were the grievances might be voiced together, and included under one Act, which the Assembly acquiesced unto.

The names of these that were to preach on the Sabbath, &c.

Sess. 6.—August 16. IIora nona.

After prayer, the Moderatour asked if the Commissioners Grace had anything to say concerning these seven evils, that hath so greatlie troubled this Kirk, which have been represented unto your Grace.

The Commissioner answered—I was desirous that yow, with some of your brethren, should take the paines to come to me yesternight, that so we might conceive a way how to order our carriage, that, both in voicing and conceaving of the Acts, it might be so done as I might be satisfied, and my Master also, wherein I fand a great deal of satisfacione. The first thing which yow offered to your consideration, to be the occasion of these illes, was Episcopacie. My Master was pleased at the Campe to say so far, that if it could be made appeare to him, (notwithstanding of his owne inclination and opinion, which his breeding and the Kirk of Scotland [England] doth possiblie give him of Episcopacie,) by the Assembly of the Kirk, that it was contrare to the Constitutions of this Church, he commanded me, not only to concurre with yow, but to doe all that could be expected from so good and graceous a King, both by my consenting to it, and ratifieng it in Parliament. I was desirous that course might be taken, how all our proceedings might be grounded upon reason; and upon this ye were pleased to cause read the Constitutions of the Kirk, and I, by the Clerks paines, and uther helps that I have gotten, and by that that passed amongst us yesterday in privat, am satisfied, and I believe ye know all, what conelusion I would make—that I desire to be taken pro confesso: onlie I did represent to their consideratien, whether they should be conceaved all in one Act, or to voice them severallie.

The Moderatour said—There can be no questions amongst us who would eschue the rockes we spock of yesterday; but it will be satisfactorie unto us if there be one Act past heir and ratified in Parliament, and this, as we conceive, will be the best way to keepe us off rockes.

The Moderatour desired the Clerk to proceed in reading the rest of the Aets and Constitutions of the Church.

The Commissioner answered—It is not necessary for yow to proceed any further, except it be for the satisfacione of some of yourselves, for I tell yow I am satisfied; and, in his Majesties name, will consent to the Act against these things.

The Moderatour said—We acknowledge his Majesties bountie and goodnes in so doing. We desyre to give declaration of our reasonable desires and proceedings, that it may be seene all is directed to us for these reasons. Therefore it is expedient that all our reasons and grounds to proceed against these evils be read and make manifest.

The Commissioner said—When we shall consider of thir things that were established by law—when we shall consider that some of them were practised in his Majesties fathers tyme, a wise and religious Prince, and never questioned till now—I hope it shall move us to thinke more of his Majesties goodnes, who hes a greater eare of our contentment then we could have expected.

The Clerk proceeded in reading the Reasons and Acts against the Fyve Articles.

The Moderatour said—Your Grace hes heard the reasons; and as we desire to rander to his Majestie, humble and heartie thanks for discharging these illes, so we desire that these reasons and grounds of our lawfull proceedings may be shouen to his Majestie, that it may be made evident to his Majestie and to all the world, that we have beene very reasonable in all our proceedings, and especially at Glasgow, which they have so much traduced to his Majestie.

Sessio. 7.—[August 17.]

After prayer, the Clerk proceeded in reading the reasons of the nullities of the six late pretendit Assemblies, which was confirmed by the testimony of many old and reverend men in the ministerie, who had beene at these Assemblies, standing up and testifying the same; likewise the reasons for condemnning the Service Booke, Booke of Cannons, Booke of Ordination, and High Commission, were publictlye red.

The Commissioner still urged that it was not neidful to read more, except it were for the satisfaction of some of their owne number. It was answered, the Assemblie did esteeme themselves bound of duetie to make knowne the reasons of all their proceedings for the satisfaction of his Majestie. After all were read,

The Moderatour said—We have now cleared sufficientlie the reasons of all our proceedings, trusting that your Grace will signifie the same to his Majestie, and desires likewise that the evile sanction may be added to it; and, therefore, that we may conclude somewhat, it seemes necessar that so much as is bygone may be drawne up in ane Act. The Assembly, with consent of the Commissioners Grace, appoynted a Committie to goe about the framing of the Act, that when it came before the Assembly it might be put to voicing with all diligence; namely, Ministers—Masters Andro Ramsay, Harry Rollock, James Bonar, Andro Cant, Robert Blair, David Lindsay, Robert Douglas; Nobles—Cassiles, Lowthiane, Balmerino, Lowdown; Barrons—Cavers, Auldbar, Keir; Burgesses—John Smith in Edinburgh, Provost of Dundie—to meit at the Clerks Chamber, after the dissolving of the Assembly, about the framing of the Act.

The Commissioner desired their way of conceaving it might be shoven to him, that he might come the better prepared against the morrow; further, craved libertie of the Assemblie, to depairt for that night for some important affaires, in respect there was nothing materiall to be handlit that night, and the Assembly might spend an houre or two in hearing of some particular billes without him, and promised to returne tomorrow at 9 a cloeke.

Imprimis, presented to the Assembly a Supplication from the toune of Leith for the transportation of Mr James Scharpe, minister at Govan in the Presbitrie of Glasgow, to the Kirk of Leith, vacaut through the deposition of Mr William Wischart. The Assemblie referred the bille to the Presbitrie of Glasgow, to consider till the morne.

A Supplication from Air for transportation of Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Fergushill to Air; for the transportation of Mr Robert Blair to St Andrewes. Because of Mr Johnes unwillingnes, he was ordained to prepare his reasons against another Session.

A Supplication from the Universitie, Presbitrie, and Toune of Glasgow for the transportation of Mr David Dickson, present Moderatour, from Irwing to Glasgow; and because there was ane hote contestation like to arise thereabout, between the Commissioners of Irwing with my Lord Eglintoune, and the Commissioners of Glasgow, the Assembly appoynted a committie for hearing of both parties, my Lord Argyle, Mr James Bonar, James Hamiltoun, Robert Blair, John Hone, Samuell Rutherford.

The Assemblie appoynted a committee for considering of overtures to be given in to the Assembly; viz., Ministers—Mr Robert Murrey, &c.; Nobles—Yester; Barrones—Auldbar, &c.; Burrowes—Clerk of Dundie, &c., to meet at Kinghornes house, to morrow, at two afternoone, for the overtures: And so, after thauks giving, the Assembly dissolved.

Sessio 3.—Hora nona. August 17—die Saturnia.

After incalling upon the name of God, there was a letter presented to the Assembly from the some tyme preteudit Bishop of Orkney, testificing his repentance and dimission of that pretendit office. The tenour followes, [vide Acts, p. 204]:—

After the reading of the said recantation, the Moderatour thanked God who had extorted a testimony out of the mouth of a man who once was ane overseer, &c. I wishe all the rest might take the lyke course.

The Moderatour said—Your Grace remembers that there were appoynted a number of Ministers, with some other worthie members of this Assemblie, upon a Committie for framing of ane Act upon these thinges that went before in this Assembly, wherein such paines have bein taken as we trust now all the scruples of all the members of the Assembly shall be removed, that so they may behave themselves in every thing incumbent to them as good Christians and good subjects, and we hope to have the consent of the Commissioners Grace to what we doe heir; because his Grace hath heard, being a man of understanding, the equitie of our cause, and hath warrand from His Majestie that what he shall find right and reasonable in this Assemblie to give his assent unto it here, and to ratifie it in His Majesties name in the insuing Parliament.

Mr Andro Cant, having a strong voice, was desired to read the Act, the tenor whereof followes— [vide Act, p. 204]:—

After the reading of the said Act, the Moderatour desired Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone to speake his judgment of it.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> answered—I will not make any discourse, but only tell my owne particular judgment, and I would wishe that anie here who hes any scruples concerning the Act, that they would propone them; for I love rather to satisfie any mans doubts of it, than to fall in any other discourse at this tyme. And for my selfe, it is also joyfull a day as ever I was witness unto, and I hope we shall feede upon the sweit fruites heirafter.

Mr Andro Ramsay being desired to speake, said—I am fullie satisfied, and hes no doubts but ane, that we come short of thanksgiving to our God.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Somervell, des red to give his judgment, said—I cannot testifie the joy that the hearing of that Act breids in my soule. My heart so abounds with it when I consider the former griefes and troubles of this poore Kirk, and what a gracious change is now come in, and albeit some heir have some unnecessar scruples, I thinke they have reason to tredd upon them; and in respect they heare the matter so well coneluded, and such a comfortable successe likelie to follow, it may make us all ashamed to entirtaie scruples, but rather studie to randar thanks to our graecious Lord, and wishe all happinesse to King Charles.

Mr Hary Rollock, being next called upon, said—There is nothing left for me to say; only I thinke surely we may reckon ourselves to be like these that dreame; for who would have thought within these few yeares to have heard in any convention of the Kirk of Scotland, such ane Act as this so publictlic read, and hopefull to be made a law in the Church: and these that knowes the difficulties that this poore Church hes laboured under, may justlie in this respect, thinke this day a beginning of joyfull dayes, and I am confident that all that hes ane tender eye to the good of this Church, are wakened with a sweet sunsehyn day, above the darke cludy dayes that past before: and I hope all of us shall studie to testifie our thankfulnes to God, and to acknowledge the goodnes of our gracious King, who is pleased to witness himselfe so loving to his subjects.

Old Mr John Row next called upon, with teares, said—I blesse, I glorifie, I magnifie the God of heaveu and earth, that hes pittied this poore Church, and given us such matter of joy and consolation; and the Lord make us thankfull, first to our graecous and loving God, and next obedient subjects to his Majestie, and to thank his Majesties Commissioner for his owne part.

Old Mr John Ker said—I thanke the Lord who hes removed our evilles and feares, and with my heart acknowledges his Majesties goodnes, and gives thanks to his Majesties Commissioner.

Mr James Martine, called on, said—I doe acknowledge that wonderfull hes beine the love and care of God towards this poore kirk and land, and that all of us had enlarged hearts for praise, and open mouthes to expresse the joy of our heart.

The Moderatour said—Our joy is not yet full; but I hope, ere this Assembly close, our joy shall be more perfect.

Mr John Weymes, called on, could scarce get a word spoken for teares triekling doune along his gray haire, like droppes of rain or dew upon the toppe of the tender grasse, and yet withall smylling for joy, said—I doe remember when the Kirk of Scotland had a beautifull face. I remember since there was a great power and life accompanying the ordinances of God, and a wonderfull worke of operation upon the hearts of people. This my eyes did see—a fearfull defection after, proeured by our sinnes; and no more did I wishe, before my eyes were closed, but to have seene such a beautifull day, and that under the conduct and favour of our Kings Majestie. Blessed for ever more be our Lord and King Jesus; and the blessing of God be upon his Majestie, and the Lord make us thankfull!

The Moderatour said—I believe the Kings Majestie made never the heart of any so blythe in giving them a bishoprick, as he hes made the heart of that reverend man joyfull in putting them away; and I am persuaded if his Majestie saw you shedding teares for blythnes, he should have more pleasure in yow, nor in some of these that he hes given great thinges unto.

Old Mr John Bell in Glasgow said—My voice nor my tongue cannot expresse the joy of my heart to see this torne downe Kirk restoired to her beautie. The Lord make us thankfull! Lord blesse his Majestie and Commissioner! Alace! nothing is inlaiking but thankfullnes.

Old Mr W<sup>m</sup> Livingston being called on said—I thinke of the many corrupt Assemblies that hath biene in this Church since the Reformation, I have [not] beene absent for fear of them, except when I was confyned. I saw them and the eorruptions of them; and when I consider of them within this thrie year, I would have beene content to have erupten on my knies to Aberdene, to have seene such an Assembly as this. And now I have seene it, and blesse the Lord for it, and begges the blessings from heaven upon our graceous Sovereigne.

The Moderatour said—Would God the Kings Majestie had a pairt of our joy that we have this day!

The Moderatour desired if any of the Assembly had any scruple to propone, they would now doe it before the matter come to voicing. Further, he asked the Commissioners Grace if he had anything to say, or any scruple to propone before voicing.

The Commissioner answered—I sall only, before I give my voice, desire this Assembly to remember the courses of all this bussinesse, as I have somewhat confusedly exprest before; and I believe my way of expression gives some ground of jealousies. I told you that notwithstanding my Masters ounc inclination and breeding in a church where Episcopall government is allowed, yet such is his care to satisfie the desire of all his good subjects, that he hes indicted this free Assembly where this is to be considered of; and if it be found by this Assembly to be such as hath beene expressed in your petitions, papers, and urtherwayes, I am eommanded to give my consent to the Act of this Assembly against it; and, therefore, my voice must be speired last, though I may read in all your faces, and by the speaches of these reverend men, what shall be the voice of the Assembly.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henrysone said—Becaus Generall Assemblies are expresst in the Aet, but not Provinciall or Presbyteriall, therefore the Commissioners Grace would declair his consent unto these; to which the Commissiouer acquiesced.

The rolles were called, and it was desyred that the word should be “agries,” or “disagries” to the Act.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Kerse, being first called on, said—How unreasonable this unluckie bird of Episeopacie is to be brought doune, and here to be slaughtered, is not necessar to give epithets unto, if we will but eonsider that the four Bishops (if we may eall them lawfullie) established in this kingdome, which are full of abilitie and power, and nothing can escape them! We have our Church Sessions, Presbitries, Synodall Assemblies, and such a famous Generall Assembly as this, that may be suffieient to prove and show the experience of this Government that now happilie is to be fullie established in this kingdome; for there [is] not so much as a little cockle or darnell of perverse or hereticall doctrine that shall spring up but presentlie it shall be cutt doune, and trodd at under, according to the saying, vitium convocacionis in tribus, digentur in quarto, which is true heir; and, if it escape two or thrie, it shall not misse the fourth. If it shall happen to escape Sessions, Presbitries, and Synodall Assemblies, it will happilie be digested and concocted in such a famous Assemblie as this; and now happilie these poisonous weeds that have oppressed the stomach of this Kirk are now to be spued out: and here, for this poynt, I give this Episcopacie an eternum vale! As for the Articles of Perth, and these pretended Assemblies, they are dead it is true, and appearandlie this is the day of their buriall. I am sorie they should have gotten such a fair day lent. For me, I mynd to give them no funeral sermon. But there is ane thing Solomon tells us, “I have seene the wicked dead, and rise againe.” We have need, verilie, to hold them doune, that they revive no againe. As for the Service Booke, it eondemns itselie. It carries the Anti-Christian markes, and a reall practising of that which the Jesuits doth preach; and, (being interrupted, he said,) therefore I abjure it, and agries to the Act.

All the rest of the Assembly, in ane voice, (not ane contrare,) did approve and agrie unto the Act.

The Commissioner being desired to give his voice, said—I believe, for formes sake, I may give it, but materiallie I have given it already. I have often told you that my Masters pleasure was, that Episcopacie should be found by this Assembly to be such as they had alledged in their petitions and papers, (which is now unanimouslie found by this Assembly to be such,) that I should both consent unto and ratifie the same. And I shall neid to say no more in this. But if there hes bein any jealousies or feares, I hope now they shall be removed; and it becomes yow best, who are of the Ministerie, to remove them; and not only to make your people sensible of his Majesties goodnes, to render to him his due thanks—I meane the humane part of it; for the praise is due to God, who hes so disposed of his heart, and it is his ounc act and goodnes: yet, when we eonsider our Masters inclination and breeding, I hope we shall thinke the lesse tho’ we find greater difficulties then we could have wished againe these that have beene his Majesties good informers and instruments in working of this worke, we must not forget them, but thinke that we owe them a great deall of thanks. If any thinke that I eonceave any of this due to me, I protest nothing at all, for I act nothing but the part of an echo, and this employment came upon me by my Lord Hamiltons worke; and if ye knew what I know him to have beene—a faithfull, carefull, and painfull agent in this busines. I speake it not to derogat from my Masters thanks, but that every instrument should have their aune aeknowledgement: and for my voice, I approve the Act.

The Moderatour said—We blesse the Lord, and thanke King Charles, and doe pray for the prosperitie of his throne, and constancie of it, so long as the Sun and Moone indures; and thankes be to all good instruments! And since your Grace is pleased to name the Marquis of Hamilton as a speciall instrument, we are glad—looking upon him as a man standing on a steeple head on his on foote betweene his misinformed Master and his native Countrie—to give him a favourable construction. I am confident that this dayes worke hath made the impression of his Majesties goodnes, who hath come over his oune birth and breeding, to give his subjects contentment, so deeplie to be rooted and stamped, that it shall not easillie be taken out of our hearts againe. And I expect yow all, according to the place ye have put upon me, especiallye yow of the Ministrie, to doe your best in giving evidence of your good service to God in furthering of the Kings subjects to thinke, speake, and cary furth affection towards him, and as he deserves at our haud. And let these that are to preache the morne expresse themselves soduetifullie, that neither the Lord of Heaven want his glorie, nor King Charles his oune due praise, and instruments may have their place, and all may be partakers of our joy; for albeit our joy be not yet full, yet we have conceaved good hopes that ere we sunder it shall be; for the which cause, we will make requcast for your Grace that there be nothing inlaiking which may fulfill our joy.

The names of the Ministers that were to preach [not mentioned.]

To meet on Monunday, at 9 a clocke—hora nona.

[Sess. 9.—August 19.]

After in calling upon the name of God, there was a Letter produced from the sometyme pretendit Bishop of Dunkell, showing his unfained grieffe and sorrow of heart for undertaking that unlawfull office of Episcopacie; and withall most humblye craving pardon of God and the Kirk of Scotland, together with a formall dimission of that pretendit office; aeknowledging the late Generall Assembly at Glasgow, and all the constitutions thereof; swearing never to meddle directlie nor indireetlie with that pretendit office any more; whereof the tenor follows:—

Be it known to all men, I, Alex<sup>r</sup> Leslie, Minister at St Andrewes: Forasmuch as I, by my misivive letteris sent by me to the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, holden at Glasgow, the 21 of Nov<sup>r</sup> 1638, last bypast, doe frielie submitt myselfe, dimitt, and lay doune at the fecte of the said Assemblie, my pretendit office of Episcopacie as pretendit Bishop of Dunkell, and by my Letters promised to subseryve what ample forme of dimission thereanent these Assemblies should preseryve: and now the said reverend Assembly hath found and declaired the said office of Episcopacie, as it hath beene termed and used within the said Clurche of Scotland, to be abjured by the Confession of Faith of the said Kirk, subscribed in the yeares of God 1580, 1581, and 1590; and, therefore, decerne the said office to be removed out of the said Kirk of Scotland. As also, seeing the said reverend Assembly hath decerued me, according to my said Letter, to subseryve a more ample form of dimission of my said pretendit office, in the presenee of Sir John Moncreiffe of that Ilk, Baronet—Mr Robert Murray, Minister of Meffen—Mr John Robertson, Minister at Perth—Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Petrie, Minister at Rynd—and Thomas Durhame, Burgess at Perth—Commissioners appoynted by them for that effect: therefore, for performance of my said Letter, and in obedience to the ordinance of the said reverend Assemblie, Witt ye me to have demitted, quytclaimed, and simpliciter overgiven, lykeas I now, in the presenee of the said Commissioners, frielic demitt, quytelaim, and simpliciter overgive the foresaid pretendit office of Episcopacie as pretendit Bishop of Dunkell, with the whole title, style, name, and dignitie thereof, power of ordination and jurisdiction, voicing in Parliament, and all usurpation of the same in tyme coming, and faithfullie promitts, and by these presents binds and oblisse me, never to exerce nor use the said pretendit office in the said Church of Scotland, nor no power of ordination, jurisdiction, voicing in Parliament, neither any other power ecclesiasticall belonged, usurped, and acclaimed to belong to the said pretendit office; lykeas, according to the Aet of the said reverend Assemblie, I aeknowledge the said office of Episcopacie to be abjured in the Confession of Faith foresaid: And, therefore, most justlie ought to be removed out of the said Church of Scotland, and the whole premises I heartilie aeknowledge, as I shall answer to God at the great day. In testimony whereof, I have subscribed these presents with my hand; likeas, for further securitie, I am content that these presents be insert and registrat in the Generall Bookes of the Assemblie, therein to remaine ad futuram rei memoriam. And to that effect Constituts my lawfull procurators, conjunctlie and severallie, promitten de rato, &c. In witness whereof, (written be Robert Reidheugh, servant to Patrick Rosse, nottar in Perth,) I have subserivit the same with my hand, as said is, at St Andrewes the 24 of Januar, 1639 yeares, before these witnesses Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Paterson, and Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Dundie, Student in Perth, and George Boiswell, Servitour to the said Sir John Moncreiffe.

A Supplication of the Toune of Edinburgh for transportation of Mr Samuel Rutherford, Minister at Anwith, and Mr Robert Douglas, Minister at Kirkealdie, to Edinburgh, presented in face of the Assemblie; and to eschue all contestations and alterations likelie to arise, (by reason of the violent opposition of the forsaid Ministers, and no lesse violent persute of the foresaid supplicants,) if the same should presentlie have bein taken to the Assemblies consideration, therefore did appoynt a Committie for hearing of the reasons of them both, and preparing the same for the Assemblie, viz., Ministers: Mr James Bonar, &c.

The Supplication of the Toune of Air for Mr John Fergushill being againe given in to the Assemblie, the Committie was desired to reporte their diligence thereanent. Their answer was, they had heard the parochiners of Uchiltrie, and though they had a great love to their pastor, yet if the Assembly fand that it might condee much to the good of the publick that he should be transported to Air, they would submitt.

The Commissioner urged that their transportation of Ministers that way might not be prejudiciall to the Patrons right.

Mr James Bonar answered—The stipend of Air was not a benefice but a modified stipend.

My Lord Argyle said—The Assemblie may give way to his transportation, and decerne him to be capable thereof.

The Commissioners Grace desired that if the voices of the Assembly were for him to goe to Air, it might be conceaved that they fand the said Mr John capable of transportation, and gife the Patron give his consent, decernes him to be Minister of Air.

Mr Robert Eliots supplication for libertie of transportation, referred baek to his Presbitrie.

To meit to morrow at 9 a clocke.

Sess. 10.—August 20. Twysday—Hora nona.

After prayer, the Supplication of the Toune of Glasgow being againe presented to the Assemblie for the transportation of Mr David Dieksone, present Moderatour, from Irwing to Glasgow, he desired Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone to moderat till that parte was discussed, requesting the Assembly hold their eyes single upon the glorie of God and good of the publick, in respect he had casten the conclusions of his mynd upon the determination of the Assembly.

The Committie appoynted for hearing all reasons and preparing of them for the Assembly, being desired to reporte their diligence, gave in with the reasons of the Toune of Irwing why the said Mr David should not be transported, with the answers of the Towne of Glasgow to these reasons, together with the replies of the Toune of Irwing to these answers, and the duplyes of the Toune of Glasgow to these replies—all which, with many other powerful and persuasive reasons, delyvered by mouth of Mr Robert Barclay and my Lord Eglintoun on the one hand, and the Commissioners of Glasgow and Ministerie on the other hand, being all publictly read and heard to the full, the matter was putt to voiceing.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Carse, being first in the roll, said—Ye have to consider—erit judicium, res erit in effectum. Yet when the affection hath any reasonable censure of judgement, it is dispensible with. What heartie affection we affect that noble Earle who hes interest in our Moderatour—not for any personall or partial respect, yet in such sort that next unto God who upon the Mount was scene—next unto the Kings Majestie, who made us heare the voice of joy, we owe ourselves to these worthie Nobles; and such by mediation have beene instruments to procure our happinesse. Therefore, for my oune judgement, it were a hard case to remove a tree thus well grounded and faithfull, but keeping it still that it may bring forth more fruite. Therefore I voice for Irwing.

The roll being called, the voices for Irwing exceeded the voices for Glasgow about the number of 24.

The Committie for Reportes were desired to give in their diligence to the Clerk, that particular notice might be taken of their proceedings.

The Commissioner said—You remember at our first entrie to this Assemblie, we layd all doune a conclusion for eschueing of rockes—to witt—either the mentioning or prejudging the Assemblie of Glasgow; and I conceive some processes that have been deduced against some Ministers for whom numbers of Supplications are presented to me, that their case may be represented to this Assemblie; for as I desire that these whose cases are so considerable may be taken to heart, so, on the other part, whosoever shall be found by this Assembly to deserve such sentences as have beene past against them, I shall consent unto it willinglie: for as I desire to eschue the one rocke, so would I have yow holden off the other. Therefore, I shall represent to your consideration if it shall not be fitt that there be some of this number from all corners of this Kingdome, where thir men live, who hath beene processed, and doth now supplicat, that may meit in privat with me; and it may be, when particulars are considered by us, we fall upon some mids which both may satisfie this Assemblie as eschue such rockes as hitherto we have shuned.

The Assemblie said, this desire of the Commissioners Grace is most reasonable; and therefore did appoynt that the Moderatour or Clerk of everie Commission, or, in their absence some other worthie minister, with a ruleing elder from everie ane of the severall Commissions, should meit with the Committie for Reportes, and my Lord Commissioners Grace at Kinghornes lodging.

A committie appoynted for taking up of the names of expectants, vacant churches, and deposed ministers for non conformitie, or holden out for that cause. (Ille deest.) To meit in the Assembly house at 3 a clocke in the afternoone.

To meit tomorrow at 9 a clocke.

Sess. 11.—Hora nona, Wedinsday [Aug. 21.]

The question about the alleadged adulterie of William Guarsonne pursued by a minister in the Presbiterie of Penpont, remitted to the Committie for the Billes.

The Supplication of Mr George Hannay, sometyme minister at Torphichen, but suspended for the present by a Commission, for restauration of his place; remitted to the consideration of M<sup>s</sup> Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone, Andro Ramsay, David Lindsey, John Adamsonne, Andro Abercrombie, Andro Mill, Andro Wood, Laird of Dundas.

The Toune of Edinburgh, and the Toune and Colledge of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes having presented supplications for the transportation of Mr Samuel Rutherford from Anwith to each of them, after many contestations and altercations, and the reading of the reasons of Aberdene and Edinburgh, and answers to each of them from other, and the reading of Mr Samuells owne reasons for not transportation at all from Anwith, the said Mr Samuell, by the farr greatest of the voices of the Assembly was ordained to goe to S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes to serve in the ministerie, and make such helpes in the Colledge as God shall afford him abilitie for.

Sessio 12.—To meit at 9 a clock [Aug. 22.]

After prayer, the Moderatour said—We trust that the Assemblie hath a right construction of the lazarlie proceedings of the Assemblie. The Lord was graceous unto ws this last weeke in bringing our privat businesses unto a publick and unanimous conclusion. This weeke, also, hath been spent in preparing matters for your greater satisfaction. That our proceedings may offend none, but give contentment to all in reasone, we have to doe now with the Reportes; and, becaus the particual cases of them who were processed before the severall Commissions are many, we must put difference betweene the faults and repentance of men, that none may in justice complaine, but that he is dealt justlie and moderatlie withall.

The Commissioner said—I desire that everie thing be rightlie understood, that there be no mistake betwixt his Majestie, or me his servant, and this Assemblie concerning these deposed ministers. I have already spoeken my mynd in it, and in no other termes but that the state of your processes be so taken to this Assemblies consideration, that if they be found worthie of deposition, let them be deposed. But for such of them that are only guiltie of the errour of the tyme, whereof our Master hes beene guiltie (this is an ill wealed word, but I know it is so taken) as their refusing to subscrieve to the constitutions of that controverted Assembly at Glasgow, which they have done by his Majesties speciall commandment, and according to the light of their consciences, which they thought right then, I shall only represent to the Assemblie whither or not they thinke our Master may expect from us that such ministers who for life and doctrine shall be found fitt to exercise the calling of the ministrie upon their submitting of themselves to this Assembly, to the determinations of this Kirk, should not be restored to their places? I speake it to this end; and I beseeche yow take it right, that since our Master goes so farr on our way with us in removing all the occasions of our feares, and hath appoynted to this Assembly to try whither these ministers deserves such a sentence now if they shall submit themselves to this Assembly? I only represent to your consideration, whither in some things we ought to doe that that may satisfie our Master?

The Moderatour answered—We intend equitie and moderation, that none shall have just cause to complaine. In the meantyme, because it is incumbent to this Assembly to cleare their myndes towards his Majestie, I will speak a little. I will not admitt to say so much as your Grace hath said. We will not let that much imputation to goe from us so high as to speake of guiltinesse in his Majestie, who hes not bein brought up heir. We will lay the guiltinesse upon the ministers, who should have knowne the constitutions of the Kirk of Scotland; and, therefore we heare plead that his Majesties honour may be cleared, and they seeme to be in the calk. This I speake not, but this Assembly may shew all moderation and favour to those whom his Majestie requires, in also farr as we wrong not trueth, and the libertie and constitutions of the Kirk.

The Commissioner answered—I believe the most of these men that declyned the last Assembly, they did so upon one of two grounds—either because they could not thinke lay Elders to be lawfull members of the Assembly, or because their judgment went not along with us anent Episcopacie, in both which our Masters judgment was one and the same with them. Yet now, upon their acknowledgment of their errors in these, and submitting themselves to this Assembly, I only remitt it to your consideration if yow can thinke yow should deale so strietlie with our Master, who hes condiscended so farr to our desires, that he may not expect something may be done in this, since it may be done without prejudice to the Constitutions of the Kirk whereof yow pretend yow are so tender. Therefore I desire this Assembly to consider wiselie of it, and not to be led away with your aune particulars—their spleene at these men or their affection to others whom they would have in their roume.

The Moderatour said—It is our purpose to put a difference betwixt those who have only done according to their light in these two things your Grace mentions, and betwixt those whose life and doctrine have beine scandalous, and to shew all the moderation to that sort that your Grace desires.

The Commissioner said—I believe some of the members of this Assembly, who were appoynted yesternight to speake with me, dealt so ingenuously with me as to say, that although there were many things alleadged against these ministers, yet could they not be legallie tryed, except with these things that I have alleadged; for though they were scandalous in some thinges, yet could there be no formall proces led against them. Now it is a dangerous position, that a man shall be eondemned for suspicions, because his air and the way of his carriage agries not with others. Let us looke to it; for though in their judgement they would not subserve the Covenant nor allow lay elders, yet to sentence them for that, I thinke it a dangerous rule.

The Moderatour answered—Grants to your Grace; but so purpose we to proceed that our moderation shall so appeare as your Grace shall consent als willinglie as we.

Mr Andro Ramsay said—I thinke there is no man but he will applause to your Grace in general; but as for the particulars, they who are judges can cognosee better, and upon their relation the judgment of the Assembly may rest; for, as I said yesterday, there are four causes of their removing or deprivation from their Kirks; either because they have not consented to the Acts of the Assembly, or because they have deserted their flockes, or for corruption of doctrine, or for vitiuousnes of life. The two last his Grace pleads not, but only for the first two, which I remitt to the judgment of the Assembly and thinkes it should be handlit with moderation to his Graces satisfaction.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone said—Truelie for my selfe I have no spleen against any of these Ministers, and I believe they have none at me. I have beine more blamed this tyme bygone, for that that is called moderation, than for any great vchemencie against any persone; but for that the Commissioners Grace hes beine saying, I thinke verilie there will be many that will be willing to submit themselves to the judgment and determination of the Assembly. But I should wishe that they would confesse some errors in their judgment before they submit themselves. Alwayes I thinke it is but a dabliug with untempered mortar. These that are not of the judgement of our Kirk, they will be pleased to professe themselves to be such, and then let them be conferred with and convinced. As for others againe whose judgment has gone after their affection and their affection after the world, these hes need of repentance; but I thinke they should first acknowledge that there is something done amisse, and that they have beine guiltie of some errors; and I thinke by your confession they doe great honour to God, and establishe a more perfect peace betwixt them and their brethren.

Lord Lowdown said—So many of them as have not beine present where they were processed upon, and representation of their case to this Assembly by supplication, deserves to have their proces considered of here, or some appoynted by the whole Assembly to heare them.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> said—I thinke, verilie, there should be a difference put betweene those who have not followed their practise according to the tymes then, but also hes troubled others beside them, yea, and hes run into England to doe all the ill they could there, and betwixt these who in modestie and simplicitie, so to speake, hes followed their oune judgment, thinking it to be right.

The Commissioner said—I shall only differ from Mr Alexander Hendersones opinion in this—that I believe that none of the ministers that went to England, went neither out of wantonnes, nor of a purpose of oary misinformation, but meirly out of necessitie, for not having stockes of money. I thinke were [it] not the Kings bountie they should have starved, and with what peace and securitie could they live here during the troubles of this countrie? so it was not only but fitting, but necessary that they should goe.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone said—Divers of them went to England with full purses, and others of them stayed at home in securitie; so that it is evident neither povertie nor fear made them goe out of the Kingdome.

Earle of Rothes said—I thinke, according to the order of this Kirke, which we cannot goe by—for there are cleare Acts for it—ye must take the reportes of these that have beine ou the former committies, and then it shall be fitt to eognosee of particulars according to the degries of the faults and the measure of their repentaunce; and I assert so much to the Commissioners Grace, that if these men be so free as his Grace declaires, I trow there hath beine so much moderation shawen in the Act of the deposition, that they were sought with all earnestnes and kindnes to acknowledge their mother Kirk; and I believe that some charitable disposition will remain still. But can it be thought enough that a man shall come in heir before this Assemblie, and declair that he assents unto the institutions of this Kirk, who is knowne not only to be in some things corrupt in his judgement, but disassenting from the orthodox doctrine of the Kirk of Scotlaud, and corrupted with many moe errors.

The Commissioner said—I suspect if yow looke some of your processes, you shall find litle more proven against some of them, but these thinges whereof I have spoeken, except it be some pycked quarrells. But if your Lordship and this Assembly conceaves that we can doe nothing in that but by taking in the reportes and makeing formall Acts thereupon, which is nothing but to evince what we professe to ayme at, and to fall upon those rockes which we have hitherto eschued, I doe professe that I can neither consent nor be a witness unto it. As for the second—for being of adverse judgment, I hope yow are not so cruell as absolute-ly to condemne a man for being of a contrare opinion anent Ruleing Elders or such other.

Roths said—If any man hes made a declaration to your Grace that they have beine processed for no other crymes then that, your Grace should notifie such; and I thinke the Assemblie being now conveyned, he that thinkes himsef thus wronged—that thinges have beine layd to his charge that it cannot be cleared—it should be considered by the Assemblie. As for your Graces answer to the last parte of my speach, my meaning is—not only any opinion of unlawfulness of Lay Elders, but a judgment different from the whole frame of the doctrine of our Church at the Reformation as it is now restoired, and likeways comitted Arminianisme and Poppishe tenets: and here I cannot but remember that man who, in presence of your Grace, layd some imputations against some worthie Members of this Assemblie. For my parte, I presse that this proces may be ryped up againe, and I can bear witness that that man Mr John Lindsey, sometyme Minister at Carstaires, hath beene corrupt in his judgment, hereticall in his doctrine, directlie opposite and adverse from the judgement of the Kirk of Scotland, and a maine incendiarie and enemie to the worke of reformation in this land. This shall be made good to your Grace; and if your Grace would paine yoursef with the particular, we shall cleare it to your Graces satisfaction.

The Commissioner said—I desire to eschne nothing so much as the rypeing up of the particulars that reflex upon one of zon rockes that we have hitherto eschued; and if this Assemblie will goe on to their formalitie anent these reportes which I will not dispute much against yow, yow shall force me to a protestation which I have hitherto spaired; and, therefore, I shall desire that some such motion may be made how this rocke may be eschued.

My Lord Argyle said—Beaus it may be, the Commissioners Grace spaires to speake such free language as need were, for feare of offence, and, on the other pairt, the Moderatour doeth in free termes expresse himsef for fear to light upon the other rocke, and so it may be, many of this Assembly knowes neither what his Grace nor the Moderatour would be at: therefore I represent to the Assembly that all may understand what we would be at, and I believe that soe much tyme and losse as the agitation of it in publiet would take, will suffice to cleare the matter better in privat.

To the whilk motion the Commissioners Grace and the whole Assembly did applaud, and for that effect did nominat—[not named].—Beaus the roll of their names was enlarged and given in more perfectlie the next Session, we here omitt it.*

The Supplication of the Toune of Edinburgh for the transportation of Mr Robert Douglas from Kirkcaldie to Edinburgh, was againe presented to the Assemblie; and after the hearing and reading of all reasons betweene Kirkcaldie, Mr Robert Dowglas, and the Toune of Edinburgh, the rolls were called, and the said Mr Robert Douglas was chosen Minister to Edin<sup>r</sup> by the farr greatest parte of the voices.

To met at 4 a clock in the afternoone.

Sess. 13.—Hora quarta in the afternoone.

After prayer, the Moderatour said—According as we left before noone, we have beine taking some course how exceptions may be taken away from any that would desire to carpe either at our forme or our present proceedings. As we appoint a Committie to take in the Reportes, so have we now, to facilitat our bussines—so have we now enlarged the number, and divided them againe in four Committies, for the greater accelerating of matters: viz., one for Edinburgh and Jedburgh—the 2<sup>d</sup> for Irwing and Kirkeudbright—the 3<sup>d</sup> for St Andrewes and Kirkcaldie—and, 4, for Aberdeine and Forrest.

For Edin<sup>r</sup> and Jedburgh, Mr Robert Knox, and so forth, hic deest.

The Supplication of Leith being againe presented and red in face of the Assemblie, Mr James Scharpe, Minister at Govan, was transported to Leith, with the consent of all the Assembly, none opposing.

A Complaint of ane Mr Robert Hatsone, Minister at Grange, upon ane George Jamesone, for stryking and abusing of the said Mr Robert to the indangering of his life, for no eaus but beaus the said Mr Robert had summonsd him before the Presbitrie for living in fornication, referred earnestlie and humblie to the consideration of the Commissioners Grace.

A Complaint from the Toune of Peiblis against their reader, referred to the Presbitrie.

A Supplication for the transportation of Mr Frederick Carmichaell from _____ to _____ referred to the Presbitrie.

* It is impossible to peruse this interesting debate without remarking how assiduously the Commissioner, and those to whom he was opposed in the argument, kept in the baek ground the main objection to the Assembly exercising judieial functions—namely, that it had no legal power to do so. The Assembly 1638 had not obtained the civil sanction to give any of its proceedings, or those emanating from its instructions, any legal authority—and the declarations of the Assembly 1639, confessedly by the Assembly itself, required the sanction of Parliament ere the Presbyterian Constitution could be in full and legitimate operation. It was, therefore, evidently premature and unwarrantable, to assume, at the very moment that so much anxiety was expressed for that sanction, that it already possessed that judieial character which it could not possibly derive, as an Establishment, from any other source than the supreme legislature of the country. It must be remembered that, by law, Episeopaey was still the established form of national religion; and nothing more preposterous can be conceived than the project of punishing any man merely for adhering to it.

A Bill of Forgane in Fife, for Mr David Forrests transportation, Minister at _____, referred to the Presbitric.

The Bill of Invernes against their Minister, referred to the Provincall Assemblie.

A Supplicatione for the change of the Presbitric seat of Mearnes, referred to the Committie for the Billes.

The names of these that were to preach on the Sabbath day, &c. [not given.]

The forsaid Committie to meit with my Lord Commissioners Grace in the severall roumes of the Tolbuith, to-morrow, at 6 a clocke. The Assemblie to meit at 10.

Sessio 14.—Hora decima, Friday, [23 August.]

After prayer, the Moderatour desired the four severall Committies to give in their diligence; and, first, for the north, Mr David Lindsey, Moderatour of that Committie, gave in the summe of the proces against Mr George Gordonne, which was found to have beine clearlie proven, and the Assemblie did approve the sentence of the Commission against him.

A Supplication from Mr James Sandilands, Canonist in the Kings Colledge of Aberdeine: That whereas the late Commission from the Generall Assemblie had abolished the said facultie whereof he was Professor, did therefore supplicat the Assemblie for annulling the said Act, in respect he was only cited before the Commission to be examined upon his personall carriage, and, therefore, neither had they warrand to doe further, nor he was bound to answer them in further, and that becaus there were not a sufficient quorum there present at that tyme.

The Assemblie, at the desire of the Commisioners Grace, delayed it till the next Session.

As there were some other Reports coming in, Lowdoun said—The tyme for the Assemblie is now far spent, and the Parliament approaching verie neare; and, doubtles, there are many materiall things to be done before the elosure of this Assemblie. It wer fitt that these matters be pretermitted. I shall represent this to your consideration to be thought upon. Since all of these deposed Ministers, who are desirous to be heard, are either such whose faults are so palpable grosse, that on the first view they may be scene to deserve their senteuce, these does not deserve in so short a tyme to have re-entrie to the Ministry, and so needs not to trouble the Assembly at this tyme. Others are mainly, declyning the Generall Assembly, who otherwayes are not so vitious, and who, now professing penitence, would be received upon their repentance, and the more moderatelic dealt with, that the Commissioners Grace doth now sollicite for them. Others also whose proces is more darke and intricat might be laid by at this tyme, that so, if our tymo cutt us sehort, whichever is left, it may be of thir personall matters.

To the which motion the Assemblie, with the Commissioners Graces consent, did applaud, and, for that effect, desired the severall Committies to take up a roll of these who were onlie deposed for declyning the Assemblie, and were now supplicants, and to put a difference between these and others who were more grosse in life and erroneous in doctrine; and so, matters being made cleare before they came to the Assemblie, it would facilitat the matter greatlie.

To meit at 4 afternoone.

Sess. 15.—At 4 a cloeke in the afternoone.

After prayer, the Moderatour of the Committie for Edin<sup>r</sup> and Jedburgh did report, that they had scene the Supplicationons of Mr Robert Hauliton, Minister at Lesmahago, Mr John Hamilton, Minister at Dalserff, Mr William Forbes, Minister at Campsie, Mr James Hamilton, Minister at Hamilton, and we find them of different natures—some of them exceeding humble and penitent to us, others of them nothiug so. As for Mr Robert Hamilton, the Committie thinks he is not to be suddainlie received; for he was that ingenuous as to confesse his opinion of universall grace, and said it was verie probable. And lyke wayes his error anent the matter of baptisme.

The matter being put to voiceing, the whole Assemblie, in anc voice, did allow and approve the proces and sentence given out against the said Mr Robert by the Commission.

The Commissioners Grace did so allow the same, but only as ane Act of this Assemblie.

The second Report was of Mr John Hamilton, Minister at Dalserff, whose proces was cleare—guiltie of symonie at his entrie; changing of the Elders of the Kirk, contrare to the order of the Kirk, for his oun ends; concealing of adulteries; misearriages upon the Sabbath day.

The rolles being called, the Assemblie did approve the sentence against him.

The Commissiours Grace alleadged that these were verie hard proceedings, and he was affrayed they should yet run themselves upon ano of the rockes they had hitherto eschewed.

It was answered by the Earle of Rothies, Lord Lowdoun, and the Moderatour, that they behoved to testify their detestation of such lewd practises and erroneous opinions, as they loved the honour of their Lord and Master, who was very jealous of it; and yet, so as they should be most willing to testifie their compassion to any penitent persones; and desired that, if the Commissioners Graces knew a better way to eschew rockes, his Grace would delclair it, and they would follow it.

The 4 Report was Mr David Fletchair, who was deposed for reading of the Service Booke, and subserying of the Declinatour, but was uther wayes a man of good behaviour, and free of all sort of heresie, and was now truelie penitent for that which he had done.

The Assemblie did approve the sentenece, but did grant him the freedome to be received to the ministric at the first occasion that should offer.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Forbes, Mr James Hamilton, Minister at Hamilton, and Mr James Hamilton, Miuister at Cambusnethan, deleyed till the morne.

The Assemblie to meit at 9 a cloeke; and so, after thanksgiviug, the Assemblie dismissed.

Sess. 16.—August 24, die Saturnæ, hora nona.

After prayer, the Moderatour said—The reason of our stay so long this morning is, becaus we are labouring for a fair way, and we find the Commissioners Grace verie mueh inelynd unto it. And we are seeking to give such a meeting as becomes good and obedient subjects, and for that end we trust delay to speake of the rest of the reportes at this tyme, if the Assemblie shall so thinke it fitt. In the meane tyme I regrate that this nationall Kirk suffers under a declaration fathered upon the Kings Majestie. I regrate that many honourable members of this Kirk suffers lykewayes: yea, I regrate most of all that his Majestie suffers, being made the speaker of the whole storie, which could not come to his Majestie but by reporte; and therefore I desire that this may be taken to consideration, how the Kings honour may be repaired—how the honour of this Nationall Kirk may be repaired; and that every thing in this bussinesse may be done as becomes such a grave Assemblie, assisted with the Kings Commissioner.

The Commissioner answered—For the first parte of your discourse, our deley is taken in good parte by all honest men who thinkes no tyme long nor ill spent in rectifying abuses, and in that fair way as may give content both to the King and people. And if on the other parte, they thinke not this a worke of difficultie, they are mistaken. Therefore let us lay aside all consideration in thir particulars that may concerne ourselves, and with patience and moderation goe on as we have begun, that the closing may be [up to] our expectation; and if we keepe not this way, my weaknes may carry me on the one rocke, and your forwardnes, yow on the other: therefore I thinke some few dayes should not wearie us, much lesse some few houres that is spent in preparing of ourselves to come heir, that so, according to my intentions, according to my Masters directions, and that that I am confident is all your resolutions, that so our Master may get satisfaction and we may get our desires, which I conceive is nothing but to testifie our loyalty to our Gracious Sovereigne, securitie to our religion, and establishment of the government of the Church. I believe these are all our ends.

For the second parte of your speache, I shall desire that nothing I have to say be taken hold upon; for all that I may bragg of my selfe is, that I have gained so much as to be in some measure sensible of my oune weaknes. Tho' in some thinges I may fancie an extemporarie answer, yet, before I speake much, I shall desire to take it to my consideration. Yow have beine pleased to make mention, in a very modest way, of a Declaration, which, if I take it right, is a Booke wherein is expresst the whole progress of our proceedings: and truelie, sir, the way that yow have expresst it, no man can take exceptions against it. Yet I shall recommend to yow, since it carries the title of my Masters name, that whatever be your sense of the particular, and wherein yow conceive his Majestie hath had misinformation, yow may walke so circumspectlie as may testifie that yow tender his Majesties honour.

The Moderatour answered—It shall be our serious endeavour in all things, and especiallie in that particular, to testifie that we tender his Majesties honour as the apple of our eye.

The Commissioner said—Since I understand it concernes my Master so neare, I desire, before yow bring it any more in publict, that some may speake with me in privat.

Earle of Rothes said—There would be difference put betwixt that that is reallie done by the King. Anent that which his Majestie himself heard with his eares, and saw with his eyes, we thinke it becomes us to speake verie tenderlie of it; but for that which hath come by misinformation, we must cleare that to the full.

The Moderatour said—Please your Grace: that this bussinesse may be more warilie and wiselie handled, if the Assemblie thinke good, let some be appoynted to revise the Booke, and they will distinguish all, and prescrive such a wise method as we cannot weill erre in.

The Commissioner said—Truelie for my selfe, I am willing to speake my aune mynd freelie. For me, I thinke the desire is modest and fair, and I shall be glad to heare anything further in that.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Henrysone being desired to give his judgement, said—Truelie, for the matter itselfe, it is verie necessar, and I trust it will give no offence to the Kings Majestie that that Booke be looked on and examined: for, in trueth, I thinke it were a dishonour to the Kings Majestie to be King over such subjects, both in Church and State, as are described in that Booke; and I believe it is not written by his particular direction, nor is he acquainted with the particulars of it. But these thinges must be left to the view of these that are appoynted by the Assemblie, who, I trust, will make such particulars in it as may tend both to Gods honour and the Kings, whereof we are very tender; and I trust it shall appeare—yea, I am persuadit of it—that we are more tender nor he that hes written the Booke.

To the which, the Assemblie did condescend, and for that effect, did appoynt to view the Booke: Ministers—M<sup>rs</sup> Robert Baillie, Andro Ramsay, John Adamson, Alex<sup>r</sup> Petrie, Mathew Brisbane, John Smyth, John Reid, Jo<sup>n</sup> Home, and Thomas Craufuird: Nobles—Rothes, Cassiles, Lowdown, Kirkcudbright, Burlie, Auldbar, and the Shireff of Tiviotdaill: appointed to meet together and divide their aune taskes, and be diligent students; further, whosoever had marked or noted any thinge of the Booke, of their aune observatione, let them give it in to these that are named.

The Toune of Ed<sup>r</sup> presented a Supplication for the transportation of Mr William Bennet from Monymeall to Ed<sup>r</sup>; and, after the hearing of his reasons, and his parochiners, the matter was put to voicing; and the said Mr W<sup>m</sup> Bennet ordained to stay at Monymeall, by the greatest parte of the voices.

The Supplication of the Kirk of Dennune to the Assemblie, to grant a warrand to build the same, and make it a distinct church, referred to the Parliament.

The Supplication of the Laird of Halhill referred to the Provinciall of Fyffe.

The Committie for Reportes to meet at 2 houres with the Commissioners Grace at the Abbey.

The Assemblie to meet on Monday, at 8 houres.

Sess. 17.—Monday, hora nona. August 26.

After prayer, the Moderatour desired the Committie who were appointed for revising the processes of such Ministers as were now supplicants to give in their diligence.

The first reporte was for Mr Andro Collace. The Moderatour of the Committie for Ed<sup>r</sup> and Jedburgh, Mr Harie Rollock, declared that they found him to be deprived for drunkennes, actuall and habituall—subscriyving of the Declinatour of the last Assemblie—remaining disobedient to the constitutions thereof—for sacriledge; and, further, they found some pretendit answers to the forsaid pointes processed against him: his maine answer to them, in generall, was that the witnesses who had proved the same were somewhat of kin to the Provost of Dundie, whom, he alleadged, was his accuser. It was answered by the Moderatour, that the Provost did onlie accuse him in name of the paroche, and, by that meanes, none might be witnesses against him who were of kin to any of the paroche.

The Commissioner said—I am to plead for no vitious man; but I thinke it would seeme too summar to approve his sentence presentlie; for I thinke all this Assemblie hes not heard all these reasons of his red, nor if they had, have they tyme to ponder them. I perceave all the processes are of two natures—either for declyning of the last Assemblie, &c., or for personall faults. Now, these deserve diverse considerations, and, I say, this is a certaine ground—that this Assemblie resolves not to puisehe all alike, but that, according to the nature of their faults, yee will show them favour, less or more. Now, if ye shall goe on squairlie to approve all the reportes, I doe but onlie represent to your considerations whither this be not to barre the doore, and tye your owne hands from showing favour to these whom ye would show it hereafter.

The Moderatour answered—We will not approve of any proceedings of the Commissions, how lawfull soever, but with a reservation of justice to them that will seeke a reduction, and of mercie to them that will supplicat for favour.

The Commissioner asked—Before whom must they seeke a reduction of their proces ?

The Moderatour answered—Before a Commission from this Assemblie.

The Commissioner answered—If this Assembly shall not approve the sentence of the former Commissions from the last Assemblie, and the partie sentenced seeke a reduction of the proces before a new Commission from this Assemblie, can he ever expect another answer ? But it is already decyded before this Assembly, or, if they doe otherwayes, they shall oppose the formalitie of this Assemblie.

Argyle answered—The Commissioners may doe legallie and formallie in judgment, according to the probation of the witnesses, and yet the pairtie may thereafter improve* the deposition of the witnesses ; and soe he may get favour either when he improves that is done, or upon his repentaunce.

Rothes sayes—It stands verie weill with formalitie to say the sentence was justlie pronounced upon that that was proven at that tyme, secundum allegata probata ; as, for example, they declyned their Mother Kirk at that tyme ; and what could the Kirk doe lesse than depose them from it now ?—They having rectified their judgement, they recall the sentence, and rrecommends the men to your Grace to be provydit at the first occasion ; and soe there is a cleare distinction. The Lords of Session may reduce their owne decreits, the pairtie compeirand who before was absent, and impugning the probation. As for these who have done nothing but declyned the last Assemblie, upon their acknowledgement of their error, and supplicating for favour, are presently put out of controversie, your Grace shall get satisfaction ; for the Assembly shall presentlie declair them capable of a ministrie ; but for others who hes beene procest for personall faults, and neither compeiring themselves, nor no procurator for them, but all proven, I remit to the judgement of the Assemblie, whether or not they, compeiring before ane other Commission impugning the processes, saying the witnesses wronged them, and using legal objections, the Commission from this may repone the sentence, and make it null ? But I thinke if they have been able to doe this, they should have offered before this Assembly.

The Commissioner said—They choosed rather the way of humble supplicating, becaus they conceived it most satisfactorie to the Assemblie ; and I trust the Assemblie shall not take advantage by that to proceed the more strictlie agaiust them ; but, if they heare of this, I thinke some of them shall mene their supplications agaiust the afternoone.

* Improbation—a form of process in the law of Scotland, under which the testimony of a witness was challenged.

Argyle said—I shall represent to the Assemblie this mids. Let the Assemblie approve the diligence of the former Commission, and remit further consideration of the proces to a Commission from this Assemblie.

Lowdoun said—It would be considered that there are two parties interest in this question : first, there is the Commissioners who had the charge of the former Commissions and ar now makeiug their reportes for their exoueration ; 2<sup>d</sup>lie, There is the pairties now supplicants, and they are either such as upon their penitence or acknowledgement of their errours, and upon their ignorance of the Constitutions of the Kirk, doth merite favour ; or they are such as complaines iuformalitie in their proces, and so seekes to have them reduced and aunulled. Now the ane pairtie—to witt, the Commissioners, seekes to be exonerced. The uthr pairtie suppliants, seekes, that they may not be so exponed as they be stoped from being heard hereafter. Your Grace objects how that can be reduced, which, after it is deduced, is approven hore ? If it lyke your Grace, verie easilie. The Assemblie doth approve that they have done, secundum allegata probata ; and yet this approbation may be given with this qualitie, that it be without prejudice to uthers to be heard, and to reduce their sentences before the Commission, and grants Commission for that effect. This being a parte of the Act, it keepes the mater intcere for reduction. Now, tell me if any pairtie be wronged by this ?

Argyle said—I hope your Grace, by urging of this Assemblie not to approve the sentences of the Commission from the last, doth not intend to make us doe any thiug which may import our passing from our Assemblie at Glasgow, which we will never doe. Whilst we breath, we cannot thinke this ; for some of them are approven already. It is lykewise a great mistake to thiuke that [by] our craving of the bringing iu of reportes, we seeke ane approbation of the last Assemblie.

The Commissioner answered—Your Lordship speakes to verie good purpose. I intend no such thing ; but onlie I declair what is done in this I will assent unto it as ane Aet of this Assemblie.

The Moderatour said—Please your Grace, I have bein drawn up the forme of the Assemblies approbation of these sentences, which I hope shall both give satisfaction to your Grace and to the Assembly :—

“The Assembly, after the receaving of the Reportes from the Committies, approves their proceedings ; without prejudice of any favour that can be shewed to any pairties, upon their supplications, or of justice to such as complaines of their proces, and offers to impugne the same, by whatsoever reasone, competent by the laws of this Kirk and Kingdome : Lykeas the Assemblie doth grant Commission to that effect.”

After much agitation, this forme was agried upon.

The next Report was of Mr Robert Rollock, who was found, by the Committie, to be deprived for non-residence for 3 yeares ; 2<sup>d</sup> For neglect of his charge while he was with it ; thirdlie, for maintaining the universalitie of Christs merits, and the falling away of the Saints.

The said Mr Robert compeirand, and being demandit what he had to answer for himself, alleadged that the witnesses who deponed these things were ignorant men ; 2<sup>d</sup>lie, That he did not in preaching, but in privat, affirme the forsaid pointes. The Committie finds his proces clearlie deduced, and sufficientlie proven.

The Assemblie approve the Sentence, with the forsaid reservation.

The Committies were ordained to have their Reportes readie written against afternoone.

To meit at 3 a clocke.

Sess. 18.—Hora tertia in the afternoone.

After prayer, the Moderatour called for the rest of the Reportes.

The Moderatour of the Committie, Mr Hary Rollock, answered—There is Mr James Hannay and Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Thomsonsone. We find they were deposed at ane Committie joyntlie for reading the Service Booke and subscriyving the Declinatour, and the Committie finds that it was verie formallie deduced.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Ogstane, sometyme Minister at Coling-toune, was deposed for deserting of his flocke—causing his people (after a superstitious way) sitt on their knees when he examined them—medling with the poore folkes box, &c.

Mr George Maxwell, Minister at Dumbar, for foule errors in his doctrine, as his proces at length beares—for medling with the poore folkes box, hard usage of his flocke and paroche, &c.

Mr George Sydserfe, at Colberspeth, for contemning his Presbytrie, preaching after his deposition, &c.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Whishart his proces is so lang, that it is a volume—onlie we have drawn up his dittay in these thrie generalls—in his doctrine, life, and discipline. I remember of ane particular of his doctrine, proven be all his paroche, preaching upon Genesis, how Isaak desired his wife to say she was his sister. He gave a marke. “If God (said he) had punished the father, the Sone had never fallen in the like fautt”—common drunkenes, notour, &c.

Mr John Watson, in the Canongait, for deserting his flocke, contemning his Presbitrie, and declyning the Generall Assembly. All these Processes the Committie finds to be formallie deduced and sufficientlie proven.

Mr Francis Harvie, of Zeattam, was deposed for contempt of his Presbytrie—for setting up of ane altar and rail—for declyning of the Assemblie—for a cruell act of his hands in stryking of a man that within short tyme thereafter he died—ane of the most notorious railers agaiust worthie Noblemen that ever was heard tell of.

Lastlie, Mr Patrick Lindsey his proces is very fearfull, for its all grosse Poperie and Arminianisme—yea, there is not a poynt of Arminian doctrine or Poperie but he hes mentained it in the grossest way. We find all these orderlie deduced.

The next Committie for Kirkealdie, Dundie, S<sup>t</sup> Androwes, was called upon to give in their reportes. Mr Robert Douglas, Moderatour of that Committie, answered—We found all the processes that have come before us formallie deduced, viz., Mr John _____, Reader, Vicar, and Procurator of the Kirk of Dundie, was deposed becaus he tooke upon him the office of a preaching Presbyter without a flocke; 2<sup>d</sup>lie, He did contemptuouslie disobey the Constitutions of the last Assemblie; 3<sup>d</sup>lie, He did not onlie refuse the reading of the Confession of Faith, but mocking, called it the Jewall of Four. He absented his charge often 4 weekes togither. Mr W<sup>m</sup> Wischart, Minister at S<sup>t</sup> Androwes, was deposed by that Presbitrie, and their assessours adjoynd to them, be the last Assemblie, for deserting of the flocke for the space of 18 moneths togither.

Mr Hary Scrymgeor, for his fornication confest, &c.: first, for not catechising his people for the space of 12 yeares; 2<sup>lie</sup>, Becaus he affirmed the Nobles were taking the crowne off the Kings head to sett on their owne; 3<sup>lie</sup>, For calling the Covenant a black Covenant; 4<sup>lie</sup>, For disobeying the Presbitrie; 5, For obtrudeing his Sone to preache and administrat the Sacraments, not being called thereto.

Mr Androw Learmonth, for calling all the Covenanters perjured—declyning his Presbitrie and the Generall Assembly—refusing to intimat the Bishops sentence. He gave in a Supplication this morning to the Committie, and tooke it up againe and promised to correct some faults in it, and bring it in againe the afternoone, but hes not kepted his promise. These we find all formallie deduced.

The third Committie of Irwing and Kirkeudbright called. Mr Mathow Brisbane, Moderatour thereof, said—We find Mr James Hutchisone hes beine deposed not only for declyning of the Assembly but for sundrie other grosse enormities—profanation of the Sabbath, drunkennes, stryking of ane John Dougall as he was going into the pulpitt, and sundrie other pointes.

Mr James Stewart, for declyning the Assembly—non-residence the space of six Sabbeths together—imprecations out of the pulpitt against his paroche.

Mr Thomas _____, of Cameray, for grosse drunkennes, profanation of the Sabbath, ordinary swearing, oppression, stryking, &c., not only proven but confessed by his hand writting.

Mr George Buchannan, of Kirkeudbright, for declyning the Assembly and continowing in his contumacie, refuseing to compeir before the Commission. The said Mr George compeiring before the Assemblie, which was delayed till the morn. The Committie finds all clearlie deduced. The Assemblie approves the seutence against him, with the foresaid reservation.

The Supplication of the Universitie of Glasgow, for the increase of their provision and number of their Professours, which they craved might be recommended to the ensuing Parliament. Delayed till farder advyement.

The Supplication of the Burgh of Glasgow for the transportation of Mr Robert Baillie from Irwing [Kilwinning] to Glasgow delayed till the morne, that all parties who had interes might prepair their reasons in writt.

The Committee appoynted for trying of the Booke of Assembly which was newlie come to the Clerks hand, gave in their Reportes:—That they fand the Booke to be authentick, and the reasons thereof, subseryved with their hands. The whole Assembly, in ane voice, did approve the said Booke as ane authentick register, and ordained the same to have faith in judgment, and outwith, in all tyme comeing. The Commissioners Grace desired the reasons of the validitie thereof might be insert in the Booke of the Assembly.

A Supplication from Mr Thomas Tullidaff, minister at Foverane, a man of 98 yeares, having bein a minister 57 yeares; that whereas he had demitted his place in favours of Mr John Patersone for the soume of 400 merkes a-yeare, and having no better securitie but the said Mr Johns simple bond, who may be transported or suspendit, &c., and so the old man prejudged, therefore did supplicat for ane Act of the Assembly in his favours, that he might be secured of the forsaide soume during his life; to the which the Assemblée willinglie condiscendit.

A Bill from the Boundes benorth Tay, desireing a Commission may be directed from this Assemblée for rectifying of many abuses there, and for planting of the vacant Kirks, such as Elgine, Innernes, Chanrie: this Bill, at the desire of the Commissioners Grace, delayed till the morrow.

The Supplication of the Toune of Ed<sup>r</sup> for planting of their Churches with a lite of such as they had their eyes upon, viz., Mr David Dickson, Minister at Irwing, present Moderatour; Mr Andro Cant at Newbottle; Mr James Hamilton at Dumfries—becaus of contestations like to arise, delayed till the morne.

The Baronic Kirk of Glasgow, of 11,000 communicants, discerned to be a distinct parochie, upon a Supplication presented be Mr Zacharie Boyd. Mr John Row, Mr John Ker, who were appoynted to take notice of Doctor Eliots case, reported that they thought him to be a humble and modest man, penitent for any thing he hes done, and submissive to the Constitutions of the Kirk. The Assembly declaires him to be capable of the Ministrie, and to be provydit at the first occasion.

The Committie for viewing of the Declaration appoynted to meit in the Assembly House tomorrow at six houres.

The Assemblée to meit at 11 houres, and to have but ane Session tomorrow.

Sess. 19.—Hora undecimo. August 27.

After prayer, the rest of the Reportes being called on, the Moderatour of the Committie fand that Mr Robert Murray was deposed by the Commission of Kirkeudbright for oppressiou, drunkenness, railing, selling the Sacraments, sacriledge, bryberie, &c., instanced in many particulars and clearlie proven.

Mr James Scott was deposed for his absence from his flocke 8 Sabboth together, sacraledge, introniting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytrie, tableing, converseing with excommunicat Papists, and declyning the Generall Assemblée.

Mr Patrick Adamsone was deposed for his insufficiencie for the Ministrie, proven by the testimonie of his brethren, frequent drunkennes on the Sabboth, and dancing in his drunkennes, and disobedience of the Presbitrie.

Mr Rob<sup>t</sup> McClellane deposed for his insufficiencie, intemperat drinking, and disobedience to the Presbitrie; all which processes the Committie finds formallie deduced and clearlie proven.

The Assemblée approves their sentences without prejudice of justice or mereie, upon the Supplication of some or reduction of the processes of others.

Mr David Fletcher, compeering personallie, declaired that he was penitent and greeved in soule for these two errors, in reading the Service Booke, and declyning of the Assemblée; and, therefore, in all humilitie, desired to be received in favour with the Assemblée, and declaired to be capable and worthie of the Ministrie, and submitted his life and conversation to the censure of the Ministrie of Edin<sup>r</sup>, who declaired that his life and doctrine was both unblameable. The Assemblée found it expedient that he should be restoired to the Ministrie, and to a particular flocke, as he gets ane orderlic calling.

A Supplication of the province of Aberdeine upon the cruell oppression and persecution of the enemies of this Church and Kingdome, daylie lying in wait for their lyves, so that Ministers were forced to retier themselves, and not to come to their flockes, recommended most humbly and earnestlie to the Parliament.

Mr John Lindsey at Carstaires, compeering personallie, presented a Supplication to the Assemblée, acknowledging his forward following the course of conformitie, craved pardon of the Assemblée, and sought re-entrie to the Miinistrie, in respect it was the humble petition of his parochiners to have him restoired to them againe, and promised obedience to the Constitutions of the Assembly. The brethren of his Presbytrie testified that he was a violent prosecutor of the course of conformitie, and urging his people thereto; that he was contumacious, disobedient to his Presbytrie, railer against his brethren, and hes declyned their judgment and the Assembly both; that he would not come to the Syuod where he was cited, alleadging his want of health and strength, but anon, thereafter, found health and strength to goe into the English army.

After much agitation to and fro, the Commissioners Grace pleading for him, and his owne brethren testifying against him, the Assembly ordained these persones following, to conferre and try the soundnes of his repentance and his judgement in doctrinall poyntes: Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Somervell, Richard Inglis, George Young, Mathow Brisbaue, Andro Ramsay, Robert Douglas, Hary Rollock, Andro Cant.

Mr James Hamilton, who hes beene these 52 yeares actual Minister, being deposed for declyning of the Assemblée; upon his humble Supplication and Confession, declaired capable of the Ministrie.

Mr John Hamilton of Dalserff, his Supplication delayed till the morne.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Ogstounes referred to the Commission that was to be appoynted.

The Commissioners Grace presented a paper in name of Mr Robert Hamiltoun of Lesmahagow, wherein there was not the least word of his repentance or submissiou, but rather a maintaining of his errors, especially Arminianisme, and in substance a declyning of this Assemblée.

The Moderatour desired Mr John Adamsone, Mr James Bonar, Mr John Row, Mr Andro Caut, to give their judgement of this man. They all in ane voice declaired he was worthie of excommunication in this Assemblée; nevertheless, the Assemblée, to show their moderation and willingness to gaine the man from his errors, did appoynt Mr Samuell Rutherford and Mr Robert Baillie to conferre with him and report against the morne.

Upon occasion of the erroneous doctrine defended by these Ministers, there was a motion made by Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone, That it was expedient that there were a positive confession drawn up, and these errors related therein and expresslie condemned by the Church, and the doctrine of the Church of Scotland cleared, that none heirafter pretend ignorance of them, and that this grave worke were recommended to such and such men; the which motion the whole Assemblée did applaud.

Sir Robert Edwards Supplication referred back to the Presbitrie.

The Supplication of the Presbitrie of Skye, not being joyued to any provinciall, and of the parochiners of the North Isles, for erection of ane provinciall amongst them, delayed till all the interest be heard.

The Bill for the change of the Presbitrie seat of Mewres, referred back to the Presbitrie.

Sir Alex<sup>r</sup> Carnegie of Bonnymoone having built a Church upon his owne expenses, did supplicat that it might be decerned to be a distinct parochie.

As lykewayes a Supplication of Duncan Campbell of Glenlyon to the same effect, referred to the Parliament.

Mr James Scotts Supplication referred to the Commission.

Walter Macaulay, of Ardincaple, his Supplication for the distinguish of two paroches lying promiscuously through other, referred to the Presbitrie of Dumbarton.

The Supplication of the Chanric of Ross referred to the Parliament.

Mr James Sandilands, canonist, his Supplication being againe presented to the Assemblie, and many pressing arguments why the facultie could not be abolished, used by the said Mr James, which gave great light to the Assemblie, the Assemblie appoynted M<sup>rs</sup> John Adamson, David Lindsey, James Bonar, Doctor Strang, to consider of it till the morrow, and then to give their best overtures in writt.

The Supplication of M<sup>rs</sup> Alexander Schrogie, William Leslie, Lindsey, referred to the Commission.

The Supplication of Alex<sup>r</sup> Gordoun, of Knockgray, in name of the Parochiners of Carfairne, for a contribution for a stipend to the said Kirk built be the said Parochie, according to the Act of the Assemblie at Glasgow, Dec<sup>r</sup> 16.

The Assembly recommends the same de novo to the charitie of the bounds then designed for that contribution.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Callender, Minister at Denna, in Stertoun, a pendic of Falkirk, and supplicat that it might be established as a distinct Kirk, referred to the Parliament.

The Parochiners of Ardinlach and Edenkillie being under ane ministric, and far distant, did supplicat for a disuion—Fiat ut petitur.

A Complaint of some of the Parochiners of Bathgait, upon their Minister, for leaving of preaching in the ordinarie Kirk thereof, and preaching in a Kirk new built, in a myle distant from it, not commodious for holding the congregatiou, referred to the Synod.

The Committie for the Overtures being desired to report their diligeuce, gave in these following—(Hic deest.)

Earle of Eglintounes Supplication for erection of ane Kirk between Beith and Lochunnoch, referred to the Commissions for the Parliament.

The 4 Committies for the deposed Ministers, appoynted to meet tomorrow, at 7 a clocke, to try their repentance, and to hear their just defences, and report to the Assembly.

Sessio 20.—August 23, Wednesday.

The Assemblies Motion for authorizing the Covenant, by way of new Swearing and Subscribing thereto by the whole Kingdome.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour said—Please your Grace: The tyme now drawes schort; and your Grace, we trust, considers that there are some weightie poyntes of greater consequence and moment nor we have handlit, that are yet to be doue, and this a speciall ane. We are longing to have your Grace with us in the Covenant, and all others in the kingdome; that, as we are under ane religion and kingdome, [we] may all be under ane Covenant and band. And this I know, the whole Assemblie is longing for it.

The Commissioner answered—Truelie, that particular hath beine so much in agitatione this tyme past that if I should not expect something to be spooken of it in this Assemblie, I should be much to blame. I believe yesternight was the first occasion of discourse that I had upon it; and truelie I think it a matter of great consequence; and as it is a bussines which I cannot say but ye have reason to presse as that which may make a happie conclusion of all this bussines; so, on the other pairt, it being made up of two bodies—the Confession and Band—in either of both there is so much, that, if I desire to be well advysed in it, I hope I shall offend none.

I will not rype up the mistakes that hath beine; for I believe, whatever differences there hes beine about it, they have beine about mistakes. Yet this much I may say for the Confession of Faith itselfe—The ground of it proceeds from the year 1580, 1531, and renewed sundrie tymes since. It seems that, by the progresse of tyme, there hath beine some thing which hath interveined, that gave the Kirk of Scotland occasion to thinke it necessar to explain it in some thinges, and to find that some thinges were excluded by it that is not particularlie expresst in it. And now it hath pleased God to move our Kings Majestie to indict this Assemblie, and hath given me warrand, whatever exposition this Assemblie shall find that Confession to beare, and likewise whatever is found by this Assemblie to be excluded by that Confession, I, in my Masters name, shall consent unto it; and now, if there be any mistake, it is upon that pairt of the Covenant which makes up the Band.

Now, for the Confession itselfe I have no scruple, neither as it was literallie sett downe, nor as it is now explained. For the Band, it may be, if in forme and matter some thinges were rightlie understood, soveraigntie will receive satisfaction.

The Moderatour answered—We have still bein and are able to give satisfaction in all thinges that might impair the due estimation of good and loyall subjects. As for the Band, we thinke it so well conceaved, that, were it to doe over againe, we could not light upon such happie expressions. Nevertheless, we are content that your Grace call for whom ye please to receive farther satisfaction.

The Commisssiouer said—Whatever debates there hes beine betweene me and this Assemblie since our meeting, I hope [these] shall take a friendlie conclusion. I believe there hes bein none except in that particular anent the deposed ministers; and, for that, I hope to receive a charitable answer, since it is my Masters speciall command so to doe; and duetie obliesses me, since my Master conceaves most of them suffers for his cause; and so, what debates hes bein, the conclusion is good. You have taken your way, which is agrieable to the constitutions of this Kirke; and I believe with that respect to my Master what favour shall be granted to them upon their Supplications.

But for the particular—there is so much done in it by this Assemblie, that, for myselfe, I have no doubts of the Confession of Faith itselfe, or of the explanation that is made upon it; that if there be any scruple, or shadow of scruple, it is concerning the said Band.

The Moderatour answered—We are very readie to remove these shadowes, and to give your Grace satisfaction.

Upon a Supplication of the new Colledge of S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes, that, according to the Act of Assemblie at Edinburgh, October 9, 1582, Sess. 10, Commissioners would be appoynted for visitation thereof, to concurre with the Commissioner from the Parliament, for examining the foundation thereof—establishing necessar Professours of Divinitie, provyding competent meanes. The Assemblie find this desyre most reasonable; and, therefore, did grant Commission to Earles of Rothes, Montrois, Cassiles, Lowthiane, Lindsey, Burlie, Balcarras; Ministers—M<sup>rs</sup> Alexander Hendersone, Andro Caut, Robert Blair, William Scott, David Dagleische, James Bruce, Andro Fleck, Frederick Carmichaell, for that effect.

It is observed, that there was a clause in this Supplication, that the foresaid Colledge might have libertie to call for any man to be Professour therein. It was excepted against by the Colledges of Glasgow and Edinburgh; and much contestation being like to arise, the motiou was put to voicing, Whither their Supplications be grantit simplie or conditionallie? And, by the greatest parte of the voices, it was granted but conditionallie.

The Supplication of the Colledge of Glasgow to that same effect. The Assemblie fand it necessar to be grantit next, and after S<sup>t</sup> Andrewes, and without prejudice to them; and, therefore, did nominat, Earles Argyle, &c.; Ministers—Mr James Bonar, &c.; Burgesses—Provost of Stirling, &c., to meet the first Tuesday of October.

The Supplications of the Towne of Edinburgh, containing a leete of ministers for planting of their Kirkes at the desire of the Assemblie, they were content to passe from them all, except Mr James Hamilton. After reading of the said Mr James his reasons, the matter being put to voicing, the said Mr James, by the greater parte of the voices, decerned to stay in Dumfries.

These that were apoynted to conferre with Mr Jo<sup>n</sup> Lindsey, were desired to give in their reports. They answered that he gave full satisfaction to their contentment, and did heavilie regreat his former wayes—was willing to submitt himselfe to the constitutions of the Kirk; and, therefore, they thought it fitt that the Assemblie should declair him capable of the ministrie; and upon his satisfaction at his Presbitrie and Paroche, and declaration of his repentance, then he might be reponed to a flocke.

Mr John Lindsey, compeiring, said—I professe in the presence of the Commissioners Grace and this Assemblie, that I am heartilie grieved that ever I should have offended Nobleman, Minister, or any other; and that I myselfe should have been the caus of it. And I confesse I was too violent in that course of conformitie, and uow have gotten satisfaction of my scruples. I doe submitt myselfe to the determination of this Assemblie—yea, and to all these to whom I have failed. The Assemblie declaired him capable of the Ministrie, and approves the Report of the Committie.

Anent Mr James Hamilton, Minister at Cambusnethan, the Committie reported that he was a young man of good behaviour, and welbeloved of his paroche, and guiltie of nothing directlie but the subscriyving of the Declinatour; and, therefore, it was their judgement he might be dealt with as Mr John Lindsey.

The said Mr James compearand, confessed that he had wranged and offended his Mother Kirk, and humblie desired to be receaved in her favour.

The Assemblie did heartilie receave him, and declaired him capable of the Ministerie.

The same report was made for Mr W<sup>m</sup> Forbes, who humblie confessing his faults before the Assemblie, got the same favour.

The Committie reported that Mr John Hamilton was also truelie penitent, but it was [thought] he should give his tryell of new. The Assemblie refers him back to the Presbitrie.

Mr Robert Hamilton, of Lismahagow, compeired and said he was willing to subscribe the Cannons of the Synod of Dort, and to revoke all his Arminiau tenets that he had mentioned; and, in speciall, he was sorrie for his rasho expressions in his paper given in yesterday to the Commissioners Grace, and was willing to submitt himselfe to the Assemblie.

The Moderatour said—This matter is not of so small consequence, that we should either cutt yow off from hopes of being receaved upon your repentance, nor that we slight the auctoritie of this Assemblie, so farr scuffed by yow yesternight, that we should suddenlie receive yow to the Ministrie who hes been so lang obstinat and caried your selfe in such a proud maner.

Auldbar said—It is not four houres since he was converted.

The Assemblie referris him to the Synod of Glasgow.

The Commissioner said—I still urge that it is your best for these churches that are vacant, whereof our Master is Patron, to represent the case to him, and what yow doe in this, let it be by way of Supplication; and if I shall not both convey the same, and be a good instrument to obtaine your desire, I pray God I never thryve.

Upon occasion of this, my Lord Argyle said—When we consider the great divisions and distractions of this Kirk, we rejoyce to see this dayes worke, and your Grace sitting here to put order to all thiuges in his Majesties name; and since we have enjoyed this by his Majesties graccous favour, I represent to your Grace and this Assembly, if it shall not be very incumbent to us to thinke upon some humble way how to testifie our heartie acknowledgement of this favour from his Majestie, and to rander his Majestie humble thankes therefore: to the which the Commissioners Grace and the whole Assemblie did applaud, and desired it might come in with the Overtures.

My Lord Lowdown said—If it like your Grace, I shall be bold to desire ane thing may be added to the Overtures—and I know certainlie I have the applause of the whole Assemblie. Amongst uthers, inputations that have bene layd upon this Church and the government of it as it is now established, that Ministers will rashlie and disrespectivelie have preached of auctoritie, and, therefore, especiallie since the Kings Majestie thought by his haveing of the Bischops he had a readie way to censure and punische Ministers that should deboard in this kynd, least we should seeme to derogat any thing from the due respect acknowledged justlie to his Majesties Sovereignitie, it seemes expedient that the Assemblie should now testifie their respect to his Majestie by making of ane Act, that no Minister preache rashlie of anything concerning auctoritie, and an Act for censuring all such as shall transgresse.

The Commissioner answered—I believe there is none that heares your Lordships proposition, but they take it to come from a noble heart; and if I should thinke otherwayes, I were not worthie to sitt here. How farr the Constitutions of the Kirk will warrand yow to goe on in censuring such thinges I know not. But I believe you intend not to exclude the civile magistrat from punishing of such thinges.

The Moderatour answered—We are so farr from that, that we are content to be the first tryers of these thinges, that we may make schort worke for the civile magistrat.

The Commissioner said—I will not exclude Presbitries, Synods, &c., from censuring ecclesias-tick persones; but I shall not be of the opinion of some that thinke that frae ance the goune and coull be putt on, they have no more adoe with the civile magistrat.

The Moderatour said—Farr be it from us to thinke so: that opinion is papisticall; but for ws, we make it a poynt of religion to be subject to our Prince.

Bonymoons Bill for erecting of a new Kirk distinct from the Kirk of Brechin, being read and the reasons of both being read, the Assembly grants the said Bonymoone his desire, without prejudice of any parties civile right, which they reserve to any judge competent.

Brunttilands Supplication delayed.

The Earle of Athols Supplication for dismembering of Glenlyon from the Church of Forthingall, remitt to the Commission from [for] the Parliament.

The Committie for the Billes ordained to referre or delay the rest of the Billes of lesse importance, and not trouble the Assemblie, for shortnes of tyme.

These that were appoynted yesterday to meit w<sup>t</sup> the Commissioners Grace, desired to attend his Grace after the dissolving of the Assemblie, with Auld barr, John Smith, and Mr Robert Barclay to atteud with them.

The Committie for the Declaration appoynted, to give in their diligence the morne. The Assemblie to meit to morrow at 9 a clocke.

Sess. 21.—August 29, Thursday, hora nona.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour said—The Assemblie doth loug greatlie to heare your Graces mynd concerning the mayne point that yet remaines, that we all, who are aue people in aue Kingdome, may be of aue heart in aue Covenant.

The Commissioner answered—We met yesterday about that purpose; and I hope we have made that happie progresse. We have considered of the Covenant, which is a great worke, wherein our Master conceaves our religion and his honour may concerne it; and if it be well thought upon, both the matter and forme is no lesse then may be expected from good subjects and good Christians. Having taken this to our consideration, being satisfied both for the matter and forme of it, and after many overtures how we might accommodat matters to the contentment of all, to wit, that we should follow a precedent of former tymes, that, as the Assemblie hath gone on in former tymes, sae we may now; and I trust this shall reconcile all.

The Commissioners Grace sought libertie to depart, to the end he might conferre with the Councell against the afternoone, of the best way how to accommodat the matter.

It was complained by some, that by the reason of the great tumult they could not heare the purpose.

The Moderatour, after he had exhorted them to order, quyetnes, and gravitie, said—The matter is aue the Covenant—that there may be a common course for the subscription of the same by all the subjects within this Kingdome, and that by ecclesiasticall and civill auctoritie. The way of the doing of this it's thought fittest that it be the same that was used in the year 1590, wherein the Generall Assemblie sett downe the Confession of Faith with the Band, and gave in a Supplication to the Councell that they might joyne their civill sanction thereunto, and ordained the same to be subscriyved by all the leidges; lykeas they by their ecclesiastick auctoritie, commanded the same to be subscriyved under all ecclesiastick censure. The same course is now to be taken. This Assemblie is to supplicat his Majesties Commissioner and Councell, desiring them by Act of Councell to ratifie our Covenant, and enjoine it upon all the subjects; and thereafter the Assembly themselves is injoynd under the ecclesiastick ceasures, and to supplicat the Parliament, that both their oune Act and the Act of Councell may be ratified there; and so there is no alteration to be of the Covenant, but the whole Covenant, totum compositum, to be subscriyved; only this, the Commissioners Grace will adde a Declaration before his subscription, that the Kings Majestic having received satisfaction of his subjects that they inteded nothing but the preservation of religion and maintainance of his auctoritie, therefore he subscriyves; and the Councell also, according to the declaration of the Assemblie, and his Grace is now gone to consider of this. The Moderatour desired some of the brethren to give their judgement of this course.

Mr Hary Rollock answered—I thinke all men that heares of it rejoyces at it, and I thinke it is as much as we could hope for: yea, we scarce expected such good newes as to heare that our Covenant should be confirmed by all sanction, civill and ecclesiasticall; and I thinke nane that hes heard it but they are sending up their heart secreatlie to praise the Lord for it.

Mr Andro Ramsay, Mr Andro Cant, and divers of the Brethren, spacke to the same effect.

Those that were appoynted for the Manifesto Booke [Large Declaration] were desired to goe presentlie forth of the Assemblie, and prepare their diligence against the afternoone.

Anent the Report of the Committie appointed to consider of the Decreit given out by the Commissioners of the last Assemblie, for Visitation of the Colledge of Aberdeene, concerning Mr James Sandilands: They fand that the intention of the Commissioners was only to discharge him to teache anything in the profession of the Canoun law which was not agricable to our religion and profession, and therefore thought it meit that he should enjoy the said office, with the emoluments for his maintainance, but upon the foresaid condition.

The Supplication of Mr David Foulces, Mr Hary Pearsons, Mr Robert M<sup>c</sup>Lellane, being read: Because it was testified by these that were at the Synods where they were depoised, that there were many grosse thinges proven against them which they had not confessed in their Supplications; therefore remitts unto the Synod, conforme to the Act made yesterday.

Mr David Lindsey gave in above the number of 40 particular Billes, which the Committie had cognosed upon; referred, delayed, or granted as the Assemblie had given them direction yesterday, which are not neidfull heir to insert.

The Acts of the Assemblie ratified, against Salmond Fishing on the Sabboth, upon a Supplication of Johne Forbes of Leslie.

The Assemblie to meet at 2 a clocke in the afternoone.

Sess. 22.—Hora quarta.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour desired the Commissioners Grace to show to the Assemblie the cause of their so long stay, or command some other to doe it.

The Commissioner answered—The reason of our so long stay and treatie all this tyme, is to draw this matter to a good conclusion; and now, blest be God, it is neare a poynt; for, as concerning the Covenant, we are agried both in the matter and forme, and there rests nothing but the drawing up of it in ane Act; and this is a matter of great weight, and I hope this Assembly shall thinke it a good conclusion to see this the last Act of the Assembly, tho' it take some tyme for the doing of it.

The Moderatour having repeated the Commissioner his speach to the Assemblie, did signifie to them, becaus this greate worke could not be endit this night, the Commissioners Grace had condiscendit to delay the ryding of the Parliament till Saterdag, and the Assemblie to conveye againe tomorrow, and then to conclude.

A number of particular Billes were given in to the Assemblie, not needfull to be insert, such as the Supplications of Mr George Diserff [Siderff?] Mr Thomas Carnichael, Mr W<sup>m</sup> Rollock, Mr Henry Pearsons, Mr Francis Harvie, Doctor Andro Lawmond, are [referred] to the Synods. Some uther particular Billes, anent the uniting or disuniting of Kirkes, or of Kirkes from Presbitries and Provincials, referred to the Parliament.

A Bill, presented in name of the Laird of Kilcherron, being excommunicat by Mr James Bonar, for his contempt and railing against the Covenant, for his disobedience, supplicating for liberation from that sentence—referred to the Synod.

The Overtures read over againe.

Becaus the Members of the Assemblie desired to heare the Supplication that was to be given in to the Commissioner and Counsell, therefore it was thought good that the whole Assemblie should conveye at 8 a clocke, to heare the Supplication read, and the Commissioners Grace to come at 9, because he behooved to be in the Counsell.

Sess. 23.—August 30.

After prayer, there was some Billes given in, which were delivered to the Committie since they gave in their reportes.

A Bill from the Presbitrie of Lanerk anent the division of Kirkes, recommended to the Parliament.

Mr W<sup>m</sup> Livingstoun his Bill for a fellow-helper in the Ministrie at Lanerk, recommended to the Parliament.

Mr Robert McClellane, at Zietaum, his Bill recommended to the Presbitrie of Kirkcudbright.

The Bill of Teviotdail and Merse, against the profanation of the Lords Sabbath, grauted.

The Bill of the Presbitrie of Haddingtoun, desiring the ratificatioun of former Acts ag<sup>t</sup> the Salt Pannes upon the Sabbath day, granted.

The Assembly appoynted a Commission for drawing up of ane uniforme Catechisme, and the order of familie exercise, and to reporte their diligence to the next Assemblie, to be there considered—viz., Mr<sup>s</sup> Andro Ramsay, Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone, Robert Blair, Edward Wright, John Livingston, James Hamilton.

The Assemblie, considering that should it please God to conclude all matters in this Assemblie and Parliament, it were necessar there should be a solemue thanksgiving through all the land; that the whole bodie might rejoyce together, and the Kings Majestie might heare that this Kirk rejoyces under the sence of received favours; and, that they could not now appoynt the day, did give Commission to the Presbitrie of Edinburgh to advertise the whole Presbitries.

The Moderatour desired that the motion concerning the new Colledge of S<sup>t</sup> Androwes be intertaind, and some expediences found out for promoving of that warke.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone, Mr Robert Meldrum, Mr Robert Douglas, at the Moderatours desire, by many pressing arguments, did show the necessitie of provyding the Colledge well with Professours and competent means, without prejudice of any uther Colledge within the kingdome, because it was thought necessar that the Kings Majestie should receive thanks from this Assemblie, and that in a publick way.

The Committie for the Overtures did represent to the Assemblie that they should have a Commission to the Presbitrie of Edinburgh, and some uther adjacent Presbitries, with power to draw up a humble Supplication to his Majestie, acknowledging all his byegone favours bestowed upon this Kirk; to present the grievances of the Kirk, and everie member thereof; and to receive ane answer from his Majestie; and, likewise, in case of any exigencie, to acquaint his Majestie with the necessitie of holding an occasional Assemblie. Becaus this motion was opposed by the Commissioners Grace when he came in, and another course taken to the satisfaction of the Assemblie, hereafter to be insert, [the motion was abandoned.]

The names of these that were appoynted to preach on the Sabbath. [Not given.]

A number of the Commissioners of the Assemblie, Noblemen, Ministers, Barrons, were appoynted to attend the Parliament, and there to represent the grievances of the Kirk, and to meit everie day at 6 in the morning for that effect.

Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone was sent to the Councill house for the Supplication, that it might be read and considered by the Assembly before the Commissioner [came] in, the tener whereof followeth:—

The Assemblies Supplication for Subscribing of the Covenant. [Vide p. 207 of these Records.]

The Committie appoynted for viewing of the Large Declaration having drawn up their diligence in 12 scheits of paper, for fear of marring the Assemblie, extracted furth, in two scheits, their maine and most materiall observations upon the said Booke, which they did represent unto the Assemblie, the tennour whereof followes:—

This Declaration of Doctor Balcanquell is, First, Dishonourable to God; 2<sup>lie</sup>, To the Kings Majestie; 3<sup>lie</sup>, To this Nationall Kirk; 4<sup>lie</sup>, It is stuffed full of Lies and Calumnies, which we make evident to the world by these reasons:—

First,—It is dishonourable to God:—

That albeit the Subscription of our Confession of Faith and Covenant was ane Act evidentlie tending to the glorie of God, besides the testimonies of our consciences thereaunt, is now, praised be the Lord, againe acknowledged be this present Assemblie; notwithstanding, to the great dishonour of God and his true religion, as it is now professed in this kingdome, it is most impudentlie averred in this Large Declaration, that the subscription of our Covenant doth most evidentlie tend to the dishonour of God.—Pag. 20.

That the same Covenant is dung which was throwne upon the face of auctoritie—a lewd Covenant, with a seditious Band annexed thereto, so that everie religious and wise man may run and read that sentence of condemnation which it carrieth in its owne front.—Pag. 54.

That it is a wicked Covenant, or pretended Holy League, like to that of France.—Pag. 2.

That it is a spurious Covenant.—Pag. 125.

A rebellious Covenant.—Pag. 156.

That it is not far from blasphemie to say, that God, by the fire of his Spirit from Heaven, hath accepted thereof.—Pag. 178.

That it is a dangerous and fearfull approach to blasphemie to say that it was sealed from Heaven.—Pag. 179.

And that all Christians in the world who have heard of it doe acknowledge that no such Covenant came from Heaven but from Hell, from whence cometh all portion of schisme.—Pag. 161.

Secondlie,—Dishonourable to this Kirk :—

For although it hath beene the glorie of our Kirk among foreign nations, that with the veritie of doctrine received, the puritie of discipline according to the word of God, whereby all errour in doctrine, superstitione in worship, and tyrannie in government, and especiallie all Poperie, hath beine opposed and removed; and that, of late, we have laboured to recover that puritie by removing these offices and corruptions that have no warrant by the Word of God, and re-establishing these office-bearers that are warranted by the same; notwithstanding, to the great dishonour of this Kirk, [it] is affirmed in this Declaration that there is a great deformitie in our service—no forme of public prayer, but preachers, readers, and ignorant schoolemasters, praying in the church, sometymes so ignorantlie as it was a shame to all religion to have the Majestie of God so barbarouslie spoken to; sometymes so seditiouslie, that their prayers were plaine lybellis goeing against soveraigntie and auctoritie, or hes bein stuffed with all the false reportes of the kingdome.—Pag. 16.

That we have taken such a course to underminde and blow up the Reformed Religion, that if the conclave of Rome, the severall colledges perpetuallie sitting at Rome for contryving and effecting the meanes of reducing all kingdomes to the Romane obedience; nay, if with both these, all the Jesuites and their most especiallie combyned and sworne enemies to our profession, all assembled in one place, and had all their witts and devices concentrated in one conclusion and resolution, they could hardlie have fallen upon for turning all men out of the pathes of religion reformed, or have settled upon such courses which can bespeake no uther event but the undoubted everthrow of it, at least in that kingdome, unles God from heaven (which we hope) have all their cobble webs, contextures, in derision; that our maximes are the same with the Jesuites; that our preachours sermons have beine delivered in the very phrase of Becanus, Scippeius, and Swarcz; that the meanes which we have used to induce credite with our proselytes, are meirliche Jesuitical fables, false reportes, false prophets, pretended inspirations and divinations of the weaker sex, as if now Herod and Pylat were once againe reconceiled for the ruine of Christ and his true religion.—P. 3 and 4.

That our conclusions are quite contrarie to the Confessions of all Reformed Churches in particular, and of our Scottish Positive Confession, and that all the weapons wherewith we now fight against these Protestant Conclusions, are stolen or borrowed out of the most rigide Jesuit Magazens; to witt, that we are to be accompted not as friends to the Kings Majestie, but as foes; not as Protestants, but as the most rigide of Papists, Jesuits; and so being without in this poynt, not bring scandall upon the reformed religion, and those who are not with the same, especiallie considering we have gone about to wound the reformed religion through the Kings Majesties sydes.—Pag. 4.

That Ruleing Elders were brought in, onlie out of a feare that rigide ministers designed for the Assemblie, might want a sufficient number of their fellow ministers for their elections in their severall Presbitries.—Page 139.

That Mr David Mitchell was processed and deposed, for doctrines uncontraverted and generallie received by all Protestant Churches in the world.—Pag. 206.

That the processe against the Bishops was pursued with such malice, injustice, falshood, and scandall, not only to the reformed religion in particular, but to the Christian religion in generall, as it cannot be paralleled by any precedent of injustice in precedent ages; and which, if it were known among Turkes, Pagans, or Infidells, would make them abhorre the Christian Religion, if they did thinke it would either countenance or could consist with such abominable impietie and injustice.—Pag. 207.

That some used a notable trick of forgerie and Romish imposture, for advancing the worke of reformation, by working upon the weaknes of a young maid, and making choysce of her as a fitt instrument to abuse the people.—Pag. 226, 227.

That such was our blind obstinacie, that we scorned that any one should sitt in the Assemblie who ran not in our rebellious courses, as holding it a dis-reputation to abate any thing of our power or will, and we would be sure to clippe the winges of auctoritie.—Pag. 245.

That we should have everie mechanick artizan, being chosen a lay elder, to have equall power and state with his Majestie.—Pag. 246.

That the Kings Commissioner got certain intelligence of the Covenanters unmovable resolution, that altho' the Assemblie should be continowed, and all things which they desire should be granted and effected, that the quietnes and peace of this Kingdome should be never a whitt the more settled or established, but that they were determined to choose certain committies, who, under the name of Commissioners from the Generall Assembly, should keepe up their Tables, and be chosen and continowed from one Assemblie to another, and so hold on the same rebellious courses which they ever held, since the first erection of their Tables—to the overthrow of the Kings royall auctoritie, and the auctoritie of the Lords of Counsell and Session.—Pag. 269.

That under the name of Arminian tenets, many things in all the Reformed Churches were condemned in the Assemblie.—Pag. 317.

That the conclusions in the Assemblie tended to the sedition and rebellion, and the overthrow of the lawes both of Church and Kingdome; and that many of them were false and foolish positions.—Pag. 324.

That the Covenanters are the worst and most disloyall pack of the Kingdome.—P. 380.

Thirdlie,—Dishonourable to the Kingdome :—

For, although it hath beene the glorie of this Kingdome that it hath continowed in duetifull subjection and obedience for many ages under 107 Kings, and we have ever acknowledged our quietnes, stabilitie, and happines to depend upon the safetie of our graceous King, as upon Gods Vicegerent sett over us for maintenance of Religion and ministration of Justice—not having any intention to desire to attempt any thing that might turne to the diminution of the Kings honour and auctoritie;—notwithstanding, to the great dishonour of this Kingdome, it is affirmed in this Declaration, that, although the Marqueis of Hamiltoun, during his continowance among us, found that we gave him civill respects as Marqueis of Hamiltoun, yet his being clothed with the Kings auctoritie and Commission did much diminische them.—Pag. 86.

That the State of Scotland hath beene much of late discomposed and disconnected by the seditious practises of divers, impatient of all lawes and government.—Pag. 1.

That, by persisting [in] our tumultuous and rebellious courses, we doe demonstrat to the world our wearinesse of being governed by his Majestie and his Lawes, and our itching humour of having this Kingdome governed by a Table of our owne devysing—a monstrous birth, as the lyke hath not beene bredd in any kingdome, Christian, Jewish, or Pagan.—Pag. 2.

That we are like these of the bloudie League in France, who hoped that the verie name of Holy League would cause in the world a mistake of their meaning, and palliat their most wicked and unnaturall treasons for rooting out that lawfull Sovereignitie and the true Religion.—Pag. 44.

That we begunne the most unnaturall Councells and horrible rebellion that this or perhapes any other age in the world hath ever beine acquainted with—that we begin to invest ourselves with the supreme ensignes and markes of Majestie and Sovereignitie, by erecting publict tables of advice and counsell for ordering the effaires of the Kingdome without the Kings auctoritie, and by entering into a Coveuant and most wicked band and combination against all opposers, not excepting the Kings owne persone, directlie against the Law of God, the Law of Nations, and the Municipall Lawes of this Kingdome.—Pag. 53, 54.

That these our meetings at our tables have beene accompted by wise men, rather stables of unrulie horses brockeu louse, and pulling doune all they can reach, and throwing dung into the face of auctoritie.—Pag. 54.

That we suggested some alteration in religion to be made by the innovations, onlie to that end that the Kings Subjects might be kepted from returning to their obedience.—Pag. 152.

That the divilische obstinacie and malice of our factious spirits found meanes to blindfold the peoples eyes, and so keepe them from discovering and acknowledging the Kings Grace and goodnes towards them.—Pag. 155, 156.

That it was our master peice to stoppe anything, though never so well lyked be ourselves, if it wer commanded by the Kings auctoritie, as fearing that if he had obedience in any one thing, the people might recover the tast of government.—Pag. 193.

That the heads of the Covenanters were affrayed that any shew of obedience should be yielded to the King by his people in the least poynt.—Pag. 204.

That not so much as the least inclination to peace could be discovered in us.—Pag. 84.

That, above all things, they of the Covenanters table, were affrayed that the people should receave any satisfaction from his Majestie, or rest contented with the grace of his most reasonable proffers of favour.—Pag. 90.

That the Leaders of the Covenanters studied nothing more then to suppress the Kings graceous intentions and favoures towards them.—Pag. 91.

Fourthlie,—This Declaration is stuffed with a hudge number of Lies, in averring Untruthes besides the already mentioned—for instance, as follows:—

That the Covenanters pretend religion, and intend nothing lesse then that: their courses are tumultuous and rebellious.—Pag. 2, et passim.

That our Covenant, by Papists, was received with infinit joy, as hoping that the King and his successours might be brought to ditest that religion whose profest zelots had beene the author of such ane insufferable Covenant, which could not subsist with Monarchie.—Pag. 74.

That, upon the removing of the Covenant, there was a suddaine and frequent arryvall of Priests and Jesuits from Doway, and other seminaries beyond the seas, in hope of their welcome to his Majestie.—Ibidem.

That our Covenant was received by the Protestants abroad with most offensive scandall, and infruit grieffe—namelic, at Charingtoun, Geneva, and other reformed churches in France—who were so scandalized with this prodigious Covenant, as that they were affrayed of nothing more then this, that it will bring ane indelable scandall upon the Reformed Churches, and alienat the myndes of all Christian Princes from ever entertaining a good thought of our religion.—P. 74.

That the Covenant was obtruded to all sortes of people with furie and madnes, with threatenings, tearing of clothes, drawing of blood, & cet.—Pag. 95.

That the seids of this seditiou were sawen by the plotters of the Covenant, first, at the Kings Majesties revocation.—Pag. 6.

Secundlie, at the Commission of Surrenders.—Pag. 7.

Thirdlie, Upon the refusall of honours at the late Parliament.—Pag. 11.

That the finall alterations of the Service Booke urged upon us, in which it differeth from the English Service Booke, are such as might best comply with the myndes and dispositious of the subjects of this kingdome.—Pag. 18.

And that the same Service Booke was no different from the English in any materiall poynt.—Pag. 19.

That the heads of the Covenant had no sooner notice of the peaceable course intended by us, but they flew out in farr greater violence.—Pag. 79 and 113.

That the Proclamation, Juli 4, would have beene received by the people with humble and thankfull acknowledgmeut, if they had not beene not onelic diverted, but perverted by these men, who interpreted everie satisfaction of the subjects to be a divideing from themselves.—Pag. 92, 93.

That, in our Privat Meetings and Publict Sermons, we have endeavoured to settle in the subjects myndes, opinions, feares, and jealousies quyte contrare to our printed asseverations.—Pag. 107.

That the principall Covenanters, Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Ministers, protested to the Kings Commissioner, that their meaning was never to abolische Episcopall governments, but to have it limited, and censurable by the Generall Assemblie; and that they had farr rather live under it than under the tyrannie of Presbitries, which they have heard the Fathers complaine of, and bidd them bewarr of.—Pag. 114, 115.

That the heads of the Covenant had layd upon the King that aspersion that he intended to bring in Poperie, or, at least, to tollerat the same; becaus they believed it was the most powerfull meanes of alienating the myndes of the people from him, which they onlie intendit.—Pag. 125, 126.

That the Marqueis of Hamilton presented to his Majestie not only the improbabilitie that ever the ring leaders of that rebellion would desist untill they had obtained their wicked ends, and that the only hope of peace was placed in dividing the people from them, by preferring unto the people such graccous favours as in all likelihood they neither could nor would reject.—Pag. 126.

That laymen did not sitt in Presbitries 40 yeares before.—Pag. 132 and 191.

That it is unquestionable true that Episcopacie may and doth consist with the Confession of Faith. Pag. 153 and 177.

That Archbishops and Bishops, September 1638, had and have still a settled offic in the Kirk be Parliament, nay, and be Assemblie too.—Pag. 180.

That the Covenanters choose none to the Assemblie but such as they were surc would receave no satisfaction, and keepe all uthers from accepting any.—Pag. 188.

That the Covenanters laboured hard to persuade that none of these thinges promised in the proclamation—no, not the Assemblie itselfe—were ever intended to be performed by the King, but that he studied to deley tyme whill he were readie for their ruine.—Pag. 195.

That they resolved to increase thir disorders to such a height, and to multiplie affronts upon the King and his auctoritic, as they imagined should be past all sufferance, that they might compasse their desyres of his Majesties Commissioner, either prorogation or discharging the Assemblie.—Pag. 195 and 223.

That the witnesses in Mr David Mitchells process being all laymen, wer men of such mean and ordinarie understanding, as that it was improbable, if not impossible, that they should understand the doctrines that he was charged with.—Pag. 206.

That the meeting at Ed<sup>r</sup> was to agrie upon the conclusions to be made in the Assemblie.—Pag. 133 and 231.

That the two Covenanting Ministers of Edinburgh declairing to uther Covenanting Ministers that benomed themselves, wondering that they would give way to the utter defacing of the Church by these laick intrusions, that they grieved for it as much as themselves, but that they must winke at it, else the nobilitie, gentrie, and burrowes did threaten them with a desertion. That the Bookes of Discipline were penned by some privat men, but were never confirmed by Act of Parliament or Generall Assemblie.—Pag. 313.

That there is nothing in the Confession of this Kirk against the tenets of Arminius.

That we confessed the 4 Bookes of the Assemblie not to be originalls, but copies.—Pag. 271.

Fyftlie.—Our intentions, wordes, and actiones, are miserable wreasted in this Declaration.

That our refusing to except the King out of the number of persons against whom the Band of mutuall Maintainers was intendit demonstration that, in our intentions, he was the persone chiefly aymed at.—Pag. 106.

Whereas he could not be excepted, because our Mutuall Maintenance against all persones quhatsoever was in defence of Religion, the Kings persone, and auctoritie.

That our meaning in explication of the Covenant was, that we would continow the Kings obedient subjects if he would part from his soveraigntie, and that we would obey him if he would suffer us to command.—Pag. 115.

Whereas our true meaning therein was to cleare ourselves of the imputation of disloyaltie to our graccous Sovereigne; and whereas the Bill against the President and Clerk-Register was given in to crave justice upon them as offenders, yet it is affirmed that it was because we knew the Marqueis neither could nor would yield unto it, and that by his denyall we might have meanes to irritat, even to disgust the Kings graccous favours.—Pag. 93.

The Assemblies Judgment concerning the Manifesto.

After the reading whercof, the Moderatour desired some of the brethren to give their judgment of the said Booke.

Mr Andro Cant said—It is [so] full of grosse absurdities that I thinke hanging of the author should prevent all other censures.

The Moderatour answered—That punishment is not in the hands of Kirkmen.

The Shireff of Teviotdaill, being asked his judgment, said—Ye were offendit with a churchmaus hard sentence alreadie; but, truelie, I could execute that sentence with all my heart, becaus it is more proper to me, and I am better acquainted with hanging.

My Lord Kirkcudbright said—It is a great pittie that many honest men in Christendome, for writing little bookes called pamphlets, should want eares; and false knaves, for writing such volumes, should brooke heads.

The Assemblie, after serious consideration of the great dishonour to God, this church and kingdome, by the said Booke, did condescend upon a supplication to the Commissioners Grace, that the same might be represented to the Kings Majestic, that his Majestic might be pleased to call in all the said Bookes, and thereby shew his dislyke thereof; and next to give Commission to cite all such persones who are either knowne or suspected to be the authors thereof, or informers anent it; and in speciall, Doctor Balcanquell, who is knowne and professed to be the author, at least the owner of a great parte thereof; that, by their examplarie punishment, others may be deterred from such dangerous and seditious courses; the tennour of which Supplication followeth:—[Vide p. 206 of these Records.]

The Assemblie thought it expedient that some overtures might be advised upon for keeping order in the Assemblie in tyme comeing.

The Assemblie found it expedient, for the preventing of all Innovations which might impede this recovered reformation, that no dangerous motion, tending to the hurt of the Church, be proponed or concluded suddenlie in any Assemblie, Presbiteriall or Provincia'll; but when any question shall arise in any inferiour judicatorie, it may be communicat to all others, agitat and dispnted in Sessions, Presbitries and Synods, and so might be rypened for the Generall Assemblie: lykewayes, that nothing should come before the Generall Assemblie, but that which came by reference or by appellation, and which could not be discussed by another Inferiour Judicatorie: As also that no reference should be made but orderlie—viz., from Session to Presbitrie, from thence to Synods, and then to the Generall Assemblie.

The Commissioner being come in to the Assemblie, the Moderatour desired his Grace to show the Assemblie the Declaration wherewith his Grace was to subscribe the Covenant.

The Commissioner answered—For my Declaration [it] is verie short. It is nothing els but what I have declaired many a tyme since we mett here; for, as I told yow, when that Act, abolishing Episcopacie and the rest of these evilles, past heir, the 17 of this instant, I was to consent unto that Act in my Masters name, not as a thing that my Masters judgement and opinion willed him unto, but that his tender affection to our satisfaction moved him to assent unto it. Even so now, I am to make a short Declaration, least if my Master should subscribe simple, he should condemne things that are allowed in the Kirk he lives in, and which his judgment assents unto. A king may be a king of divers kingdomes that are of divers religions: and we hope we will not say but he may doe that that may satisfie one of his dominions which will not satisfie another. And for my Declaration quherewith I subscribe the Covenant as the Kings Commissioner, and in his name, it shall not be obligatorie to any Scottis man to subscribe with declaration; neither shall any Scottis subject whatsoever shelter himselfe under it; but if he subscribe not with the Assemblies Declaration, shall be lyable to the censures of the Kirk, and so shall I myselve be; for as Lord of Traquair I shall subscribe totum compositum, with all the rest of the subjects, even as Mr Archbald Johnstoune subscrieves, which I believe is strict enough. And so the Commissioners Grace arose and sought libertie to goe to the Counsell, and the Assemblie to sitt still till he returned.

Thereafter the Supplication was sent in to the Commissioners Grace and Counsell, by the Earle of Argyle, Rothes, Lowdown, Mr Alex<sup>r</sup> Hendersone, Keir, Provost of Irwing. In the interim the Moderatour exhorted the Assemblie, and speciallie the Ministrie, to call to myud the old Acts of the Assemblie, that were revised, anent the conversation and carriage of Ministers, that by their painfulnes upon their people, the fruites of the Gospell might appeare in the land, that all that lookes on may see that we intendit nothing but reformation; and in particular regrated heavilie the great slighting of the worke of examination, that it was become perfunctorie when it was left to a few dayes before the Communion, and there wished that there should be weeklie examinations, and desired that some of the brethren should speake their judgments.

Mr Robert Blair said—I remember at the last Assemblie that King James was at, holden at Holyrudhous, 1602 yeares, that there were instructions given for the visiting of severall congregations, and a number of questions that the Ministers are to be tryed in; and it is expresslie said there, that they shall be asked whether they have weeklie catechising through the year; and whill this be amended there is small hopes that people will be brought to the knowledge of religion.

Mr John Weymes said—It is to be regrated that most parte of Ministers scrufes the mater of catechizing, in making some stand up and repeat verballie words of the catechise upon the Sabbath afternoone, or some select tymes; quheres some time should be spent everie weeke in teaching the catechetick doctrine.

Mr said—A great helpe to this were, that familie duties were instantlie urged and pressed upon all masters of families, that they might take such paines on their children and servands, that when they presented them to us, they might tell us of what nature they were; and so long as familie duties, catechising of servands and children, and uther religious exercises, are neglected, our examination will have but small life.

The Moderatour added—It is very pertinently spooken; for so long as devotion is slighted in privat houses, and masters of families makes not conscience of these that are under their charge, the examination of Ministers is but like threshing on the water, except it be supported by privat diligence.

Mr Thomas Ramsay said—In my judgment, a great helpe to this were to provyde understanding and well affected schoolmasters, who would use diligence and paines upon the people, and that competent meanes were allotted for their maintenance.

Mr John Row said—I thinke a great helpe of all this, were the carefull visitation of particular Kirks by Presbitries, which is greatlie neglected.

Mr George Lammer said—It is verie expedient that it be recorded and made ane Act in this Assemblie, that familie duties be urged, especiallio catechising throughout all the Kingdome. To the which the whole Assemblie willinglie acquiesced.

Heir the Commissioners Grace returned to the Assemblie.

The Moderatour desired his Grace to bring foorth these good newes which the Assemblie hath bein long looking for.

The Commissioner answered—My Lords of Counsell with myselve have received your Supplication, desyreing that the Covenant, with the explanation of this Assemblie, may receive the force of ane Act of Counsell, to be subscribed by all the Subjects of this Kingdome; and we find your desire so fair and reasonable, that we conceive it our bounden duetie to grant the same, and thereupon have made an Act of Counsell to that effect. Now, there is a second Act to be expected in this Assemblie; and I am so fullie satisfied that I come now as his Majesties Commissioner to consent fullie unto it. I am willing that it be enacted here in this Assemblie, to oblige all his Majesties Subjects to subscribe to the said Covenant with the said explanation: and becaus there is a third thing that was desired—in respect I am to subscribe with a declaration—that I should sett doune the same in write and show it to the Assemblie. As a Subject, I shall subscribe to the Declaration of the Assemblie as followes:—

“The Article of this Covenant which was at the first subscription referred to the determination of the Generall Assemblie, being now determined, and thereby the 5 Artieles of Perth and goveruement of the Church and Bishops, the civill places and power of Churchmen, upon the reasons and grounds contained in the Acts of the Assemblie, declared to be unlawfull, I subscribe according to the determination of the said free and lawfull Generall Assemblie.”

As his Majesties Commissioner, I shall subscribe to this Declaration:—

“Seeing this Assembly, according to the laudable forme and custome heretofore kept in the like eases, doth in a humble and duetifull way supplicat to his Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties most honourable Privie Councell, that the Covenant, with the explanation of this Assemblie, might be subscribed; and, to that effect, that all the Subjects of the Kingdome, by Act of Counsell, be required to doe the same; and that therein, for vindicating themselves from all suspitions of disloyaltie, or derogating from the greatnes and auctoritie of our dread Sovereigne, have therewith added a clause, whereby this Covenant is declared ane in substance with that which was subscribed by his Majesties father of blessed memorie 1580, 1581, 1582, and often since renewed: Therefore I, as his Majesties Commissioner, for the full satisfaction of the Subjects, and for settling a perfect peace in Church and Kingdome, doe, according to my first declaration and subscription, subscribe to the Act of this Assemblie of the dait the 17 of this instant, allow and consent to, that the Covenant be subscribed throughout all this Kingdome. And in witnes whereof I have subscribed thir premisses—Sic subscribitur,

“JOHN EARLE OF TRAQUAIR. Commissioner.”

The Commissioners Grace his Declaration prefixed before his Subscription [of] the Act of this Assemblie the 17th of this Instant. Sess. 8.

"I, John Earle of Traquair, his Majesties Commissioner in this present Assemblie, doe, in His Majesties name, declair, that, notwithstanding of his Majesties oune iuelination, and maue other grave and weightie considerations, that such is His Majesties incomparable goodnes, that, for settleing the present distractions and giving full satisfaction to the Subjects—doth allow, like as I, his Majesties Commissioner, doe consent to the forsaid Act, and have subscryved the premisses—Sic subscribitur,

"JOHN EARLE OF TRAQUAIR, Commissioner."*

After the reading whereof, his Grace promised that the first thing should be done in Parliament, should be the ratification of all the whole premisses and Acts of Assemblie: at the hearing whereof, such unspeakable joy was wakened in the hearts of the whole Assemblie, that some could scairce containe themselves, but did expresse their incessant desires to acknowledge the God of Heaven with praises of King Charles, with his oune due acknowledgement for such undeserved and unexpected favours, with clapping of their hauds, and crying "God save the King!"

The Commissioner said—Let everic Christiane hearte judge if this nation hes not great cause to pray for the prosperitie of the throne of King Charles.

The Moderatour said—It is incumbent to us having now gotten this Act of Councill and your Graces auctoritie, that we lykewise of this Assemblie, joyue our Eecclesiasticall sauction for the subscription of the Covenant, and renew (as it becomes us) the Acts for that effect, that we may be all one.

Then the rolles were called, and the whole Assemblie most unanimously, in one voice, with many expressions of joy among hands, did agrie according to the forsaid Act of Councill; and the Commissioner his Declaration, that the Covenant should be subscribed by all the subjects within this kingdome, under all Eecclesiasticall censure; and so after thanksgiving by the Moderatour, the Assemblie dismissed. To meit at 4 a clocke in the afternoone.

Sessio Ultima.—August Penultima—hora quarta.

After in calling upon the name of God, the Moderatour said—Please your Grace: the wrong fathered booke is perused, and is now to be considered by the Assemblie; and there is a Supplication in readnesse to be presented to your Grace, that the samen (as a matter that toucheth his Majesties honour verie nearlie) may be represented to his Majestie.

The Commissioner answered—I have received the Supplication, and shall represent the same to his Majestie.

The Moderatour said—We cannot passe by your Grace and the Parliament, as two steppes whereby we mind to ascend to his Majestie.

The Commissioner said—I will receive it here, and he may take course to represent it to this Parliament. The Commissioner desired that the short tyme might be well spent.

The Moderatour answered—We are waiting for a Covenaut, to the end your Grace may subscribe it.

The Commissioner answered—I must take a tyme to collation what I subscryve, and I shall doe it in als publict a way before the Estates in Parliament; for he must be tratour both to God and man that subscryves the Act which I have done alreadie, and will not subscribe the Covenant.

The Moderatour desired his Grace to heare the Overtures that were to be given in to the Parliament, as followes:—First, That the Acts of this Generall Assemblie be approven and ratified, and that all former Acts of Parliament, ratification, &c., (hic diest.) Ane overture, showing the necessitie of having a Commission at Edinburgh, with power from this Assemblie if neid require, and for framing a humble Supplication to his Majestie, to thanke him for his late favours, to hear all humble grievances in Kirk affaires, to represent the same to his Majestie, and receive his Majesties graceous answer, and report all to the next Assemblie.

After much agitation betwixt the Commissioners Grace, the Earle of Rothes, Lord Lowdown, and the Moderatour, it was condescendit upon that the Assemblie should grant the foresaid Commission to the Presbitrie of Edin<sup>r</sup>, upon condition they meet only upon their ordinary Presbitrie day.

The humble Supplication of our countrymen who travell in the neighbour kingdomes, prest with ane unlawfull oath, contrare to our Covenant subscryved be them, to be excemed from the said oath, being willing to swear the oath of alleadgeance, or to give any other declaration of their loyaltie to his Majestie which is compatible with our Confession and Covenant—recommended most humble and earnestlie to the Parliament.

Mr Patrick Lindsey, his Supplication being read at the Commissioners desire, grants a conference to him, and referres the proces to the judge competent.

The Moderatour desired, that since the Assemblie had gotten the Commissioners auctoritie for subscryving of the Covenant with ane Act of Councill enjoying the same, that they might adde their Eecclesiasticall sanction thereunto; whereto the Rolles being called, the whole Assemblie unanimously agreed that ane Act should be framed to that effect; the tennour whereof followeth. [Vide p. 208 of these Records.]

The Moderatour asked if any man knew of any matter to be proponed before the closure of the Assemblie. It was answered there was no more to be done but the tyme and place of the next Generall Assemblie to be condescended upon.

The Assemblie, with consent of the Commissioners Grace, fand it expedient that the next Generall Assemblie should sitt at Aberdeene, the last Tuysday of Julii, [1640.]

The Moderatour his last Speech before the closure of the Assemblie.

This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoyce and be glad in it: a glad day it is which we long looked for, and we are the most oblidged nation to our God and our King under the coppe of Heaven; and therefore our Lord ought highlie to be praised, and our King heartilie acknowledgit. First, our Lord ought to be praised, becaus in trueth he hath wrought wonders in our sight; for he hath declaired exceedinglie his mercie and his justice to Scotland. First, he hath declaired his justice; first, upon us Ministers; secondlie, upon yow of the State; thirdlie, upon our adversaries the Prelats. First upon us of the Ministrie. We studied not to be spiritual in our doctrine, and thought matters but small at the beginning, and therefore the Lord suffered men to make slaves of some of us, and tyrannize over the conscience of others. Secondlie, upon yow of the State. Ye looked through your fingers when Prelats were creeping up and miskend the matter, and the Lord suffered them to ryde over your necks: And never did any, (not a King excepted,) exalt a Minister above his station, but that Minister exalted Popedome over his bellie that exalted him. Thirdlie, justice upon our adversaries the Prelats. They would not be content of the title of Ministers but of Lords, and he hath taken both from them, and powred shame upon them withall. Thus hath the Lord manifested his justice, but in such a way that he hath also manifested his mercie in a wonderfull maner; first to our ministers, 2<sup>lie</sup> to the Kings Majestie, 3<sup>lie</sup> to the State.

First, he hath not given our souls over to death and defusion, nor suffered us to goe utterlie to defection, but hes in the midst brocken off all their plotts, who thought to have caused everie mans purse light in their lapp, and shoven furth his justice on them. Secondlie, He hath manifested mercie to the King in keeping him from shedding innocēt blood, which is no griefe to his Majestie this day; and this the Lord hath conveyed in such a way as is wonderfull to Scotland, in blessing weake meanes, so as he would not have humane power seene; for there was never a steppe of our bussines but we were still put to a noneplus what to doe. Next, and when we knew not what to doe, then did the Lord come and poynt out the way before us, and did so leappie out our blessings to us, that whenever we got a little hope we gott feares upon the back upon it, to keipe us from being wantoun, and did so eegg the running of our wheeles that he made a considerable pairt of the Lords of Councell to stand aloofe from our bussines, which tempered all thinges in Gods providence (whatever men intendit) that it tendit all to our good. Thirdlie, He has manifested such great mercie and love to our State, as, when we marke the passages of it, it is wonderfull to sie a State troubled so long, and in a legall manner settled againe; a great wonder to sie such commotions and so few ill fruites following upon it; a great wonder to sie Scottsmen going through-other, and in such a sturre for the space of two years, and a peaceable conclusion. There is a wonder to sie Prelats bigg their nest up in Heaven, and call themselves the triumphant Kirk, and the Lord bringing them doune lower than the dust. There is a great wonder after many tumults and Assemblies, such a peaceable Assemblie as this; which is more to heare Prelats saying that King Charles should not brooke his crowne except they stood, and that it should fall with them, and yet to see King Charles brooke his crowne, and they to fall—a great wonder!

Now since the Lord hath done so, let his great name be exalted. Let all of us lay our hands on our mouths, for the Lord hath done it. He was provoked ten thousand tymes to cutt the warke in the midst, and yet hes beine pleased to draw it to this great lenth; therefore love the Son of God who hes taine power and glorie to himselfe, sittin doune on his throne, and purged his house; so that now there is no ordinances in this Kirk that we ken of but Christs. All we ministers are only servands, bound to give our accompt of all that we doe, and to show our letters from our Master, or else speire ye at us—Wherefore bidd ye us do that? Where is your Commission? For we have no power but as a messenger of armes, who must ay show his warrand. Would to God we knew our Masters bewtie, and the glorie of the Sone of God! Then would we all be affected with greater measure of love to him then we have beine, and will goe about his flocke, and bestirre ourselves more carefullie for their behoove then we have done. And any of us that gives ourselves out for Christs servands who gets meat and fie from him, declair it to the world by feeding of his flocke.

Now for the Kings Majestie: let us leave flatterie, and speake solide and soft words, such as besemes a grave Assemblie: And, for this end, I will propone three things concerning the Kings Majestie, which doth enforce a favourable construction of his Majestie by us. Ane is his Majesties education. Had any of yow beine brought up as his Majestie, and never seene any uther thing, I trow ye should have stucken as hard by that cause as he. A second is the information of these that his Majestie trusted much into; for there is not a Prince in the world more accessible, nor giveth more in trust to these that he receaves in kyndnes and favour, which is a propertie of a verie good Prince. Now, when Bishops were Counsellors, of whom should his Majestie take counsell but of Churchmen and Counsellours both? Secondlie, consider this: Kings cannot understand all things in a Kingdome. They must trust some, and whom (thought he) should he trust but these that was most oblided to him, had their being of him, and were created for that end? And yet, of all men in the world, they did him worst service.

The third is this—the manner of the Kings proceedings toward this land. His proceedings hes never beene as anemie, but to try us and put us to prooffe what we were seeking. When we did supplicat, he gart blow the trumpet, and discharge us all off the toune, to try if we would cease there; gart discharge us from all the judgment seats; and when we proceedit on, he thought he would essay us with our lyves; and so his Majestie came not in armes to destroy but to try us. Why? As soone as he had tryed us, and found that we were seeking nothing but religion, and were loyall in our hearts to him, presentlie his Majestie folded and layd doune armes. This I speake, that ye may wiselie pryce in the matters of princes, and neither thinke, speake, nor write utherwayes then becomes yow, and not only temper your tongues in speaking of him, but love your Prince yourselfe, and procure all that yow can, love and obedience towards him of others. And trewlie, whoever knew him described, they would thinke him verie love-worthie. First, he is the most gentle-natured Prince; secondlie, the least suspitious; thirdlie, a Prince more readie to forgive faults when they are acknowledged; fourthlie, the most loath to take misinformation when it is given, then any Prince in the world; fifthlie, and which is ane odd thing, he hath not a face against reason. Bring reason to him and he will yield; and if these be not poynts of a lovelie Prince, judge ye. Sixthlie, and which is most of all, that he hes quate his aune inclination and education, and said to his Commissioner and this Assemblie, “Goe yce and doe as yee find Gods Word and the Constitutions of this Kirk warrands yow: goe your way: serve God according to his Word; and whatever yow conclude according to that rule, I shall authorize it.” Seventhlie, there is no Prince in the world so cleare of infirmitie as he. These things being well considered, and withall, his Majestie being farr from us, and considering in what danger Princes are in—subject to als many tentations as tries that are on a hill head, obnoxious to divers blasts and winde—and have need to be supported by the prayers of their people.

These thinges, I say, being well considered, will make all men construct favourable of his Majestie ; and if we will rander that duetie of humble thanks and heartie prayers, who knowes but he shall be the most comfortable instrument for advancement of religiou in the whole world ; and this little distance that hes beine, may end in the sweetest reconciliation that ever was seeue betweene a King and a People ? And becaus we would give a right construction to all under his Majestie who have procured our good, I will ranke all these that ran not in the same course with us, to seeke the peace of the Kirk, in three rankes : First, some followed the Prelats, and being affected with Poperie, they knew no better hydiug place then under the Prelats mantle. A second sort, that followed the erring judgement of the misinformed conscience ; and these ought to be pittied of all that knowes them. A third sort are those who walked in a State way ; and it is not the day nor yesterday that they have merite of us a favourable construction. It was evident they loved both the King and the State ; for they divided themselves to have gained peace. When themselves were with the King, their soules were with us ; and my Lords of Councell who have stayed with us at this tyme and countenauced our proceedings, ought also to have their aune thanks. And for your Grace, we thinke a large scoare is due to yow ; for if God had not put your Grace upon this Act, there had beene many hard thoughts of yow, for we thought yow still over farr incluying to the other syde of it. But its Gods mercie to yow, and count it no small favour, that yow are made the instrument to croune this worke in a maner. Lay it up in your heart and in your charter-kist as a most speciall obligation, to make yow employ your excellent witt and all that yow have, for Christ, who lettis none that does fear him want their reward.

And we will not forget the Marqueis of Hamilton, who, according to report, hes loved our peace. Howsoever, he was anee in a passage, that if he had come any further, he might have hazarded soul and bodie both : Yet we will give him a favourable construction.

Now, there rests a word to every ane of yow, Commissioners and Members of the Court of our Lord Jesus Christ : for I compt this ane of the chiefest courts that Christ holds on earth. Elders, sett your hearts to assist the worke of the minitrie ; for ye are officers to oversee the maners of everie ane within the Kirk, that they miserie not, and to take notice what fruites of the Gospell are brought forth. Ministers, be faithfull to your Master ; and, above all thinges, love ane another. Stryve not ane with another ; neither insult over those that have beine of a discrepant judgment from us, anent the matter of ceremonies and the government of the Church ; but let us make a perpetuall act of oblivion in all our memories of such thinges. Let us be glad together. Let us lay aside all disputes that have taken up much tyme which might have beine better spent ; but we were necessitat unto it for clearing of ourselves and of our cause. And if thus ministers will doe, I will speake prophesie to yow : It shall come to passe that if yow will keepe yourselves at your booke and your chamber and studie, to be powerfull and spirituall in doctrine, ye shall have more credite nor if ye ran to Court teu thousand tymes. Your paroches shall travell to Edin<sup>r</sup> to plead for your stipend, whereas before they let you goe yourselves. Therefore wait upon your calling, and your Lord and Master shall have a care of yow. Let us be instant with our Lord to get his Spirit powred out upon us ; for the word without the Spirit is but like a tinekling cymball. To him who will doe this, and who hes wrought, and will worke all our workes for us, be praise !

And so, after prayer by the Moderatour, and singing the 23 Psalme, and saying the blessing, the Assemblie departed, joyfullie and glad for all the wonders that God had done for this Church and Laud.

FINIS.

THE

GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

AT ABERDEEN, 1640.

AFTER perusing the Reports which we have given of the proceedings in the Assemblies of 1638 and 1639, and the several relative documents therewith connected, our readers, we are convinced, will agree with us, that the mere Acts, as they are technically termed, of these and similar Assemblies, convey but a faint and feeble impressiou of the real character of those Conventions. They are but the dry bones, as it were, of our Ecclesiastical Constitutions. It is in the circumstances attendant on their enactment ; the causes in which they originated ; the muniments of the period, (sometimes public and frequently long concealed) ; the reasonings of the antagonist parties, and incidental outbreaks of individual feeling ; and, more especially, in the dramatic movements of debate in popular assemblages—that we catch the true spirit by which the more formal enactments are re-awakened in the present age, and presented to the eye and the mind of a modern student with all the vividness and force of scenes passing daily around us.

We have now reached the Acts of the Assembly 1640 ; but, ere we proceed to that very limited portion of our undertaking, we must be permitted to take a review of the more prominent features of the Assembly in 1639, and of the events which intervened betwixt that and the subsequent meeting in 1640.

It will be recollected that, by the Treaty of 18th June 1639, it was stipulated that all matters ecclesiastical were agreed to be settled in a General Assembly, and matters civil in the Parliament and inferior judicatories established by law. Unhappily for the King and the Covenanters, this vague and general basis was soon found to be too narrow to bear the superstructure which each party intended to rear on it ; and ere the parties had retired to their several homes, the seeds of future collision were sown. No clear and precise line of distinction was drawn in the treaty, betwixt what was to be deemed ecclesiastical and what civil; and in his warrant for the proclamation by which the Assembly and Parliament of 1639 were indicted, the King, on the 29th of June, directed that all "Archbishops, Bishops, and Commissioners of Kirks," among others, entitled to place and voice therein, should attend, as Members of the Assembly, on the 12th of August following.

This, in the estimation of the Covenanters, was tantamount to a departure from the spirit of the treaty, in which nothing was said in plain terms as to the constituent Members of that Assembly. The Covenanters could not, as the King well knew, recognise Archbishops and Bishops as legitimate Members of a General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland—the intrusion of them into the Church being all along stated as their chief and leading grievance, for the removal of which, and the oppressions thence resulting, they had taken up arms. Of this the King and his Counsellors were fully aware—and therefore his proclamation was truly the signal for a renewal of the agitations which had ostensibly been quelled. It was literally keeping his word of promise to the ear, but breaking it to the hopes of his Scottish subjects; and, accordingly, no sooner was the proclamation issued, than it was followed by the usual flood of protestations and manifestoes on all hands. No doubt Episcopacy was still the unrepealed law of Scotland, and the parties, by mutual consent, had agreed to waive all discussion as to the Assembly of 1638; yet, if the King honestly intended to leave Church matters proper, to the decision of a new General Assembly, to be afterwards considered and ratified in Parliament, he was bound to have informed the Covenanters explicitly, that the Assembly of 1639 was not to consist (as they necessarily understood) of Members chosen on the old Presbyterian platform, but of Prelates and Statesmen sent thither by virtue solely of the Royal prerogative, and who were not, in any intelligible sense, the representatives of the Scottish Church. In short, (as is proved by his correspondence with the fugitive Prelates, and other evidence,) his entering into the treaty of 18th June was a mere juggle, and his promise of a Free General Assembly a palpable fraud—his settled purpose being unquestionably to restore Prelacy whenever he could, and to render the deliberations of the promised Assembly altogether nugatory, with reference to the objects for which it was sought and agreed to.

Although the latent proofs of Charles's duplicity were not known to the Covenanters, they found in the proclamation and other circumstances, sufficient reason for distrust; and their past experience, both of the King and his advisers, was sufficient to rouse their suspicions. Their vigilance and preparations continued unrelaxed; and so formidable was the tone of public feeling in Scotland, during the brief space which elapsed betwixt the date of the treaty and the meeting of the Assembly, that the King found it necessary to adopt a temporizing and most insidious policy. Traquair, a man of talent and consummate address, armed with the King's secret instructions, came down to Scotland as Commissiour, and the Assembly met on the 12th of August.

It will be seen, from the foregoing report, that the Commissioner, although he hinted at some objections to Members of Assembly, stated none when called on; and thus and otherwise, he fully recognised, in the King's name, the perfect lawfulness of the Assembly, and soon pledged himself to sanction, for his Sovereign, the Acts which it might pass, on all the vital points for which the Covenanters had so strenuously struggled—assented to the abolition of Episcopacy and all its obnoxious accompaniments in Scotland—and undertook to get these Acts ratified in Parliament. The suspicions of the Assembly were lulled by the speciousness of Traquair, (whom, however, we are not prepared to condemn so vehemently as has sometimes been done both by his coadjutors and antagonists;) and we have rarely perused the account of any scene, whether of real life or of skilful romance, with keener feelings than those excited by the detailed report of proceedings in the General Assembly on 17th August 1639. When the seemingly gracious intentions of the King were intimated by Traquair, there was a simultaneous burst of gratitude and confidence, and, in the highest sense of the words, of chivalrous loyalty. The stern men of the Covenant were melted into tears of high-minded and generous gladness. The venerable Patriarchs of the old Presbyterian Church, who had served at its unpolluted altars for half a century, and who had mourned its degradation in silent sorrow, or suffered captivity and oppressions from its temporary Lords, poured out their hearts in thanksgivings to God and the King, for these unlooked-for manifestations of royal grace and favour.

"Mr John Weymes, called on, could scarce get a word spoken for teares trickling doune along his gray haire, like droppes of rain or dew upon the toppe of the tender grasse; and yet withall, smyling for joy, said—I doe remember when the Kirk of Scotland had a beautifull face. I remember since there was a great power and life accompanying the ordinances of God, and a wonderfull worke of operation upon the hearts of people. This my eyes did see—a fearfull defection [followed] after, procured by our sinnes; and no more did I wishe, before my eyes were closed, but to have scene such a beautifull day, and that under the conduct and favour of our Kings Majestie. Blessed for ever more be our Lord and King, Jesus; and the blessing of God be upon his Majestie, and the Lord make us thankfull!"*

Such were the pathetic and touching strains in which the worthies of the olden Church received the announcement by Traquair, of the hollow and hypocritical message of which he was the herald. We do but justice to the memory of Traquair, when we give him credit for being moved by such testimonies of affectionate loyalty, and convinced that the system of dissimulation of which he was but the "echo," was utterly impolitic and impracticable; and he acted his part with a talent and temper which we cannot but admire. He was indeed placed in "a false position," in which no man could have done at once what patriotism and honour prompted, and yet obeyed the master whom he served, or gratified the minions of his court. Had Charles but followed out the course which the sagacity of Traquair, and the circumstances in which he was placed, chalked out in the Assembly of 1639, we verily believe that the King might long have reigned in the hearts of a loyal people, and Traquair have been remembered as one of her patriots and best benefactors. But the infatuation which overruled these arrangements, led to other and very different consequences.

In viewing these transactions, however, justice must be done to the King as well as to the Covenanters; and there is no doubt that the latter, in some particulars, deviated from the spirit and avowed purposes of the treaty. That treaty was based on a spontaneous declaration by the Covenanters, that they would yield "all civil and temporal obedience" to the King, and that all they claimed was security for their "religion and liberties, according to the ecclesiastical and civil laws" of Scotland;*

* Amidst the multiplicity of documents, and of authorities to which we are obliged to resort for them, we see, on looking into Rushworth, that two have been omitted, which we take the earliest opportunity of supplying. These are, a Note by Lord Lowdon, at a conference with the King, on 11th June 1639, and his Majesty's answer thereto, on the 13th. These are important, as shewing the primary basis of the negotiation. They are in the following terms:—

"MEMORANDUM.—That our desires are only the enjoying of our Religion and Liberties, according to the ecclesiastical and civil laws of his Majestys Kingdom.

"To clear, by sufficient grounds, that the particulars are such, we shall not insist to crave any point which is not so warranted. And we humbly offer all civil and temporal obedience to your Majesty which can be required or expected of Loyal Subjects.—(Signed) LOWDON."—(Rushworth, vol. iii., p. 941.)

At the next Meeting in the King's Camp, on the 13th, (where Henderson and Johnston were present,) the following answer, by the King, to Lowdon's Memorandum, was produced:—

"That, whereas his Majesty, the 11th of June, received a short paper of the general grounds and limits of their humble desires, his Majesty is graciously pleased to make this answer, That, if their desires be only the enjoying of their religion and liberties, according to the ecclesiastical and civil laws of his Majestys Kingdom of Scotland, his Majesty doth not only agree to the same, but shall always protect them to the uttermost of his power; and if they shall not insist upon any thing but that is so warranted, his Majesty will most willingly and readily condescend thereunto, so that in the meantime they pay unto him that civil and temporal obedience which can be justly required and expected of Loyal Subjects.—At his Majestys Camp, the 13th of June 1639."—(Ibid., p. 942.)

We may also note that Rushworth gives all the dates more precisely than we find elsewhere. The Earl of Dunfermline went to the King's from the Scotch Camp, on the 6th, with the petition from the

and the ambiguous terms of the treaty, when finally completed, just left the vexed question as open as it was before—What were the Ecclesiastical and what the Civil Laws of Scotland at the time? Charles held that Episcopacy was the form of Church Government settled both by the ecclesiastical and civil laws in force at the time; while the Covenanters looked back to the constitutions and enactments prior to the changes introduced by King James VI., and understood that these were to be assumed as the securities which they demanded; and hence, the treaty in fact amounted merely to a truce, which was soon destined to be broken.

The course adopted in these circumstances by Traquair and the leaders of the Covenant at the Assembly, had it been judiciously followed out, might have obviated all difficulties—viz., that the Assembly should, by a declaratory Act, indicate what the Church held to be its genuine ecclesiastical constitutions, to be afterwards submitted to and ratified by Parliament. And had nothing been done beyond their declaration as to the causes of the recent troubles, matters might have been satisfactorily adjusted. But this was not the case. Although it was clearly agreed on, that no reference should be made to the Acts of the Assembly 1638, and that nothing was to be founded on these, the Covenanters broke through this arrangement in one most essential particular—namely, with regard to the depositions and excommunications of Ministers which had taken place under its authority. Notwithstanding repeated warnings and remonstrances by Traquair, the Assembly entered upon a review of all the proceedings of the Commissions that had acted by authority of the preceding Assembly, which was virtually assuming and sanctioning the Acts of 1638; although, as stated by themselves, the King had declared he never would recognise or sanction the proceedings of that Assembly. By taking cognizance of these cases of deposition, &c., they in effect anticipated the decision of Parliament, with respect to their findings as to the constitutions of the Church, and thus inverted the proper order of procedure. They thus furnished, not merely a plausible, but a valid ground for the King to object to their whole proceedings; and although we acquit the single-hearted and zealous Presbyterian Clergy who concurred in this anomalous course, we cannot so readily forgive the Nobles and other laymen who were parties to the negotiations, and who have left on record their own statements, that the Acts of the Assembly of 1638, were to be held as in a state of abeyance in that of the following year.

Covenanters, (No. 49 of Documents, p. 225;) and Sir E. Veruey returned with him, bearing the King's answer, (No. 50, p. 226;) the "Reasons and Grounds," &c., were produced on the 13th. The Scots deputies returned on Saturday the 15th, and again on Monday the 17th; and the treaty was signed on the 18th. On the 22d, the King left the Camp for Berwick; and, on the 24th, his army was dismissed and dissolved.—Rushworth, p. 943-946.

In this particular, therefore, it appears the Covenanters were clearly to blame, independently altogether of the unsound nature of the proceedings of the Commissions, and the venial accusations against many of the deposed Ministers, many of whom were constrained, by operating on their fears and other grovelling feelings, to acquiesce in decisions which they could not resist, and to profess submission, when in their hearts and consciences they could not be supposed, honestly, to yield it. It is impossible to read the details about some scores of these poor men, without pain and reprobation; and the vindictive spirit in which they were treated ought to be a warning, in all future times, against a rash submission to high pretensions in popular ecclesiastical courts. Many were deposed on very questionable grounds, and others were left for the administration of what was called "mercy," on condition of renouncing all their previous convictions and professions, and their sense of allegiance to the monarch and statute law of the land. That some were unworthy may be admitted; but trial in their absence, upon nice points of metaphysical theology, and by means of evidence of very questionable credibility, is, to say the least of it, a characteristic of the Assembly of 1639, which reflects but little credit on its charity or its justice.

We must be permitted further to remark, that the soreness and ferocity which were indicated by that Assembly in reference to the "Large Declaration," or Manifesto, afford but slender proofs of magnanimity or conscious rectitude. That work was known to be the production of Baileynel; and, after a minute examination of it, an elaborate report on its mis-statements was read, when the following colloquy took place.*

"The Moderatour desired some of the brethren to give their judgment of the said Booke.

"Mr Audro Cant said—It is [so] full of grosse absurdities, that I thinke hanging of the author should prevent all other censures.

"The Moderatour answered—That punishment is not in the hands of Kirkmen.

"The Shireff of Teviotdail [Douglas of Carvers], being asked his judgment, said—Ye were offendit with a churchmans hard sentence alreadie; but, truelie, I could execute that sentence with all my heart, becans it is more popper to me, and I am better acquainted with hanging.

"My Lord Kirkendbright said—It is a great pittie that many honest men in Christendome, for writing little bookes called pamphlets, should want cares; and false knaves, for writing such volnmes, should brooke heads."

—These "random ebullitions" require no commentary: but in such manifestations of character we discover that spirit of fanatical intolerance, which at no distant period, involved the two British kingdoms in all the horrors of civil war—consigned their Sovereign to the block—rent the Church of Scotland into two ferocious factions, and finally subjected it to contumely and extinction at the hands of a canting usurper.

There is another point in these proceedings which must ever excite regret and reprehension—we mean that act by which they sought and obtained the Commissioner's sanction, and that of the Privy Council, to a compulsory subscription to the Covenant. "This ordinance," says Dr Cook, in his History of the Church of Scotland,* "so popular throughout the kingdom, was, in fact, an engine of severe persecution. It required, by authority, from all ranks of men, and particularly from those whose opinions were suspected, subscription to a number of propositions, about which multitudes must have been totally ignorant, and to maxims respecting ecclesiastical polity, which it is impossible to suppose were not condemned by numbers, who, having for many years lived in communion with an Episcopal Church, could not be persuaded that such a Church was unlawful. So long as signing the Covenant was a voluntary expression of attachment to a particular cause, much might have been said in its justification. But now, when it was required by an Act of Council and the Church, which it was dangerous to disobey—now that it could be forced by the zealots of a sect upon all whom they chose to harass—it must be abhorred as occasioning, to the conscientious part of the community, much wretchedness, and as calculated to diffuse that relaxation of principle which is the bitter fruit of every deviation from the tolerant spirit of pure religion."

Concurring as we do most cordially in these just and enlightened views, we need only add, that no man will defend this blot in the escutcheon of the Covenanters, who would not, if he had the power, imitate their example.

Before finally taking leave of the Assembly of 1639, we cannot overlook the fact, that, in all the proceedings, either in it or in that of the preceding year, or in the voluminous details of grievances of which they complained, we can find no trace whatever of lay patronage being regarded or even mentioned as one of the number. It is equally remarkable, too, that both Henderson and Dickson repeatedly state the doctrine of the lawfulness of civil interference in matters ecclesiastical; and that the notions which, at a subsequent period, sprung up and distracted and divided the Church, as to the anti-scriptural nature of lay patronage, and about the independence and inherent power of an established Church, (established too on certain precise and definite terms), do not appear at that time to have been either agitated or even mooted. We merely note the circumstance as an historical fact, without at all entering on a controversy in the matter. But certainly the eager desire, manifested incessantly, for a ratification of the ecclesiastical constitutions by the civil authority, emphatically implied, that, without such sanction, these applicants did not regard their own Acts as sufficient to clothe them with complete authority.

* Vol. ii., p. 501.

The day after the Assembly dissolved, being the 30th of August 1639, the Parliament—which had been prorogued, from time to time, to the 31st of that month—convened, and was opened with all the state of the ancient “ Ryding of Parliament.” A preliminary difficulty, however, occurred to its constitution, in consequence of the absence of the Prelates, who, by the subsisting laws and usages of Parliament, formed a component part of it. Prelacy had been abolished by an Act of Assembly, but that was not yet ratified by Parliament; and, in order to supply the place of the Bishops as one of the Estates, it was agreed that, for the present, the Commissioner should, in their stead, select eight of the Nobles to be among the Lords of the Articles; being a committee to digest all business for the consideration, and adoption, or rejection of the whole house. The Earl of Argyle entered a protestation that the present mode of choosing the Lords of the Articles should be no precedent for the future; and intimated in it an innovation on the future constitution of Parliament, by introducing a different mode of naming the Lords of the Articles from that which had heretofore obtained—namely, by excluding the nomination of the Crown or its Commissioner, and giving to the Lords, Barons, and Burgesses the nomination from their several bodies. This initial difficulty being overcome, the Commissioner, on the 6th of September, signed the Covenant—not as Commissioner, but as Treasurer; and on the same day a Bill for the ratification of the Act of Assembly 17th August, anent the bygone evils of the Church, and the Supplication against Dr Balcanquell, were passed in the Articles; while a Petition, presented by the Commissioner, in favour of the ousted Ministers, was refused; and a Bill for rescinding the Acts in favour of Episcopacy was handed to the Lord Advocate, to be revised: and all this passed amidst a profusion of protestations, which it is unnecessary to notice.

On the 11th of September, there was a warm debate on the proposal to bring down the vengeance of Parliament on Balcanquell and his “ Large Declaration,” in which Traquair resisted it as offensive to the King, while Argyle and Rothes supported the vindictive Petition from the Assembly; but the Acts as to the constitution of Parliament, &c., made some advance; and Baillie, in a letter dated October 12, gives a very striking picture of the condition to which the contending parties had reduced themselves. “ The affairs of our Parliament,” (says he, vol. i., p. 188,) “ goes but this and that way, if we look to men; our estate is but yet wavering up and down in the scales of a very dubious event. Our main Acts are but scarce past the Articles. The Commissioner either threatens to rise, or to protest in the day of the riding, or to make declarations equivalent to protestations, or to deny the sceptre to our most substantial desires.

To prevent this, we have been content to sit still, half-idle, thrice so long time as ever any Parliament in our land did continue, waiting till posts upon posts, running up and down, for carrying to us the Kings pleasure. It seems our enemies credit is not yet extinguished at Court. The Castle of Edinburgh is daily made stronger. From London, the other week, arrived at Dumbarton a great ship, with cannon and other munition, with an English captain, and divers English soldiers. Division is much laboured for in all our estate. They speak of too great prevailing with our Nobles. Hume evidently fallen off; Montrose not unlike to be ensnared with the fair promises of advancement; Marischal, Sutherland, and others, somewhat doubted; Sheriff of Teviotdale, and some of the Barons, inclining the Court-way. Divisions betwixt the merchants and Crafts of Edinburgh; and so, by consequence, of all the Burghs in Scotland, carefully fostered by our Commissioner; our prime Clergy like to fall foul upon the question of our new private meetings.”

In this state of distraction and doubt, matters continued—the views and sentiments of the King having been sufficiently indicated in his letters to Traquair, whose policy was, of course, guided by his Master’s orders. On the 24th of September, an Act for rescinding all the Acts in favour of Episcopacy was voted and passed in the Articles, under a protestation by the Commissioner against that or any others prejudicial to his Majesty’s authority; and the Act as to the constitution of the Parliament was also passed. While matters were thus agitated and protracted, the Parliament was continued on the 24th October till the 14th of November, when the Lord Advocate presented a royal warrant for proroguing it till the 2d of June 1640, the Covenanters entering their protestation.* Thus the King baffled all the hopes of the Covenanting party, of obtaining a ratification of their favourite ecclesiastical decrees—a result attributable, no doubt, in a great measure, to the extreme violence of some of their propositions, of which the King availed himself by stating, as the ground of adjournment, that various things had been propounded which trespassed on his civil authority and government.†

This step could not fail to startle and exasperate the Covenanters, more especially as their deputies, (the Earl of Dunfermline and Lord London,) who had been sent off to Court after the prorogation on 14th November, had been dismissed contemptuously, without ever being admitted to an audience of the King. When the King sent orders for the prorogation, which took place of that date, he also ordered Traquair up to London, to give an account personally of all the recent proceedings in Scotland. He was coldly received, in consequence of the concessions he had made, and his signing the Covenant.

He was accused by the Covenanters of inciting the King to a new war, and is alleged to have made his peace by doing so; but, although this is stated by Burnet and others, we have never seen any evidence to substantiate the charge; and it is more probable that his best (as in truth it was his only) apology for the part he had acted, was, that he had no alternative but to yield to the dominant party, both in the Assembly and Scottish Parliament, or at once commit the King in open hostility with his northern subjects. Indeed, it seems utterly impossible that he, or any man, could have obeyed his instructions without at the same time outraging the whole policy and passions of the Covenanters, and precipitating another open revolt, before the King could have made any preparations to encounter its force. He had, however, obtained possession of a letter from the leaders of the Covenant, addressed to the King of France, soliciting protection and assistance—a document which, it appeared afterwards, had never been sent or perfected; and this document, as in duty bound, he produced to his Sovereign, as a proof of the treasonable purposes of the Covenanters. It is quite possible that, with such apparently good evidence in his possession, he might have represented to the King that nothing but force would curb the ambitious views of the Covenanting Nobles and Barons; but, in so doing, had it even been so, we cannot discover any rational ground for the inveterate hostility subsequently shewn to Traquair and Hamilton as incendiaries; for, whether the letter was or was not sent, it evinced the treasonable purpose which was cherished, of soliciting the assistance of a foreign potentate, for the accomplishment of their purposes; and both Traquair and Hamilton were bound, as loyal subjects, to make the fact known to the King, and to give him such advice as their opportunities of observation enabled them to afford.

Be this as it may, however, the Covenanters transmitted another petition to the King, by a person named Cuninghame, requesting permission to send some of their number to Court to vindicate their proceedings. This the King granted, and Loudon and Dunfermline were again dispatched, on the 31st of January, for this purpose. On the 2d of March, (1640,) these Deputies got notice that the King would receive them next day in the Council Chamber; and, on that occasion, Loudon made an elaborate exposition of all the Scottish grievances, which, with the King's counter Declaration, are too long for insertion in this work; but the curious reader will find them both embodied in Rushworth's Collections.* Several other audiences were given, at the last of which (18th March) the King and Council declared that the Deputies had no sufficient authority to demand a ratification of the Acts of the preceding Assembly. On the 11th of April a warrant was given to Adams, one of the Sheriffs of London, to take Loudon into custody; and he was subsequently committed to the Tower, on a charge of high treason, for his participation in the letter above alluded to; and he was not liberated thence till the 27th of June following, upon certain conditions which were not very creditable to either of the parties.*

Of this transaction, there can, we think, be but one opinion among all honourable men. Whatever might be Loudon's demerits as regarded the letter to the King of France, he went to England under the guarantee of a Royal protection; and he was not amenable to any tribunal in England, as a Scottish subject, for an imputed offence committed in Scotland. He pleaded this, and the acts of pacification and indemnity which had followed. It appeared, too, that the act of treason had never been consummated by transmission of the letter; and he offered himself for trial in Scotland. The King was saved the infamy of carrying his original purpose into execution by a trial in England, in consequence of the interposition of Hamilton, who represented the serious consequences which would ensue. But we must now turn to the movements in Scotland subsequently to the prorogation of its Parliament in November preceding.

The finances of the King having been exhausted by the useless parade on the Borders during the preceding summer, and a renewal of the war having been resolved on by his Majesty and "The Junto," as it was termed, in whose advice he confided, (Canterbury, Strafford, Hamilton, and Morton,) Charles was constrained to have recourse to a Parliament in England. This was reluctantly adopted, as the only means by which the sinews of war could be provided—and was the first that had been called by the King during the space of twelve years, in the course of which he had managed to carry on a perilous system of government, by levying taxes in virtue of the prerogative, and other devices, which ultimately led to his ruin. A Parliament having been summoned in England, and the warlike purposes of the King having speedily been manifested, these things could not long escape the vigilance of the Scottish leaders; and a meeting of the Nobles, Gentry, and Ministers was summoned at Edinburgh on the 10th of March; when, with their wonted energy, they resolved to levy an army, to fortify all the strengths of which they could obtain possession, and to raise the requisite funds for the purpose, both by voluntary contributions and taxes; and such was the enthusiasm of the people, that plate, jewels, and whatever wealth a poor country could supply, were cheerfully poured into the coffers of the insurgents. The banner of "The Covenant" was once more unfurled, and the pulpits of the clergy again resounded with ardent exhortations to rally round it.

Meanwhile, the proceedings in England tended materially to promote the views of the Scottish leaders. Before the Parliament was assembled, the discontents of the English—which were mightily strengthened by the success of the Scottish insurrection of the previous summer—had attained a pitch of consistency and force, which was extremely favourable to their northern neighbours, who were further encouraged by a forged promise of support, apparently by some of the most influential English nobility. And the issue of the first Session of the English Parliament contributed powerfully to promote the cause of insurrection in Scotland—the discontents and movements in both kingdoms naturally acting and reacting on each other as incentives to resistance to the “kingly way” of government, which Charles endeavoured, so unfortunately for himself and his country, to carry on. The King had urgently pleaded for supplies from his English subjects to carry on the war against the Scotch, whom he represented as bent on the utter subversion of the monarchy. But the English House of Commons would not grant any supplies without a previous redress of their own grievances; and, finding them inflexible on this point, he had again recourse to his former practice of dissolving the Parliament, on the 13th of April.

The embarrassments of Charles, in consequence of this sturdy refusal of his English subjects to support him, were infinite; and, resorting to all his accustomed modes of raising men and money for the impending war, these were only aggravated by the means which he adopted to supply the want of subsidies. His army had been completely dislocated and disbanded; and many who had joined his standard the previous year, were now marshalled in the ranks of opposition; while the general dissatisfaction of the country, rendered all his exertions, and the voluntary contributions of those who still adhered to and supported him, altogether inadequate to the exigency of his affairs.

The Scottish leaders, when they dissolved their army in June 1639, had taken the precaution to secure the future services of the veteran officers whom they had employed on that occasion, should those services be required; and the troops, though dispersed in their several localities, were warned to be in readiness for another muster, perhaps at no remote period. When the tocsin was again sounded, therefore, the Scottish army was speedily re-organized under their old commander, Leslie; and it was already re-established in a condition fit for action, while the King was struggling hopelessly with his financial difficulties and the discontents of his English subjects.

The 2d of June, to which the Scottish Parliament had been prorogued, at length arrived; and although another commission for a further prorogation to July was sent down, some technical difficulty in communicating it to the States, furnished a reason for this not being done; and they readily availed themselves of what was really a quibble, to disregard the commission for adjournment, and declared themselves a lawful Parliament, in which they proceeded to enact into laws, all the Bills which had been introduced previous to the former prorogation. Ruthven, who commanded in Edinburgh Castle, and refused to surrender it, was forfeited, and a great Committee of Estates named, with sovereign authority to direct all matters civil and military. That Committee, as usual, opened diplomatic communications with the King through Lord Lanerick, the new Secretary for Scotland, to which it is needless to refer particularly, as these communications are given among the annexed documents; and, in short, the people of Scotland once more stood in an attitude of open hostility to their King.

While matters were in this position, and amidst general preparations for war, the 28th of July arrived, being the time appointed for the meeting of the General Assembly at Aberdeen. No Commissioner was appointed by the King; but, after waiting one day for a Commissiour, (should one have been named,) they proceeded, according to their own views of “the liberties of the Kirk,” to business; but did nothing that is worthy of remark at present. And here we pause in our introductory narrative, to be prosecuted with more spirit-stirring matter, when we reach the date at which it may be suitably resumed, postponing some of the earlier military operations, till we give them all in connection.

We shall, therefore, only further note that, previously to this meeting of Assembly, the seeds of disunion were sown in the Church by a miserable controversy among the Covenanters themselves, about private meetings for devotional purposes, which some of the leading men in the Church countenanced and others reprobated—a schism which was agitated at the Aberdeen Assembly, and at a future period increased, till the Presbyterian Church was divided into two furious factions, denouncing, excommunicating, and persecuting each other. For the nature and particulars of this schism, we refer to Baillie, in which these are given with his characteristic uaivete and frankness.*

places where they sit be railed about, or some other way divided from the seats of others, and that places be provided without the bounds of the Commissioners seats to persons of respect, who are not Commissioners, and others according to their qualities, as the Magistrates of the Town shall find most convenient.

II. Also that the Commissioners, having received tickets from the Magistrates of the Burgh, at the delivery of their Commissions, whereby they may have ready access to the Assembly-House and place appointed for them, do keep the hour of meeting precisely, and whosoever comes after the time, or shall be found absent at the calling of the Rols, to be censured as the Assembly sees fitting: And whatsoever Presbyterie, Burgh, or Universitie, shall not send Commissioners, or Commissioners sent from them do not come at all to the Assembly, be summonsd unto the next Assembly, and censured as the Assembly shall find reasonable.

III. That four persons of respect have warrant from the Assembly to injoyne that there be no standing, no din, nor disorderly behaviour: And if any shall disobey them, or direct his speech to any, except to the Moderator, and that one at once with leave first asked and given, to be rebuked publicly by the Moderator: and if he desist not, be removed out of the Assembly for that Session.

III. That no motion come in unto the Assembly but by the Committee appointed for matters of that nature; and if the Committee refuse to answer the same, let it be proponed to the Assembly with the reasons thereof.

V. That the minutes of ilk Session be read before their rising, and if the matter concerne the whole Kirk, let it be drawn up in forme and read in the beginning of the next ensuing Session, that the Assembly may judge whether or not it be according to their minde.

Act anent the demolishing of Idolatrous Monuments.

FORASMUCH as the Assembly is informed, that in divers places of this Kingdome, and specially in the North parts of the same, many Idolatrous Monuments, erected and made for Religious worship, are yet extant—Such as Crucifixes, Images of Christ, Mary, and Saints departed—ordaines the saids monuments to be taken down, demolished, and destroyed, and that with all convenient diligence: and that the care of this work shall be incumbent to the Presbyteries and Provincieall Assemblies within this Kingdome, and their Commissioners to report their diligence herein to the next Generall Assembly.

Act against Witches and Charmers.

THE Assembly ordaines all Ministers within the Kingdome, carefully to take notice of Charmers, Witches, and all such abusers of the people, and to urge the Acts of Parliament, to be execute against them: and that the Commissioners from the Assembly to the Parliament shall recommend to the said supreme judicatory, the care of the execution of the Lawes against such persons in the most behoovefull way.

Sess. V. Aug. 1, 1640.

Act for Censuring Speakers against the Covenant.

THE Assembly ordaines, that such as have subscribed the Covenant and speaks against the same, if he be a Minister, shall be deprived; and if he continue so, being deprived, shall be excommunicate: and if he be any other man, shall be dealt with as perjured, and satisfie publikely for his perjury.

Sess. X. 5 Aug. 1640.

Act against Expectants refusing to Subscribe the Covenant.

THE Assembly ordaines, that if any Expectant shall refuse to subscribe the Covenant, he shall be declared uncapable of a Pedagogie, teaching of a School, reading at a Kirk, preaching within a Presbyterie, and shall not have libertie of residing within a Burgh, Universitie, or Colledge: and if they continue obstinate, to be processed.

THE Generall Assembly appoints the next Assembly to be in S. Andrews, the thiid Tuesday of July 1641. And that the Moderator in a convenient way, by the Seeret Councell, or otherwise as may best serve, request the Kings Majestie to send his Commissioner to the said Assembly. And if any exigent fall out, that the Presbyterie of Edinburgh give advertisement for an Assembly pro re nata.

tionne, whair of Doctor Balcanquhall is challenged to be ane of the authors: The Commissioner represented that it is not expedient that this Supplication be presented in ane parliamentarie way; becaus it tendis to the renewing of the remembrance of these troubles and the causes thereof, which heirtofoir vexed this Kiugdome, and ar now to be buried in oblivionne; and seing the said booke beirs inscriptione of His Sacred Majesties name, quhilk he will not disclaime, it aught to be handled with more reverence then to be challenged in any publik way, quhilk evidentlie rubbis with His Majesties honour, and can produce no better effect than ane answer to all assertiounes contrair to what is averred in the booke, and will frustrate the Petitioners of their intendit end. And, therefore, the Commissioners Grace desyred, that gif the Petitioners will goe on in this Supplicatione, they shall doe the same in that quiet, humble way, which may not trench upon His Majestie, bot will most readilie satisfie His Majestie, quhilk ought to be their first and maine desyre.

The Erles of Argyle and Rothes answered—That the said booke containes so many vntrewthis, that is so dishonourable to His Majestie and this hail nationne, and is so publik and dispersed through all the world, of purpose to incense neighbour nationes, and speciallie Ingland, against us, and to possess thaim with prejudices against their proceedings; and, therefore, the Petitione aught to be presented in ane publik parliamentarie way, quhilk being legal and humble, cannot in reasone offend His Graceous Majestie.

The Commissioners Grace answered—That the publik way will rather oblige His Majestie to vindicate his honour by ane answer of mainteining that booke then procure any satisfacione from his Majestie; becaus the King must ather mainteane that booke, gif it be challenged by ane publik way, or else acknowledge that he took armes upon unwarrantable grounds and false information, quhilk is so dishonourable, that no good subject can desyre or expect the same—and now, at this tyme, it is unfitt to renew the memorie of what is past upon ather side, but they are to be covered with ane act of oblivionne.

The Estatis of Parliament being petitioned by the Assemblie to joyne with thame in supplicating His Majestie against ane booke intituled A Large Declaration, (which Supplicatione is registrat in the buikes of the Assemblie,) the Estatis humbly recommendis the saune to the Commissioners Grace to be presented to his Majestie for obtaining graceouslie the desyre of the said Supplicatione; and ordainis this to be inacted in Parliament, in thir same words, and in no other wayis.

2. *Letter from the Earl of Rothes to the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery.**

MY GOOD LORD,

I have large encouragement to use freedom, both from your own favours to me, and my affection to your Lordship, and so may expostulate with you for withdrawing your wonted (and even lately expressed) respects at the Camp to this Nation. You found we had reason for our lawful Defence, and that we had loyal Hearts to our Prince, and Justice in our Desires; which moved you to plead for us, and so engaged the Affection of many to you. But sithence, when my Lord Traquair made his Relation, that moved hard Conclusions against us, not requiring so much as that it should not obtain Truth to the prejudice of a Noble Nation, till we were heard; and agreeing that an Army should be levied, and lending Monies, hath much grieved us, to be disappointed of one we so much trusted. I have therefore been bold to entreat that we may keep better Correspondency, or else by mistake we may be brought again to begin a Mischief that will not end in our days. As we have formerly declined it, so shall it not be our fault. And it lies in your Lordship, and in other great Persons, to prevent these Evils. You have lived in all great Ease, Peace, and Plenty for many years, as any Nation in the World; and if you can like to interrupt your own Happiness for the pleasure of some Prelates, who will share little with the Hardships and Dangers that will be indured, you are not well advised. The Earl of Dumfermling, and Lord Loudon, are sent with a full information of our Bussiness. They will wait upon your Lordship, and expect your wonted Assistance. They all (as much as may be) decline War, except you will now needs have it. We hope your Lordship and others will make use of these Reasons for the right end, which will fix a great deal of Obligation from both Nations on you, and shall infinitely increase my respects, desiring to continue

Your Lordships most humble Servant,
ROTHES.

3. *Letter from the Marquis of Hamilton to Lord Lindsay, with Postscript by the King.**

MY LORD,

I Received yours of February, wherein you endeavour to let me see the hazard that His Majesty may run, if he take not a peaceable Course with his Subjects of Scotland, which you say, I am reported to be no adviser of; as likewise the unavoidable Ruine that will befall me, in case of my accepting of any Employment against them.

The Arguments that you use, are the Resolutions of your own people, and the assistance that you will have elsewhere, the particular way you forbear to write; yet you say, that God hath provided it beyond your expectation; and, as it was beyond your expectation, so it is still beyond my belief; my Reasons you shall have anon. But first I will say somewhat concerning myself.

Know then, Brother, for a truth, that I heartily pray a Curse may follow him and his Posterity, that doth not endeavour and wish, that these unhappy Troubles may be composed in a fair and peaceable way. God, who knoweth the Secrets of all mens thoughts, can bear me record, with how much care, pains, and zeal I have endeavoured that; and I promise you, I shall as faithfully continue in that Course, as ever man did, in any Resolution which was with reason grounded in his heart; how few either believe, or know this, I care not, for I have laid my accompt long since, and am resolved on the worst that can befall me. And for your further satisfaction, know, that nothing can grieve me more in this World, than to be sent in any Hostile manner against my Friends, Kindred, and Country; where at the best, though I may merit something from His Majesty, (to whose Goodness I owe much besides the Duty of a Subject) yet I shall never be called other than the destroyer of them; and what cause of Sorrow this will be to a kind-hearted Scotch-man, I leave to you to judge. Therefore I assure you, that if either my Industry, Intreaties, nay Prayers prevail, no such Charge will be imposed on me, my inclinations having always led me in this rather to follow your Advice, and absent my self, in case things come to the worst, than to accept of that Employment; though I must tell you, it may bring along with it His Majesties Displeasure, and so consequently certain Ruine. Yet I do intend to put that to the hazard, and if it happen, I will have the Vanity to say, it will neither prove advantageous to the Country, nor to those in it, who once did me the Honour to esteem me their Friend. To conclude this point, consider, if a Navy come, probably I must be miserable; for what can I gain by it? if employed, a Discontented Life ever hereafter. If the King should impose the Charge on me, and I refuse it, what the better would you be? an abler would be employed in it, and I need never look for His Majesties Favour thereafter, and without that in his Kingdom will I never live. If I had no other Reasons but these, (but I could write you fourty more,) consider if I have not cause to endeavour Peace, and believe me I will do it.

* Rushworth, vol. iii., p. 983.

For the Danger that His Majesty will ruu if he enter into this War, I do acknowledge with you it may be great; but that certain Ruine must follow, I cannot confess: yet I must say, that his Gain will be but small, when he hath got that by Force which is his, or ought to be his already; but what remedy? He conceiveth a Kingdom to be lost, and two will be hazarded to regain that, if they continue in the Course they are in.

For the Assistance you mention God hath provided for you elsewhere, that is conceived to be used as an argument to fright us: For from whence can it come?

From a Party in England? Trust not to that, nor give credit to a few Factionous Spirits, with whom perhaps Correspondence may be kept.

From France? Reason and the knowledge of their Affairs make us confident, that no great matter can come from thence: Reason, for they will not assist the Rebels (for so you will be called) of a King for examples sake; and the necessity of their Affairs, for we know they have enough to do elsewhere.

From Sweden? Though they perhaps be willing, yet it is known they have not men to do it in these parts.

From Holland? The Body of that Estate hath by their Publick Miisters disallowed your Actions, and hath given assurance that they will be far from either giving Countenance or Assistanee to you; what private men may doe by way of Stealth, is little regarded or to be esteemed.

Thus I freely write what is thought of the Assistance you are like to get from abroad, of which Opinion I shall still be, unless you can make it more clearly appear; therefore I will use the old Proverb to you, Beware that your stout Hearts make not your Heads dry a Gutter, and make you neglect the receiving of His Majesties Pleasure with all thankful Obedience, which, for any thing I know, nay I durst Swear, will be no other than stands with the true Protestant Religion and the Laws of the Kingdom. What pity is it then, that these mistakes should continue? but how much more will it be, that they should encrease to a Bloody War. If all amongst you would rightly consider what true Religion and Piety is, and lay that only before their Eyes, there are yet, not only good hopes, but certain assurances of a peaceable Conclusion of those unhappy Troubles; and as you have advised me, so let me you, (which perhaps may be the last time, that on this Subject I shall write to you) endeavour Peace, which if gained, the effusion of much Christian Blood will be saved, the Country preserved, Scotchmen esteemed Valiant, Just, and Loyal, not only in this Kingdom, but through all Europe, and no man happier than

Your now much troubled, and affectionate Brother,

HAMILTON.

POSTSCRIPT.—For Answer to your Postscript, I am not in despair, but to bring it to a good pass if your own carriage do not marre it; for His Majesty is content to sign the Signature, but it is to remain in my hands, and not to be delivered except your Carriage do deserve it, as well as Crawfords, who knows not as yet, how far his Majesty hath condescended. This Letter is not fit to be long kept, therefore it will not be amiss it be burnt. Let me hear from you with the first occasion, and thereafter I care not how seldom, if matters come to the worst.

Since the writing of this, the Letter which Rothes wrote to the Chamberlain by Dumfermline was this day publicly read at Council-board, His Majesty being present: it hath produced contrary effects to what (I believe) he expected, for not only doth the Chamberlain swear that there is not one true word in it, but hath beseeched His Majesty, that Rothes may be called to an account for the traducing of him in so high a nature, (to use his own words) nay to make him, (if it were in his Power) appear to be a greater Traytor than himself. In a word, the whole Table was much scandalized with the Letter, and no wayes satisfied with the Writer of it, even though it had been all as he expressed.

I profess I have loved Rothes, and am sorry when any misfortune befalls him; and likewise I thought fit to mention this, that you may see what those of this Country will doe, when it comes to an issue; therefore I hope not only he, but the whole Country will take example by this, and grow wise while there is time.

This Letter he carried to the King, and at the end of that Copy he retained, yet extant, His Majesty with his own hand wrote.

I have perused this Letter, and have not only permitted, but commanded that it should be sent.

4. *Letter from the Earl of Pembroke to Rothes.**

MY GOOD LORD,

The Civilities and good Respects which I placed upon you, at the time of my being in the Camp, you stile Encouragements, and insinuate them as Reasons why you may expostulate with me. Your Premises I allow you, but your Inference I return you again, as fuller of Sophistry and mean Designs, than of Truth or Reason.

First, I never allowed your Defence lawfully undertaken, by other Arms than by Petitions and Prayers unto your Master. I never found Loyalty in your Covenant, nor Duty in your taking up Arms. I never affirmed the Justice of your Cause; neither did I consider so much the Merit thereof, as your unwarrantable and tumultuous disobedience therein unto the King, with the Vexation and Disturbance it brought upon the Nobility of this Kingdom. Neither was I in all this Commotion your Advocate for other reasons, than suffering my self to become a Mediator to his Majesty for your Peace and Forgiveness, moved thereunto by your frequent Protestations of paying all Duty and Loyalty to your Master's Commands.

* Rushworth, vol. iii., p. 984.

If from hence you haply gained from me an easier Credulity than your mask'd Designs deserved at my hands, I know not why you should obtrude on me an Alteration of my Opinion, or a withdrawing of my (but conditional) Respects from you. Thus far an Answer to what concerns me.

And now, as a Counsellor of England, let me be bold to expostulate with you upon that which follows in your Letters.

How cometh it to pass that you should upbraid us, or expect from us, that we should not give credit to my Lord Traquair's Relation; that we did not mediate with the King to change his Resolution of sending forth an Army; and that we did not deny the King Loans of Money for his Service?

My Lord, These Enforcements perhaps as little become you, as it is certainly unlawful and undutiful in the Subjects of England to dispute it with their King. You may pretend Religion to be the sole Cause of your Grievance; but we believe it a woful Religion here, that hath thus devested itself of all Moral Duty and Civility. Nay, you go further, you threaten and fear us with a Mischief that will not end in our days; and boldly make it your own Act, to have declined it hitherto without Obligation to the Kings Merit at all. You tell us of Plenty, and Ease, and Happiness for many years enjoyed, and wonder we should expose all those to hazard for the pleasure of some few Prelates.

My Lord, These are Arguments for common People, and Men of broken Fancies to feed upon; but such Suggestions will not find nor make a Party here. Perhaps it may blow them into a Flame, whose Zeal already hath burnt up their Duty and conscionable Allegiance unto their Master.

To be short, as I never had a Correspondency of Bussiness with your Lordship, so your Letters have assured me it is dangerous to begin it. Yet for the Peace of both the Churches and Kingdoms, I will adventure to give you this Intelligence, That we have not (in our Council here) proceeded against you without deliberation, a good Conscience, and a just sense of Honour. Neither shall I, or any of us, be entreated or feared by you, or any of you, for contributing our Assents or Fortunes thereunto, but as our Master shall command us.

Lastly, Know you, my Lord of Rothes, that the return of my old Friendship to you is to be expected, when I shall hear of your Renovatiou. Be simple, my Lord Rothes, and not a Covenanter, and I shall be the same.

SIR,

Your Majesty being the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes and States, we have found it necessary to send this Gentleman Mr Colvil, to represent unto your Majesty the candour and ingenuity, as well of our Actions and Proceedings, as of our Intentions, which we desire to be engraved and written to the whole World with a Beam of the Sun, as well as to your Majesty. We, therefore, most humbly beseech you (Sir) to give faith and credit to him, and to all that he shall say on our part, touching us and our Affairs; being most assured (Sir) of an Assistance equal to your wonted Clemency heretofore, and so often shewed to this Nation, which will not yield the Glory to any other whatsoever, to be eternally,

Sir,

Your Majesty's most humble, most obedient,
and most affectionate Servants,

6. *Letter from Committee of the Scottish Parliament to the Earl of Lanerick.**

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

It is not unknown to your Lordship with what difficulties this Kingdom hath wrestled this time past, in asserting their Religion and Liberties against the dealings of bad Instruments with his Majesty to the contrary. The means which they have used, have been no other but such as they humbly petitioned and obtained from his Majesty—a free National Assembly and Parliament. The Assembly went on in a fair way, and was closed with the liking and full consent of his Majesties Commissioner; but the Parliament Indicted by his Majesty was prorogated, till the Reasons of the Demands of the Estates were rendered to his Majesty; which having done by their Commissioners, they kept the second of June (the day appointed by his Majesty) for the sitting of the Parliament; and after diligent Enquiry, hearing nothing from his Majesty nor his Commissioner, neither by their own Commissioners or any others sent from his Majesty, which might hinder the Parliament to proceed to the settling of their Religion and Liberties, after mature deliberation, and long waiting for some signification of his Majesties pleasure, they have all, with one consent, resolved upon certain Acts, which they have adjudged to be most Necessary and Conduible for his Majesties Honour and the Peace of the Kingdom, so far endangered by delays; and have committed to us the Trust to shew you so much, and withal to send a just Copy of the Acts, that by your Lordship (his Majesties Principal Secretary of Scotland) they may be presented to his Majesty. The Declaration prefixed to the particular Acts, and the Petition in the End, contain so full expressions of the Warrants of the Proceedings of the Estates, and of their humble continued desires, that no word needs to be added by us. We do, therefore, in their name, (according to the Trust committed to us,) desire your Lordship (all other wayes of Information being stopt) with the Presenting of the Acts of Parliament, to represent unto his Majesty against all suspicious, suggestions, and tentations to the contrary, the constant love and loyalty of this Kingdom unto his Majesties Royal Authority and Person, as their Native King and kindly Monarch; And that they are seeking nothing but the Establishing of their Religion and Liberties under his Majesties Government, that they may still be a free Kingdom, to do his Majesty all the honour and service that becometh humble Subjects; that their Extremity is greater, through the Hostility and Violence threatned by Arms, and already done to them in their Persons and Goods, by Castles within and Ships without the Kingdom, than they can longer endure: And that, as his Majesty loveth his own Honour and the Weal of this his Antient Kingdom, speedy course may be taken for their relief and quietness; and that if this their Faithful Remonstrance (to which, as the Great Council of the Kingdom, they found themselves bound at this time for their Exoneration) be passed over in silence, or answered with delays, they must prepare and provide for their own defence and safety. We are very hopeful that your Lordship (as a good Patriot, and according to the obligation of your place) will not be deficient in that duty for your Native Country, and send us a speedy Answer, as we shall in every duty be careful at all occasions to shew our selves.

* Rushworth, vol. iii., p. 1210.

7. *Terms of Agreement on which Lord Lowdon was liberated from the Tower of London.**

I. The Lord Lowdon doth promise to contribute his faithful and uttermost Endeavours for his Majesties Service, and furthering of a happy Peace, and shall with all possible diligence and care go about the same, and shall labour that His Majesties Subjects of Scotland may in all humility petition, that His Majesty may be Graciously pleased to authorize a Commissioner with full Power from His Majesty to establish the Religion and Liberty of that His Majesties Native and Ancient Kingdom according to the Articles of Pacification, and that by a new Convening or Session of the Parliament, without cohesion or dependence on what hath been done by themselves, without His Majesties Presence, or of a Commissioner to represent His Majesties Royal Person and Power.

II. That if there be not an Army already convened in Scotland in a Body, he shall endeavour that they shall not convene, nor come together during the time of Treaty, in hope of Accommodation; and if they be already convened in a Body before his return, he will labour that they may dissolve and return to their several Shires, or dispose so of them, that they remain not in one Body, as may best evince that they intend not to come into England; but may carry themselves in that respective way, as may best testifie their Duty to His Majesty, and their Desires of Peace.

III. That if General Ruthwen shall happen to become their prisoner, they may (as a testimony of their desire to shun every thing which may provoke His Majesties displeasure) preserve him, and that the Lord Lowdon will shew how far he is engaged for his Safety.

IV. That when Affairs shall be brought to a Treaty in Parliament, and that His Majesty shall be Graciously pleased to settle the Religion and Liberties of the Kingdom according to the Articles of Pacification, he will endeavour that the Kings Authority shall not be entrenched upon, nor diminished, that they may give a real demonstration to the World, how tender and careful they are, that His Majesties Royal Power may be preserved both in Church and State.

V. That what is done or imparted to the Lord Lowdon concerning His Majesties Pleasure shall be kept seeret, and not revealed to any here, further than His Majesty shall think expedient.

That the Lord Lowdon shall (as soon as conveniently he can) return an account of his Diligence.

[There was given with this another Paper, which follows.]

Memorandum of what passed betwixt the Marquis of Hamilton and me, 26 June 1640.

I. Because no great matters can be well effectuated without Trust, Fidelity, and Seerecy; therefore it is fit that we swear Fidelity and Seerecy to others, and that I shall faithfully contribute my best Endeavours for performance of what I undertake; and that my Lord Marquis doe the like to me.

II. Our desires and designs do tend mainly for Preservation of Religion, Laws, and Liberties of the Kingdom, the Kings Honour, and of His Royal Authority, and for establishing of a happy Peace, and preventing of Wars; and we are to advise and resolve upon such ways and means as may best conduce for these ends.

III. If (after using of our utmost Endeavours) it be not Gods will that we may be so happy as to obtain such a Peace in haste, as may content the King and satisfie his Subjects, till differences draw to a greater height, and beginning of Wars, to resolve what is fit to be done in case of such an Extremity, for attaining a wished Peace, and to condescend what course we shall take for keeping of Correspondence.

If my Endeavours and Service (which doubtless will put me to a great deal of expence and pains) shall prove useful for His Majesties Service and Honour, and the Good of the Kingdom, which are inseparable, the Marquis will intercede really, and employ his best Endeavours with the King, to acknowledge and recompence the Lord Lowdon's Travels and Service in such a manner as a Gracious King and Master should doe to a diligent and faithful Servant.

8. *The Earl of Lanerick's Answer to the Committee.**

MY LORDS,

By my former of the date of the 23d of June, his Majesty was pleased to promise by me, to let you know within few dayes his further pleasure concerning those proceedings and desires of the Noble-men, and Barons, and Burgesses, which you sent me to be presented to his Majesty; whereupon he hath now commanded me to tell you, that the Not Proroguing of the Parliament in a Legal and Formal way, was not for want of clear Instructions, and of full and ample Power from his Majesty, he having fully signified his pleasure to those whom he did entrust with the executing thereof, not thinking it fit to employ other Servants of greater Eminence, by reason of the disorders and Iniquities of the times: and as forced by the importance of his other great and weightie affairs, he was necessitated to Prorogue the Parliament for some few dayes, so did he most really intend to perform, at the time prefixed, whatsoever he had promised by the Act of Pacification; but neither can the neglect of his servants, (if any be,) nor those other Reasons alledged by the foresaid Noble-men, Barons, and Burgesses, in their Declaration for their sitting, satisfie his Majesty for their proceeding in a Parliamentary way; since, by the Duty and Allegiance of Subjects, they are bound to acknowledge, in a most special manner, his Transcendent Power in Parliaments. And if Subjects there do assume the Power of making Laws, and rescinding those already made, what Act can be done more Derogatory to that Regal Power and Authority we are all sworn to maintain? Therefore his Majesty conceives, they cannot in reason expect he can interpose his Royal Authority to these, or any other Acts whatsoever, whereto neither he in his own real Person, nor by his Commissioner, did assist. Yet such is his Majesties Clemency, that when they shall take such an humble and dutiful way, as may witness that they are as careful and tender of his Majesties Royal Power, as they are desirous of his Approbation, then shall it be time for them to expect such a Gracious and Just Answer, as may testifie his Majesties Fatherly Compassion of that his Native Kingdom, and his Pious and Princely care of performing whatsoever is necessary for Establishing their Religion and Laws. So thus, having imparted unto you all that was enjoyned me by his Majesty, I shall say no more from my self, but I am

Your Lordships humble Servant,

LANERICK.

9. Reply by the Committee to Lanerick.†

MY LORD,

We received your Lordships Letter of the twenty seventh of June from the Lord Lowdon, whose Relief out of Prison gives us occasion (before we answer your Lordships Letter) to acknowledge the same as an Act of his Majesties Royal Justice and Goodness, although the pretended Cause of his Imprisonment was but a Malicious Calumny of the Enemies of the Kings Honour and our Peace, forged to engage both his Majesties Kingdoms in a National War. As we cannot but regret that any Neglect of his Majesties Officers, or absence of his

Commissioner, whose presence we did both desire and expect, should hinder the interposing of his Royal Authority to these Acts of Parliament, which were found most necessary for establishing Religion and the Peace of this Kingdom, and which, according to the Acts of Pacification, his Majesty was Graciously pleased to promise; so we have and shall still endeavour to give demonstration of that tender respect we have of his Majesties Honour and Royal Power. And whereas your Lordships Letter doth imply, that we should take some other way for the more easie obtaining of his Majesties Approbation, which also, by several reasons, hath been most instantly pressed by the Lord Lowdon; yet we conceive that Parliamentary way which was taken by the Estates convened by his Majesties Special Warrant, to have been most Legal and Necessary, and no wayes Derogatory to his Majesties Power in Parliament, nor contrary to the Duty of good Subjects, who are warranted by the Articles of Pacification under his Majesties hand, to Determine all Civil Questions, Ratifie the Conclusions of the Assembly, and remove the present Distractions of this Kingdom, as is more abundantly demonstrated by their Declaration in Parliament hereabout; so that we dare not take any other course, which may entrench upon their Parliamentary Power or Proceedings, nor will we (being so few in number appointed to stay here) presume of our selves, in a matter of so great moment, to return a more full and particular Answer, till there be a more frequent meeting of those appointed by Parliament, which will be shortly; and then your Lordship shall be acquainted, that you may shew his Majesty their resolutious and humble desires; and we shall remain and Servants,

10. *Principal Baillie's Account of the Aberdeen Assembly, in a Letter to the Rev. William Spang.**

Our assembly at Aberdeen was kept with great * Baillie's Letters, vol. i., p. 195.—A great number of Baillie's Letters, relative to the troubles in Scotland, were addressed to Mr Spang, a Scotch Presbyterian minister at Campvere in Holland; and from these and other materials, that learned person afterwards compiled a work in Latin for the information of foreigners which is thus titled:—"Rerum nuper in Regno Scotiae gestarum Historia, seu verius Commentarius, causas, occasiones, progressus horum motuum, breviter et perspicue proponens, simul cum synopsi concordiae, quantum haecenus inita est.—Excerptus ex scriptis intrinseque partis seitu dignissimis, quorum primaria in Latinum sermonem nunc primum fideliter translata inseruntur, &c.—PER IRINÆVM PHILALETHEN, Eleutherium.—Dantisei, Anno Domini 1641." There is a copy of this work in the Theological Library, Edinburgh.

By an Act of Assembly 1641, the Scotch church at Campvere was brought into connection with the Church of Scotland, and the Kirk Session thereof authorized to send its minister and a ruling-elder to the General Assembly. This connection continued long after, till that branch of the Scottish Church was swept away in the French revolutionary war, since which it has not been renewed, although that church has been revived.

peace. We found a great averseness, in the hearts of many, from our course, albeit little in countenance. D. Sibbald, Forbes, and Scroggie, were resolved to suffer martyrdom before they subscribed anything concerning Episcopacy and Perth articles; but we resolved to speak nothing to them of these matters, but of far other purposes. We found them irresolute about the canons of Dort, as things they had never seen, or at least considered. They could say nothing against any clause of the book of canons, liturgy, ordination, high commission. D. Forbes's treatises, full of a number of Popish tenets, and intending directly reconciliation with Rome, farther than either Montacute, or Spalato, or any I ever saw among their hands, and the hands of their young students, together with a treatise of Bishop Wedderburn's, and an English priest, Barnesius, all for reconciliation. D. Sibbald, in many points of doctrine, we found very corrupt; for the which we deposed him, and ordained him, without quick satisfaction, to be processed. The man was there of great fame. It was laid upon poor me to be all their examiner, and moderator to their process. Dr Scroggie, an old man, not very corrupt, yet perverse in the covenant and service book. D. Forbes's ingenuity pleased us so well, that we have given him yet time for advisement. Poor Barron, otherwise an ornament of our nation, we find has been much in in multis the Canterburian way. Great knavery and direct intercourse with his Grace we found among them, and yet all was hid from us that they could. I got my cause delayed to the next general assembly; yet Mr Robert Ramsay was ordained to transport to Glasgow, and Mr Andrew Cant to Aberdeen, sore against his mind; his patron Lothian will vehemently oppose it. Their violent transportations will at once offend many. I am like to be more than boasted with a divinity-profession in Aberdeen. The work is so far mistaken. Better for me to be dumb or dead than so far miserable. Much of our ten days sitting spent in causes of transportations, and plantations of churches, where patrons, presbyteries, and people had their contests. All which came before us were at last peaceably settled. Many good overtures were made, which ye will see at once in print. That which troubled us most was a passage of Mr Henry Guthrie's, which, because it may be the occasion of farther din, I will relate to you particularly, so far as I understand. Our countrymen in Ireland, being pressed there by the bishops to countenance the liturgy and all the ceremonies, did abstain from the publick worship, and in private, among themselves, their ministers being all banished, did, in that time and place of persecution, comfort themselves with prayer and reading, and other exercises of religion, whiles in the night, whiles in the day, as they had occasion. Sundry of them intending a voyage to New England, inclined towards the discipline of these churches; yea, some Brownists, insinuating themselves among them whiles their ministers were away, did move divers towards their conceits. The most of thir good people flying over to us, were heartily embraced of us all. Their private meetings were overlooked. Some of their conceits, though they were spreading, we let alone, till the Laird of Leckie, one who had suffered much by the bishops, was marked, using his Irish form of private exercises in Stirling, and in his prayers, some expressions which were prejudicial to Mr Harry Guthrie, minister of the said town, and other ministers of the land, who did not affect their ways. At once Mr Harry, with the brethren of that presbytery, and magistrates of that town, did begin with vehemency, and some violence, to suppress these private meetings; and to point out in very black letters all the singularities they knew or heard of in Leckie, or these who affected their ways. They, on the other side, failed not to render to Mr Harry and the brethren the like. The last assembly of Edinburgh were perplexed with this matter. Mr Harry made very loud complaints of their novations, both in word and writ. Sundry being conscious what in divers parts of the country was broaching, was in some fear. Divers of our chief ministers tendering very much the credit of these very pious people, were loth that anything concerning them should come in publick. We had sundry private meetings with the chief that were thought to incline that way. Mr Henderson vented himself at many occasions, passionately opposite to these conceits. We found among ourselves great harmony of judgement; yea, Leckie declaring his mind in a writ, was found to differ nothing considerable from us. Once we agreed for the framing of an act for the preventing of such questions. Both sides laid it on me to form it. All were pleased with the draught, only one not liking my conclusion of precise discharging of all novations till in a general assembly they were allowed, persuaded to leave off making of an act, lest our adversaries should triumph in our so hasty disputations, if not divisions; and did assure, by quiet dealing, to smother all farther reasoning of such purposes: only we concluded, for satisfaction of all, that Mr Harry should preach for advancement of religious exercises in every family, and Mr Robert Blair, Mr John Maclellan, Mr John Livingston, against night meetings, and other abuses which were complained of. Mr Blair, in his sermon, did not so much cry down these meetings as was expected, wherefore Mr Guthrie refused to preach at all. Some citizens of Edinburgh declared themselves not well satisfied with Mr Henderson's zeal against their practice. One Livingston, a trafficker with the English who were affected to our reformation, but withal to the discipline of New England, in his letters to his friends abroad, did write very spitefully of Mr Henderson. This being intercepted, did grieve, not only the man himself, but us all, of all ranks, who had found him the powerful instrument of God, fitted expressly much above all other, to be a blessing to our church, in this most dangerous season. For preventing of all farther inconvenience, it was thought meet to press, in all the kingdom, religious exercises in families, according to a draught which Mr Henderson, with the unanimous consent of all, gave out in print. This family worship was expected a sufficient remedy against the feared evils of other private meetings. But when it was not found so, these that would have kept on foot amongst us some of the Irish novations, foreseeing their severe condemnation by the ensuing general assembly, thought good to flee from that discreditable stroke, and drew together in Edinburgh, in time of the parliament, to a privy conference. On the one side, Mr Henderson and Mr Eleazar Borthwick; on the other, Mr Blair and Mr Dickson; these four agreed on a paper of caveats, limiting these private meetings; which being opened to the rest of the brethren there convened, did please all. The report of this gladd all the land, hoping that these disputations had been at a point. I heard no more of them till the synod, at the beginning whereof, as the custom is, a list being given up for preaching in the town, Mr Guthrie was one. He finding himself, as he avowed, indisposed in body, and unable without more books and leisure than there he could have, and unwilling, since the provost of the town required he should be heard, having, as he heard, a mind to get him transported to that town, refused peremptorily to preach at all, and that with some words of headiness more than it became to us, in the face of an assembly; those who bare him at small good will, finding him in this snare, whether to punish him for bygone businesses, or to dash him for attempting in that assembly any farther matter about Leckie's meetings, which they suspected was his main errand to that place, urged straitly the publick censure of his presumption. When he was removed, all those who had relation to the Irish business, lighted so sharply upon him, that many did think their censure was not so much for his present behaviour, as for some bygone quarrels. He took the moderator's reproof submissively enough; but whether on that irritation, or preceding resolution, he set himself with all earnestness to have these matters concluded in the assembly, which some of us were afraid so much as publickly to name. Privately he had solicited the whole northern ministers and elders, putting them in a great vehemency against all these things he complained of. It was one of my overtures for ordering the house at the beginning of the assembly, that no motion should come in publick, till first it was considered in private by the committee appointed for things of that nature whereof it was, unless the committee refused to receive it. Whereby Mr Harry his first motion in publick, though he had alledged it had been propounded by him to the committee of overtures and not received, was remitted again to the committee. By this means he was holden off some days; but by no means could be gotten diverted from proposing these questions, which we were afraid should trouble us all. Account was taken of all the commissioners of the kingdom, in the face of the assembly, of settling of family exercise in ilk house of their presbytery; it was avowed to be everywhere pretty well advanced; but this was not water for the fire in hand. It was the advice of the committee, to propose Mr Henderson's paper before Mr Harry was heard. This advice, in my mind, was wholesome; for likely all would have applauded to that paper, and no more needed for the settling of these questions; but some, whether because they were loth, though privily they assented to that paper, that yet it should go on in a publick act, or being varied with a clean contrair spait, were wilful to have Mr Harry to vent himself in publick, to the uttermost of his passions, would not let the committee determine any thing in that affair. Mr Harry being permitted at last to speak in the assembly, a long discourse proclaimed what he was able to say of Leckie, and those meetings. Truly he uttered many things very odious, if true. Mr James Simpson of Bathgate shewed also many scandalous things of that sort of people. A commissioner from Galloway declared a number of uncouth passages, reflecting on Mr Samuel Rutherford, Mr John Livingstone, and Mr Maclellan. Presently all went to a heat and confused din; the whole north, especially the Earl of Seaforth, a well-spoken man, but whose honesty in our cause ever has been much suspected, passionately siding with Mr Harry; some others fretting to hear pious people so shamefully, as they thought, calumniated. In the midst of this clamour, I took leave, sharply to regret that we did rush in a greater evil than any was complained of: the confused disorder of a general assembly was the spoiling of the only remedy of that and all other diseases; but no possibility of order and silence. The moderator had neither weight in his discourse, nor dexterity in guiding. We missed much Mr Henderson, or some of our respected nobles. At last the confusion ended in a committee for the preparing of overtures to remeid these evils. The committee was for the most part of men at Mr Harry's devotion. After much jangling and repetition, with many evils, of odious, whether true or fabulous, narrations, sundry of us inclined to have that forenamed paper passed in an act. But my Lord Seaforth, and Mr Harry, by no means could hear of that motion. They told ever, that caveats brought in the bishops; that this paper, though never so full of limitations, would be at least introductive of the thing limited. Mr Rutherford all the while was dumb; only, in the midst of this jangling, he cast in a syllogism, and required them all to answer it. "What scripture does warrant, an assembly may not discharge; but privy meetings for exercises of religion, scripture warrants, James v. 16. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another; Mal. iii. 16. Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another, &c.: Ergo, thir things could not be done in publick meetings." A number greedily haunshd at the argument, Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr J. Adamson, and others; but came not near the matter, let be to answer formally. Mr Harry and Seaforth would not have Mr Samuel to trouble us with his logick syllogisms. The truth is, as I conceive, Mr Harry intended to have all meetings private simpliciter abolished; also Mr Rutherford I know, in a treatise, defended the lawfulness of those meetings in greater numbers, and for moe purposes than yet we have heard practised; also Mr Dickson had written, and practised, and countenanced some things in these meetings, that now both of them finding the inconveniences, and seeing the great opposition they got from many good men, and especially by Mr Henderson, were content to pass from, at least to be silent of. We closed that night with this overture, That five of our number should draw up every one of us our conception, by way of act, to present to-morrow to the committee, Mr David, Mr Harry, Mr David Lindsay, Mr Alexander Peter, and I. In my act I strove, so cunningly as I could, to canvass Mr Henderson's paper shortly, with some of my own conceptions. I communicated it to the chief opposers of Mr Harry, Mr David Dickson, Mr Samuel Rutherford, William Rig, and others, and got them at last to acquiesce. When we came to the committee, all the five Acts were read: the question came betwixt mine and Harry's. Mine was liked by all; only Mr Harry misliked it, and conceived that under every word a dangerous serpent did lie. There was no remeid: his contentment was the contentment of the body of the assembly. Since he misliked my draught, I set myself to persuade that his draught might be accepted; for truly it had nothing that was controverted. It consisted of three articles. The 2d article was, That read prayers was not unlawful. Mr Dick did enlarge, that it should be lawful to read prayers both in private and publick. The 3d article was, That it should not be permitted to any to expone scripture to people, but only ministers, and expectants approved by Presbyteries. No man did contradict the 1st article, which was, That family-worship should be declared to be of persons of one family, not of divers. Here was all the question. I did declare publickly, oft without contradiction, that the meetings whereof he complained were not family-meetings, but another kind specially differing from the other; so that his article of family-meetings would never touch any abuse of these meetings, were they never so many and foul. Yet because this was Mr Harry's own draught, and he alledged that the people with whom he had to do, did take their conventicles only for family exercises, he required no more than the declaration of the assembly, that family-meetings extended no farther than to persons of the same family. This, though no man could refuse, yet these that liked nothing that came from him, did question much more than they needed, and very violently urged to have, in that article, limitations which in my judgement were very needless, and did farther Mr Harry's design more than his own words. Always Mr Harry was made content to accept of one exception, which was the practice of people's flocking to their minister's family-exercise; but of any more exceptions he would not hear, and more they pressed upon an argument that did much amaze my mind, that except they got another conceit, they had a written protestation ready against that act of the synod; the thing that the devil was seeking, and would have been sweet pastime to that town of Aberdeen, and our small favourers in the north, who were greedily gazing on the event of that broil. Always at last the prayers of the land for God's blessing to that assembly prevailed, and in a moment God made the minds of these who differed to agree, to the great joy of all when they heard it. There was but five of us then in private, Mr Harry, Mr David, as parties, Belhelvie for Mr Harry, the moderator, and I, betwixt them. Mr David at last acquiesced to my request, to let Mr Harry's article pass as it stood; and Mr Harry, after once and again I had inculcate to him, that all his act was but a blephum if you put not in that clause you see it has against novations, was at last content to put it in; so with great difficulty, the act being agreed upon in private, and in the committee, when it came to be voted in the assembly it had no contrair voice. All of us did think that then the storm was close over and gone; yet when least we expected, it does blow up again as boisterously as ever. Some that were grieved and fretted that their purpose should have got so much way, desiring to have some order of him, did give in a writ, requiring, since so many vile abuses were in the assembly alledged to have been committed by Leekie, and others, in divers parts of the country, it were expedient that a committee were ordained for the trial and severe punishment of all these disorders; and that this committee should sit in Edinburgh, and consist of those whom the assembly had appointed commissioners for the parliament, with so many other as the assembly thought meet to join with them. This bill was read near the end of the synod by Mr James Bonner, moderator of the bills, as newly given to him, by whom he knew not. Upon the hearing of it, at once there arose such an heat and universal clamour, that it was marvellous. Mr John Maclellan was found the ingiver of it; while he began to be hissed at, Mr Andrew Cant, and Mr D. Dickson did speak for the reasonableness of it, and some few other ministers and gentlemen who had been on the council of it; but they were so overwhelmed with the multitude of criers, Away with it, Away with it, that they were forced to be silent and let it go. I much grieved to see the tumultuous disorder of our assembly; and had I been on Mr David's council, I would have dissuaded him to my power from such a motion, which, if it had been assented to, was like to have fired our church more than any other brand that Satan at this time, in all his wit, could have invented: so, by God's goodness, water was cast on that fire for the time: the embers yet seem to smoke; but we hope God will see to the peace of our church, which is but a brand newly taken out of the fire, or rather yet in the midst of the flame of war and great danger.

11. *Laud's Service Book, and the English Liturgy.**

In addition to the objections which the Scots had to various parts of the English Liturgy, they complained of the following alterations made on it in Laud's Service Book, as savouring of Popery:—

1. In the order of the administration of the Lord's Supper, instead of the Rubrick in the English Liturgy—"The table, at the Communion time, having a fair white linen cloth upon it, shall stand in the body of the church, or in the chancel, where morning and evening prayer are appointed to be said"—Laud's Service Book has the following:—"The holy table having, at the communion time, a carpet, and a fair white linen cloth upon it, with other decent furniture, meet for the high mysteries there to be celebrated, shall stand at the uppermost part of the chancell or church, where the Presbyter, standing at the north side or end thereof, shall say," &c.

2. Having thus removed the Priest, as far as possible, out of the hearing of the people, (in conformity with the Romish rites,) the Service Book, in a second Rubrick, immediately before the consecration, orders him to turn his back to the people, which he must have done according to the following direction:—"Then the Presbyter, standing up, shall say the prayer of consecration, as followeth, but then, during the time of consecration, he shall stand at such a part of the holy table, where he may, with the more ease and decency use both his hands."

3. They objected to the phrase consecration, which, though it appears in the modern editions of the English Liturgy, had no place in the edition used at that time in England; but their chief objection to the prayer of consecration, in Laud's book, was the following sentence, which never was allowed a place in the English Liturgy:—"We most humbly beseech thee, and of thy almighty goodness vouchsafe so to blesse and sanctifie, with thy word and holy spirit, these thy gifts and creatures of bread and wine, that they may be unto us the body and blood of thy most dearly beloved Son."

4. After the prayer of consecration, there follows, in Laud's book, the prayer of oblation, which two prayers the Popish writers call the heart and the head of the mass, and both of which were carefully removed by the English Reformers, the former being altered, and the latter rendered innocent, by being placed as a thanksgiving after receiving the communion. In the Service Book, the oblation is replaced, under the title of a "Memoriall or Prayer of Oblation," beginning with, "We, thy humble servants do celebrate and make here before thy divine Majestic, with these thy holy gifts, the memoriall which thy Son hath willed us to make, and humbly beseeching thee, that whosoever shall be partakers of the holy communion, may worthilie receive the most precious bodie and blood of thy Son, Jesus Christ, and be fulfilled with thy grace and heavenly benediction, and made one bodie with him, that he may dwell in them and they in him." After this, the Lord's

* It appears fitting to embody in this collection a brief statement of the discrepancies betwixt the English and the obnoxious Scotch Service Books, and to point out the resemblances which the latter had to the Popish missals. For this exposition we are indebted to a kind and learned friend, who is fully master of the subject.

prayer, which, in the English Liturgy, is not introduced till after the communion has been received, is brought in with the presumptuous preface of the missal, Audemus dicere—"We are bold to say."

5. What was formerly called "the holy table," and, in the English Liturgy, "the Lord's table," is now, after the consecration, in the Service Book, termed "God's board." "Then shall the Presbyter, kneeling down at God's board, say," &c.

6. In delivering the bread, the Minister is required, by the English Liturgy, to say—"The body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on him in thy heart, by faith with thanksgiving." This last sentence, added by the English Reformers to qualify and explain the former, is wholly omitted in Laud's book, which gives us merely the words of the missal—"The body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life." In like manner, when delivering the cup, the words "Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful," are expunged from the Service Book, as savouring too much of Protestantism; and the Priest is simply required to "say this benediction—The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Here the party receiving shall say, Amen."

7. The fair linen cloth, with which the elements are covered, after communicating, is called, in Laud's book, the "corporall."

8. Besides this, in the order for the communion, in Laud's Liturgy, the Offertory, which, it would appear, was almost wholly expunged, name and thing, from the ancient copies of the English Liturgy, as having been the Popish sacrifice for the quick and the dead, is introduced in nearly all its former glory. Passages of Scripture, omitted in the English book as identifying it with Jewish oblations, are restored; and it was strongly suspected, from the Commentaries of Couzins, who openly defended the practice, that prayers for the dead, and for the honour of the saints, were insinuated under such expressions as, "We also bless thy holy name for all those thy servants, who, having finished their course in faith, do now rest from their labours—all thy saints, who have been choice vessels of thy grace, and the lights of the world in their several generations—most humbly beseeching that, at the day of the general resurrection, we, and all they which are of the mystical body of thy Son, may be set on his right hand," &c., nothing like which is to be found in the corresponding prayer in the English Liturgy.

Various other objectionable points, in the Service Book of 1637, are noticed by Robert Baillie in his treatise "Ladensium Autokatakrisis, the Canturburians Self-Conviction," published without his name in 1640. But the same writer has treated the subject at greater length, and in a more learned and elaborate publication, entitled, "A Parallel or brief Comparison betwixt our Scottish Booke and the Missal, the Breviarie, and other Popish ritnalls this day in use at Rome, according to the Canons of Trent;" included in his MS. letters and journals, which are now being printed by the Bannatyne Club. It is needless to add, that the suspicions of the Covenanters, as to the intentions of Laud and his Clergy, in the construction of the Service Book, to bring the Church of England, as well that of Scotland, into closer conformity with the Church of Rome, were greatly strengthened by the publications and proceedings of the party in England, who were carrying matters such a length as to disgust and alarm the rational and sober portion of the English Clergy. See, for example, Laud's Consecration of St Catherine Creed Church, which made a great noise at the time—Rushworth, vol. ii., p. 76. See also Bennet's Memorial of the Reformation, p. 165, and Neale's History of the Puritans.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

AT ST ANDREW'S AND EDINBURGH, 1641.

IN resuming our narrative of events connected with the Church of Scotland, we may state, that Wentworth, (created Earl of Strafford in the close of the preceding year,) was intrusted with the chief command of the King's forces to be employed against the Scotch; the Earl of Northumberland, who was named Geueal, being in a state of health which did not admit of his taking the active charge of it. Strafford had acquired the confidence of the King, by his zealous and euergetic services in Ireland, and proved the sincerity of his devotion to his master's cause, by subscribing £20,000 to the fund for carrying on the war. Before adverting to the military movements of the English army, it may be proper to notice those of the Scottish, who, on this occasion, took steps in advance of their antagonists.

Early in the year 1640, (25th February,) a reinforcement of 300 men had been sent into Edinburgh Castle, with large stores of munitions for its defence, under General Ruthven, created Lord Ettrick. In May, however, the Scottish Estates having mustered their forces in sufficient number, beleaguered the Castle, and, in June and July, bombarded it with such effect as ultimately to force its surrender. About the same time, Argyle took the Castle of Airlie, and plundered all the tenantry on the lands of Lord Ogilvie; scoured Athol, and apprehended the Earl, and other leading men, whom he sent to prison; and levied most severe contributions: and Monro carried terror into the north, by taking prisoners a great number of persons disaffected to the Covenant at Aberdeen, and by other severities; including, among the prisoners, the Bishop of Moray, whose Castle of Spynie he seized and garrisoned. He also took Strathbogie Castle, plundered the Marquis of Huntley's lands fearfully, and, on the 2d of Aug., "he marches to Bauffe," says Balfour, "quher he playes the devill, and demolishes the Lord Banffes house, which wes both faire and staitly, and an ornament to that pairt of the Kiugdome."

Such were the preludes to the meeting of the General Assembly in the north, which sat from the 23th of July till the 5th of August 1640, in the midst of all these manifold desolations and ravages around them. Meanwhile, the main army of the Covenanters was mustering in Edinburgh, under old Leslie, as General; the Earl of Callander, Lieutenant-General; Baillie, Major-General; Sir Alexander Hamilton, General of Artillery; and Colonel John Leslie, Quartermaster-General. Under the guidance of these commanders, and above a dozen of the Nobility and their sons, and many experienced officers, the Scottish army moved towards the Border. They returned to their old quarters at Dunse Law, and, after about three weeks' training and preparation, they crossed the Tweed on the 20th or 21st of August;* thus deviating from their former tactics, and assuming the aggressive course. Balfour states it as consisting of 200 companies of foot, 4,000 cavalry, and 2,500 baggagers. We leave the pacific correspondence to be gleaned from the documents annexed, and follow briefly the military operations.

The van of the Covenanters was led by Montrose, who was the first to plunge into the river at Coldstream, at the head of his battalions—his secret alienation from the cause of the Covenant not having yet been discovered. In order to break the force of the current, and lessen its pressure on the infantry who waded it, Sir Thomas Hope, the King's Lord Advocate, at the head of the College of Justice troop of cavalry, passed the river a little above them; and, having forded the river in two columns, (one of them a little below the other,) the Scottish army entered England as open enemies of their King. They encamped that night at Hirslaw, whence, next morning, they marched southwards, and encamped on Misfield Moor, and in the adjacent villages. On the 22d of August, they marched to Middleton Haugh, near Wooller, where they were attacked by some of the King's troops from Berwick; but these were speedily repulsed, and some of them taken prisoners. Next day, (23d,) being a Sunday, they moved to Branton Field, after sermon; and, next day, encamped on a hill betwixt the new and old towns of Eglingham or Eglintown. On the 25th, they marched from thence, and encamped at Nether Wotten—on the 26th, at Criech—and, on the 27th, at Newburn-upon-Tyne, about four miles west from Newcastle. It may here be noticed, that, on entering England, the Covenanters published certain "Considerations," in justification of their expedition.†

Not expecting, perhaps, such decisive courses as the Covenanters had now taken, the English levies were not yet fully prepared for the rencontre. In the month of July, the army was quartered chiefly in Yorkshire, on its route northward to Newcastle, where Lord Conway had his headquarters. On the 15th of August, that officer, who was General of the Cavalry, but at this time in the chief command, received intelligence of the intentions of the Scotch, and immediately wrote in great haste to Secretary Windebanke, warning the King of their certain approach.† On the 20th, the King set out hurriedly from London, in consequence of this information, and issued a proclamation the very day the Scotch had entered England, declaring that "all those of Scotland who have already entred, or hereafter shall presume to enter in an hostile manner into any part of the kingdom of England, and their adherents, assistants, and others, who shall supply them with money, &c., shall be adjudged traitors against his Majesty, his crown and dignity, and incur the penalties of high treason;" but declaring that he would forgive them if they would return to obedience, "and professeth it before God and the world, as often formerly and in his late declaration he hath done, that he never did nor will hinder his subjects of Scotland from the enjoying of their religion and liberties, according to the ecclesiastical, civil, and municipal laws of that kingdom, and according to his promise and their desires, subscribed by themselves at the Pacification,"* &c. This proclamation just left matters precisely as they stood, on a vague foundation, such as they were under the pacification of the last year, but gave no sanction, on the part of the King, to the sweeping enactments of the Estates in Scotland; and it had no effect.

On the 27th of August, the King, as well as Strafford, being then at York, exerting themselves to raise the requisite supplies of money, the latter dispatched a packet of instructions to Conway at Newcastle, the Scotch army being posted in its vicinity. Rushworth, the compiler of the Historical Collections, accompanied the courier who bore the packet, and he states that, on their arrival at Newcastle, they learnt that Conway had gone to the army near Newburn, whither they immediately went and found the General holding a Council of War with his Field Officers, about half a mile from the troops. On opening his dispatches, these contained orders to prepare the army for an engagement with the Scotch; and while the Council was in deliberation, a herald arrived "in all haste from the army, to acquaint the Lord Conway and Council of War, that the army was already engaged with the Scots, which seemed strange to them, because orders were given not to fight but upon the defence; but the Council of War suddenly broke up and hastened to the army."†

When the Scotch army reached Newburn, on the 27th, a drummer had been sent to the English cantonments with certain despatches, but was driven back with them before reaching Newcastle; and the same evening the Scotch pitched their tents on Heddon-Law, above Newburn, from whence there was a declivity towards the river. During the night, they set fires all around their camp, which gave it the appearance of a vast extent; and, during the same night, a part of the King's army, consisting of 3000 foot and 1500 horse, was drawn up in a meadow on the south side of the Tyne, called Newburn-Haugh, or Stella-Haugh, to oppose the Scotch passing the river during the night. There were two breastworks raised by the English, opposite to the two fords which the Scotch might pass at low water; and in each of these sconces were 400 men, with four field pieces. During all that night and the following day, the English troops were under arms, guarding the passage of the river, until an engagement commenced in the following manner:—the Scotch, having the vantage position, could see from their heights the whole force and disposition of the English army, they planted cannon in Newburn church steeple, and their infantry in the church, houses, lanes, and hedges.

While the opposing hosts were thus watching each other, and preparing for the fray, the horses from both armies were watered in the river during the forenoon of the 28th, without molestation on either side. But a Scotch officer, well mounted, with a feather in his hat, having gone to the river to water his horse, an English soldier, who had noticed that the officer eyed the sconces, fired upon and wounded him. He fell from his horse; on which the Scotch Musqueteers opened a fire on the English, and speedily the artillery on both sides, as well as the musketry, was brought into full play.

The fight continued till the tide had ebbed, and the river was left fordable; and, by this time, the Scotch cannon had made a breach in one of the breastworks, and many of the English were killed. Finally, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the English officers, the men threw down their arms and fled, being exhausted with unintermitted service all the day and previous night, under arms and in the battle. The Scotch commander, seeing from his height, this discomfiture of his antagonists at one point, ordered a forlorn party of twenty-six, being gentlemen of the College of Justice troop, to pass the river, which they did rapidly, their orders being to discover the plight of the other breast-work not yet silenced. But a brisk fire was kept up on it; and at length the English were compelled to retreat from it also; on which more cavalry, commanded by Sir Thomas Hope, and two regiments of foot, commanded by Lords Cranford-Lindsey and Loudoun, waded through the river. Simultaneously with this movement, Leslie opened a battery on the English cavalry, exposed to the range of his guns; and speedily a retreat was sounded. A portion of the cavalry attempted to cover the retreat up Ritan and Stella Banks; but the Scotch having now passed the ford in sufficient numbers, overpowered and took them prisoners. The loss in this skirmish was inconsiderable—only about sixty of the English having been killed, although, doubtless, many were wounded. The accounts, however, on this point do not agree.

The English army effected its retreat to Newcastle; and at midnight a council of war was held, when it was resolved that the whole army should retreat to Durham, which it did next morning (29th) at five o'clock, leaving Newcastle unprotected and open to the Scotch troops. During the afternoon of that day, Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale, went with a trumpet and some troops of cavalry to the gates of Newcastle, demanding a surrender; and being threatened with some batteries of ordnance, the Mayor, after some parly, opened the gates. "Next day, being Sunday, fifteen [Scotch] Lords and Douglas came and dined with the Mayor—drank a health to the King—had their sermons that day by their own divines;" and on Monday, Leslie pitched his camp on Gateside hill, in the vicinity of Newcastle.*

Having thus obtained decisive success in their first enterprise, and an advantageous position, the Scotch leaders availed themselves of their victory, but with moderation. They agreed for supplies, which they required, but gave money in part, and security for the balance. Their occupation of Newcastle, however, and the retreat of the King's army, produced the greatest consternation. Of the ten thousand persons employed in the coal mines, not a man was to be seen. Four or five hundred vessels, employed in the coal trade, either sailed from the river, or refrained from entering it, when they discovered the state of matters; and for several days all the shops were shut, and many families fled, leaving their houses and property at the mercy of the Scotch. The panic spread to Durham, where the shops were all shut, and not one house in ten was occupied by its possessors, who had fled for safety. The English army continued its retreat from Durham towards York. The Bishop and clergy of Durham, too, all fled; among whom was Dr Balcanquell, who had no desire, it is to be presumed, to experience the tender mēreies of the Sheriff of Teviotdale and Lord Kirkeudbright, or the spiritual consolations of "Master Andro Cant."

The news of this defeat reached Strafford at Darlington the day after. He was on his way to join the army before any engagement should take place. But he now sent orders to the troops, in full retreat, to rally and concentrate in Yorkshire. The King had, at that time, reached Northallerton on his way to the army; but, on learning the unfortunate issue of the first conflict, he immediately returned to York; and next day Strafford issued an order to the soldiers to destroy all millstones on their retreat.

When the Royal army was mustered at York, it was found to amount to 17,383; and, on the 31st of August, the King issued a summons to all the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and other Nobles, to attend his Majesty at York, and, the same day, issued an order to the Earl of Cranford to engage a hundred Scotch officers in his service.

On the 4th of September, his Majesty received a Petition from the Commissioners of the late Parliament in Scotland, in a letter to the Earl of Lanerick, to which an answer was next day returned;† and, on the 7th, a writ was issued summoning a council of the Peers at York, upon the 24th of the month.* Upon the 8th, the Scotch Commissioners sent a second letter to Lanerick; and, on the 9th, they sent another to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, setting forth the objects and purposes of their expedition; and, about the same time, the Earl of Essex and other Noblemen, and the Citizens of London, also applied, by petition, to his Majesty to call a Parliament, which last the Privy Council endeavoured, in vain, to quash. The purport of all these documents, will be most satisfactorily seen in the writings themselves;† and the result of the whole was, that the King appointed Commissioners to meet others from the Scotch at Rippon, to treat of peace, and called a Parliament for the 3d of November. The negotiations were afterwards transferred to London; and the combined movements of the English and Scottish malcontents ultimately ended in a great revolution throughout the British empire, of which it is difficult, even in later times, to predicate whether the evils or the benefits preponderated.

The negotiations at Rippon commenced on the 1st of October, and, on the 23d of that month, were transferred to London, that the English Noblemen might attend the Parliament summoned to meet there, in the beginning of November; and a cessation of hostilities was agreed on.‡ It is needless here to enumerate all the points of treaty, which were necessarily very numerous and complicated. From that affair, therefore, we turn, for a brief space, to the proceedings in the Long Parliament of England, which was opened by the King on the 3d of November, and in which, the discontented party having a preponderance, proceeded at once to the most decisive courses.

Strafford, by his energy and decision of character, although he had governed Ireland for eight years with great advantage to the State, became peculiarly obnoxious to the malcontents, English, Scottish, and Irish, by reason of his devotion to the King's service, and his high talents and vigour. Whenever, therefore, he appeared in London, a vehement and preconcerted attack was made upon him in the House of Commons, on the 11th of November. Pym led on the attack, imputing it to Strafford that he was one of the chief among those who had formed a deliberate plan for changing the form of Government, and subverting the ancient laws and liberties of the kingdom; and, after various elaborate invectives, it was moved that he should be immediately impeached for high treason. This motion was unanimously adopted, nor was even one man found who had the moral courage to utter a word in his defence. The impeachment was instantly voted and carried to the upper house, where Strafford, who had just entered, unaware of what had been secretly carried through in the other house, and who had come to London under a royal guarantee that the Parliament should not touch a hair of his head, was ordered into custody; and soon after Laud was similarly treated, and, with Strafford, sent to the Tower.

It belongs to the History of England to trace these and other proceedings of the Long Parliament to their issues; but one of the immediate effects was a close alliance betwixt the leaders of the Opposition and the Scottish Commissioners then in London, with whom they made common cause against the King and his supporters. Rothes, Loudoun, and other Scottish Statesmen, with an auxiliary force of clergymen, availed themselves of this alliance; and, while in London, busied themselves, not exclusively in effecting a favourable conclusion to the treaty, but in preaching and intriguing for the subversion of the English hierarchy and planting Presbytery in its stead; and they joined their moiety of accusations against Strafford and Laud, before the English Parliament, as incendiaries and prime causes of all their own grievances. They were not inattentive, however, to the business of their mission, and made various demands in the negotiations, of very considerable importance:—That the Acts of the late Parliament of Scotland should be ratified and published by the King; that public incendiaries, who had excited hostilities betwixt the two kingdoms, should be referred to the judgment of the respective Parliaments, and not afterwards exempted from the punishments which might be awarded; and these, with some subordinate matters about indemnification for losses, &c., constituted the particulars for which they contended. To these demands the King was, at length, (15th December,) constrained to yield by the necessity of his circumstances; and thus his favourite Episcopacy was not only overthrown in Scotland, but shaken to its foundation in England; the royal prerogatives were virtually relinquished; and the whole power of the State vested in the democratic oligarchies of both kingdoms, under the guidance of aristocratical leaders; and every man who had hazarded life and fortune in what he deemed a loyal adherence to his Sovereign, was thus delivered over to the arbitrary power of these semi-republican Conventions. Among other boons conferred on the Scottish by the English Parliament, was the sum of £300,000 for “brotherly assistance”—a subsidy which was by many understood, not merely as an indemnification for the expense of their expeditions, but as a consideration for similar instances of fraternal aid, should the malcontent party in England require it on some future occasion.*

The final pacification, however, was not concluded till the 7th of August, 1641, when both armies were immediately disbanded; but during the dependence of the treaty, the General Assembly, of the year 1641, met at St Andrew's, on Tuesday the 20th of July—John Earle of Weymes being the King's Commissioner. A deputation from the Parliament having craved that its sittings should be transferred to Edinburgh, their request was complied with; and an adjournment to that city, where its next sederunt was appointed to be held on the 27th, took place. At the adjourned meeting, Mr Alexander Henderson was once more chosen Moderator.

We may just remark, that, during the protracted negotiations now alluded to, the Scottish Commissioners and Ministers, in the most indecent manner, exerted themselves to overthrow the Church of England. Henderson and Gillespie wrote and published tracts against it. They openly approved of what was called the "Root and Branch Petition" of the English nonconformists, and went the length of presenting to the King a paper, in which they demanded "unity of religion and uniformity of Church government"—in other words, the adoption of the Presbyterian Covenant, and the coercive edicts for its adoption; thus violating their duty as negotiators for the affairs of Scotland only, and invading the rights and privileges of an independent nation; fostering the spirit of intolerance and revolution; and propelling the movement in which the Throne and both the Protestant Churches were, for many sad years, involved in one common ruin.

This intrusion, by the Scotch Covenanters, into the internal affairs of England, and their zealous exertions for the overthrow of its ecclesiastical establishment, and the destruction of Strafford and Laud, is one part of their conduct of which we have never seen any tenable defence, and which, on every sound principle of international law, was altogether unwarrantable, and incapable of justification. Whatever be the relative merits of Episcopacy and Presbytery, whatever the misdemeanours of Strafford, of Laud, or of other English counsellors of the King—these were matters with which the Scottish Commissioners, in their diplomatic character as the ambassadors of Scotland, had no earthly warrant to intermeddle. Strafford and Laud were the sworn Privy Counsellors of England; and whether the advice they gave in that capacity, or the services which they rendered to the King, were, in the opinion of these Scotchmen, right or wrong—they were responsible only to their Sovereign, and not amenable to the English Parliament at the instance of any knot of foreigners, who had no title, under any theory of the law of nations ever yet recognised, to impeach men in such circumstances. The whole proceedings against Strafford were an utter disgrace to the Parliament of England. He was not accused of any single offence which subjected him, under the well-defined law of England, to the penalties of high treason, wherewithal a bill of attainder charged him; and the first principles of all civilized jurisprudence were grossly outraged in the judgment by which, although each item of imputed offence was found insufficient, yet, by accumulating them all, they were construed to amount to that crime. But Strafford was a doomed man; the first victim of that reign of terror which thus commenced—consigning to the scaffold a brave, loyal, and splendid man, in violation of every principle of universal as well as of municipal law—robbing the monarch of his brightest attribute—and plunging the two kingdoms into the vortex of a fierce democracy, which henceforward filled the land with tyranny and hypocrisy under the mask of Religion and Liberty. In the guilt of that foul judicial murder, the leaders of the Scotch Covenanters were deeply implicated; and we record the fact with shame and sorrow, upon grounds of historical evidence which we believe cannot be shaken.

Before reprinting the Acts of Assembly 1641, it may be proper to note, cursorily, the general proceedings of the previous year, which either do not appear at all, or but partially, in the printed Acts of that Assembly.

1. The greater part of the Assembly's time was occupied in the transportation of ministers, about which the patrons, presbyteries, and parishes had many keen contests. Amongst others, Andro Cant was removed from Newbottle to Aberdeen, and Robert Ramsay to Glasgow.

2. Rigorous proceedings were adopted against the Aberdeen Doctors who had repudiated the Covenant. Dr Sibbald was deposed for alleged heterodoxy and contumacy, and was ordained to be further proceeded against, if he did not give speedy satisfaction. Doctors Forbes and Seroggie were found guilty of Arminianism, &c., but were allowed a year to repent; and a new Commission on the College was appointed.

3. Besides passing Acts against the profanation of the Sabbath, witches, and idolatrous monuments, the Elders and Magistrates of Burghs were directed to attend the Presbyteries of the Church, for the more effectual enforcement of their decrees by the concurrence of civil authority.

4. The controversy was agitated about Private Conventicles, of which Baillie gives a minute account.*

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS

OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY HOLDEN AT ST ANDREWS
AND EDINBURGH, 1641.

Sess. I. 20 July 1641.

John Earle of Weymes, His Majesties Commissioner, presented His Majesties Letter to the Assembly, whereof the tenor followeth.

CHARLES R.

TRUSTIE and welbeloved, Wee greet you well. It is no small part of Our Royall care and desires, that the true Reformed Religion, wherein by the grace of God, We resolve to live and dye, be settled peaceably in that Our ancient and native Kingdome of Scotland, and that the same be truly taught, and universally received and professed by Our Subjects there, of all degrees. For preventing of all division and trouble hereafter, We did intend in Our Own Royall Person, to have been present at this Assembly; but conceiving it to be unfitting, to detaine the Ministers from their particular charges, till the time of Our coming to the Parliament, We have resolved to make knowne unto you by these, and by Our Commissioner, That in the approaching Parliament, it is Our intention by Our authority, to ratifie and confirm the Constitutions of the late Assembly at Edinburgh, that they may be obeyed by all Our Subjects living in that Our Kingdome. And that We will take into Our Royall consideration, by what meanes the Churches belonging to Our presentation, when any of them shall happen to vaik, may be best provided with well qualified Preachers: Like as We are not unwilling to grant presentations unto such as in these times of trouble have entred into the Ministeric, providing they have been examined by the Presbyteries, and approved by them: Because We want not Our own feares of the decay of Learning in that Church and Kingdome, We intend also to consider of the best meanes for helping the Schooles and Colledges of Learning especially of Divinity, that there may be such a number of Preachers there, as that each Parish having a Minister, and the Gospel being preached in the most remote parts of the kingdome, all Our Subjects may taste of Our care in that kinde, and have more and more cause to blesse God that we are set over them. And, finally, so tender is Our care, that it shall not be Our fault if the Churches and Colledges there flourish not in Learning and Religion: For which Royall testimonie of Our goodnesse, We require nothing upon your part, but that which God hath bound you unto, even that you be faithfull in the charge committed unto you, and care for the soules of the people: That you study Peace and Unity amongst your selves, and amongst the people, against all Schisme and Faction; and that you not only pray for Us, but that you teach the People, which We trust are not unwilling to pay that honour and obedience which they owe unto Us, as his Vicegerent set over them, for their good; wherein We expect you will by your good example goe before them. Which hoping you will doe, We bid you farewell. From Our Court at Whitehall, the 10 day of July 1641.

Sess. III. 28 July 1641.

Act approving the Overtures of the Assembly at Aberdene, for ordering the Assembly-House.

THE Overtures for ordering the Assembly-House, given in to, and approved by the Assembly of Aberdene the 29 July 1640, Act Sess. 2, were openly read, and again approved by this Assembly, and ordained to be kept the whole time thereof.

Sess. V. 30 July 1641.

THE Assembly having considered the Supplication given in by Doctor Robert Howie, Provest of the New Colledge of S. Andrews, whereby he craved, that (notwithstanding of his dismissal of his charge) he should not be prejudged of his full provision and maintenance during his life-time: The Assembly thinks it fit and necessary, that his provision and maintenance should not be diminished, but that he should enjoy the same fully, as of before, during all the dayes of his life-time, and craveth his dismission to be only but a cessation from his charge, because of his age and inability: And declares, that old Ministers and professors of Divinitie, shall not by their cessation from their charge, through age and inability, be put from enjoying their old maintenance and dignity. And recommends this and others the like things, concerning the estate of that Universitie of S. Andrews, to the Parliament, and the Visitation to be appointed from the Assembly and Parliament. And likewise the Assembly being informed, that the said Doctor Howie hath been very painfull in his charge, and that he hath divers papers which would be very profitable for the Kirk: Therefore they think fit, that the said Doctor Howie be desired to collect these papers, which doeth concerne, and may be profitable for the use of the Kirk, that the samine may be showne to the Visitors of the said Universitie.

Sess. VIII. 2 Aug. 1641, à meridie.

THE Assembly ordaines, that Ministers who are deposed either by Presbyteries, Synods, or Generall Assemblies, or Committees from Assemblies for the publike cause of the Reformation and order of this Kirk, shall not be suddenly received againe to the Ministeric, till they first evidence their repentance both before the Presbyterie and Synod, within the bounds where they were deposed, and thereafter the samine reported to the next ensuing Generall Assembly.

Sess. IX. Aug. 3, 1641.

The Overtures under-written, concerning the Universities and Colledges of this Kingdome, to be represented by the Generall Assembly to the Kings Majesty and Parliament, being openly read, the Assembly approved the saids Overtures, and ordained them to be recommended to the Parliament.

FIRST, because the good estate both of the Kirk and Commonwealth, dependeth mainly upon the flourishing of Universities and Colledges, as the Seminaries of both, which cannot be expected, unless the poore meanes which they have, be helped, and sufficient revenues be provided for them and the same well employed: Therefore that out of the rents of Prelacies, Collegiat or Chapter-Kirks, or such like, a sufficient maintenance be provided for a competent number of Professors, Teachers, and Bursers in all faculties, and especially in Divinitie, and for upholding, repairing, and enlarging the Fabrick of the Colledges, furnishing Libraries, and suchlike good uses in every Universitie and Colledge.

II. Next for keeping of good order, preventing and removing of abuses, and promoting of pietie and learning, it is very needfull and expedient that there be a communion and correspondencie kept betwixt all the Universities and Colledges. And therefore that it be ordained, that there be a meeting once every year at such times and places as shall be agreed upon, of Commissioners from every University and Colledge to consult and determine upon the common affairs, and whatsoever may concerne them, for the ends above-specified, and who also, or some of their number, may represent what shall be needfull and expedient for the same effect, to Parliaments and Generall Assemblies.

III. Item, that speciall care be had that the places of the Professors, especially of Professors of Divinity in every University and Colledge, be filled with the ablest men, and best affected to the Reformation and order of this Kirk.

Sess. X. Aug. 4, 1641.

Act against Impiety and Schisme.

THE Assembly seriously considering the present case and condition of this Kirk and Kingdom, what great things the Lord hath done for us, especially since the renewing of our Covenant, notwithstanding our former backsliding and desertion; and if we shall either become remiss in the duties of Piety, or shall not constantly hold & keep our Religion, unto which we have bound our selves so straitly & solemnly, what dishonour we doe unto the name of God before men, who have their eyes upon us, and how great judgements we bring upon our selves, upon these and the like considerations, The Assembly doth finde it most necessary to stirre up themselves, and to provoke all others both Ministers and people of all degrees, not only to the religious exercises of publike-worship in the Congregation, and of private worship in their Families, and of every one by themselves apart, but also to the duties of mutuall edification, by instruction, admonition, exhorting one another to forwardnesse in Religion, and comforting one another in whatsoever distresse; and that in all their meetings, whither in the way of civill conversation, or by reason of their particular callings, or any other occasion offered by divine providence, no corrupt communication proceed out of their mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers: And because the best means have been, and may still be despised or abused, and particularly the duetie of mutuall edification, which hath been so little in use, and so few know how to practise in the right manner, may be upon the one part subject to the mocking of ungodly and worldly men, who cannot endure that in others which they are not willing to practise themselves, and upon the other part, to many errors and abuses, to which the godly through their weaknes may fall, or by the craftinesse of others may be drawn into, such as are Error, Heresie, Schisme, Scandall, Self-conceit, and despising of others, pressing above the common calling of Christians, & usurping that which is proper to the Pastoral Vocation, contempt or misregard of the publike means, idle and unprofitable questions which edifie not, uncharitable censurings, neglect of duties in particular callings, businesse in other mens Matters and Callings, and many such others in doctrine, charity, and manners, which have dolefully rent the bowels of other Kirks, to the great prejudice of the Gospel.

Therefore the Assembly, moved with the zeal of God against all abuses and corruptions, and according to their manifold obligations, most earnestly desiring and thirsting to promote the work of Reformation, and to have the comfort & power of true godlinesse sensible to every soul, and Religion to be universally practised in every Family, and by every person at all occasions, Doth charge all the Ministers and Members of this Kirk, whom they doe represent, that according to their severall places and vocations, they endeavour to suppress all impiety and mocking of religious exercises, especially of such as put foule aspersions, and factious or odious names upon the godly. And upon the other part, that in the fear of God they be aware and spiritually wise, that under the name and pretext of religious exercises, otherwayes lawfull and necessary, they fall not into the aforesaid abuses; especially, that they eschew all meetings which are apt to breed Error, Scandall, Schisme, neglect of duties and particular callings, and such other evils as are the works, not of the spirit, but of the flesh, and are contrary to truth and peace; and that the Presbyteries and Synods have a care to take order with such as transgresse the one way or the other.

Sess. XIII. 6 Aug. 1641, à meridie.

SINCE it hath pleased God to vouchsafe us the libertie of yearly Generall Assemblies, It is ordained according to the Acts of the Assembly at Edinburgh 1639, and at Aberdene 1640, that no Novation in doctrine, worship, or government, be brought in, or practised in this Kirk, unlesse it be first propounded, examined, and allowed in the Generall Assembly, and that transgressors in this kinde be censured by Presbyteries and Synods.

Act Sess. XV. 7 Aug. 1641.

Overtures anent Bursars and Expectants.

The Overtures under-written being openly read in audience of the Assembly, were approved, and declared by them to be Acts of the Assembly, in all time coming, to be observed respectivè, as the samie bears.

I. THE Assembly thinks meet for maintaining of Bursars of Divinitie, that every Presbyterie that consists of twelve Ministers, shall maintain a Bursar, and where the number is fewer nor twelve, shall be joyned with these out of another Presbyterie where their number exceeds: where this course is not already kept, it is to be begun without longer delay, and every Provinciall is ordained to give an account of their number of Bursars, that is constantly to be entertained by their Province, at the next ensuing Generall Assembly.

II. No expectant shall be permitted to preach in publike before a Congregation, till first he be tryed after the same manner, howbeit not altogether with that accuracie which is enjoyned by the Act of the Assembly of Glasgow 1638, which prescribes the order and manner of tryall, that is to be kept with these who are to be admitted to the holy Ministrie: and none so tryed shall preach in publike, without the bounds of the University or Presbyterie where he past his tryalls, till he first make it known to the other Presbyteries, where he desires to be heard, by a testimoniall from the Universitie or Presbyterie where he lived, that he hath bin of an honest conversation, and past his tryalls conform to the order here prescribed: Which being done in the meeting of the Province or Presbyterie, where he desires to be heard; he is to be allowed by them to preach within the bounds of that Province or Presbyterie, without any further tryall to be taken of him.

III. Expectants being educate in a Colledge that was corrupt, or under a corrupt Minister, if they themselves have been known to have been tainted with error, or opposite to our Covenant, and the blessed Work of Reformation within this Kirk, the same order is to be kept in admitting them to the holy Ministrie, or to any place in the Colledges or Schooles of this Kingdome, that was ordained to be kept in admission of these Ministers who fled out of the Countray, and shew themselves opposite to our Covenant and Reformation.

Act Sess. XVII. Aug. 9, 1641.

Act against unlawfull Bands.

THE Assembly taking to their consideration the question proponed unto them concerning the Band, the copy whereof was presented before them from the Parliament, doth find and declare that Bands of this and the like nature, may not lawfully be made: By which Declaration the Assembly doth not intend to bring any censure for what is past, and by the wisdom and care of the Committee of the Parliament is taken away, upon any person, who being required by the Moderator and the Clerk, shall under his hand declare before them, That as the Assembly doth finde that the subscribers are not astricted by their Oath to the tenor of the said Band, so he findeth himself not to be astricted by his Oath to the tenor thereof; but the intention of the Assembly is meerly to prevent the like in time coming.

Sess. XVIII. 9 Aug. 1641, à meridiè.

A Letter from some Ministers in England to the Assemblee.

Right Reverend and dear Brethren now convened in this Generall Assembly.

WE most heartily salute you in the Lord, rejoycing with you in his unspeakable goodnesse, so miraculously prospering your late endeavours, both for the restoring and settling of your own Liberties and Priviledges, in Church and Commonwealth (which we heare and hope he is now about to accomplish) as also for the occasioning and advancing of the Worke of Reformation among our selves; for which as we daily blesse the highest Lord, sole Author of all our good, so doe we acknowledge your selves worthy Instruments thereof. And for that (besides all other respects) doe, and ever shall (by the help of God) hold you deare unto us, as our own bowels, and our selves obliged to render unto you all due correspondence according to our power, upon all good occasions.

And now (deare Brethren) forasmuch as the Church of Christ is but one body, each part whereof cannot but partake in the weale and woe of the whole, and of each other part; and these Churches of England and Scotland, may seem both to be imbarqued in the same bottome, to sink and swim together, and are so near conjoynd by many strong tyes, not only as fellow-members under the same Head, Christ, and fellow-subjects under the same King;
but also by such neighbour-hood and vicinity of place, that if any evill shall much infest the one, the other cannot bee altogether free: or if for the present it should, yet in processe of time it would sensibly suffer also. And forasmuch as evils are better remedied in their first beginning, then after they have once taken deep root; therefore we whose names are here under-written, in the behalf of our selves, and of many others, Ministers of the Church of England, are bold to commend to your consideration (being met together in this venerable Assembly) a difference of great concernment, which you may please (in brief) thus to understand. Almighty

God having now of his infinite goodnesse, raised up our hopes of removing the yoke of Episcopacie (under which we have so long groaned) sundry other forms of Church-government are by sundry sorts of men projected, to be set up in the roome thereof: one of which (amongst others) is of some Brethren that hold the whole power of Church-government, and all Acts thereunto appertaining (as Election, Ordination, and Deposition of Officers, with Admission, Excommunication, and Absolution of Members) are by divine Ordinance in foro externo, to be decreed by the most voyces, in, and of every particular Congregation, which (say they) is the utmost bound of a particular Church, endued with power of government, and only some Formalities of solemne execution to be reserved to the Officers (as servants of the saids Church) if they have any, or if none, then to be performed by some other members, not in office, whom the said Church shall appoint thereunto: And that every of the said particular Congregations (whether they consist of few or many members, and be furnished with Officers or not) lawfully may and ought to transact, determine, and execute all matters pertaining to the government of themselves, amongst and within themselves without any authoritative (though not consulatory) concurrence or interposition of any other persons or Churches whatsoever, condemning all imperative and decisive power of Classes, or compound Presbyteries and Synods, as a meere usurpation. Now because we conceive that your judgement in this case may conduce much by the blessing of God, to the settling of this question amongst us; Therefore we doe earnestly intreat the same at your hands, and that so much the rather, because we sometimes hear from those of the aforesaid judgment, that some famous and eminent Brethren, even amongst your selves, doe somewhat encline unto an approbation of that way of government. Thus humbly craving pardon for our boldnesse, leaving the matter to your grave considerations, and expecting answer at your convenient leasure, We commit you, and the successe of this your meeting, to the blessing of the Almighty, in whom we shall ever remain,

Your faithful Brethren to serve you in all offices of love.

London, 12 July, 1641.

The Assemblies Answer to the English Ministers Letter.

Right reverend and dearly beloved Brethren in our Lord and common Saviour Jesus Christ.

WE the Ministers and Elders met together in this Nationall Assembly, were not a little refreshed and comforted by the good report which we heard of you, and others of our Brethren of the Kirk of England, by some of our Ministers who, by the good providence of our Lord, had seen your faces and conversed with you. But now yet more comforted by your Letters which we received, and which were read in the face of the Assembly, witnessing your Christian love, and rejoycing with us in God for his great and wonderfull Work in the Reformation of this Kirk, and in the beginning of a blessed Reformation amongst your selves, and that you are so sensible of your communion and fellowship with us, and to desire to know our minde and judgement of that which some Brethren amongst you hold, concerning Kirk-government.

We doe with our hearts acknowledge and wonder at the great and unspeakable wisdom, mercie, and power of our God, in restoring unto us the truth and puritie of Religion, after many Back slidings and defection of some in this Kirk, and desire not only to confesse the same before the world, and all other Christian Kirkes, but also doe pray for grace to walk worthily of so wonderfull a love: We have been helped by your prayers, in our weak endeavours, and you have mourned with us (we know) in the dayes of our mourning; and therefore is it that you doe now rejoyce and praise God with us: Neither are we out of hope, but the same God shall speedily perfect that which he hath begun amongst you, that your joy may be full: which is the desire of our soule, and for which we doe now pray, and in our severall Congregations will be instant at the throne of grace, for this and all other spirituall and temporall blessings upon the Kirk and Kingdome of England, by name, expecting the like performance of mutuall love from you, and others equally minded with you, for your parts, till a common consent may be obtained, even that you will recommend the Kirk of Scotland, by name, in your prayers to God. Thus shall we be as one people, mourning and rejoycing, praying and praising together; which may be one meane of the preservation of Unity, and of many other blessings to us both.

We have learned by long experience, ever since the time of Reformation, and specially after the two Kingdomes have been (in the great goodnesse of God to both) united under one Head and Monarch, but most of all of late, which is not unknown to you, what danger and contagion in matters of Kirk-government, of divine worship, and of doctrine, may come from the one Kirk to the other, which beside all other reasons, make us to pray to God, and to desire you, and all that love the honour of Christ, and the peace of these Kirks and Kingdomes, heartily to endeavour, that there might be in both Kirks, one Confession, one Directory for publike worship, one Catechisme, and one Forme of Kirk-government. And if the Lord who hath done great things for us, shall be pleased to hearken unto our desires, and to accept of our endeavours, we shall not only have a sure foundation for a durable Peace, but shall be strong in God, against the rising or spreading of Heresie and Schisme amongst our selves, and of invasion from forraine enemies.

Concerning the different Formes of Kirk-government, projected by sundrie sorts of men, to be set up in place of Episcopall Hierarchie, which we trust is brought near unto its period, we must confesse, that we are not a little grieved that any godly Ministers and Brethren should be found, who doe not agree with other Reformed Kirks in the point of government as well as in the matter of Doctrine and Worship; and that we want not our own feares, that where the hedge of Discipline and Government is different, the Doctrine and Worship shall not long continue the same without change: yet doe not marvell much, that particular Kirks and Congregations which live in such places, as that they can conveniently have no dependencie upon superiour Assemblies, should stand for a kind of independencie and supremacie in themselves, they not considering that in a Nation or Kingdome, professing the same Religion, the government of the Kirk by compound Presbyteries and Synods is a help and strength, and not a hinderance or prejudice to particular Congregations and Elderships, in all the parts of Kirk-government; and that Presbyteries and Synods are not an extrinsecall power set over particular Kirks, like unto Episcopall dominion, they being no more to be reputed extrinsecall unto the particular Kirks, nor the power of a Parliament, or Couvention of Estates, where the Shires and Cities have their own Delegates, is to be held extrinsecall to any particular Shire or City.

Our unanimous judgement and uniforme practice is, that according to the order of the Reformed Kirks, and the ordinance of God in his Word, not onely the solemne execution of Ecclesiasticall power and authoritie, but the whole acts and exercise thereof, do properly belong unto the Officers of the Kirk; yet so that in matters of chiefest importance, the tacite consent of the Congregation be had, before their decrees and sentences receive finall execution, and that the Officers of a particular Congregation may not exercise this power independently, but with subordination unto greater Presbyteries and Synods, Provinciaall and Nationall; which as they are representative of the particular Kirks conjoynd together in one under their government; so their determination, when they proceed orderly, whether in causes common to all, or many of the Kirks, or in causes brought before them by appellations or references from the inferiour, in the case of aberation of the inferiour, is to the severall Congregations authoritative and obligatorie, and not consultatory only: And this dependencie and subordination, we conceive not only to be warranted by the light of nature, which doth direct the Kirk in such things as are common to other societies, or to be a prudentiall way for Reformation, and for the preservation of Truth and Peace, against Schisme, Heresie, and Tyranny, which is the sweet fruits of this government wheresoever it hath place, and which we have found in ancient and late experience; but also to be grounded upon the Word of God, and to be conforme to the paterne of the Primitive and Apostolicall Kirks; and without which, neither could the Kirks in this Kingdome have been reformed, nor were we able for any time to preserve Truth and Unity amongst us.

In this forme of Kirk-government, our unanimity and harmony by the mercy of God, is so full and perfect, that all the Members of this Assembly have declared themselves to be of one heart, and of one soule, and to be no lesse perswaded, that it is of God, then that Episcopall government is of men; resolving by the grace of God, to hold the same constantly all the dayes of our life, and heartily wishing that God would blesse all the Christian Kirks, especially the famous Kirk of England, unto which in all other respects we are so uearly joyned with this divine Forme of government. Thus having briefly and plainly given our judgement for your satisfaction, and desiring and hoping that ye will beleve against all mis-reports, that we know not so much as one man, more or lesse eminent amongst us, of a different judgement, we commend you unto the riches of the grace of Christ, who will perfect that which he hath begun amongst you, to your unspeakable comfort. Subscribed by our Moderator and Clerk.

The Assemblies Answer to the Kings Majesties Letter.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVERAIGN,

BESIDE the conscience of that duetie which we owe to supreme Authority, we are not only encouraged, but confirmed by the Royall favour and Princely munificence, expressed in Your gracious Majesties Letters, which filled our hearts with joy, and our mouths with praise, to offer up our prayers with the greater fervencie to God Almighty for Your Majesties happinesse, our selves for our own parts, and for the whole Kirks of this your Majesties Kingdome, which we doe represent, to serve Your Majestie in all humble obedience, our faithfull labours for preserving Trueth and Peace amongst all Your Majesties Subjects, and our example (according to Your Majesties just commandments laid upon us) to be a presedent to others in paying that honour, which by all Lawes divine and humane, is due unto Your sacred Majestie, being confident that your Majestie shall finde at your coming hither much more satisfaction and content than can be expressed by

Your Majesties most humble Subjects and faithfull servants, the Ministers and Elders met together in the venerable Assembly at S. Andrews, July 20, and Edinburgh, July 27, 1641.

Act anent the Kirk of Campheir.

THE which day a motion was made in the Assembly, that it seemed expedient for correspondencie that might be had from forraigne parts, for the weal of this Kirk, That the Scots Kirk at Campheir were joynd to the Kirk of Scotland, as a Member thereof: Which being seriously thought upon and considered by the Assembly, they approved the motion, and ordained M. Robert Baillie Minister at Cilwinning, to write to M. William Spang Minister at Campheir, and Kirk Session thereof, willing them to send their Minister, and a ruling Elder, instructed with a Commission to the next Generall Assembly to be holden at S. Andrews, the last Wednesday of July 1642, at which time they should be inrolled in the Books of the Generall Assembly, as Commissioners of the Generall Assembly of Scotland, from the Scots Kirk at Campheir.

THE Assembly appoints the next Generall Assembly to be holden at S. Andrews, the last Wednesday of July next 1642.

1. *Letter from Lord Conway to Secretary Windenbanke, announcing the Approach of the Scotch Army.**

MR SECRETARY,

My time is very short. I now received your Letter. I have within these two hours word brought to me, [I pray you tell my Lord of Canterbury, that it is by that man I did write last to him, that I have sent into Scotland and gave him sixteen pounds,] that the Scotch Army, as he doth assure me upon his life, and bids me hang him if it be not so, will upon Munday or Tuesday next come into England, that they will upon Saturday be before this Town, which they say they will take or here be broken, from hence they intend to go to Yorkshire, &c.

Your most humble servant,

2. Six Considerations of the Lawfulness of their Expedition into England, manifested.†

As, from the beginning till this time, we have attempted nothing presumptuously in this great work of Reformation, but have proceeded upon good grounds, and have been led forward by the good hand of God; so now, from our own perswasion, are we ready to answer every one that asketh us a reason of this our present expedition, which is one of the greatest and most notable parts of this wonderful work of God, beseeching all to lift up their minds above their own particulars, and, without prejudice or partiality, to lay to heart the Considerations following :—

First, As all men know and confess what is the great force of necessity, and how it doth justify actions otherways unwarrantable, so it cannot be denied but we must either seek our peace in England at this time, or lye under the heavy burdens which we are not able to bear.

1. We must maintain Armies on the Borders, and all places nearest to hazard, for the defence and preservation of our Countrey, which, by laying down of Armes, and disbanding of our Forces, should be quickly over-run by hostile invasion and the incursions of our enemies.

2. We shall want trade by Sea, which would not only deprive the Kingdom of many necessaries, but utterly undo our Boroughs, Merchants, Mariners, and many others who live by Fishing, and by Commodities Exported and Imported, and whose particular callings are utterly made void, by want of Commerce with other Nations and Sea-trade.

3. The Subjects through the whole Kingdom shall want administration of Justice ; and although this time past the marvellous power and providence of God hath kept the Kingdom in order and quietness, without any Judicatories sitting, yet cannot this be expected for afterward, but shall turn to confusion. Any one of the three, much more all of them put together, threaten us with most certain ruine, unless we speedily use the remedy of this Expedition. And this we say not from fear, but from feeling : for we have already felt to our unspeakable prejudice, [ what it is to maintain Armies, what to want traffick, what to want administration of Justice.] And if the beginning of these evils be so heavy, what shall the growth and long continuance of them prove unto us ? So miserable a being all men would judge to be worse than no being.

Secondly, If we consider the nature and quality of this Expedition, it is defensive, and so the more justifiable. For proof hereof, let it be remembered—

1. The Kings Majesty, misled by the crafty and cruel faction of our Adversaries, began this years war, not we. When Articles of Pacification had been the other year agreed upon, Armies laid down, Forts and Castles rendered, an Assembly kept, and concluded with the presence and consent of his Majesties High Commissioner, the promised Rati- fication thereof in Parliament (contrary to the fore- said Articles) was denied unto us, and when we would have informed his Majesty by our Commis- sioners, of the reasons and manner of our proceed- ings, they got not so much as presence or audience. Thereafter his Majesty being content to hear them, before that they came to Court or were heard, War was concluded against us at the Council Table of England, and a Commission given to the Earl of Northumberland for that effect.

1. The Parliaments of Ireland and England were also convocate, for granting subsidies unto this war against us, as is notoure, Plots have been hatcht, and military preparations made against us : many invasions by Sea, which have spoiled us of our ships and goods ; men, women, and children killed in Edinburgh by his Majesties Forces in the Castle : Our enemies therefore are the authors and begin- ners of the War, and we defenders only.

2. We intend not the hurt of others, but our own peace and preservation, neither are we to offer any injury or violence : And therefore have furnished our selves according to our power with all neces- saries, not to fight at all, except we be forced to it in our own defence, as our Declaration beareth.

3. We shall retire and lay downe Armes, as soon as we shall get a sure peace, and shall be satisfied in our just demands. Upon which ground even some of those who would seem the greatest Royal- ists, hold the Wars of the Protestants in France against the King, and the factions of the Guisians, to have been lawful defensive Wars, because they were ever ready to disband and quiet themselves, when they got assurance of peace and liberty of Religion. Now this present Expedition being in the nature of it defensive, hence it appeareth that it is not contrary, but consouant to our former Pro- testations, Informations and Remonstrances : In all which there is not one word against defensive War in this cause ; but strong reasons for it, all which militate for this expedition.

Our first information sent to England this year, though it accurseth all offensive or invasive war, yet sheweth plainly, that if we be invaded either by Sea or Land, we must do as a man that fighteth himself out of prison. If a private man when his house is blocked up, so that he can have no liberty of Com- merce and Traffick to supply himself and family, being also in continual hazard of his life, not know- ing when he shall be assaulted by his Enemies who lye in wait against him, may in this case most law- fully step forth with the Forces which he can make, and fight himself free, of how much more worth is the whole Nation ? and how shall one and the same way of defence and liberation be allowed to a private man, and disallowed to a whole Nation ?

Thirdly, We are called to this Expedition by that same divine providence and vocation which hath guided us hitherto in this great business. We see the expediency of it, for the glory of God, for the good of the Church, for advancing the Gospell, for our own peace : after seeking of God, and begging light and direction from Heaven, our hearts are inclined to it, God hath given us zeal and courage to prosecute it, ability and opportunity for undertaking it, unanimous Resolution upon it, scruples removed out of minds where they were harboured, encouragements to atchieve it from many passages of divine provi- dence, and namely from the proceedings of the last Parliament in England, their grievances and desires being so homogeneal and akin to ours, we have laboured in great long-suffering by Supplications, Informations, Commissions, and all other means possible, to avoid this Expedition. It was not pre- meditate nor affected by us (God knows) but our enemies have necessitated and redacted us unto it, and that of purpose to sow the seeds of National Quarrels ; yet as God hitherto hath turned all their plots against themselves, and to effects quite con- trary to those that they intended ; so are we hopeful that our coming into England (so much wished and desired by our adversaries for producing a National quarrel) shall so far disappoint them of their aymes, that it shall link the two Nations together in straiter and stronger bonds, both of Civil and Christian love, than ever before.

And that we may see yet further evidences of a calling from God to this voyage, we may observe the order of the Lords steps and proceedings in this work of Reformation. For, beginning at the gross Popery of the Service Book, and Book of Canons, he hath followed the back trade of our defection, till he hath Reformed the very first and smallest Novations, which entered in this Church. But so it is, that this back trade leadeth yet further, to the Prelacy in England, the fountain whence all those Babylonish streams issue unto us: The Lord therefore is still on the back trade, and we following him therein, cannot yet be at a stay. Yea, we trust, that he shall so follow forth this trade, as to chase home the Beast, and the false Prophet to Rome, and from Rome out of the world. Besides, this third Consideration resulteth from the former two; for if this Expedition be necessary, and if it be defensive, then it followeth inevitably, that we are called unto it, for our necessary defence is warranted, yea commanded by the Law of God and Nature, and we are obliged to it in our Covenant.

Fourthly, The lawfulness of this Expedition appeareth, if we consider the party against whom, which is not the Kingdom of England, but the Canterburian faction of Papists, Atheists, Arminians, Prelates, the misleaders of the Kings Majesty, and the Common Enemies of both Kingdoms. We perswade our selves, that our Brethren and Neighbours in England, will never be so evil advised, as to make themselves a party against us, by their defence and patrociny of our Euemies among them, as sometimes the Benjamites made themselves a party against the Israelites, by defending the Gibeathites in their wicked cause, Judg. 20. We pray God to give them the wisdom of the wise Woman in Abel, who when Joab came near to her City with an Army, found out a way which both kept Joab from being an Enemy to the City, and the City from being an Enemy to him, 2 Sam. 20. As touching the provision and furniture of our Army in England, it shall be such as is used among friends, not among enemies. The rule of humanity and gratitude will teach them to furnish us with necessaries, when as beside the procuring of our own peace, we do good offices to them. They detest (we know) the churlishness of Nabal, who refused victuals to David and his men, who had done them good, and no evil, 1 Sam. 20. And the inhumanity of the men of Succoth and Penuel, who denied bread to Gideons Army, when he was pursuing the Common Enemies of all Israel, Judg. 8. But let the English do of their benevolence, what humanity and discretion will teach them; For our own part our Declaration sheweth, that we seek not victuals for nought, but for money or security: And if this should be refused (which we shall never expect) it were as damnable as the barbarous cruelty of Edom and Moab, who refused to let Israel pass through their Countrey, or to give them bread and water in any case, Numb. 20. Judg. 11. and this offence the Lord accounted so inexpiable, that for it he accursed the Edomites and Moabites from entering into the Congregation of the Lord, unto the tenth Generation, Deut. 23. 3, 4.

Fifthly, The fifth Consideration concerneth the end for which this Voyage is undertaken. We have attested the Searcher of Hearts, It is not to execute any disloyal act against his Majesty, It is not to put forth a cruel or vindictive hand against our Adversaries in England, whom we desire only to be Judged and Censured by their own Honourable and High Court of Parliament; It is not to enrich our selves with the Wealth of England, nor to do any harm thereto. But by the contrary, we shall gladly bestow our pains and our means to do them all the good we can, which they might justly look for at our hands, for the help which they made us at our Reformation, in freeing us from the French, a bond of peace and love betwixt them and us to all generations. Our Conscience, and God who is greater than our Conscience, beareth us record that we aim altogether at the glory of God, peace of both Nations, and honour of the King, in suppressing and punishing (in a legal way) of those who are the troublers of Israel the firebrands of Hell, the Korhas, the Baalams, the Doegs, the Rabshakahs, the Hamans, the Tobiahs and Sanballats of our time, which done, we are satisfied. Neither have we begun to use a military Expedition to England, as a mean for compassing those our pious ends, till all other means which we could think upon have failed us, and this alone is left to us as ultimum & unicum remedium, the last and only remedy.

Sixthly, If the Lord shall bless us in this our expedition, and our intention shall not be crossed by our own sins and miscarriage, or by the opposition of the English, the fruits shall be sweet, and the effects comfortable to both Nations, to the Posterity, and to the Reformed Kirk abroad: Scotland shall be Reformed as at the beginning, the Reformation of England long prayed and pleaded for the Godly thereby shall be according to their wishes and desires, perfected in Doctrine, Worship and Discipline. Papists, Prelates, and all the members of the Antichristian Hierarchy, with their Idolatry, Superstition, and humane Inventions shall pack from hence, the names of Sects and Separatists shall no more be mentioned, and the Lord shall be one, and his name one throughout the whole Island, which shall be glory to God, honour to the King, Joy to the Kingdoms, comfort to the posterity, example to other Christian Kirks, and Confusion to the incorrigible Enemies.

3. *Letter from the Commissioners of the late Parliament in Scotland to the Earl of Lanerick, and Petition therewith sent.**

NOBLE LORD,

As we have ever professed and declared, as well by our Words as Actions, that the Grounds of our Desires are, and ever shall be the redress of Wrongs and reparations of our Losses, and that we will never leave off in all humility to Supplicate His Majesty for the same, so this hath moved us now, being come this length, yet again humbly to Petition His Majesty to take our Case to Consideration, and grant our Desires. We are debarred from sending or carrying our Supplications in the ordinary way, which makes us have our Address to your Lordship, intreating your Lordship in our names to present this our Petition herein inclosed to His Majesty, and in all humility to beg an Answer thereunto, to be sent with the Bearer to us, who shall ever endeavour to approve our selves His Majesties Loyal Subjects, and most unwilling to shed any Christian blood, far less the English; whereof we have given very good proof by our bygone Carriage to every one who hath with Violence opposed us, yea, even to those who entred in Blood with us, and were taken prisoners, whom we have let go with Meat and Mouey, notwithstanding that all those of ours, who did but deboard from their Quarters, are miserably massacred by these whom we can term no otherwise than Cut-throats. Our behaviour to these in New-Castle can witness our Intention, which is to live at peace with all, and rather to suffer then to offend. We bought all with our money, and they have extorted us to the triple value: the Panick fear made most of them leave the Town, and stop their own Trade; but we have studied to solve their doubts. As all our Actions shall ever tend to that which is Just and Right; so we could wish, they were interpreted to a true sense; and whatever may be the event of business, we hope the blame shall not lie upon

Your Lordships affectionate
Friends to serve you.

POSTSCRIPT.—We intreat Your Lordship to let the Bearer have a Pass for his safe Return to us.

To the Kings Most Excellent Majesty, The Humble Petition of the Commissioners of the late Parliament, and others of His Majesties Loyal Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Humbly Sheweth,

That Whereas after our many Sufferings the time past, extreme necessity hath constrained us for our Relief, and obtaining our Humble and Just Desires, to come into England, where according to our Intentions formerly declared, we have in all our Journey lived upon our own Means and Victuals, and Goods brought a-long with us, and neither troubling the Peace of the Kingdom, nor harming any of Your Majesties Subjects of whatsoever quality in their Persons or Goods, but have carried our selves in a most peaceable manner, till we were pressed by strength of Arms, to put such Forces out of the way, as did without our deserving, and (as some of them have at the point of death confessed) against their own Conscience, opposed our peaceable passage at Newburn on Tine, and have brought their Blood upon their own Heads, against our purposes and desires expressed in our Letters, sent unto them at New-Castle, for preventing the like, or greater Inconveniences. And that we may without farther opposition come into Your Majesties Presence, for obtaining from Your Majesties Justice and Goodness satisfaction to our just Demands, we, Your Majesties most Humble and Loyal Subjects, do still insist in that submiss way of Petitioning, which we have kept since the beginning, and from which no provocation of Your Majesties Enemies and ours, no adversity that we have before sustained, nor prosperous success that can befall us be able to divert our minds.

Most humbly entreating, That Your Majesty would in the depth of Your Royal Wisdom, consider at last our pressing Grievances, provide for the Repairing of our wrongs and losses, and with the advice and consent of the Estates of the Kingdom of England convened in Parliament, settle a firm and durable Peace, against all Invasion by Sea or Land, that we may with cheerfulness of heart pay unto Your Majesty, as our Native King, all Duty and Obedience that can be expected from Loyal Subjects, and that (against the many and great Evils, which at this time threaten both Kingdoms, whereat all Your Majesties Good and Loving Subjects tremble to think, and which we besecch God Almighty in mercy timeously to avert) Your Majesties Throne may be established in the midst of us, in Religion and Righteousness; and Your Majesties Gracious Answer we humbly desire, and earnestly wait for.

4. *The King's Answer to the above Petition, dated at His Majesty's Court at York, the 5th of September 1640.**

His Majesty hath seen and considered this Petition, and is Graciously pleased to return this Answer by me, that he finds it in such general terms, that till you express the Particulars of your Desires, His Majesty can give no direct Answer; therefore His Majesty requires that you set down the Particulars of your Demands with expedition, he having been always willing to hear and redress the Grievances of His People: and for the more mature Deliberation of these great Affairs, His Majesty hath already given out Summons for the meeting of the Peers of the Kingdom in the City of York upon the 24th of this Month, that so with the advice of the Peers you may receive such Answer to your Petition, as shall most tend to His Honour, and the Peace and Wellfare of His Dominions. And in the mean time (if Peace be that you desire as you pretend) He expects, and by these His Majesty commands, that you advance no further with your Army to these parts; which is the only means that is left for the present to preserve Peace betwixt the two Nations, and to bring these unhappy Differences to a Reconciliation, which none is more desirous of than His most Sacred Majesty.

5. Letter from the Covenanters to the Earl of Lanerick.†

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

As nothing in Earth is more desired of us than His Majesties favour, so doth nothing delight us more than that His Majesty beginneth again to hearken to our Humble Desires, wherein we trust nothing shall be found but what may serve for His Majesties Honour and for the Peace of His Dominions. The Particulars we would have expressed, but that they are contained in the Conclusions of the late Parliament, and our Printed Declarations, which were sent to your Lordship; but in case the Papers be not by your Lordship, we now summarily repeat them.

That His Majesty would be Graciously pleased to command, that the last Acts of Parliament may be published in his Highness's Name, as our Sovereign Lord, with the Estates of Parliament convened by His Majesties Authority; Next, That the Castle of Edinburgh, and other strengths of the Kingdom of Scotland, may, according to the first foundation, be furnished and used for our Defence and Security; Thirdly, That our Countrymen in his Majesties Dominions of England and Ireland may be free from Censure for subscribing the Covenant, and be no more pressed with Oaths and Subscriptions unwarranted by our Laws, and contrary to their National Oath and Covenant approved by His Majesty; Fourthly, That the Common Incendiaries, who have been the Authors of this Combustion in His Majesties Dominions, may receive their Just Censure; Fifthly, That our Ships and our Goods, with all the Damage thereof, may be restored; Sixthly, That the Wrongs, Losses, and Charges, which at this time we have sustained, may be repayed; Seventhly, That the Declarations made against us as Traytors may be recalled, and in end, by advice and consent of the Estates of England convened in Parliament, His Majesty may be pleased to remove the Garrisons from the Borders, and any Impediment that may stop free Trade, and with their advice may condescend to all Particulars, which may establish a stable and well-grounded Peace, for enjoying of our Religion and Liberties, against all fears of molestation and undoing from year to year, as our Adversaries shall take the advantage. This Royal testimony of His Majesties Justice and Goodness, we would esteem to be doubled upon us, were it speedily bestowed, and therefore must crave leave to regrave, that His Majesties Pleasure concerning the Meeting of the Peers the 24th of this Instant, will make the time long ere the Parliament be convened, which is conceived to be the only mean of settling both Nations in a firm Peace, and which we desire may be seriously represented to His Majesties Royal thoughts; the more this time is abridged, the more able will we be to obey His Majesties Prohibition of not advancing with our Arms, Our Actions, and whole comportment since the beginning of these Commotions, and especially of late since our coming into England, are Real Declarations of our love, and desire of Peace: nothing but invincible necessity hath brought us from our Country to this Place, no other thing shall draw us beyond the limits appointed by His Majesty; which we trust His Majesty will consider of, and wherein we hope your Lordship will labour to be a profitable Instrument for the Kings Honour, the Good of your Country, and of

6. *Letter from the Earl of Lanerick appointing a Treaty.**

MY LORDS,

According to His Majesties appointment, the most part of the Peers of this Kingdom of England met here at York this day, where His Majesty did communicate unto them your Desires and Petitions; and because you do so earnestly press for a speedy Answer, His Majesty, with advice of the Peers, hath nominated such a number of them for a Conference with you upon Tuesday at Northallerton, whose names are underwritten. But withall if you shall think the time too short, and that with conveniency you cannot come so soon thither, if betwixt this and Sunday you do acquaint His Majesty therewith, he will take Order for the delay thereof, for one day or two.

And that you may without all fear or Danger of Detention, send such Persons unto the said Conference as you shall think most fit, if betwixt this and Sunday you send hither the Names of these you mean to employ, His Majesty will with all possible diligence return a safe conduct under his own Royal Hand, for them and their necessary Servants.

* Burnet, p. 178.

His Majesty hath likewise commanded me to let you know, that upon your relieving of such Officers, and others of His Subjects, as are detained by you, he will return all such of yours as are his Prisoners, either here or at Berwick; and hereafter resolves, that fair Quarters should be kept betwixt both Armies. Thus having imparted His Majesties Pleasure, I continue

Your Lordships Servant,
York, 24th of September,

7. Articles agreed on for the Maintenance of the Scots Army.

1. First, That the Scotch Army, now lying in the Counties of Northumberland, Bishoprick of Durham, and Town of Newcastle, shall have for a competent maintenance, the sum of £850 per diem, being the sum before agreed on by the Counties; and that the payment thereof shall begin upon the 16th of October, and to continue for two Months, in case the Treaty shall so long last; which payment to be made weekly upon the Friday of every Week, the first Friday being the twenty-third day to be for the payment of the Week past.

2. The dayes of the returning of the Army to be numbered, within the dayes of the allowed maintenance.

3. That the Scotch Army shall content themselves with the aforesaid maintenance, and shall neither molest Papists, Prelates, nor their adherents, nor any other persons of whatsoever quality, during the time of payment, but shall keep themselves free of all other Taxes and Plunderings not only during their abode, but in their returns, and such security as is usual shall be given for the performance of the same, and this to be ordered upon the condition of the Treaty.

4. That the Inhabitants of the said Counties shall also have liberty to return peaceably to their own dwellings, and shall be refused no Courtesie, it being alwayes presupposed that the fit Lodging of their Army shall be allowed.

5. That the Army be furnished with Coals in a Regular way, and not at the pleasure of the Soldiers, which is especially recommended to the care of the Scotch Commissioners.

6. That there be a provision of Forrage at the prices to be set down in a Table, which must also contain the particular prices of all sort of Victuals, and other necessaries for the Army, to be indifferently agreed upon by persons nominated on both sides.

7. That the Sea-Ports be opened, and there be free Trade and Commeree by Sea and Land, as in the time of Peace; with this Proviso, that with the Victuals, no Armes nor Ammunition be imported into Newcastle, or any Harbour of England, and this Free Trade and Commeree to be presently intimated, and not to be interrupted, but upon the warning of three Months, that there may be a sufficient time allowed for Ships to return, and for the disposing of their Commodities.

8. That the Victuals and other Necessaries for the Army be free of Custome; And that his Majesties Custome of Coals, and other Ware, be left free to be levied by his own Officers.

9. That all restraints be removed, and that there be a freedem to furnish necessaries for both Armies, in such sort as is agreed on by the Articles, and liberty be granted for Milling, Brewing, Baking, and other things of that kind.

10. That the Arrears be completely paid to Octob. 16, and that such rents as are anticipate, and not yet due, be allowed in the Arrears.

11. That there be a Cessation of Armes, according to the particulars to be agreed upon.

12. As for securing the sum of £850 per diem above specified, there is a Committee appointed by the Great Council of the Peers, who have power to Treat with Northumberland, the Bishoprick of Durham, Newcastle, and (if need require) with other adjacent Counties, that there may be a real performance of what is agreed on by us: And for that we find many Difficulties of raising the Contribution out of the Counties of Northumberland, the Bishoprick, and Town of Newcastle, we have thought fit and necessary to add unto them the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, to assist towards the said Contribution according to their abilities.

13. And further, the Lords will before their going from York settle a Committee who shall have charge to see the Contribution orderly raised and paid; and that there shall likewise be a Committee nominated of the Lords Commissioners, to whom either the Scotch Commissioners may address, or the Committees of the Countrey may Weekly give an Accompt of the carriage of the business. And that from thence there may further Order be given for the due performance of that which is promised.

8. Articles agreed on concerning the Cessation of Arms betwixt the English and Scottish Commissioners at Rippon, the 26th day of October 1640.

1. That there be a Cessation of Arms both by Sea and Land, from this present.

2. That all Acts of Hostility do henceforth cease.

3. That both parties shall peaceably retain, during the Treaty, whatsoever they possess at the time of the Cessation.

4. That all such persons who live in any of his Majesties Forts, beyond the River of Tees, shall not exempt their Lands which lye within the Counties of Northumberland and the Bishoprick from such Contribution, as shall be laid upon them for the payment of the £850 a day.

5. That none of the Kings Forces upon the other side of Tees, shall give any impediment to such Contributions as are already allowed for the Competency of the Scotch Army, and shall take no Victuals out of the bounds, except that which the Inhabitants and Owners thereof shall bring voluntarily to them: And that any restraint or detention of Victuals, Cattle, and Forrage which shall be made by the Scots within those bounds for their better maintenance, shall be no breach.

* Rushworth, vol. iii., p. 1306.

6. That no recruits shall be brought unto either Army from the time of the Cessation, and during the Treaty.

7. That the Contribution of £850 a day shall be only raised out of the Counties of Northumberland, the Bishoprick, Town of Newcastle, Cumberland, and Westmoreland; that the not payment thereof shall be no breach of the Treaty; but the Counties and Town so failing, it shall be left to the Scotch power to raise the same, but not to exceed the sum agreed upon, unless it be for the charges of driving to be set by the Commissioners of the Forrage.

8. That the River of Tees shall be the bounds of both Armies, excepting always the Town and Castle of Stockton, and the Village of Eggcliffe: And that the Counties of Northumberland and the Bishoprick of Durham be the Limits, within the which the Scottish Army is to reside; saving alwayes Liberty for them to send such Convoyes, as shall be necessary for the gathering up only of the Contributions which shall be unpaid by the Counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland.

9. If any persons commit any private Insolencies, it shall be no breach of the Treaty, if (upon Complaint made by either party) reparation and punishment be granted.

10. If Victuals be desired upon that price which shall be agreed upon, and ready Moncy offered for the same, and refused, it shall be no breach of the Cessation, to take such Victuals, paying such price.

11. No new Fortifications be made during the Treaty against either party.

12. That the Subjects of both Kingdoms, may in their Trade and Commerce freely pass to and fro, without any Pass at all; but that it be particularly provided, that no member of either Army shall pass without a formal Pass under the hand of the General, or of him that commandeth in Chief.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIP,

Hitherto I judged it not fit to endanger your Lordship by any Intelligence betwixt us, which might have turned much to your prejudice, in a time when the World is in so much mis-understanding of me; but now be your Lordship pleased, to admit me to resort to your noble Expressions and former Friendship, that I may carry forth of the Court with me the belief and tokens of it.

It is told me, that the Lords are inclinable to preserve my Life and Family, for which their generous Compassions, the great God of Mercy will reward them: and surely should I die upon this Evidence, I had much rather be the Sufferer than the Judge.

All that I shall desire from your Lordship is, that destevted of all Publique Employment, I may be admitted to go home to my own private Fortune, there to attend my own Domestick Affairs, and Education of my Children, with as little asperity of words or marks of Infamy, as possibly the Nobleness and Justice of my Friends can procure for me, with a Liberty to follow my own occasions, as I shall find best for my self.

This is no unreasonable thing I trust to desire, all considered that may be said in my case, (for I vow my fault that should justly draw any heavy Sentence on me, I yet do not see :) yet this much obtained will abundantly satisfie a Mind hasting fast to quiet, and a Body broken with afflictions and infirmities. And as I shall take myself highly bound to any that shall further me therein, so I more particularly desire to receive an obligation therein from your Lordship than from others, as being purposed in the truth of my former Professions, to express my self

Your Lordships humbly to be Comanded,

10. *Principal Baillie's Journal of the General Assembly, 1641, in a Letter to the Rev. William Spang.**

COUSIN,

Since your last, the 1st of August, you have received two of mine, and this is a third—if virtue were in length—worth any six of yours.

The carriage of our assembly was this. Since the assembly of Aberdeen there was a continual heartburning betwixt the favourers of Mr Harry Guthrie and Leckie; as in my discourse of that assembly you may see I foretold. As I came from London through Edinburgh, I found the misunderstanding so great, that I advised Argyle to take notice of it in time; and when Mr Archibald Johnston came home, I wrote to him to draw to him some of the parties for advisement how to prevene discord. For all that I could do, at my coming to Edinburgh on Saturday, July 17, I found Leckie, and many that favoured him, peremptor, not only to accuse Mr Harry Guthrie, but to have the Acts of Aberdeen about meetings and read prayers cancelled. They were much galled with the slanders went upon them, for the abusers of privy meetings, and other things falsely fathered on them. On the other part, Mr Harry, and many with him, were no less resolute to defend all that passed in Aberdeen, and to have sharp censures concluded in the next assembly against all that were for novations, not approved by our Church. With these minds went too many to St Andrew's, as if it had been a place of combat. Our only remedy against such scandalous debates were our prayers to God, which carefully were offered the Sabbath before we came from home, in a solemn humiliation for a blessing to the ensuing assembly. This labour, we found, was not for nought; for at once we found the good hand of God with us above expectation.

The King had sent his warrant to Lord Weems to sit, with as ample a commission as either Hamilton or Traquair. His Majesty intended this service for Southesk, by Traquair's advice, who yet had too great hand in affairs; but Mr Henderson diverted the King from that man, towards whom the country had so evil an eye. For what special respects Weems fell to be next, I do not know; however, the modesty and simplicity of the man made him displeasing to none. When we came to St Andrew's, our first perplexity was about a moderator. Mr Henderson was passionately desired in so hard a time; but there was no certainty of his presence. Mr Harry Rollock, on whom the voices would have fallen next, had of purpose absented himself. The rest who were met were esteemed so far engaged to the question to be debated. Judge then what strait of men was there, when the like of me, who to this day had declined to moderate a presbytery, was shored to be leeted for to moderate a general assembly. Yet, after much secret advisement with the Commissioner, on Monday, with much ado, that difficulty was overcome.

1. On Tuesday, the 20th, the first day of our assembly, the last moderator, Mr Andrew Ramsay, preached the 122d psalm. According to his way, he went over it all. The first day of our assembly is appointed for fasting and humiliation. Of this disposition there was not so much this day among us as needed. After sermon we met in the Old Colledge-hall. Mr Andrew prayed; the commissions were received by Mr Archibald Johnston; many of the commissioners were members of parliament; divers others also, upon the certain expectation of the assembly's translation to Edinburgh, had not come over. His Grace's commission in Latin was read; one clause thereof importing, at the Commissioner's advice, the assembly's translation, was demurred on by the clerk, as intruding on the assembly's liberties; yet it was not publickly questioned. A letter from his Majesty to the assembly, so full of grace and favour as we could have wished, was read. The answering of it was laid on Mr David Lindsay of Belhelvie. His draught in the end of Edinburgh assembly was read: but it was so long and luxuriant, that Mr Henderson was caused to make that short, decided, and nervous answer.

The parliament had sent over a commissioner to us, one from ilk estate, Cassils, Auldbar, Provost of Dysart, intreating, without any prescription, that in regard many of them were members of the assembly, could not, without detriment to the publick, attend at St Andrew's, we would be pleased to enter in no weighty actioun, especially in chusing a moderator, wherein they desired to have voice, before we returned to Edinburgh. In the translation there was no difficulty; but in the delay to chuse a moderator, the difficulty was huge. The most thought the assembly could not be constitute, and so was incapable to perform any act, let be so great a one as a translation, before a moderator was chouse. Some leading men, who would have had the moderation to themselves, or to those who favoured their intentions, urged a present election. The matter was remitted to the next session; wherein, to our great comfort, it was determined with far greater ease than any expected. Many of us thinking the delay impossible to be obtained, had concluded to voice for James Bonner; yet tomorrow, the earnestness of the commissioners from the parliament, the clerk finding in the register some such old practique, the certain hopes of Mr Henderson's near return, his Grace permitting the matter to our own option, whilkas before some about him made him declare oft, that that delay would legally evacuate his commission; Mr David Dalgleish, overcoming in boldness his good friend Mr Harry Guthrie, stoutly reasoning the sufficient formality of continuing by voices the old moderator, ad hunc actum, to transfer, and to chuse a new moderator in the beginning of the translated assembly, by plurality of voices it was clearly carried. We took that for a certain presage of God's assistance in all subsequent purposes.

The next session was appointed to be held at Edinburgh, the 27th. No more but a supplication of D. Harry Reid, wherein he complained, that after his long service in the kirk and divinity-schools, he had been made to demit his place, by threats, in his extreme old age and poverty. The case was very invidious, and reflected much on his colleagues in the town and New college. The matter, I heard, was, that he, as principal, had given warrant for lifting the New-college rents, whiles to a wicked knave his son, whiles to D. Panter, and others; so that no count could be made by him of much money. Mr S. Rutherford, I think, caused complain of this to the estates when we were at London. They sent over Newton and William Ridge, rigorous enough, either to get account of him, or to lay him in ward. Upon the fear of this evil, he offered to demit his place; and his demission was taken, reserving 500 merks a-year to him for his entertainment. When his petition came to be considered in Edinburgh, his good friend Mr Henderson guided it so, that with a great deal of commendation to the old man, large as great, I am sure, as he ever deserved, it was voiced, that his demission should be rendered to him; that, according to the acts of our old assemblies anent failed ministers or professors, he should all his lifetime enjoy his full rent and honour, without any diminution.

When we came back to Edinburgh, to our great joy we found Mr Henderson and Mr Gillespie come home. That week was spent in privy consultations for accommodating the feared differences. Argyle and Cassils drew together in Loudon's chamber the ministers of Edinburgh, Mess. Dick, Blair, Rutherford, Cant, me, and some others. All the ministers of Edinburgh were chafed at their people's carriage towards them. They would have been at the simple discharge of all privy meetings, but those of a family; and for this the act of Aberdeen was alledged by them, and many moe: for this the other part would have had that act recalled or expounded. I marvelled much of both their forgetting the meaning and occasion of that act, set down at length to you in my letters. Then it was at last agreed, that Aberdeen act should be altogether miskent; that a draught should be made for ordering these meetings now in question. The paper drawn up by Mr Henderson the 10th of June, which pleased all well, that I had conferred with both, misliked the ministers of Edinburgh, and above all Mr D. Calderwood could not abide it. The clause in it of the number, which I liked best, did most mislike them; they alledged the permitting of any to meet, in the smallest numbers, was an establishing by an act the thing itself. Many meetings there were for little purpose. It was appointed, that Mr Dickson and Mr Blair should meet with Mr Henderson and Mr Will. Colvil, and set down their minds. Their draught was long, and too general. It was laid again on Mr David Dickson, with whom he pleased, to write down his mind. That form also did not please. At last Mr Henderson essayed it. His model liked us best; yet Mr D. Calderwood started mightily at it. We desired him to dite what he pleased; notwithstanding we were all refreshed with a certain hope of a solid agreement; for Mr Dickson and Mr Blair, and the rest who were suspected of innovating, purged themselves fully of all such intentions, and were ready to receive any of the models any had proponed. And being posed, what was their minds anent all the novations? Mr Andrew Ramsay could enumerate such as omitting, Glory to the Father, kneeling in the pulpit, discountenancing read prayers, &c. They gave answer satisfactory, that betwixt us and them there was no discrepance at all. At last Mr Henderson fell on that model, which thereafter was voiced and printed. This happy concord, whereof Argyle and Henderson were happy instruments, will, we trust, be a great blessing to the whole land, which every where began to be fashed with idle toys.

On Tuesday, July 27th, we met before noon in the Grayfriars. After prayer, Mr Andrew Fairfoul required, that his commission should be given to Mr Henderson, in regard that the presbytery had chosen Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr Andrew Pollock, [Henry Rollock,] and Mr Alex. Henderson, if he should be present, and him only in case of Mr Henderson's absence. So, albeit Mr John Adamson had, at his owu hand, put in his own name in the commission at the first meeting in St Andrew's, and had voiced there as commissioner; yet Mr Henderson being now present, he required to be frec of the burden, which he had undertaken only in case of his absence. While the matter is going to voicing, Mr Calderwood, albeit no commissioner, reasoned very passionately, that Mr Henderson was incapable of a commission. In this Mr Henderson seconded him. Always, when it came to voicing, Mr Henderson's commission was unanimously received. The next question was about a new leet for a new moderator. The old fashion was, that the former moderator leeted whom he would, and the assembly added whom they pleased. An overture had passed at Aberdeen, that every provinciial synod should have one of their number to be on the leets for moderator, one to be on the committee of bills, one for the reports, and one for the overtures. The Northlandmen pressed much to have it so; but it was foud unreasonab; and that overture not being an act, and not being booked was rejected. Yet they got Belhelvie added to the leet which Mr Andrew gave in. Mr Henderson declared earnestly against the burden of moderation; yet the most of the votes fell on him. The nobles were for Mr Henry Rollock, some for Bonner, some for Belhelvie, none at all for Adamson, Dalgleish, Somervel, Blackhall. No more was done in that session; only Argyle told us, that the parliament was content to have but one session a-day, and that in the afternoon, hoping the assembly would be pleased to make but one session also, and that in the forenoon, that so the commissioners might get both assembly and parliament attended. This was agreed to.

Wednesday the 28th. The moderator read the overtures which I had drawn up, and were enacted at Aberdeen, for ordering of the house. He pressed them all; yet, through negligence to exact them, thereafter we fell at once into our old misorders. Always we hope that the exact order the parliament has now taken for ruling their house, will make us, ere long, follow their good example. He read also a list of names for the committees of bills and reports. Now for the overtures: Till those of Aberdeen were considered, very hardly would he permit any to be added to those of his own number. For assessors to himself, he shewed he would advertise privily those whom most he needed. Four were named to appoint preachers for all the churches, in which Mr James Bonner, my good friend, being chief, by his favour I got myself shifted of that burthen, as in all this assembly I did what I could to hold myself quiet, and well near mute. Mr Calderwood fell on again impertinently, and very peevishly, as if it had been almost a null, an evil-constitute meeting, for being translated without a moderator permanent, and chusing of him for moderator who had no commission. Mr Henderson dealt very patiently and respectfully with him: at last his Grace commanded him silence. The moderator caused read some letters, which were given him in England for the assembly. The first was from a number of our gracious brethren of the ministry at London, and about it, congratulating our happy proceeding, shewing their hopes to get our discipline established there, telling that some of their brethren, who were for independency of congregations, were great hindrances to that design; also that they gave out that some of the most eminent men in the ministry with us, inclined their way. The men they meant by, Mr Henderson told us, were Mr D. Dickson, and Mr Cant; but none in all the assembly were more against independency than these two. The matter, after some days, was voiced: all in one voice rejected that confusion, as contrary directly to our covenant: and appointed Mr Henderson to write a courteous answer to our English brethren; which he did very accurately. If I can, you shall have a copy thereof.

The next was from Mr Durie, for assistance to his negotiation of peace amongst Protestants. While some were beginning to say somewhat to the man's prejudice, I excused all, so that his motion was received; and it was laid on Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr Blair, Mr Gillespie, and me, to frame an answer. We left the labour to Mr Blair, who did it well enough, in a fair genteel general, appointing him to keep, when he pleased, correspondence with the ministers of Edinburgh. A third was from D. Sibbald of Aberdeen, supplicating for his books, which at the prior assembly were taken from him. It was granted that he should have all except some of his sermons, whereupon a part of his process was grounded. A fourth was from Mr John Guthrie, Bishop of Murray, supplicating that his place, for a little time more, might be kept for him. It was rejected as unreasonable, and his presbytery appointed to plant his place; yea, order was given, that none who had delayed so long to come in the covenant, should be received, without a singular measure of satisfaction and trial, to be approved by the general assembly. The Moderator fell on a notable motion, of drawing up a Confession of Faith, a Catechism, a Directory for all the parts of the public worship, and platform of government, wherein possibly England and we might agree. All approved the motion; and thereafter the burden of that labour was laid on the back of the mover, with liberty to vaik from preaching whenever he pleased, and to take help of whom he thought meet. He did not incline to undertake it, yet it will lie on him; and readily in this he may do some good.

Thursday the 29th. The moderators of the committees had no matter prepared for the assembly; so we put off that session with general discourses, especially upon the matter of translation, which had most troubled us in bygone synods, and was like to do so in this also. A committee was appointed to find out overtures for that difficult matter. Lest I should be prejudged, I got it on Lord Eglinton and Mr Robert Barclay. Glasgow also, by their importunity, got on Dr Strang and D. Dickson. The presbytery of Glasgow, it were long to tell you the way how they stifled both Mr Dickson and Mr Ramsay from being commissioners. This was very evil taken by the whole country, and turned over to Glasgow's prejudice: yet Mr David was used no otherwise by the assembly than if he had been a prime commissioner. This committee did nothing
